WESTERN HISTORICAL PUBLISHING COMPANY

PREFATORY.

IN offering this volume to the public, its publishers can hardly hope that it will in all respects meet the approval of those whose golden opinions are so ardently desired. The accuracy and completeness of such a work depend not alone on the conscientiousness and care of the compilers, but more especially upon the amount and quality of the materials which happen to have been preserved. For months the editorial force of the company has been searching with zeal and avidity for everything which could possibly throw light upon the past and present of Nez Perces, Idaho, Latah, Kootenai and Shoshone counties. Their search has not been as successful as they could wish, but they have done the best they could under the circumstances. It is thought that practically all printed matter which directly or indirectly related to the subject has been examined. Where no contemporaneous printed accounts could be found, the editors have been compelled to rely upon the testimony of pioneer settlers who took part in the events which they relate. In such cases they have, when possible, verified the statements of one man by those of another, knowing how treacherous and deceptive the memory frequently proves. But, with all vigilance, we can not feel sure that erroneous statements have not crept into the volume, and we feel constrained to invoke the kind charity of the reader to the faults he may discover.

The special histories of Latah and Kootenai counties were prepared by John M. Henderson alone; the general chapters on North Idaho and the special histories of Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties by William S. Shiach, assisted by Harry B. Averill.

The compilers have almost invariably been received with courtesy by those whom they have had occasion to approach, and to all who have in any way assisted, their sincere gratitude is hereby cordially extended. To make specific acknowledgements to everyone to whom they are due is impossible, but we must in a special way bear testimony to the kindly assistance rendered by the committees who have perused the manuscript histories of the different counties, giving us the benefit of their ripe knowledge and experience.

Special acknowledgements are due the Lewiston Teller, the Lewiston Tribune, the Nez Perce News, the Idaho County Free Press, the Grangeville Standard, the Spokesman-Review, of Spokane, the Coeur d'Alene Sun, the Wallace Press, the North Idaho Star, the Moscow Mirror, the Rathdrum Tribune, and to the various other newspapers whose names are to be found in the chapter on the press, for the use of valuable files, without which a work of this character would be impossible. The congressional reports have given us valuable assistance, as have also the works of the various geologists who, under the direction of the department of the interior, have made geological and topographical surveys of various portions of north Idaho. Works in the Lewiston, Spokesman-Review and Wallace libraries have been pressed into service, and to the librarians of these libraries the thanks of the publishers is extended. They are also grateful to various state and county officials for courtesies cheerfully accorded in directing the compilers to sources of official information and in some instances making investigations for them.

ENDORSEMENTS.

We, the undersigned, pioneer citizens of Nez Perces County, Idaho, hereby certify that we have read the manuscript history of said county to be published by the Western Historical Publishing Company with histories of the other counties of north Idaho; that we have called the attention of its author to such errors and oversights as our knowledge of events, gained by personal participation, has enabled us to detect, and that we have found it an accurate, impartial and comprehensive history, evidently the result of careful and extended research.

Signed—JAMES W. POE,
JOHN P. VOLLMER,
CHARLES G. KRESS.

Lewiston, Idaho, June 1, 1903.

We, the undersigned, pioneer citizens of Idaho County, hereby certify that we have read the manuscript history of said county to be published by the Western Historical Publishing Company, together with histories of the other counties of north Idaho, and that we have called the attention of its author to such slight errors as our knowledge of events has enabled us to detect. We bear testimony that the said history gives evidence of being the result of extensive and careful research. We have found it an authentic, impartial and comprehensive treatise upon the subject and as such we accord it our unreserved commendation.

Signed—JAMES WITT,
CHARLES P. CONE,
A. F. PARKER.

Grangeville, Idaho, May 4, 1903.

The undersigned, pioneer settlers of Shoshone County, Idaho, hereby certify that they have read the history of said county to be published with that of other counties of north Idaho by the Western Historical Publishing Company and have called attention of its compilers to such slight errors as they noticed. They cheerfully testify that the work is, to the best of their knowledge accurate and comprehensive and that it is free from partiality and sectional or class bias.

Signed—EDWARD H. MOFFITT,
CHARLES MANLEY,
A. D. MCKINLAY,
For the Coeur d'Alenes.
I. B. COWEN (County Commissioner),
For southern Shoshone County.

Wallace, Idaho, July 25, 1903.

We, the undersigned, pioneer citizens of Kootenai County, Idaho, have read the manuscript history of said county, to be published by the Western Historical Publishing Company. Long residence in the county, deep interest in its progress and active participation in many of the events which constitute the record of its development, enable us to judge fairly the merits of the work. From a literary standpoint, it is a most interesting narrative; in our judgment, also, it is accurate, impartial, and reliable, and as a standard history of the county we give it our unqualified endorsement.

Signed—M. D. WRIGHT,
J. G. BROPHY,
A. W. POST.

Rathdrum, Idaho, June 2, 1903.

We, the undersigned, citizens of Latah County, Idaho, having been selected as a committee to pass judgment on the merits of the history of said county to be published by the Western Historical Publishing Company do hereby certify as follows:

We are pioneer residents of the county, have always taken especial interest in its development, and have been active participants in all events, the record of which constitutes its history. We have read the manuscript narrative of these events and it has our unqualified endorsement as a literary work of real merit. In the treatment of the subject it is impartial, accurate and reliable, and is a standard history of Latah County from the date of its settlement to the present time.

Signed—J. L. NAYLOR,
ROBERT H. BARTON,
SAMUEL J. LANGDON.

INTRODUCTORY

The opening of a new century is a fitting time to cast a backward glance in our local history, reconstruct to the eye of the present the interesting and heroic events of the past and by comparison between past and present forecast something of the future.

Hardly could our task be accomplished without some reference, even though it must be brief and fragmentary, to the old Oregon territory, of which the counties of northern Idaho were once parts. It had a strange history. It was the ignis fatuus of successive generations of explorers, luring them on with that indescribable fascination which seemed always to drawn men to the ever receding circle of the "westmost west," and yet for years and years veiling itself in the mists of uncertainty and misapprehension.

We do not usually realize how soon after the time of Columbus there began to be attempts to reach the western ocean and solve the mystery of the various passages, northwest, southwest, and west, which were supposed to lead through the Americas to Asia. The old navigators had little conception of the breadth of this continent. They thought it to be but a few leagues across, and took for granted that some of the many arms of the sea would lead them through to another ocean that would wash the Asiatic shores.

In 1500, only eight years after Columbus, Gasper Cortereal, the Portuguese, conceived the idea of entering what afterward became known as Hudson's Bay and proceeding thence westward through what he called the strait of Anian.

That mythical strait of Anian seems to have had a strange charm for the old navigators. One of them, Maldonado, a good many years later, gave a very connected and apparently veracious account of his journey through that strait, averring that through it he reached another ocean in latitude seventy-five degrees. But by means of Magellan's straits and the doubling of stormy Cape Horn, a connection between the two oceans was actually discovered in 1519.

In 1543 Ferrelo, a Spaniard, coasted along the shores of California, and was doubtless the first white man to gaze on the coast of Oregon, probably somewhere in the vicinity of the mouth of the Umpqua river.

In 1577 that boldest and most picturesque of all English sailors and freebooters, Francis Drake, started on the marvelous voyage by which he plundered the treasures of the Spanish main, cut the golden girdle of Manila, Queen of the treasures of the Spanish orient, skirted the coast of California and Oregon, and at last circumnavigated the globe.

But in 1592, just one hundred years after Columbus, comes the most picturesque of all these misty stories which enwrap the early history of Oregon. This is the story of Jaun de Fuca, whose name is now preserved in our northwest boundary strait. According to this romantic tale of the seas, Jaun de Fuca was a Greek of Cephalonia, whose real name was Apostolos Valerianos, and under commission of the king of Spain he sailed to find the strait of Anian, whose entrance the Spaniards wanted to fortify and guard so as to prevent ingress or egress by the English freebooters who were preying upon their commerce. According to the account given by Michael Lock, "he followed his course, in that voyage, west and northwest in the South sea, all along the coast of Nova Spania and California and the Indies, now called North America (all of which voyage he signified to me in a great map, and a seacard of my own, which I laid before him), until he came to the latitude of forty-seven degrees; and that there finding that the land trended north and northwest, with a broad inlet of sea, between forty-seven and forty-eight degrees of latitude, he entered thereinto, sailing more than twenty days, and found that land still trending northwest, and northeast and north, and also east and southeastward, and very much broader sea than it was at the said entrance, and that he passed by divers islands in that sailing; and that, at the entrance of the said strait, there is, on the northwest coast thereof, a great headland or island, with an exceeding high pinnacle of spired rock, like a pillar, thereupon. Also he said that he went on land in divers places, and that he saw some people on the land clad in beasts' skins; and that the land was very fruitful and rich of gold, silver and pearls and other things, like Nova Spania. Also he said that he being entered thus far into the said strait, and being come into the North sea already, and finding the sea wide enough everywhere, and to be about thirty or forty leagues wide in the mouth of the straits where he entered, he thought he had now well discharged his office; and that not being armed to resist the force of savage people that might happen, he therefore set sail and turned homeward again toward Nova Spania, where he arrived in Acapulco, anno 1592, hoping to be rewarded by the viceroy for this service done in the said voyage."

This curious bit of past record has been interpreted by some as pure myth, and by others as veritable history. It is at any rate a generally accurate outline descriptive of the straits of Fuca, the gulf of Georgia and the shores of Vancouver Island and the mainland adjoining. And whether or not the old Greek pilot did actually exist and first look on our "Mediterranean of the Pacific," it is pleasant to imagine that he did and that his name fittingly preserves the memory of the grand old myth of Anian and the northwest pasage.

There is one other more obviously mythical tale concerning our frontier coast. It is said that in the year 1640 Admiral Pedro de Fonte, of the Spanish marine, made the journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific and return through a system of rivers and straits, entering the coast at about latitude fifty-three degrees. Coming from Callao in April, 1640, and after having sailed for a long distance through an archipelago, he entered the mouth of a vast river, which he named Rio de Los Reyes. Ascending this for a long distance northeasterly he reached an immense lake, on whose shores he found a wealthy civilized nation, who had a capital city of great splendor called Conasset, and who welcomed the strangers with lavish hospitality. From this lake flowed another river easterly, and down this Fonte descended until he reached another great lake, from which a narrow strait led into the Atlantic ocean.

There is one curious thing about these legendary voyages and that is the general accuracy of their description of the coast. Although these accounts are unquestionably mythical, it is not impossible that their authors had actually visited the coast or had seen those who had, and thus gathered the material from which they fabricated, with such an appearance of plausibility, their Munchausen tales.

We are briefly referring to these fascinating old legends, not for the purpose of discussing them here at any length, but rather to remind the reader of the long period of romance and myth which enveloped the early history of the northwest of which out state forms a part. Many years passed after the age of myth before there were authentic voages. During the seventeenth century practically nothing was done in the way of Pacific coast exploration. But in the eighteenth, as by common consent, all the nations of Europe became suddenly infatuated again with the thought that on the western shores of America might be found the gold and silver and gems and furs and precious woods for which they had been striving so desperately upon the eastern coast. English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, Russian and Americans entered their bold and hardy sailors into the race for the possession of the land of the occident. The Russians were the first in the field. That gigantic power which the genius of Peter the Great, like one of the fabled genii, had suddenly transformed from the proportions of a grain of sand to a figure overtopping the whole earth, had stretched its arms from the Baltic to the Aleutian archepelago, and had looked southward acress the frozen seas of Siberia to the open Pacific as offering them another opportunity of expansion. Many years passed, however, before Peter's designs could be executed. It was 1728 when Vitus Behring entered upon his marvelous life of exploration. Not until 1741, however, did he thread the thousand islands of Alaska and gaze upon the glaciated summit of Mt. Elias. And it was not until thirty years later that it was known that the Bay of Avatscha in Siberia was connected by open sea with China. In 1771 the first cargo of furs was taken directly from Avatscha, the chief port of eastern Siberia, to Canton. Then first Europe realized the vastness of the Pacific ocean. Then it understood that the same waters which frowned against the frozen bulwarks of Kamtchatka washed the tropic islands of the South seas and foamed against the storm-swept rocks of Cape Horn.

Meantime, while Russia was thus becoming established upon the shores of Alaska, Spain was getting entire possession of California. These two great nations began to overlap each other. Russians became established near San Francisco. To offset this movement of Russia, a group of Spanish explorers, Perez, Martinez, Heceta, Bodega and Maurella, swarmed up the coast beyond the present site of Sitka.

England, in alarm at the progress made by Spain and Russia, sent out the Columbus of the eighteenth century, in the person of Captain James Cook, and he sailed up and down the coast of Alaska and of Washington, but failed to discover either the Columbia river or the straits of Fuca. His labors, however, did more to establish true geographical notions than had the combined efforts of all the Spanish navigators who had preceded him. His voyages materially strengthened England's claim to Oregon, and added greatly to the luster of her name. The great captain, while temporarily on shore, was killed by Indians, in 1778, and the command devolved upon Captain Clark, who sailed northward, passing through Behring strait to the Arctic ocean. The new commander died before the expedition had proceeded far on its return journey; Lieutenant Gore, a Virginian, assumed control and sailed to Canton, China, ariving late in the year.

The main purposes of this expedition had been the discovery of a northern waterway between the two oceans and the extending of British territory, but, as is so often the case in human affairs, one of the most important results of the voyage was entirely unsuspected by the navigators and practically the outcome of an accident. It so happened that the two vessels of the expedition, the Revolution and the Discovery, took with them to China a small collection of furs from the northwest coast of America. These were purchased by the Chinese with great avidity, the people exhibiting a willingness to barter commodities of much value for them and endeavoring to secure them at almost any sacrifice. The sailors were not backward in communicating their discovery of a new and promising market for peltries, and the impetus imparted to the fur trade was almost immeasurable in its ultimate effects. An entirely new regime was inaugurated in Chinese and East India commerce. The northwest coast of America assumed a new importance in the eyes of Europeans, and especially of the British. The "struggle for possession" soon began to be foreshadowed.

One of the prnicipal harbors resorted to by the fur-trading vessels was Nootka, used as a rendezvous and principal port of departure. This port became the scene of a clash between Spanish authorities and certain British vessels which greatly strained the friendly relations existing between the two governments represented. In 1779 the viceroy of Mexico sent two ships, the Princess and San Carlos, to convey Martinez and De Haro to the vicinity for the purpose of anticipating and preventing the occupancy of Nootka sound by fur traders of other nations and that the Spanish title to the territory might be maintained and confirmed. Martinez was to base his claim upon the discovery by Perez in 1774. Courtesy was to be extended to foreign vessels, but the establishment of any claim prejudicial to the right of the Spanish crown was to be vigorously resisted.

Upon the arrival of Martinez in the harbor, it was discovered that the American vessel Columbia, and the Iphigenia, a British vessel, under a Portuguese flag, were lying in the harbor. Martinez at once demanded the papers of both vessels and an explanation of their presence, vigorously asserting the claim of Spain that the port and contiguous territory were hers. The Captain of the Iphigenia pleaded stress of weather. On finding that the vessel's papers commanded the capture, under certain conditions, of Russian, Spanish or English vessels, Martinez seized the ship, but on being advised that the orders relating to captures were intended only to apply to the defense of the vessel, the Spaniard released the Iphigenia and her cargo. The Northwest America, another vessel of the same expedition, was, however, seized by Martinez a little later.

It should be remembered that these British vessels had in the inception of the enterprise divested themselves of their true national character and donned the insignia of Portugal, their reasons being: First, to defraud the Chinese government, which made special harbor rates to the Portuguese, and, second, to defraud the East India Company, to whom had been granted the right of trading in furs in Northwest America to the exclusion of all other British subjects, except such as should obtain the permission of the company. To maintain their Portuguese nationality they had placed the expedition nominally under the control of Jaun Cavalho, a Portuguese trader. Prior to the time of the trouble in Nootka, however, Cavalho had become a bankrupt and new arrangements had become necessary. The English traders were compelled to unite their interests with those of King George's Sound Company, a mercantile association operating under license from the South Sea and East India Companies, the Portuguese colors had been laid aside and the true national character of the expedition assumed. Captain Colnutt was placed in command of the enterprise as constituted under the new regime, with instructions, among other things, "to establish a factory to be called Fort Pitt, for the purpose of permanent settlement, and as a center of trade around which other stations may be established."

One vessel of the expedition, the Princess Royal, entered Nootka harbor without molestation, but when the Argonaut, under command of Captain Colnutt, arrived, it was thought best by the master not to attempt an entrance to the bay lest his vessel should meet the same fate which had befallen the Iphigenia and the Northwest America. Later Colnutt called on Martinez and informed the Spanish governor of his intention to take possession of the country in the name of Great Britain and to erect a fort. The governor replied that possession had already been taken in the name of his Catholic Majesty and that such acts as he (Colnutt) contemplated could not be allowed. An altercation followed and the next day the Argonaut was seized and her captain and crew placed under arrest. The Princess Royal was also seized, though the American vessels in the harbor were in no way molested.

After an extended and at times heated controversy between Spain and Great Britain touching these seizures, the former government consented to make reparation and offered a suitable apology for the indignity to the honor of the flag. The feature of this correspondence of greatest import in the future history of the territory affected is that throughout the entire controversy in all the messages and debates of parliament, no word was spoken asserting a claim of Great Britain to any territorial rights or denying the claim of sovereignty so positively and persistently avowed by Spain, neither was Spanish sovereignty denied or in any way alienated by the treaty which followed. Certain real property was restored to British subjects, but a transfer of realty is not a transfer of sovereignty.

We pass over the voyage of the illustrious French navigator, La Perouse, as of more importance from a scientific than a political standpoint; neither can we dwell upon the explorations of Captain Berkley, to whom belongs the honor of having ascertained the existence of the strait afterward denominated Jaun de Fuca. Of somewhat greater moment in the later history of the northwest are the voyages of Meares, who entered and described the above mentioned strait, and who, in 1788, explored the coast at the point where the great Columbia mingles its crystal current with the waters of the sea. In the diplomatic battle of later days it was even claimed by some that he was the discover of that great "River of the West." Howbeit, nothing can be surer than that the existence of such a river was utterly unknown to him at the time. Indeed his conviction of its non-existence was thus stated in his own account of the voyage: "We can now with safety assert that there is no such river as the St. Roc (of the Spaniard, Heceta) exists, as laid down in the Spanish charts," and he gave a further unequivocal expression of his opinion by naming the bay in that vicinity Deception Bay and the promontory north of it Cape Disappointment. "Disappointed and deceived," remarks Evans facetiously, "he continued his cruise southward to latitude forty-five degrees north."

It is not without sentiments of patriotic pride that we now turn our attention to a period of discovery in which the vessels of our own nation played a prominent part. The northern mystery, which had been partially resolved by the Spanish, English, French and Portuguese explorations, was now to be completely robbed of its mystic charm, speculation and myth must now give place to exact knowledge, the game of discovery must hereafter be played principally between the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, and Anglo-Saxon energy, thoroughness and zeal are henceforth to characterize operations on the shores of the Pacific northwest. The United States had but recently won their independence from the British crown and their energies were finding a fit field of activity in the titanic task of national organization. Before the constitution had become the supreme law of the land, however, the alert mind of the American had begun projecting voyages of discovery and trade to the northwest, and in September, 1788, two vessels with the stars and stripes at their mastheads arrived at Nootka sound. Their presence in the harbor while the events culminating in the Nootka treaty were transpiring has already been alluded to. The vessels were the ship Columbia, Captain John Kendrick, and the sloop Washington, Captain Robert Gray, and the honor of having sent them to our shores belongs to one Joseph Barrel, a prominent merchant of Boston, and a man of high social standing and great influence. While one of the impelling motives of his enterprise had been the desire of commercial profit, the element of patriotism was not wholly lacking, and the vessels were instructed to make what explorations and discoveries they might.

After remaining a time on the coast, Captain Kendrick transferred his ship's property to the Washington, with the intention of taking a cruise in that vessel. He placed Captain Gray in command of the Columbia with instructions to return to Boston by way of the Sandwich Islands and China. This commission was successfully carried out. The vessel arrived in Boston in September, 1790, was received with great eclat, refitted by her owners and again dispatched to the shores of the Pacific with Captain Gray in command. In July, 1791, the Columbia, from Boston, and the Washington, from China, met not far from the spot where they had separated nearly two years before. They were not to remain long in company, however, for Captain Gray soon started on a cruise southward. On April 29, 1792, Gray met Vancouver just below Cape Flattery and an interesting colloquy took place. Vancouver communicated to the American skipper the fact that he had not yet made any important discoveries, and Gray, with equal frankness, gave the eminent British explorer an account of his past discoveries, "including," says Bancroft, "the fact that he had not sailed through Fuca straight in the Lady Washington, as had been supposed from Meares' narrative and map." He also informed Captain Vancouver that he had been "off the mouth of a river in latitude forty-six degrees, ten minutes, where the outset, or reflux, was so strong as to prevent his entering for nine days."

The important information conveyed by Gray seems to have greatly disturbed the equipoise of Vancouver's mind. The enteries in his log show that he did not entirely credit the statement of the American, but that he was considerably perturbed is evinced by the fact that he tries to convince himself by argument that Gray's statement could not have been correct. The latitude assigned by the American was that of Cape Disappointment, and the existence of a river mouth there, although affirmed by Heceta, had been denied by Meares; Captain Cook also had failed to find it; besides, had he not himself passed that point two days before and had he not observed that "if any inlet or river should be found it must be a very intricate one, and inaccessible to vessels of our burden, owing to the reefs and broken water which then appeared in its neighborhood." With such reasoning, he dismissed the matter from his mind for the time being. He continued his journey northward, passed through the straight of Fuca, and engaged in a thorough and minute exploration of that mighty inland sea, to a portion of which he gave the name Puget Sound.

Meanwhile Gray was proceeding southward "in the track of destiny and glory." On May 7th he entered the harbor which now bears his name and four days later passed through the breakers over the bar, and his vessel's prow plowed the waters of that famous "River of the West," whose existence had been so long suspected. The storied "Oregon" for the first time heard other sound than "its own dashing."

Shortly afterward Vancouver came to Cape Disappointment to explore the Columbia, of which he had heard indirectly from Captain Gray. Lieutenant Broughton, of Vancouver's expedition, sailed over the bar, ascended the river a distance of more than one hundred miles to the site of the present Vancouver, and with a modesty truly remarkable, "takes possession of the river and the country in its vicinity in his Britannic Majesty's name, having every reason to believe that the subjects of no other civilized nation or state had ever entered it before." This, too, though he had received a salute of one gun from an American vessel, the Jennie, on his entrance to the bay. The lieutenant's claim was not to remain forever unchallenged, as will appear presently.

With the exploration of Puget sound and the discovery of the Columbia, history-making maritime adventure practically ceased. But as the fabled strait of Anian had drawn explorers to the Pacific shores in quest of the mythical passage to the treasurers of Ind, so likewise did the fairy tales of La Hontan and others stimulate inland exploration. Furthermore, the mystic charm possessed by a terra incognita was becoming irresistible to adventurous spirits, and the possibilities of discovering untold wealth in the vaults of its "shining mountains" and in the sands of its crystal rivers were exceedingly fascinating to the lover of gain.

The honor of pioneership in overland exploration belongs to one Verendrye, who, under authority of the governor-general of New France, in 1773 set out on an expedition to the Rocky mountains from Canada. This explorer and his brother and sons made many important explorations, but as they failed to find a pass through the Rocky mountains by which they could come to the Pacific side, their adventures do not fall within the purview of our volume. They are said to have reached the vicinity of the present city of Helena.

If, as seems highly probable, the events chronicled by La Page in his charming "Histoire de la Louisiane," published in 1758, should be taken as authentic, the first man to scale the Rocky mountains from the east and to make his way overland to the shores of the Pacific was a Yazoo Indian, Moncacht-ape or Montcachabe by name. But "the first traveler to lead a party of civilized men through the territory of the Stony mountains to the South sea" was Alexander Mackenzie, who, in 1793, reached the coast at fifty-two degrees, twenty-four minutes, forty-eight seconds north, leaving as a memorial of his visit, inscribed on a rock with vermillion and grease the words "Alexandar Mackenzie, from Canada by land, July 22, 1793."

But western exploration by land had elicited the interest of one whose energy and force were sufficient to bring to a successful issue almost any undertaking worth the effort. While the other statesmen and legislators of his time were fully engaged with the problems of the moment, the great mind of Thomas Jefferson, endowed as it was with a wider range of vision and more comprehensive grasp of the true situation was projecting exploring expeditions into the northwest. In 1786, while serving as minister to Paris, he had fallen in with the ardent Ledyard, who was on fire with the idea of opening a large and profitable fur trade in the north Pacific region. To this young man he had suggested the idea of journeying to Kamtchatka, then in a Russian vessel to Nootka sound, from which, as a starting point, he should make an exploring expedition easterly to the United States. Ledyard acted on the suggestion, but was arrested as a spy in the spring of 1787 by Russian officials and so severely treated as to cause a failure of his health and a consequent failure of his enterprise.

The next effort of Jefferson was made in 1792, when he proposed to the American Philosophical Society that it should engage a competent scientist "to explore northwest America from the eastward by ascending the Missouri, crossing the Rocky mountains and descending the nearest river to the Pacific ocean." The idea was favorably received. Captain Meriwether Lewis, who afterward distinguished himself as one of the leaders of the Lewis and Clark expedition, offered his services, but for some reason Andre Michaux, a French botanist, was given the preference. Michaux proceeded as far as Kentucky, but there received an order from the French minister, to whom, it seems, he also owed obedience, that he should relinquish his appointment and engage upon the duties of another commission.

It was not until after the opening of the new century that another opportunity for furthering his favorite project presented itself to Jefferson. An act of congress, under which trading houses had been established for facilitating commerce with the Indians, was about to expire by limitation, and President Jefferson, in recommending its continuance, seized the opportunity to urge upon congress the advisability of fitting out an expedition, the object of which should be "to explore the Missouri river and such principal streams of it as, by its course of communication with the waters of the Pacific ocean, whether the Columbia, Oregon, Colorado or any other river, may offer the most direct and practical water communication across the continent, for the purpose of commerce."

Congress voted an appropriation for the purpose, and the expedition was placed in charge of Captains Meriwether Lewis and William Clark. President Jefferson gave the explorers minute and particular instructions as to investigations to be made by them. They were to inform themselves, should they reach the Pacific ocean, "of the circumstances which may decide whether the furs of those parts may be collected as advantageously at the head of the Missouri (convenient as is supposed to the Colorado and Oregon or Columbia) as at Nootka sound or any other part of the coast; and the trade be constantly conducted through the Missouri and United States more beneficially than by the circumnavigation now practiced." In addition to the instructions already quoted, these explorers were directed to ascertain if possible on arriving at the seaboard if there were any ports within their reach frequented by the sea vessels of any nation, and to send, if practicable, two of their most trusted people back by sea with copies of their notes. They were also, if they deemed a return by the way they had come imminently hazardous, to ship the entire party and return via Good Hope or Cape Horn, as they might be able.

A few days before the initial steps were taken in discharge of the instructions of President Jefferson, news reached the seat of government of a transaction which added materially to the significance of the enterprise. Negotiations had been successfully consummated for the purchase of Louisiana on April 30, 1803, but the authorities at Washington did not hear of the important transfer until the 1st of July. Of such transcendant import to the future of our country was this transaction and of such vital moment to the section with which our volume is primarily concerned, that we must here interrupt the trend of our narrative to give the reader an idea of the extent of territory involved and, if possible, to enable him to appreciate the influence of the purchase. France, by her land explorations and the establishment of trading posts and forts, first acquired title to the territory west of the Mississippi and east of the Rocky mountains, though Great Britain claimed the territory in accordance with her doctrine of continuity and contiguity, most of her colonial grants extending in express terms to the Pacific ocean. Spain also claimed the country by grant of Pope Alexander VI. A constant warfare had been waged between France and Great Britain for supremacy in America. The latter was the winner in the contest, and in 1762, France, apparently discouraged, ceded to Spain the province of Louisiana. By the treaty of February 10, 1763, which gave Great Britain the Canadas, it was agreed that the western boundary between English and Spanish possessions in America should be the Mississippi river, Great Britain renouncing all claim to the territory west of that boundary. In 1800 Spain retroceded Louisiana to France "with the same extent it has now in the hands of Spain, and which it had when France possessed it, and such as it should be according to the treaties subsequently made betwen Spain and other states."

The order for the formal delivery of the province to France was issued by the Spanish king on October 15, 1802, and, as above stated, the United States succeeded to the title by treaty of April 30, 1803.

Of the long, weary land marches which brought the doughty explorers, Captains Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, to the pure currents of the Clearwater, space forbids narration. It is pleasant to record that the travel-worn expedition received hospitable treatment upon reaching the spot where Lewiston now stands. The Nez Perces were friendly, gave the explorers what information they could about the remainder of their journey and readily traded them such food supplies as they were able. While details of this history-making expedition to the mouth of the Columbia and back again to the eastern states must be sought elsewhere, we shall here quote a summary of the journey given by Captain Lewis himself, which will convey some idea of the momentous task successfully accomplished by these giants of the wilderness:

"The road by which we went out by the way of the Missouri to its head is 3,096 miles; thence by land by way of Lewis river over to Clark's river and down that to the entrance of Traverse's Rest creek, where all the roads from different routes meet; thence across the rugged part of the Rocky mountains to the navigable waters of the Columbia, 398 miles; thence down the river 640 miles to the Pacific ocean—making a total distance of 4,134 miles. On our return in 1806 we came from Traveler's Rest directly to the falls of the Missouri river, which shortens the distance about 579 miles and is a much better route, reducing the distance from the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean to 3,555 miles. Of this journey 2,575 miles is up the Missouri to the falls of that river; thence passing through the plains and across the Rocky mountains to the navigable waters of the Kooskooskia river, a branch of the Columbia, 340 miles, two hundred of which is good road, 140 over a tremendous mountain, steep and broken, 60 miles of which is covered several feet deep with snow, on which we passed on the last of June; from the navigable part of the Kooskooskia we descended that rapid river 73 miles to its enterance into Lewis river, and down that river 154 miles to the Columbia, and thence 413 miles to its entrance into the Pacific ocean. About 180 miles of this distance is tide water. We passed several bad rapids and narrows and one considerable fall, 268 miles above the entrance of this river, 37 feet, eight inches; the total distance descending the Columbia waters, 640 miles, making a total of 3,555 miles, on the most direct route from the Mississippi at the mouth of the Missouri to the Pacific ocean."

The safe return of the explorers to their homes in the United States naturally created a sensation throughout that country and the world. Leaders and men were suitably rewarded, and the fame of the former will live while the rivers to which their names have been given, continue to pour their waters into the sea. President Jefferson, the great patron of the expedition, paying a tribute to Captain Lewis in 1813, said: "Never did a similar event create more joy throughout the United States. The humblest of its citizens have taken a lively interest in the issue of this journey, and looked with impatience for the information it would furnish. Nothing short of the official journals of this extraordinary and interesting journey will exhibit the importance of the service, the courage, devotion, zeal and perseverance under circumstances calculated to discourage, which animated this little band of heroes, throughout the long, dangerous and tedious travel."

The knowledge of the Columbia basin, resulting from the extensive exploration of Lewis and Clark, soon bore fruit in a number of commercial enterprises, the first of which was the Astor expedition. It was so called from John Jacob Astor, a native of Heidelburg, who had come to America poor and had amassed a large fortune in commercial transactions. In 1800 there was conceived in the brain of this great captain of industry a scheme which for magnitude of design and careful arrangement of detail was truly masterful. It contemplated the prosecution of the fur trade in every unsettled territory of America claimed by the United States, the trade with China and the supply of the Russian settlements with trading stock and provisions, the goods to be paid for in peltry. A vessel was to be dispatched at regular intervals from New York, bearing supplies and goods to be traded to the Indians. This was to discharge her cargo at a depot of trade to be established at the mouth of the Columbia river, then trade along the coast with Indians and at the Russian settlements until another cargo had been in part secured, return to the mouth of the river, complete her lading there, sail thence to China, receive a return cargo of Canton silks, nankeen and tea, and back to New York. Two years would pass in completing this vast "commercial rounding-up." An important part of this plan was the supply of the Russian posts at New Archangel, the object being two fold,—first to secure the profits accruing therefrom, and secondly, to shut off competition in Mr. Astor's own territory, through the semi-partnership with the Russians in furnishing them supplies. Careful arrangements had been made with the Russian government to prevent any possible clash between the vessels of the two companies which should be engaged in the coast trade. "It was," says Brewerton, "a collossal scheme, and deserved to succeed: had it done so it would have advanced American settlement and actual occupancy on the Northwest coast by at least a quarter of a century, giving employment to thousands, and transferred the enormous profits of the Hudson's Bay and Northwest British fur companies from English to American coffers."

Notwithstanding the opposition of the Northwest Fur Company, a powerful British corporation, Astor's sea expedition reached the mouth of the Columbia before the territory had been pre-empted by any other fur traders. His overland company arrived later, after having suffered terrible hardships, being well nigh overcome by the fatigues of their journey, the rigors of the inhospitable mountain ranges and lack of food. Astoria was founded and named. The little colony of traders set vigorously about the task of carrying into execution Astor's comprehensive plan. There were many difficulties to be overcome and one serious disaster, the massacre of the Tonquin's crew and the subsequent destruction of that vessel, had its decidedly depressing effect. Nevertheless, the Astor expedition would have doubtless proved a success were it not for two unfortunate circumstances. In the choice of his partners in the Pacific Fur Company, Mr. Astor had made a serious mistake. Broad minded and liberal himself, he did not appreciate the danger of entrusting his undertaking to the hands of men whose national prejudices were bitterly anti-American and whose previous connection with a rival company might affect their loyalty to this one. He associated with himself as partners in the enterprise Donald Mackenzie, Alexander Mackay, who had accompanied Alexandar Mackenzie on his voyage of discovery, hence possessed invaluable experience, and Duncan Macdougal, all late of the Northwest Company, and though men of great skill and experience, schooled in the prejudices of the association with which they had so long maintained connection, and able to see only through British eyes. To the partners already enumerated were subsequently added Wilson P. Hunt and Robert Maclellan, Americans, John Clarke, a Canadian, David and Robert Stuart and Ramsey Crooks, Scotchmen, and others.

The second unfortunate circumstance and the one which gave perfidity a chance to perform its perfect work was the outbreak of the war of 1812. The danger that Astoria might be captured by the British (for the United States had neglected to furnish suitable protection to this most remote outpost of its dominion) gave the traitorous Macdougal a colorable excuse to betray into the hands of the Northwest Company Mr. Astor's interests on the Pacific coast. The denouement of the plot was in this wise. On the 8th of October, 1813, Macdougal, by way of preparation for his final coupe, read a letter announcing the sailing of two British armed vessels, the Phoebe and the Isaac Todd, with orders "to take and destroy everything American on the Northwest coast."

"This dramatic scene," says Evans, "was followed by a proposition of MacTavish (of the Northwest Fur Company) to purchase the interests, stocks, establishments, etc. of the Pacific Fur Company. Macdougal then assumed sole control and agency because of the non-arrival of Hunt, and after repeated conference with MacTavish in which the presence of the other partners was ignored, the sale was concluded at certain rates. A few days later J. Stuart arrived with the remainder of the Northwest party. He objected to MacTavish's prices and lowered the rates materially. Mr. Stuart's offer was accepted by Macdougal and the agreement of transfer was signed October 16th. By it Duncan Macdougal, for and on behalf of himself, Donald Mackenzie, David Stuart and John Clarke, partners of the Pacific Fur Company, dissolved July 1st, pretended to sell to his British conferes and co-conspirators of the Northwest Company 'the whole of the establishments, furs and present stock on hand, of the Columbia and Thompson's rivers.'"

It is needless to add that on the arrival of the British vessels Astoria became a British possession. The formal change of sovereignty and raising of the Union Jack took place on December 12th, and as if to obliterate all trace of Mr. Astor's operations, the name of Astoria was changed to Fort George. The arrival of Isaac Todd the following spring with a cargo of trading goods and supplies enabled the Northwest Company to enter vigorously into the prosecution of their trade in the territory of their wronged and outraged rival. "Thus disgracefully failed," says Evans, "a magnificent enterprise, which merited success for sagacity displayed in its conception, its details, its objects; for the liberality and munificence of its projector in furnishing means adequate for its thorough execution; for the results it had aimed to produce. It was inaugurated purely for commercial purposes. Had it not been transferred to its enemies, it would have pioneered the colonization of the northwest coast by citizens of the United States; it would have furnished the natural and peaceful solution of the question of the right to the territory drained by the Columbia and its tributaries.

"The scheme was grand in its aim, magnificent in its breadth of purpose and area of operation. Its results were naturally feasible, not over-anticipated. They were but the logical and necessary sequences of the pursuit of the plan. Mr. Astor made no miscalculation, no omission; neither did he permit a sanguine hope to lead him into any wild or imaginary venture. He was practical, generous, broad. He executed what Sir Alexander Mackenzie urged should be adopted as the policy of British capital and enterprise. That one American citizen should have individually undertaken what two mammoth British companies had not the courage to try was but an additional cause which had intensified national prejudice into embittered jealousy on the part of the British rivals, the Northwest Company."

By the first article of the treaty of Ghent entered into between Great Britain and the United States, December 14, 1814, it was agreed "that all territory, places and possessions whatsoever taken by either party from the other, during or after the war, should be restored." Astoria, therefore, again became the possession of the United States, and in September, 1817, the government sent the sloop-of-war Ontario "to assert the claim of the United States to the sovereignty of the adjacent country, and especially to reoccupy Astoria or Fort George." The formal surrender of the fort is dated October 6, 1818.

Mr. Astor had urged the United States to repossess Astoria, and intended fully to resume operations in the basin of the Columbia, but the Pacific Fur Company was never reorganized, and never again did the great captain of industry engage in trade on the shores of the Pacific.

Brief and general though this introductory sketch must be we cannot omit mention of the two British fur companies who played such a prominent part in the early history of the section to which the five northern counties of Idaho belong. Although organized in 1774, the Northwest Company, successor in interest of the Pacific Fur Company, did not attain to high prestige until the dawn of the nineteenth century. Then, however, it seemed to take on new life, and before the first half decade was passed it had become the successful rival of the Hudson's Bay Company for the fur trade of the interior of North America. The Hudson's Bay Company when originally chartered in 1670 was granted in a general way the right to traffic in Hudson's Bay and the territory contiguous thereto, and the Northwest Company began to insist that the grant should be more strictly construed. The boundaries of Prince Rupert's land, as the Hudson's Bay territory was named, had never been definitely determined and there had long been contention in those regions which were claimed by that company but denied to it by the other fur traders. Beyond the recognized area of the Hudson's Bay territory, the old Northwest Company (a French company which had fallen, at the time of the fall of Canada into the possession of the British) had been a competitor of the Hudson's Bay Company. When this French association went out of existence the contest was kept up by private merchants, but without lasting success. The new Northwest Company, of Montreal, united and cemented into one organization all these individuals for the better discharge of the common purpose. It is interesting to note the theory of trade of this association as contrasted with that of the Hudson's Bay Company.

From established posts as centers of operations, the Montreal association dispatched parties in all directions to visit the villages and haunts of the natives and secure furs from every source possible. It went to the natives for their goods, while the rival company so arranged its posts that these were convenient to the whole Indian population, then depended upon the aborigines to bring in their peltries and exchange the same for such articles as might supply their wants or gratify their fancies. Consequently the one company required many employees, the other comparatively few. The clerks or traders of the Montreal association were required to serve an apprenticeship of seven years at small wages. That term successfully completed, the stipend was doubled. Skill and special aptitude in trading brought speedy promotions, and the chance to become a partner in the business was an unfailing incentive to strenuous effort. The Hudson's Bay Company, on the other hand, had established fixed grades of compensation. Promotion was slow, coming periodically rather than as a reward for specially meritorious service, and though faithfulness to duty was required, no incentive was offered for special endeavor. The Hudson's Bay Company based its territorial title upon a specific grant from the crown, while the rival association sought no other title than such as priority of occupancy and pre-emption afforded. It claimed as its field of operation all unoccupied territory wherever located.

The Northwest Company showed also its animus to confirm and strengthen British title to all territories adversely claimed, and wherever a post was established the territory contiguous thereto was ceremoniously taken possession of "in the name of the king of Great Britain, for the Northwest Company." Its establishments and possessions afterward constituted the substantial basis of Great Britain's claim to the territory.

Rivalry between these two companies was carried to such an extent that both were brought to the verge of bankruptcy. British interests were being endangered through this trade war and something had to be done. The governor general of Canada appointed a commission to investigate conditions, and that commission recommended a union of the two companies. Nothing, however, of material benefit resulted. Eventually, in the winter of 1819-20, Lord Bathurst, British secretary of state for the colonies, took up the matter and through his meditation a union was finally effected. On March 20, 1821, it was mutually agreed that both companies should operate under the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, furnishing equal amounts of capital and sharing equally the profits, the arrangement to continue in force for twenty-one years.

By 1824 all the rights and interests of the stockholders late of the Northwest Company had passed into the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company. The absorbtion of the one corporation by the other was complete. The treacherous and perfidious treatment of Mr. Astor and the demoralization of his partners availed the greedy Northwesters but little, for they were soon after conquered and subdued and forever deprived of their identity as a company by their powerful rival and enemy.

The Hudson's Bay Company now became the sole owner and proprietor of the trade west of the Rocky mountains, and of all the rights accruing under the license of trade issued to it and the Northwest Company by the British parliament. An "imperium in imperio" Evans characterized this company and such it was for it was in possession of well-nigh absolute power over its employes and the native races with whom it traded. It was constituted "The true and absolute lords and proprietors of the territories, limits and places, save always the faith, allegiance and sovereign dominion due to us (the crown), our heirs and successors, for the same, to hold as tenants in fee and common socage, and not by knight's service, reserving as a yearly rent, two elks and two black beavers." Power was granted, should occasion arise, to "send ships of war, men or ammunition to any fort, post or place for defense thereof; to raise military companies and to appoint their officers; to make war or conclude peace with any people (not Christian), in any of their territories," also "to seize the goods, estates or people of those countries for damage to the company's interest, or for the interruption of trade; to erect and build forts, garrisons, towns, villages; to establish colonies and to support such establishments by expeditions fitted out in Great Britain; to seize all British subjects not connected with the company, or employed by them, or in such territory by their license, and send them to England." Should one of its factors, traders or other employees "contemn or disobey an order, he was liable to be punished by the president or council, who were authorized to prescribe the manner and measure of punishment. The offender had the right to appeal to the company in England, or he might be turned over for trial by the courts. For the better discovery of abuses and injuries by the servants, the governor and company, and their respective president, chief agent or governor in any of the territories, were authorized to examine on oath all factors, masters, pursers, supercargoes, commanders of castles, forts, fortifications, plantations, or colonies, or other persons, touching or concerning any matter or thing sought to be investigated." To further strengthen the hands of the company, the charter concludes with a royal mandate to all "admirals, vice-admirals, justices, mayors, sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, and all and singular other our officers, ministers, liegemen, subjects whatsoever, to aid, favor, help and assist the said governor and company to enjoy, as well on land as on the seas, all the premises in said charter contained, whensoever required."

Something of the modus operandi of the company must now be given. The chief factors and chief traders were paid no salaries, but in lieu thereof were given forty per cent. of the profits, divided among them on some basis deemed equitable by the company. The clerks received salaries varying from twenty to one hundred pounds per annum. Below these again were the servants, whose term of enlistment (for such in effect it was) was for five years, and whose pay was seventeen pounds per annum without clothing. The servant was bound by indentures to devote his whole time and labor to the company's interests; to yield obedience to sprerior officers; to defend the company's property; to faithfully obey the laws, orders, etc; to defend officers and agents of the company to the extent of his ability; to serve in the capacity of a soldier whenever called upon so to do; to attend military drill; and never to engage or be interested in any trade or occupation except in accordance with the company's orders and for its benefit. In addition to the pittance paid him, the servant was entitled, should he desire to remain in the country after the expiration of his term of enlistment, to fifty acres of land, for which he was to render twenty-eight days' service per annum for seven years. If dismissed before the expiration of his term, the servant, it was agreed, should be transported to his European home free of charge. Desertion or neglect might be punished by the forfeiture of even the wretched pittance he was to receive. It was, furthermore, the policy of the company to encourage marriage with the Indian women, their purpose being to create family ties which should bind the poor slave to the soil. By the time the servant's term of enlistment had expired, there was, therefore, usually no choice left him but to re-enlist or accept the grant of land. "In times of peace, laborers and operatives were ever on hand at mere nominal wages; in times of outbreak they were at once transformed into soldiers amenable to military usage and discipline."

The system was certainly a fine one, viewed from the standpoint of the company, but while it may command admiration for its ingenuity, it is certainly not to be commended for magnanimity. Its design and purpose was to turn the wealth of the country into the coffers of the English noblemen who owned Hudson's Bay stock, even though this should be done at the expense of the manhood, the self-respect and the independence of the poor sons of toil who foolishly or from necessity bound themselves to its service.

The Indian policy of the company was no less politic than its treatment of its employees, but it had much more in it that was truly commendable. Its purpose did not bring its employees into conflict with the Indian, nor require his expulsion, neither was there danger of the lands of the savages being appropriated or the graves of their people disturbed. The sale of intoxicants was positively and successfully prohibited. Conciliation was the wisest policy for the company, and it governed itself accordingly; but when punishment was merited, it was administered with promptness and severity. When depredations were committed the tribe to which the malefactor belonged was pursued by an armed force and compelled to deliver up the guilty to his fate. A certain amount of civilization was introduced, and with it came an increase of wants, which wants could only be supplied at the company's forts. Indians were sent on hunting and trapping expeditions in all directions, so that concentration of tribes became difficult, and if attempted, easily perceived in time to circumvent it and prevent trouble. Thus the company secured an influence over the savage and a place in his affections, from which it could not easily be dislodged.

In its treatment of missionaries, civil and military officers and others from the United States, the company's factors and agents were uniformly courteous and kind. Their hospitality was in the highest degree commendable, meriting the gratitude of the earliest visitors and settlers. The poor and unfortunate never asked assistance in vain. But woe to the American who attempted to trade with the Indian, to trap, hunt or do anything which brought him into competition with the British corporation. All the resources of a company supplied with an abundance of cheap labor, supported by the friendship and affection of the aboriginal peoples, backed by an almost unlimited capital, and fortified by the favor of one of the wealthiest and most powerful nations of the earth, were at once turned to crush him. Counter establishments were formed in his vicinity, and he was hampered in every way possible and pursued with the relentlessness of an evil fate until compelled to retire from the field.

Such being the condition, there was not much encouragement for American enterprise in the basin of the Columbia. It is not, however, in the American character to yield a promising prospect without a struggle and many times efforts were made at competition in the Oregon territory. William H. Ashley, Jedediah S. Smith, Captain Nathaniel J. Wyeth and others tried their hands but all were compelled to give up in despair.

More important perhaps than the loss of profits which might accrue to America from the successful prosecution of the fur trade was the weakening of America's title to the country, through the establishment of British trading posts, the colonization of retired officers and servants as cultivators of the public domain, etc. It is true that the joint occupancy conventions of 1818 and 1827, by which British and Americans alike were allowed to occupy the country, expressly stipulated that no advantage should inure to either of the high contracting parties by virtue of any acts performed subsequent to the date of the first convention. However clear and explicit the language of the treaty, no observer could fail to note that the establishment of trading enterprises was giving Great Britain a decided advantage in the struggle for title to the Oregon country. The Hundson's Bay Company had a political mission and was playing a prominent part in inter-national affairs. This it openly avowed in 1837 in its application to the home government for a new license granting enlarged privileges. It pointed boastfully to its efficient services in successfully crushing out American enterprise, and in strengthening the British title to the territory, contrary to the spirit and letter of the joint occupancy treaties.

In presenting the petition, the company's chief representative in England, Sir John Henry Pelly, called the attention of the lords to the service rendered in securing to the mother country a branch of trade, wrested from subjects of Russia and the United States of America; to the six permanent establishments it had on the coast, and the sixteen in the interior, besides the migratory and hunting parties; to its marine of six armed vessels; to its large pasture and grain farms, affording every species of agricultural produce and maintaining large herds of stock. He further averred that it was the intention of the company to still further extend and increase its farms, and to establish an export trade in wool, hides, tallow and other produce of the herd and the cultivated field, also to encourage the settlement of its retired servants and other emigrants under its protection. Referring to the soil, climate and other circumstances of the country, he said they were such as to make it "as much adapted to agricultural pursuits as any other spot in America; and," said he, "with care and protection the British dominion may not only be preserved in this country, which it has been so much the wish of Russia and America to occupy to the exclusion of British subjects, but British interest and British influence may be maintained as paramount in this interesting part of the coast of the Pacific."

Sir George Simpson, who was in charge of the Hudson's Bay Company's affairs in America, in making his plea for the renewal of the license, referred to the international import of the company's operations in this language: "The possession of that country to Great Britain may be an object of very great importance; and we are strengthening that claim to it (independent of the claims of prior discovery and occupation for the purpose of Indian trade) by forming the nucleus of a colony through the establishment of farms, and the settlement of some of our retired officers and servants as agriculturists."

One might almost expect that Great Britain would offer some word of reproof to a company which could have the audacity to boast of violating her treaty compacts with a friendly power. Not so, however. She was a party to the breach of faith. Instead of administering reproof, she rewards the wrong-doers by the promptly issuing of a new license to extend and be in force for a period of twenty-one years. This renewed license, the date of which is May 31, 1838, granted to the company "the exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America, to the northward and westward of the islands and territories belonging to the United States of America, as shall not form part of any of our (British) provinces in North America, or of any lands or territories belonging to the said United States of America, or to any European government, state, or power. Without rent for the first five years, and afterward the yearly rent of five shillings, payable on the 1st of June." The company was again required to furnish a bond conditioned on their executing by their authority over the persons in their employ, "all civil and criminal process by the officers or persons legally empowered to execute such process within all territories included in the grant, and for the producing or delivering into custody, for the purpose of trial, all persons in their employ or acting under their authority within the said territories, who shall be charged with any criminal offenses." The license, however, prohibited the company "from claiming or exercising any trade with the Indians on the northwest coast of America westward of the Rocky mountains to the prejudice or exclusion of any of the subjects of any foreign state, who, under or by any force of any convention for the time being between Great Britain and such foreign states, may be entitled to and shall be engaged in such trade." But no provision could be framed, nor was it the wish of the grantors to frame any, which should prevent the Hudson's Bay Company from driving out by harassing tactics and fierce competition, any American who might enter the Oregon territory as a trader.

Though the citizens of the United States failed to compete with the powerful British company for the profits of the fur trade, neither they nor their government viewed the aggressiveness of the British with anything like apathy. The value of the country early became appreciated by a determined little band in congress. The debates in that body, as well as the numerous publications sent out among the people, stimulated a few daring spirits to brave the dangers of Rocky mountain travel and to see for themselves the truth with regard to Oregon. Reports from these reacted upon congress, enabling it to reason and judge from premises more nearly in accordance with fact. Gradually interest in Oregon became intensified, and the determination to hold it for the United States deepened. While the country never receded from its conviction of the existence of an absolute right of sovereignty in itself, the people resolved to establish a title which even the British could not question, to win Oregon from Great Britain even in accordance with the tenets of her own theory. They determined to settle and Americanize the territory. In 1834 an element of civilization was introduced of a vastly higher nature than any which accompanied the inroad of the Hudson's Bay Company's employees and of trappers and traders; an element more potent also in its political effect as the event proved. We refer to the entrance into the country of a party of Methodist missionaries, which accompanied Wyeth's overland expedition. The party consisted of Rev. Jason Lee and his nephew, Rev. Daniel Lee, Cyrus Shepherd, Courtney M. Walker and P. L. Edwards. These settled near the site of the present city of Salem, forming the nucleus of a thrifty American colony, for the party was perforce increased by the marriage of some of its members and by additions to its numbers as the necessities of the mission and the progress of its work demanded. Not only that but the adventurous Rocky mountain men and other whites who became weary of their nomadic habits when they determined to settle down naturally sought its vicinity for the sake of its helpful society and influence.

Two years later came another missionary party, sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, an organization then supported by the Congregational, Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed churches. The members of this party were Dr. Marcus Whitman and wife, Rev. H. H. Spalding and wife and W. H. Gray. We must pass over for the present the work of these men and those who later became their associates, but their political influence was not less potent than that of the Methodist missionaries and it is certain that Whitman's famous midwinter ride overland to the east had for one of its momentous results the stimulating of immigration into Oregon. Undoubtedly a large proportion of the nearly nine hundred who were piloted over the Rockies by Whitman in 1843, were induced to come through the representations and efforts of that great missionary patriot.

But besides the missions, several other forces were at work to populate the Northwest with an American people which must be passed over here. The independent population of the country in 1841 was perhaps 253; in 1842 came an immigration of 111 persons; in 1843 came the immigration of 875 persons referred to above; the next year brought 800 more; 1846 added another thousand according to estimate, and so the population continued to grow by annual accretions. America had determined to oppose her citizens, as settlers and home builders, against the British fur traders, thus introducing into the Oregon question a feature, the vital force and import of which could not be denied by the adverse claimant.

But the transcendant importance of this great controversy demands that we trace briefly the history of diplomatic negotiations by which was effected a peaceful adjustment of international interests so diametrically opposed to each other as to twice all but occasion actual conflict of arms.

We need not attempt to trace all the conflicting claims which were at any time set up by different nations to parts or the whole of the old Oregon territory, nor to go into the controversy in all its multiform complications, but will confine our inquiry mainly to the negotiations after Great Britain and the United States became the sole claimants. France early established some right to what denominated "the western part of Louisiana," which, in 1762 she conveyed to Spain. This was retroceded to France some thirty-eight years later, and in 1803 was by that nation conveyed with the rest of Louisiana to the United States. So France was left out of the contest. In 1819, by the treaty of Florida, Spain ceded to the United States all right and title whatsoever which she might have to the territory on the Pacific, north of the forty-second parallel.

What then were the claims of the United States to this vast domain? Naturally they were of a three-fold character. Our government claimed first in its own right. The Columbia river was discovered by a citizen of the United States and named by him. The river had been subsequently explored from its sources to its mouth by a government expedition under Lewis and Clark. This had been followed and its effect strengthened by American settlements upon the banks of the river. While Astoria, the American settlement, had been captured in the war of 1812-15, it had been restored in accordance with the treaty of Ghent, one provision of which was that "all territory, places and possessions whatsoever, taken by either party from the other during the war, or which may be taken after the signing of this treaty, shall be restored without delay."

It was a well established and universally recognized principle of international law that the discovery of a river, followed within a reasonable time by acts of occupancy, conveyed the right to the territory drained by the river and its tributary streams. This, it was contended, would make the territory between forty-two degrees and fifty-one degrees north latitude the rightful possession of the United States.

The Americans claimed secondly as the successors of France. By the treaty of Utrecht, the date whereof was 1713, the north line of the Louisiana territory was established as a dividing line between the Hudson's Bay territory and the French provinces in Canada. For centuries it had been a well recognized principle of international law that "continuity" was a strong element of territorial claim. All European powers when colonizing the Atlantic seaboard, construed their colonial grants to extend, whether expressly so stated or otherwise, entirely across the continent to the Pacific ocean, and most of these grants conveyed in express terms a strip of territory bounded north and south by stated parallels of latitude and east and west by the oceans. Great Britain herself had stoutly maintained this principle, even going so far as to wage with France for its integrity, the war which was ended by the treaty of 1763. By that England acquired

Canada and renounced to France all territory west of the Mississippi river. It was therefore contended on the part of the United States that England's claim by continuity passed to France and from France by assignment to this nation. This claim, of course, was subject to any rights which might prove to belong to Spain.

Thirdly, the United States claimed as the successor of Spain, all the rights that nation might have acquired by prior discovery or otherwise having accrued to the United States by the treaty of Florida.

In the negotiations between Great Britain and the United States, which terminated in the Joint-Occupancy treaty of 1818, the latter nation pressed the former for a final quit claim of all territory west of the Rocky mountains. In so doing it asserted its intention "to be without reference or prejudice to the claims of any other power," but it was contended on the part of the American negotiations, Gallitin and Rush, that the discovery of the Columbia by Gray, its exploration by Lewis and Clark, and the American settlement at Astoria rendered the claim of the United States "at least good against Great Britain to the country through which such river flowed, though they did not assert that the United States had a perfect right to the country."

When, however, the United States succeeded to Spain, it was thought that all clouds upon its title were completely dispelled, and thereafter it was the contention of this government that its right to sole occupancy was perfect and indisputable. Great Britain, however, did not claim that her title amounted to one of sovereign or exclusive possession, but simply that it was at least as good as any other. Her theory was that she had a right to occupancy in conjunction with other claimants, which by settlement and otherwise might be so strengthened in a part or the whole of the territory as to ultimately secure for her the right to be clothed with sovereignty.

In the discussion of the issue, the earliest explorations had to be largely left out of the case, as they were attended by too much vagueness and uncertainty to bear any great weight. The second epoch of exploration was, therefore, lifted to a position of prominence it could not otherwise have enjoyed. Perez and Heceta, for the Spainards, the former in 1774, and the latter a year later, had explored the northwest coast to the fifty-fifth parallel and beyond, Heceta discovering the mouth of the Columbia river. To offset whatever rights might accrue from these explorations, England had only the more thorough but less extensive survey of Captain James Cook, made in 1778. The advantage in point of prior discovery would, therefore, seem to be with the United States as assignee of Spain.

After the Joint-Occupancy treaty of 1818 had been signed, negotiations on the subject were not reopened until 1824. In that year, obedient to the masterly instructions addressed to him on July 22, 1823, by John Quincy Adams, secretary of state, Richard Rush, minister to England, entered into negotiations with the British ministers Canning and Huskisson for the adjustment of the boundary. Mr. Rush was instructed to offer the forty-ninth parallel to the sea, "should it be earnestly insisted upon by Great Britain." He endeavored with great persistency to fulfill his mission, but his propositions were rejected. The British negotiators offered the forty-ninth parallel to the Columbia, then the middle of that river to the sea, with perpetual rights to both nations of navigating the harbor at the mouth of the river. This proposal Mr. Rush rejected, so nothing was accomplished. By treaty concluded in February, 1825, an agreement was entered into between Great Britain and Russia, whereby the line of fifty-four degrees, forty minutes, was fixed as the boundary between the territorial claims of the two nations, a fact which explains the cry of "Fifty-four, forty or fight" that in later days became the slogan of the Democratic party.

In 1826-7 another attempt was made to settle the question at issue between Great Britain and the United States. Albert Gallatin then represented this country, receiving his instructions from Henry Clay, secretary of state, who said: "It is not thought necessary to add much to the argument advanced on this point in the instructions given to Mr. Rush, and that which was employed by him in the course of the negotiations to support our title as derived from prior discovery and settlement at the mouth of the Columbia river, and from the treaty which Spain concluded on the 22d of February, 1819. That argument is believed to have conclusively established our title on both grounds. Nor is it conceived that Great Britain has or can make out even a colorless title to any portion of the northern coast." Referring to the offer of the forty-ninth parallel in a dispatch dated February 24, 1827, Mr. Clay said: "It is conceived in a genuine spirit of concession and conciliation, and it is our ultimatum and you may so announce it." In order to save the case of his country from being prejudiced in future negotiations by the liberality of offers made and rejected, Mr. Clay instructed Gallatin to declare: "That the American government does not hold itself bound hereafter, in consequence of any proposal which it has heretofore made, to agree to a line which has been so proposed and rejected, but will consider itself at liberty to contend for the full measure of our just claims; which declaration you must have recorded in the protocol of one of your conferences; and to give it more weight, have it stated that it has been done by the express direction of the president."

Mr. Gallatin sustained the claim of the United States in this negotiation so powerfully that the British plenipotentiaries, Huskisson, Grant and Addington, were forced to the position that Great Britian did not assert any title to the country. They contented themselves with the contention that her claim was sufficiently well founded as to give her the right to occupy the country in common with other nations, such concessions having been made to her by the Nootka treaty. The British negotiators complained of the recommendation of President Monroe in his message of December 7, 1824, to establish a military post at the mouth of Columbia river and of the passage of the bill in the House providing for the occupancy of the Oregon river. To this the Americans replied by calling attention to the act of the British parliament of 1821, entitled "An act for regulating the fur trade and establishing a criminal and civil jurisdiction in certain parts of North America." He contended with great ability and force that the recommendation and bill complained of did not interfere with the treaty of 1818, and that neither a territorial government nor a fort at the mouth of the river could rightly be complained of by a government which had granted such wide privileges and comprehensive powers to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Before the conclusion of these negotiations, Mr. Gallatin had offered not alone the forty-ninth parallel but that "the navigation of the Columbia river shall be perpetually free to subjects of Great Britain in common with citizens of the United States, provided that the said line should strike the northeastermost or any other branch of that river at a point at which it was navigable for boats." The British, on their part, again offered the Columbia river, together with a large tract of land between Admiralty Inlet and the coast, protesting that this concession was made in the spirit of sacrifice for conciliation and not as one of right. The proposition was rejected and the negotiations ended in the treaty of August 6, 1827, which continued the Joint-Occupancy treaty of 1818 indefinitely, with the proviso that it might be abrogated by either party on giving the other a year's notice.

"There can be no doubt," says Evans, "that, during the continuance of these two treaties, British foothold was strengthened and the difficulty of the adjustment of boundaries materially enhanced. Nor does this reflect in the slighest degree upon those great publicists who managed the claim of the United States in those negotiations. Matchless ability and earnest patriotism, firm defense of the United States' claim, and withal a disposition to compromise to avoid rupture with any other nation, mark these negotiations in every line. The language and intention of these treaties are clear and unmistakable. Neither government was to attempt any act in the derogation of the other's claim; nor could any advantage inure to either; during their continuance the territory should be free and open to citizens and subjects of both nations. Such is their plain purport; such the only construction which their language will warrant. Yet it cannot be controverted that the United States had thereby precluded itself from the sole enjoyment of the territory which it claimed in sovereignty; nor that Great Britain acquired a peaceable, recognized and uninterrupted tenancy-in-common in regions where her title was so imperfect that she herself admitted that she could not successfully maintain, nor did she even assert it. She could well afford to wait. Hers was indeed the policy later in the controversy styled masterly inactivity: 'Leave the title in abeyance, the settlement of the country will ultimately settle the sovereignty.' In no event could her colorless title lose color; while an immediate adjustment of the boundary would have abridged the area of territory in which, through her subjects, she already exercised exclusive possession, and had secured the entire enjoyment of its wealth and resources. The Hudson's Bay Company, by virtue of its license of trade excluding all other British subjects from the territory, was Great Britain's trustee in possession—an empire company, omnipotent to supplant enterprises projected by citizens of the United States. Indeed, the territory had been appropriated by a wealthy, all-powerful monopoly, with whom it was ruinous to attempt to compete. Such is a true exhibit of the then condition of Oregon, produced by causes extrinsic to the treaty, which the United States government could neither counteract nor avoid. The United States had saved the right for its citizens to enter the territory, had protested likewise that no act or omission on the part of the government or its citizens, or any act of commission or omission by the British government or her subjects during such joint-occupancy treaties, should affect in any way the United States' claim to the territory.

* * * * * * * * *

"The treaties of 1818 and 1827 have passed into history as conventions for joint occupancy. Practically they operated as grants of possession to Great Britain, or rather to her representative, the Hudson's Bay Company, who, after the merger with the Northwest Company, had become sole occupant of the territory. The situation may be briefly summed up: The United States claimed title to the territory. Great Britain, through its empire-trading company, occupied it,—enjoyed all the wealth and resources derivable from it."

But while joint occupancy was in realty non-occupation by any but the British, it must not be supposed that the case of the United States was allowed to go entirely by default during the regime of so-called joint occupancy. In congress the advisability of occupying Oregon was frequently and vehemently discussed. Ignorance and misconception with regard to the real nature of Oregon, its climate, soil, products, and healthfulness, were being dispelled. The representations of the Hudson's Bay Company that it was a "miasmatic wilderness, uninhabitable except by wild beasts and more savage men," were found to be false. In 1821 Dr. John Floyd, a representative in congress from Virginia, and Senator Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, had interviews at Washington with Ramsey Crooks and Russel Farnham, who had belonged to Astor's party. From these gentlemen they learned something of the value of Oregon, its features of interest, and its commercial and strategic importance. This information Dr. Floyd made public in 1822, in a speech in support of a bill "to authorize the occupation of the Columbia river, and to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians thereon." On December 29, 1823, a committee was appointed to inquire as to the wisdom of occupying the mouth of the Columbia and the committee's report, submitted on April 15th of the following year, embodied a communication from General Thomas S. Jesup, which asserted that the military occupancy of the Columbia was a necessity for protecting trade and securing the frontier. It recommended "the dispatch of a force of two hundred men across the continent to establish a fort at the mouth of the Columbia river; that at the same time two vessels, with arms, ordnance and supplies, be sent thither by sea. He further proposed the establishment of a line of posts across the continent to afford protection to our traders; and on the expiration of the privilege granted to British subjects to trade on the waters of the Columbia, to enable us to remove them from our territory, and secure the whole to our citizens. Those posts could also secure the preservation of peace among the Indians in the event of a foreign war and command their neutrality or assistance as we might think most advisable." The letter exposed Great Britian's reasons for her policy of masterly inactivity, and urged that some action be taken by the United States to offset the accretion of British title and for preserving and perfecting its own. "History," says Evans, "will generously award credit to the sagacious Jesup for indicating in 1823 the unerring way to preserve the American title to Oregon territory. Nor will it fail to command the earnest devotion of that little Oregon party in congress for placing on record why the government should assert exclusive jurisdiction within its own territory." In the next congress the subject was again discussed with energy and ability. In 1831 formal negotiations with Great Britain were resumed.

All this discussion had a tendency to dispel the idea, promulgated, as we have seen, by the Hudson's Bay Company, that the territory was worthless and uninhabitable, also to excite interest in the mystic region beyond the mountains.

The United States claimed theoretically that it was the possessor of a vested right to absolute sovereignty over the entire Oregon territory, and in all the negotiations, after the signing of the treaty of Florida, its ambassadors claimed that the title of their country was clearly established. The fact, however, that joint occupancy was agreed to at all after 1828 could hardly be construed in any other light than as a confession of weakness in our title, notwithstanding the unequivocal stipulations that neither party should attempt anything in derogation of the other's claims, and that the controversy should be determined on its merits as they existed prior to 1818. If the United States came into possession of an absolute title in 1819, why should it afterward permit occupation by British subjects and the enforcement of British law in its domain?

The United States' title, as before stated, rested upon three foundation stones,—its own discoveries and explorations, the discoveries and explorations of the Spaniards, and the purchase of Louisiana. While it was not contended that any one of these conveyed exclusive right, the position of our country was that each supplemented the other; that, though while vested in different nations they were antagonistic when held by the same nation, they, taken together, amounted to a complete title. The title was, therefore, cumulative in its nature and had in it the weakness which is inherent under such conditions. It was impossible to determine with definiteness how many partial titles, the value of each being a matter of uncertainty, would cumulatively amount to one complete title. And, however clear the right of the United States might seem to its own statesmen, it is evident that conviction must be produced in the minds of the British also if war was to be avoided.

In 1831 when Martin Van Buren was our minister at London he received instructions relative to the controversy from Edward Livingston, secretary of state, the tenor of which indicated that the United States was not averse to the presence of the British in the territory. While they asserted confidence in the American title to the entire Oregon territory, they said: "This subject, then, is open for discussion, and until the rights of the parties can be settled by negotiations, ours can suffer nothing by delay." Under these rather lukewarm instructions, naturally nothing was accomplished.

In 1842 efforts to adjust the boundary west of the Rocky mountains were again resumed, this time on motion of Great Britain. That power requested on October 18th of the year mentioned that the United States minister at London should be furnished with instructions and authority to renew negotiations, giving assurance of its willingness to proceed to the consideration of the boundary subject "in a perfect spirit of fairness, and to adjust it on a basis of equitable compromise." On November 25th, Daniel Webster, then secretary of state, replied: "That the president concurred entirely in the expediency of making the question respecting the Oregon territory a subject of immediate attention and negotiation between the two governments. He had already formed the purpose of expressing this opinion in his message to congress, and at no distant day, a communication will be made to the minister of the United States in London."

Negotiations were not, however, renewed until October, 1843, when Secretary Upshur sent instructions to Edward Everett, American minister to London, again offering the forty-ninth parallel, together with the right of navigating the Columbia river upon equitable terms. In February of the ensuing year, Hon. Richard Packenham, British plenipotentiary, came to the American capital with instructions to negotiate concerning the Oregon territory. No sooner had discussion fairly begun than a melancholy event happened, Secretary Upshur being killed on the United States vessel Princeton by the explosion of a gun. A few months later his successor, John C. Calhoun, continued the negotiations. The arguments were in a large measure a repetition of these already advanced but a greater aggressiveness on the part of the British and persistency in denying the claims of the United States were noticeable. As in former negotiations, the privileges accorded by the Nootka convention were greatly relied upon by Great Britain as proving that no absolute title was retained by Spain after the signing of that treaty, hence none could be assigned. One striking statement in Lord Packenham's correspondence was to the effect that "he did not feel authorized to enter into discussion respecting the territory north of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, which was understood by the British government to form the basis of negotiations on the side of the United States, as the line of the Columbia formed that of Great Britain." He thus showed all too plainly the animus of his government to take advantage of the spirit of compromise which prompted the offer of that line and to construe such offer as the abandonment of the United States, claim to an absolute title to all the Oregon territory. It is hard to harmonize her action in this matter with the "perfect spirit of fairness" professed in the note of Lord Aberdeen to Mr. Webster asking for a renewal of negotiations. No agreement was reached.

During the sessions of congress of 1843-4 memorials, resolutions and petitions from all parts of the union came in a perfect flood. The people were thoroughly aroused. In the presidential election which occurred at that time the Oregon question was a leading issue. "Fifty-four Forty or Fight" became the rallying cry of the Democratic party. The platform framed in the Democratic national convention declared: "Our title to the whole of Oregon is clear and unquestionable. No portion of the same ought to be ceded to England or any other power; and by the reoccupation of Oregon at the earliest practical period is a great American measure." The position of the Whig party was milder and less arrogant, but equally emphatic in its assertion of belief in the validity of the United States' title. The fact that the Democrats carried in the election, despite the warlike tone of their platform and campaign, is conclusive evidence that the people were determined to hold their territory on the Pacific regardless of cost. "Never was a government more signally advised by the voice of a united people. The popular pulse had been felt, and it beat strongly in favor of prompt and decisive measures to secure the immediate reoccupation of Oregon. It equally proclaimed that 'no portion thereof ought to be ceded to Great Britain.'" In January, 1845, Sir Richard Packenham, the British minister, proposed that the matter in dispute be left to arbitration, which proposal was respectfully declined. So the administration of President Tyler terminated without adjustment of the Oregon difficulty.

Notwithstanding the unequivocal voice of the people in demand of the whole of Oregon, James Buchanan, secretary of state under President Polk, in a communication to Sir Richard Packenham, dated July 12, 1845, again offered the forty-ninth parallel, explaining at the same time that he could not have consented to do so had he not found himself embarassed if not committed by the acts of his predecessors. Packenham rejected the offer. Buchanan informed him that he was "instructed by the president to say that he owes it to his country, and a just appreciation of her title to the Oregon territory, to withdraw the proposition to the British government which has been made under his direction; and it is hereby accordingly withdrawn." This formal withdrawal of previous offers of compromise on the forty-ninth parallel, justified as it was by Great Britain's repeated rejections, left the Polk administration free and untrammeled. Appearances indicated that it was now ready to give execution to the popular verdict of 1844. The message of the president recommended that the year's notice, required by the treaty of 1827, be immediately given, that measures be adopted for maintaining the rights of the United States to the whole of Oregon, and that such legislation be enacted as would afford security and protection to American settlers.

In harmony with these recommendations, a resolution was adopted April 27, 1846, authorizing the president "at his discretion to give to the government of Great Britain the notice required by the second article of the said convention of the sixth of August, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, for the abrogation of the same."

Acting in accordance with the resolution, President Polk the next day sent notice of the determination of the United States "that, at the end of twelve months from and after the delivery of these presents by the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States at London, to her Britannic Majesty, or to her majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, the said convention shall be entirely annulled and abrogated."

On the 27th of December, 1845, Sir Richard Packenham had submitted another proposal to arbitrate the matter at issue between the two governments. The proposal was declined on the ground that to submit the proposition in the form stated would preclude the United States from making a claim to the whole of the territory. On January 17th of the following year, a modified proposal was made to refer "the question of title in either government to the whole territory to be decided; and if neither were found to possess a complete title to the whole, it was to be divided between them according to a just appreciation of the claims of each." The answer of Mr. Buchanan was clear and its language calculated to preclude any more arbitration proposals. He said: "If the governments should consent to an arbitration upon such terms, this would be construed into an intimation, of not a direct invitation to the arbitrator to divide the territory between the two parties. Were it possible for this government, under any circumstances, to refer the question to arbitration, the title and the title alone, detached from every other consideration, ought to be the only question submitted. The title of the United States, which the president regards clear and unquestionable, can never be placed in jeopardy by referring it to the decision of any individual, whether sovereign, citizen or subject. Nor does he believe the territorial rights of this nation are a proper subject of arbitration."

But the British government seems now to have become determined that the question should be settled without further delay. The rejected arbitration proposal was followed on the 6th of June, 1846, by a draft of the proposed treaty submitted by Sir Richard Packenham to Secretary of State Buchanan. The provision of this were to the effect that the boundary should be continued along the forty-ninth parallel "to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver Island; and thence southerly through the middle of said channel and of Fuca's strait to the Pacific ocean." It stipulated that the navigation of the Columbia river should remain free and open to the Hudson's Bay Company and to all British subjects trading with the same; that the possessory right of that company and of all British subjects south of the forty-ninth parallel should be respected, and that "the farms, lands and other property of every description belonging to the Puget Sound Agricultural Company shall be confirmed to said company. In case, however, the situation of these farms and lands should be considered by the United States to be of public importance, and the United States government should signify a desire to obtain possession of the whole, or any part thereof, the property so required shall be transferred to the said government at a proper valuation, to be agreed between the parties."

Upon the receipt of the important communication embodying this draft, the president asked in advance the advice of the senate, a very unusual, though not unprecedented procedure. Though the request of the president was dated June 10th and the consideration of the resolution to accept the British proposal was not begun until June 12th, on June 13th it was "resolved (two-thirds of the senators present consenting), that the president of the United States be, and he is hereby, advised to accept the proposal of the British government, accompanying his message to the senate, dated June 10, 1846, for a convention to settle the boundaries, etc., between the United States and Great Britain, west of the Rocky or Stony mountains." The advice was, however, "given under the conviction that, by the true construction of the second article of the project, the right of the Hudson's Bay Company to navigate the Columbia would expire with the termination of their present license of trade with the Indians, etc., on the northwest coast of America, on the 30th of May, 1859."

The wonderful alacrity with which this advice was given and with which five degrees and forty minutes of territory were surrendered to Great Britain, is accounted for by some historians (and no doubt they are correct) by supposing that the "cession" was made in the interests of slavery. The friends of that institution were unwilling to risk a war with Great Britain which would interfere with the war with Mexico and the annexation of Texas. Their plan was to acquire as much territory from which slave states could be formed as possible, and they were not over scrupulous about sacrificing territory which must ultimately develop into free states. But for unfortunate diplomacy. "It is quite probable that British Columbia would be to-day, what many would deem desirable in view of its growing importance, a part of the United States."

Notwithstanding the great sacrifice made by the United States for the sake of peace, it was not long until war clouds were again darkening our national skies. The determining of the line after it reached the Pacific ocean soon became a matter of dispute. Hardly had the ratifications been exchanged when Captain Prevost, for the British government, set up the claim that Rosario was the channel intended by the treaty. The claim was, of course, denied by Mr. Campbell, who was representing the United States in making the survey line. It was contended by him that the Canal de Haro was the channel mentioned in the treaty. Lord Russell, conscious, no doubt, of the weakness of his case, proposed as a compromise President's channel, between Rosario and de Haro straits. The generosity of this proposal is obvious when we remember that San Juan island, the principal bone of contention, would be on the British side of the line. Indeed Lord Lyons, the British diplomatic representative in the United States, was expressly instructed that no line would be accepted which did not give San Juan to the British. The position of the United States was stated by Secretary of State Lewis Cass, with equal clearness and decisiveness. Efforts to settle the matter geographically proved unavailing and diplomacy again had to undergo a severe test.

For a number of years the matter remained in abeyance. Then the pioneer resolved to try the plan he had before resorted to in the settlement of the main question. He pushed into the country with wife and family. The Hudson's Bay Company's representatives were already there and the danger of a clash of arms between the subjects of the queen and the citizens of the United States, resident in the disputed territory, soon became imminent. Such a collision would undoubtedly involve the two countries in war.

In the session of the Oregon territorial legislature of 1852-53, the archipelago to which San Juan island belongs was organized into a county. Taxes were in due time imposed on Hudson's Bay Company property, and when payment was refused, the sheriff promptly sold sheep enough to satisfy the levy. General Harney, commander of the Department of the Pacific, inaugurated somewhat summary proceedings. He landed over four hundred and fifty troops on the island, and instructed Captain Pickett to protect American citizens there at all costs. English naval forces of considerable power gathered about the island. Their commander protested against military occupancy. Pickett replied that he could not, under his orders, permit any joint occupancy. General Harney, however, had acted without instructions from the seat of government, and the president did not approve his measures officially, though it was plainly evident that the administration was not averse to having the matter forced to an issue.

At this juncture, the noted General Scott was sent to the scene of the difficulty, under instructions to permit joint occupancy until the matter in dispute could be settled. Harney was withdrawn from command entirely. Finally an agreement was reached between General Scott and the British governor at Vancouver that each party should police the territory with one hundred armed men.

Diplomacy was again tried. Great Britain proposed that the question at issue be submitted to arbitration and she suggested as arbiter the president of the Swiss council or the King of Sweden and Norway or the King of the Netherlands. The proposition was declined by the United States. For ten years the dispute remained unsettled. Eventually on May 8, 1871, it was mutually agreed to submit the question, without appeal, to the arbitrament of Emperor William of Germany. George Bancroft, the well-known historian, was chosen to present the case of the United States, and it is said that "his memorial of one hundred and twenty octavo pages is one of the most finished and unanswerable diplomatic arguments ever produced." The British also presented a memorial. These were interchanged and replies were prepared by each contestant. The emperor gave the matter careful and deliberate attention, calling to his assistance three eminent jurists. His award was as follows: "Most in accordance with the true interpretation of the treaty concluded on the 15th of June, 1846, between the governments of her Britanic Majesty and the United States of America, is the claim of the Government of the United States that the boundry line between the territories of her Britannic Majesty and the United States should be drawn through the Haro channel. Authenticated by our autograph signature and the impression of the Imperial Great Seal. Given at Berlin, October 21, 1872." This brief and unequivocal decree ended forever the vexatious controversy which for so many years had disturbed friendly feelings and endangered the peace of the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples. No shot was fired; no blood was shed; diplomacy had triumphed.

In this cursory review of early Northwest history, the events transpiring between the signing of the treaty of 1846 and the organization of Idaho territory cannot be incorporated in any fulness. Another struggle for possession followed hard upon that with Great Britain, the final struggle in the great race war as a result of which our national domain was wrested from the hands of its aboriginal inhabitants. This struggle could have but one termination. The inferior race must yield to the superior. The Cayuse war, growing out of the Whitman massacre at Waiilatpu in 1847, and the Indian wars of the 'fifties resulted favorably to the whites and though the red man was a power in the land for many years, he could not withstand the steady oncoming tide of thrifty gold hunters and homeseekers. The Northwest pioneers being lovers of law and order, governments were instituted as a matter of course, first, the provisional government for the Oregon territory; then territorial government under the laws of congress, then separate territorial government for the country north of the Columbia river and eventually on March 3, 1863, separate territorial government for Idaho, with the northern counties of which our history must concern itself in future chapters.

PART I.

GENERAL NORTH IDAHO HISTORY

CHAPTER I.

PERIOD OF PLACER MINING.

Just when the existence of gold in the country north and east of the big bend in the Snake river became known it is impossible to state with any certainty. Bancroft says that in 1854 a man named Robbins, a resident of Portland, had purchased some gold of the Spokane Indians, and that the Catholic missionary, De Smet, had known of its existence in what is now north Idaho even prior to that date. E. D. Pierce is also credited with an early knowledge of the auriferous character of the country, and the reason given for his not having prospected it long before he did is the hostility of the Indian tribes. The reason is indeed a plausible one, for it is difficult to see how any man or set of men could carry on such operations during the era of Indian wars.

Many writers have assigned a different reason for Pierce's manifest interest in the prospecting of the Nez Perce country. They state that some time in the early fifties an Indian of one of the northern tribes visited the locality in California where Pierce was then mining; that the Indian told a strange story of an apparition seen by himself and two traveling companions in the rugged cliffs of his Idaho home; that the apparition was in the shape of a great, blazing ball of light which the superstitious red men believed to be the eye of the Great Spirit. The Indians were too awe-striken and fearful to venture any explorations until daylight, when diligent search revealed a large, glittering ball that resembled glass, embedded in the country rock. Believing their discovery to be "great medicine," they endeavored with all their might and skill to dislodge and appropriate the treasure but were unable to do so, and the great ball was still in situ. This story, says the writers referred to, so fired the imagination of the visionary Pierce that he at once formed the design of going in search of the wonderful ball, believing it to be a huge diamond.

Whether the story is veritable fact or pure myth or partly the former and partly the latter, the writer is unable to state. George W. Pierce who knew E. D. Pierce in Siskiyou county and mined with him there says there is no truth in the legend. It sounds very much as though it might be one of the fictions so current among mining men and prospectors of the early days, which, however, generally take the form of lost cabins, lost diggings, fabulous wealth discovered by lost miners and hunters, etc. But whatever may have fired the enthusiasm of Col. E. D. Pierce, certain it is that the Nez Perce country had a great fascination for him and that his assiduity and zeal have had a marvelous ultimate effect upon the history and development of the country.

In 1858 Pierce made a visit to the land of the Nez Perces, but does not seem to have found any opportunity for prospecting, owing to the unsettled condition of Indian affairs and the opposition to his projects of the conservative red men. Undaunted, however, he renewed his efforts at the first opportunity and his zeal was rewarded in the spring of 1860 by a discovery of gold on the Clearwater river. An account of this important find gained currency in Walla Walla during April and some mention is made of it in the Oregon Argus of the 30th of that month, but the statements of Pierce seem to have been doubted by many and no special excitement was created. Pierce's immediate return to his discovery was prevented by Indian opposition and that of the military authorities, for those whose duty it was to conserve for the Indians their rights under the treaty of 1855 foresaw the trouble which a discovery of gold and consequent rush would cause them. In August, however, Pierce and ten others, of whom William Bassett was one, made another trip into the Clearwater country and examined the region with considerable thoroughness. Returning in November, they freely communicated the result of their investigations. Mr. Bassett sent a letter to the Portland Times, then edited by Alonzo Leland, in which he gave a brief account of the trip and the prospects found by members of the party. His representations then and in interviews at a later date had the effect of thoroughly converting Mr. Leland to a belief in the great importance as a field for the prospector of the entire region between the Snake and the Bitter Roots. Throughout the winter of 1860-61, the newspaper man kept on publishing articles in his paper, the Daily Times, his authority being Mr. Bassett's account. So great was his enthusiasm that he did not escape the charge of fanaticism and the graver one of being in the pay of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, doing this writing and publishing for the purpose of building up their business.

Immediately upon his return to Walla Walla, Pierce began organizing a party to return with him and spend the winter in the Oro Fino basin. Some difficulty was encountered in making up this company, owing to the fear of trouble with the Indians and the efforts of those who dreaded another Indian war, but at last he succeeded in enlisting the interests of thirty-three stout-hearted men. An effort was made to prevent by military force this party from carrying out its designs. A detachment of dragoons was sent after the men, and pursued them as far as the Snake river, but failed to overtake them. The men had hardly reached Pierce's old camp before they received a visit from the Nez Perce Indian agent, A. J. Cain, who, however, did not attempt to interfere with their operations but on the contrary expressed his satisfaction with their good behavior.

All winter long the party wrought diligently building cabins, whipsawing lumber for sluice boxes, prospecting and the like. The result of the prospecting was very satisfactory, though Pierce himself does not seem to have been unduly sanguine, being fully aware of the difficulties. He believed the discovered gold district was on the outskirts of a mining country of great richness and large extent.

The first intelligence received by the outside world concerning the welfare and doings of these men came in March, 1861, when four of the miners arrived in Walla Walla. After a tramp on snow shoes to the mouth of Oro Fino creek, they had reached, in a half starved condition, an Indian camp, whence they proceeded with more expedition and better fortunes, bringing to Walla Walla a considerable sum of money in gold dust. The news was sent by special express to the Portland Daily Times. It was especially pleasing to the editor of that paper, whose sentiments and predictions were thereby confirmed, and naturally the news was given due prominence. The effect among the business men, merchants, and in fact all classes was magical. Newspapers sent special reporters into the country and the result was an inception of interest in the wild, weird terra incognita of eastern Washington. It needed now but some confirmation of these accounts to stimulate a stampede into the country, of a magnitude unprecedented in the northwest.

No one foresaw the coming deluge of humanity into the Nez Perce country with greater clearness than the officers of the government, civil and military, whose duty it was to protect the rights of the Indians. Though the Nez Perces had offered no resistence to Pierce and his men, they strenuously objected to further encroachments upon their reservation privileges. Nothing was more certain than that the whites would violate without scruple these rights when once the passion for gold had fired their imaginations and when the hope of securing it began producing its pleasant intoxication. What was to be done to prevent trouble?

In the hope of finding a satisfactory solution of this problem, Superintendent E. R. Geary held a concultation with Colonel Wright and the result of their deliberations was that the former repaired forthwith to the Indian country, called a council of the tribe, and succeeded in negotiating a treaty permitting the white men to enter the country for mining purposes on the promise of military protection and the enforcement of United States laws. The consent of the Indians was given wholly against their will, but they saw no way by which they could defend themselves against the incoming tide, and being of a pacific disposition, thought it better to surrender gracefully than to do so under compulsion. They had abundant proof that the deluge of whites was coming for, for weeks before the treaty could be negotiated, merchants had been taking goods to Pierce City from Walla Walla and the van of the advancing army of miners was already arriving from that city and Portland. Bancroft says that at the time of the signing of the treaty there were three hundred men in the Oro Fino district and that a month later there were one thousand.

Fortunately the Oregon Steam Navigation Company was enabled to do something for the accommodation of the incoming hordes daily arriving from various points in the northwest, California and elsewhere during the spring of 1861. Previously that company had sent Ephraim Baughman (who at present commands the Steamer Lewiston, plying between Lewiston and Riparia, in company with Captain Leonard White, to Colville on the upper Columbia with instructions to build a small boat there and explore the river down to The Dalles. Their object was to determine whether or not navigation was practicable. They set out sometime in March, made the exploration, and were back in Portland in the early part of May.

Meanwhile the events were happening in the Nez Perce country which have just been narrated. The company was as anxious to get as much patronage out of the rush as possible, so it ordered White, as captain, and Baughman, as mate and pilot, to take the Steamer Colonel Wright up the Columbia to Snake river, thence up that river as far toward the newly discovered mines as possible. The Colonel Wright was a vessel of some fifty tons burden, about 125 feet in length, fitted up with good machinery and well supplied with necessary equipments. Her engineer on this first trip on Snake river waters was John Gurty, her purser, Frank Coe, and besides she was manned by two fireman, a steward and assistant, an assistant engineer, a cook and six deck hands. Several business men came as passengers and one, Seth S. Slater, was so confident of the success of the enterprise that he brought with him between ten and fifteen tons of freight, expecting to get with it to some point within easy reach of the mines.

"We cleared," says Captain Baughman, "about the 10th of May. With all of us it was a voyage of discovery after we steamed into the broad mouth of the Snake river as none of us had ever before ridden upon its swift, turbid waters. As pilot, I directed that we travel very slowly and only during the day time, for rocky reefs and shoals were numerous and the waters were not deep. Each stream which we thought had not theretofore been named, we took it upon ourselves to christen; likewise every other natural feature, and even to-day many of the landmarks and creeks bear the names which we gave them. In due time, we swept around the big bend in the Snake just below where Lewiston now stands and were met by the rushing waters of a stream clear as crystal and broad enough to be classed as a river. Before us spread out a beautiful bunchgrass valley, or rather a series of plateaus, reaching away to a high prairie to the southward: This Indian paradise was occupied here and there by a tepee. Several Nez Perce Indians loitered about and a few bands of ponies grazed contentedly upon the luxuriant grass. The picture was indeed a pretty one.

"The sound of the steam whistle and the pounding of the engines naturally attracted the attention of the Indians, who flocked to the water's edge to gaze on the wonderful fire boat.

"I turned the vessel's prow into the water of this new river. Slowly the little steamer propelled itself onward in the direction of the Oro Fino mines. We had to line the vessel over the Lawyer and several other rapids and about thirty miles up the Clearwater we found an obstruction which we could not pass. This was what has since come to be named Big Eddy. Throughout our entire journey on the Clearwater thus far we were accompanied by Indians riding along the shore on horseback. By many little acts and signs did these children of nature manifest their friendliness, no one of their number, so far as I can now remember, giving the slightest evidence of other than kindly sentiments.

"At the Big Eddy we were forced to land as the little steamer could not make headway in the rapids. Twice we lined her and moved slowly up stream, but the vessel did not have power enough to keep herself in the channel, so finally we gave it up for the time being, came on shore and began making explorations. The result was not favorable. There was therefore nothing to do but to unload the freight. Slater thought the site a good one as it was the apparent head of navigation so he and a few others remained there establishing Slaterville."

The Colonel Wright went back to Celilo at once. On the return trip she stopped at the mouth of Lapwai creek and most of her crew went to visit Chief Lawyer, whose home was on a tract of bench land overlooking the Clearwater. "From the river," says Captain Baughman, "we could see his tepee and before it a tall pole from whose top the Stars and Stripes floated in the breeze. This display of patriotism by the brave and friendly old chief touched a responsive chord in our hearts and we never forgot it. Lawyer, who had been educated in the east and could talk good English, received us most cordially and we chatted with him a long time. His hospitality was especially praiseworthy when it is remembered that we were invading his territory and opening the way for thousands to follow. The Indians may have protested mildly against the establishment of a settlement at the mouth of the Clearwater, but their remonstrances were never very strong, and finding these unavailing they acquiesced with remarkable grace."

Having loaded again with a few passengers and some freight, the Colonel Wright made a second trip to the mouth of the Clearwater. Here she was met by a messenger from Slater requesting her to proceed up the river and get his outfit as he had decided to establish his store at the confluence of the Snake and Clearwater that he might be on the trails leading inland. The vessel steamed up to the eddy, got Slater and his goods, and brought them safely to the shores of the Snake, where Slater again pitched his tent. Soon he had opened near the confluence of the rivers the first store in what is now Lewiston and perhaps the first in the Clearwater country.

Immediately after the second trip of the Colonel Wright, the company placed another new steamer in service, the Okanogan, which was much larger and better equipped than the former. Captain White was placed in command, and the Colonel Wright was entrusted to the care of Captain Baughman. A month later, the Tenino, still larger than the Okanogan, was placed in service and to the command of this vessel Captain Baughman was transferred. Steamboat service was discontinued entirely in July, owing to the lowness of the water.

In July of the following year, Levi Ankeny, Dorsey S. Baker, Captain Baughman and several others placed an opposition boat, the Spray, upon the river, between Celilo and Lewiston. The Spray was a small vessel, built especially for shallow water, so it was able to continue its trips uninterruptedly until November. During the following winter it was sold to the O. S. N. Company for nearly double its cost.

In the spring of 1863 the People's Trasportation Company was organized in Portland for the purpose of establishing an opposition line of steamers to Lewiston. The E. D. Baker was placed on the Columbia between Portland and the Cascades, the Iris between that and the Dalles and the Cayuse Chief, under Captain Leonard White, between Celilo and Lewiston. After a successful career of six or seven years' duration, this company sold out to the O. S. N. Company, leaving that corporation again the autocrat of the Columbia and its tributaries.

But to return to the history of the mines—rapidly the Oro Fino district was populated with gold seekers. Discovered in the fall of 1860, it was occupied that autumn and winter by Pierce's party. In February merchants and miners from Walla Walla began to work their way in, so that by April the population was perhaps 300. A month later it was more than three times that many and when Judge James W. Poe entered in July he found the creeks and gulches swarming with people. He estimates their number at 2,000. Some claims were yielding fabulous returns and wages ranged from five to eight dollars a day, the common stipend being a half ounce of dust.

Oro Fino gold was very fine, as one familiar with the Spanish language would have surmised from the name of the diggings, which signifies fine gold. Subsequently coarse gold was discovered by William F. Bassett across the divide to the eastward of Oro Fino creek, and from the character of the metal the diggings were named Oro Grande. It is related that Mr. Bassett saw the country in which this discovery was made from the top of a tree on the divide between Oro Fino and Rhodes creeks. The general appearance of the country induced him to prospect it with the result above stated. The tree was ever afterwards known as Bassett's tree. The Oro Grande district never proved especially rich.

The richest claims in the Oro Fino district were on Rhodes and Canal gulches, though there were many claims of merit on Barclay, Blacksmith, French and Moore's gulches as well as on Oro Fino creek itself. Early in the history of the camp a miners' meeting had been held and the California mining laws adopted, by which code three kinds of claims were recognized, namely, creek and gulch claims, extending two hundred feet along the creek or gulch and of the width of one hundred and fifty feet; also hill claims which were last extended from the rim rock to the summit of the hills, with two hundred feet frontage. The miners were in the habit of holding a meeting on Sunday, whenever there was any occasion for such, and at these popular assemblages the laws were amended to suit new conditions as they might arise, disputes about claims were settled and plans for the promotion of the general welfare of the camp were weighed and discussed. Fortunately there was little lawlessness during the earliest days of the Oro Fino diggings.

Two towns sprang up in the district about the same time, namely, Oro Fino and Pierce City. The former was built on placer ground, a fact which furnishes the probable reason for its short life. At any rate, its business men moved to its sister town in course of a few years, making permanent the community bearing the name of him who pioneered the way for the mining population, while the old Oro Fino City gradually decayed and eventually became a memory. It is a rather strange fact that, though the two towns were very near together, there never was the bitter rivalry between them which has usually characterized communities so situated. Pierce City later became the county seat of Shoshone county, retaining the dignity and prestige incident thereto until the discovery of the Coeur d'Alene mines. In June a road was built along the Clearwater from the mouth of that river to Pierce City and by July so many merchants had endeavored to better their fortunes by furnishing the new district with goods that the market was oversupplied, notwithstanding the thousands of men who were seeking gold in all the neighboring gulches and on all the surrounding hills. Two saw-mills were in process of erection to supply the miners with lumber for sluice boxes, etc. But little household furniture was needed as there were only three families in the community.

In an article in the Portland Oregonian of August 31, 1861, G. C. Robbins made the statement that during that month twenty-five hundred practical miners were at work on Rhodes creek, Oro Fino creek, Canal gulch, and French creek and that four or five thousand men were making a living in other ways. His report on the earnings of the miners was as follows: Jarvis & Company, four men, $10 per diem to the man; James & Company, 5 men, $10; McCarty & Company, 4 men, $10; Vesay & Company, 8 men, $7 to $8; Hook & Company, 6 men, $10 to $12; Jones & Company, 4 men, $10 to $12; Dunbar & Asar, $10 to $12; Shaffer & Company, 14 men, $60; Paine & Company, 20 men, $70; Mortimer & Company, 24 men, $70 to $80; Hatch & Company, 5 men, $16 to $20; Thomas & Campany, 14 men, $18 to $20; Rillery & Company, 17 men, $16 to $20; Smalley & Company, 10 men, $16; Boone & Company, 8 men, $16; California Company, 9 men, $16; Newland & Company, 6 men, $16; Hickox & Company, 5 men, $16 to $20; Let 'Er Rip Company, 11 men, $16 to $20; Hoyt & Company, 8 men, $12; Felton & Company, $16; Sparks & Company, $15; Rossi & Company, $15; Rhodes & Company, 11 men, 300 ounces per diem to the company. On French creek, Antoine Pillir, T. Lapoint, M. Guinon, John Lesot, and Harkum & Quick were making $10 to $12 a day to the man.

It is not in the nature of mining men that they should confine themselves to one mining district, however rich. Pierce himself was of the opinion that his discovery was on the outer edge of an extensive gold-bearing country and there were plenty of others who held like views and were willing to give time and effort to the testing of their theory. In May, 1861, a company of fifty-two such men set out from Oro Fino to explore and prospect the south fork of the Clearwater and tributary streams. The locality was almost as little known as any on the American continent or in the heart of darkest Africa. Remote from the ordinary routes of travel, it was also distant from the trails of the fur hunter so that probably no white foot had ever before pressed its soil. The gold seekers followed the north side of their stream for several miles, then crossed over to the south side, proceeding thence to the mouth of the south fork, up which branch they traveled until they reached the Indian village of Chief Coolcoolsneenee. Here their progress was stayed for a time by the strenuous opposition of the chieftain, who emphatically informed them that they were violating the treaty in carrying on their operations south of the Clearwater. Persuasion and argument proving of no avail in pacifying the chief, more than half the party turned back. The remainder crossed to the north side of the stream and continued on east by one of the Nez Perce trails to the point where the three branches of the south fork, American and Red rivers and Elk creek, form a junction. Prospecting in this vicinity resulted in the discovery of earths yielding from twelve to twenty-five cents to the pan. The first gold is said to have been found at the bottom of Ternan hill at the mouth of Glass gulch, close to the present bridge over the American river on the road to Dixie.

Prominent members of this party of discovery were Captain L. B. Monson, Moses Milner, Charles B. Hand and Charles Painter. The return of a third of the men to Oro Fino for supplies caused the news of the find to become spread abroad, precipitating a rush. We are informed that three days after the first discovery Philip S. Pritchard, with Samuel Warfield and his son, William, Charles Bogart, Horace Myrtle, William Kay, John Gamboel and Felix G. Berger, reaching the spot, staked out two claims above Buffalo gulch and eight below it on the American river. They began working together forthwith.

A mining recorder's office was established at once, with Captain L. B. Monson as the first recorder. The first record was dated June 14, 1861, and described placer ground on the American river to be worked by the following men: Moses Wright, Charles Silverman, Charles Gwin, John Gordon, George Robertson, Mat. Craft, N. Harris, John McKray, G. N. Stubbs and Frank Presley.

Shortly after the discovery two brothers, James and William Galbraith, started an express. Inside of ten days more than three hundred people were en route to or already at the South Fork diggings, but the population of the new eldorado was kept down considerably by the righteous opposition of the Indians to the presence of white men in their reserved territory. Good reports, however, continued to come in and the passion for gold soon overcame any scruples about trespassing, so that by fall a town became a necessity. Elk City was accordingly laid out, its location being between Elk and American rivers, about a mile from the lower end of a small prairie, perhaps five or six miles long by a mile wide.

"On every side of this locality," says Bancroft, rose ledges of pale red or rose quartz. Between the mountains were intervals of beautiful, grassy prairies; on the mountains heavy forests of pine. Game abounded, the principal being elk, of which there were large bands. The country was, in fact, very different from the California miners' preconceived notion of a gold country; but experience had proved that gold might exist under barren sands, rich alluvium, or the the frozen mosses of a caribou. The objection to the country was that the mining season, so far up in the mountains, must be comparatively short, and in order to make up for the expense of a long idle winter, it was important to secure a considerable sum during the summer. It was also necessary to lay in a stock of provisions to last while the heavy snows suspended travel."

Joel D. Martin tells us that when he came to the town in the early summer of 1862, he found mercantile establishments belonging to Clindinning, Magruder & Wickersham, Straven & Company, Creighton & Company, a man named Claflin and others, besides five saloons and two principal hotels, Ralph's and the Marsten house. The camp's prosperity was at its height during the mining season of 1862, for that fall discoveries in what is now Montana made wholesale drafts upon the population of this and other mining communities in north Idaho. But the years 1864 and 1865 nevertheless witnessed a greater production of gold, as hydraulics were placed in operation during the former twelvemonth, displacing the primeval rocker.

The Elk City mining district was distinguished above all others by the extent of its ditch contruction. The largest of these acqueducts was the American river ditch, which took its waters out of the stream of that name at a point about nine miles above the camp. Mr. Martin tells us that it was dug with pick and shovel at a cost of between thirty thousand and forty thousand dollars and that between two hundred thousand and three hundred thousand feet of lumber were used in the construction of its flumes. For the production of this lumber a saw-mill was built, operated by a turbine water wheel. The originators of the scheme were E. W., W. P. and Doctor Bell and Rosswell Hewett. Its construction was commenced in 1863 and during the mining season following it was pouring its water upon the placer grounds of American hill.

Next in size was the Elk creek ditch, the waters of which were used in the Buffalo hill mines, valuable placer deposits taken up in 1861-2 by Jake Hoffman, S. S. Shaun, Joseph Nelson, Chatham W. Ewing, John and Abe Champion, Horatio Phinney, ——— Montague and others, and first worked by a ditch from Buffalo creek, three miles from the hill. The Elk creek ditch was ten and a half miles long, three feet wide on the bottom and thirty inches deep. The company organized for its construction was capitalized at eleven thousand dollars, but it soon became so embarrassed by lack of funds that its project was all but abandoned. At this juncture Caleb Witt came to the rescue, furnishing enough money to start the ball rolling again and to establish confidence and credit. The company was by this means enabled to push the ditch to completion, and by the spring of 1863 it was available for use. For many years Buffalo hill was very profitably worked and thousands of dollars' worth of dust have been taken out of it. In 1872 the Witts secured control of both ditches and claims, retaining them until 1880, when they were transferred by lease to Chinamen.

Besides these was the Little Elk creek ditch with a capacity of three hundred or four hundred inches, promoted by Dan Waldo and Bart Whittier; also a short ditch of three hundred inches capacity, the water of which was taken out of Kirk's fork of the American river and carried upon Nez Perce hill, there to be used in operating the Hairland mine. This property had been discovered by the man whose name it bore in 1861 and purchased in 1862 by Magruder, Martin and Kirkpatrick, by which triumvirate the ditch was constructed.

The same causes that impelled the discoverers of the Elk City placer deposits to their successful quest were operative to keep other parties scouring the country in all directions throughout the whole of the summer of 1861. The theory that the Clearwater mines were on the outskirts of some auriferous region, the center of which would be found wonderfully rich, seems to have taken firm hold on the minds of the prospectors and many were the attemps to verify it. One of the parties engaged in this task succeeded in discovering a gold deposit which far surpassed in richness all former finds, and caused a rush the following spring of unprecedented magnitude. One story of this discovery was told in the Oregonian, of October 26, 1861, by a correspondent who signed himself "T. H. M." Though the account is discredited in some of its deatils by men having good opportunity to know the truth, it is thought advisable to reproduce it here:

MILLERSBURG, W. T., Oct. 5, 1861.

Editor Oregonian:—

The Salmon River mines, which are now attracting the the attention of miners, traders, and business men generally in this upper country, are located on some small streams and gulches, coming out of a western spur of the Bitter Root mountains, and running into the main stream, distant from fifteen to twenty miles. They are about seventy-five miles from Lewiston, in a southeastern course about one hundred and twenty-five miles south from Oro Fino, and nearly seventy-five miles from Elk City.

The discovery of those mines was first made by a prospecting party of twenty-three men, who left Oro Fino in the early part of July last, for a tour up Salmon river. They prospected on the bars of this river for a distance of perhaps one hundred miles, with flattering results. When satisfied that good paying mines had been found, they followed the river down, and when opposite this, they were determined on finding a near route to Elk City, for the purpose of obtaining provisions, which by this time had become a scarce article with them. When they reached this place, the party separated, nine of them remaining behind to hunt and to find an easy route through the almost impassible masses of dead timber, which lay in the way. Two of the company, while lying in camp, made a wager between them that the 'color' could not be 'raised' in the miserable looking country. The wager was won by the prospector obtaining from a pan of dirt, taken from beneath the roots of an upturned tree, the sum of five cents. The party then prospected several creeks and gluches in the immediate vicinity, obtaining five, ten, twenty-five and even seventy-five cents to the pan of dirt. Satisfied even better with this than with the diggings on the main river, they followed the other party out. After recruiting a short time, they purchased a supply of tools, provisions, etc, necessary for four weeks' stay, and returned closely followed by some six or seven others to this land of golden promise.

After their return, prospecting was resumed in real earnest, and all here are now satisfied that these will prove the richest and most extensive mines yet found north of California. All claim that the center of the vast gold field has at last been found, and this it is, while the Oro Fino and South Fork diggings are on the outer edge.

Only a radius of about four miles has yet been prospected, yet all the gulches, ravines and creeks inside of this will pay well for working. Miller's creek is perhaps the richest. From the first pan of dirt taken out of the first hole sunk in this creek, twenty-five dollars was obtained. Miller washed out with the pan that afternoon $100. Claims were immediately staked off on this creek and the party went to work. Each claim has since averaged with the rocker from seventy-five dollars to one hundred dollars to the hand. Babboon gulch is next in richness. I have seen seventy-five dollars washed out in ten hours by one man using the pan alone. Nasan's gulch pays well. Five men have just cleaned up seven hundred dollars, the result of ten hours work with the rocker in this gulch. Hall's gulch, Smith's gulch, Pioneer gulch and Healey's creek will pay each at least three ounces to the hand.

There are at the present time about fifty men here. Provisions are not to be had at any price. Parties are now fitting up pack trains and sending out for such articles as are needed. It will require about three hundred weight of flour for each man this winter. The route here is good over fifty miles of an Indian trail; the remaining portion of the trail is now being made. Pack trains can get in here until the 20th of November easily.

We expect a large acceleration to our numbers from Elk City and Oro Fino soon. A town has been laid out the name of which heads this letter.

To find the truth concerning this famous discovery and be sure one has it is not an easy task. The different stories are so hopelessly at variance that they can never be harmonized, but one apparently worthy of credence was published in the Free Press of July 5, 1889, on the authority of Nathan Smith, who claimed to have led the party which made the discovery.

"Mr. Smith and a partner named Jack Reynolds," says the paper referred to, "Left Oro Fino on a prospecting trip towards the little north fork of the Clearwater and found prospects, but as the water was too high for them to continue farther they returned to Pierce City for supplies, intending to return to their prospects later. Arriving at Pierce City they found a company organizing for an extended exploring and prospecting trip toward the Salmon river country, and as they were afraid of the Indians who had driven back several small parties, they were waiting for reinforcements, and Mr. Smith was considered such an admirable recruit that he was elected to command the expedition. They pulled out of Pierce City, twenty-three in number, crossed the Clearwater at the mouth of the Lolo and went on across Camas prairie to the Salmon. They continued up the Salmon to the mouth of Slate creek, where Mr. Smith found a good prospect of shot gold, but as it was intolerably hot in the canyon he decided on taking the party into the mountains and prospecting for gold on the headwaters of Slate creek. Here dissensions arose, as the majority of the company wanted to keep to the river and prospect for bar claims. The outfit hung together, however, and continued up the Salmon to the mouth of Meadow creek, and there they climbed the ridge to the summit, pretty much as the Warren trail runs today, and made their first camp on Sand creek, then a marsh. The next morning the majority of the party under the lead of a Frenchman had decided to return to the river, declaring there was no gold in the basin. This was August 20th and they were going to break camp and take the back track at noon. Smith and a few others decided to remain and prospect further. That same morning Joe Richardson got a four-bit prospect on Pioneer gulch and Smith also panned out six bits in another gulch. Upon returning to camp at noon the other party were speedily convinced that there was gold in the basin, and that same afternoon, George Grigsby, the biggest kicker in the outfit, saw some fine looking gravel at the roots of a fallen tree in Bashaw gulch from which he washed four bits to the pan, and on the strength thereof has claimed for himself the title of the discoverer of Florence, which rightfully belongs to Mr. Smith. Enough was now known to convince them that they had struck it big and after staking claims enough to go around they started for Elk City for supplies."

Joshua Fockler, who was one of the earliest settlers in Florence, discredits both these accounts. He says he remembers distinctly the story told him by several reliable men shortly after the find and that it was to this effect: Florence was discovered in August, 1861, by a party of five persons, three of whom were John Healey, James Ayers and a man named Grigsby. They were a detachment of a party of nineteen which started from Elk City and the Clearwater to prospect the Salmon river country, traveling via Camas prairie and White Bird creek. When they reached a point six miles above the mouth of Little Salmon river where August Berg now lives they undertook to cut across and reach Elk City again. They found the country too rough, so returned to the Salmon, which they ascended to Kelley's creek, going thence up that stream. On Little Slate creek the party disagreed and divided. The five referred to above continued to prospect the region. When they reached what afterward became known as Pioneer gulch, John Healey saw a tree that had been uprooted by the wind. He noticed that the gravel exposed showed good indications, so he tried a panful and found it very rich. After testing the ground in numerous places, the party started back to Elk City. At what is now known as Buffalo Hump they fell in with the fourteen who had separated from them and told these of their good fortune. All went to Elk together, agreeing among themselves to tell nobody of the discovery until spring, when they would return and locate the best ground for themselves. But none of them lived up to this agreement and soon all started back with their friends. In September of the same year Nathan Smith, Miller, Graham and others from Oro Fino made a discovery on Miller's creek, in the Florence country, but they were a month later than the Pioneer gulch discoverers.

The news is said to have reached Oro Fino in September. Soon that town and Elk City were almost deserted. By the 1st of November, the creeks and gulches of the new district were swarming with men. The merchants, in accordance with the usual custom, had begun hurrying in supplies, but the impossibility of getting enough into camp to feed the multitudes before the snowfall had stopped the passage of trains was plainly apparent, and by the middle of November many perceived the necessity of returning to Oro Fino to winter. The snow was even then two feet deep and the cold so severe that travelers were frequently frostbitten seriously.

Soon after the inception of the camp a miners' meeting was held at which it was decided to lay out a town on Summit flat at the head of Babboon gulch. Among those present was Dr. Ferber, one of the oldest men and first arrivals in the camp, and he was called upon to suggest a name for the town to be. He suggested Florence, the name of his adopted daughter, then in California. The word seemed to have a pleasing sound to the ears of the miners. It was adopted forthwith and from the richness of the ground around it soon became a household word in Washington, Oregon, California and many parts of the east. John Creighton, Ralph Bledsoe, and S. S. or Three-Fingered Smith were among the earliest merchants in the camp.

The number coming into camp was far in excess of those departing, far in excess of the number that could be well fed, and the result was great suffering and hardship. The prices prevailing for all kinds of provisions were enormous. Mr. Pierce says the prices of commodities were $75 for a fifty-pound sack of flour; gum boots, $50; camp kettles, $30; bacon, $3 a pound; ordinary tin cups, $3 each; frying pans, $10 to $12; sugar, $3 a pound; beans, $3 a pound, and all other provisions and supplies in proportion. Vegetables were not to be obtained at any price. Many were without other means of support than the gold obtained from their mines, so that notwithstanding ten feet of snow, they must dig down to pay dirt and wash out enough of the precious metal to purchase at enormous prices the means of subsistance. Sometimes boiling water was used to soften the frozen earth, as has been done in Alaska during recent years. The exposure and hardship resulted in rheumatism, throat, bronchial and lung diseases, which caused a high mortality There was a large representation of the ruffian element in Florence during the winter. Plummer, Standifer, Mat Bledsoe, Cherokee Bob and others of like character were there, demeaning themselves according to the dictations of their own unrestrained wills. The sufferings were enough to drive even good men to acts of desperation and it was stated that the storehouses of the merchants were more than once in danger of mob violence.

By great effort men forced their way into Florence until February; then the trails became so badly obliterated or blocked with snow that the feat of reaching the mines was no longer possible and the Florence community was completely isolated from the rest of the world. But long before this the entrance of pack trains was all but an impossibility. It is related that G. A. Noble started late in December on a trip from Oro Fino to Florence with a small pack train. For ten days he toiled through snow drifts before reaching his destination, being indebted for his life to assistance rendered by the Indians.

Even before communication was completely barred, the only article of food that could be purchased was flour at $2 a pound, and as time proved there was no hope of a change in conditions until May. By the first of that month, however, pack trains managed to force their way to within ten miles or so of Florence, and the starving miners were glad to transport the goods the rest of the way on snow shoes for the price offered, forty cents a pound.

But no tales of hardship could deter the hosts of eager wealth seekers in all parts of the Northwest and in California and Nevada from flocking by the thousands to this new land of gold. Little they thought of the harships endured already by men in the Florence basin, or of those which they themselves might be called upon to endure in the pursuit of mammon. Their imaginations were fired by the stories of fortunes made in a day. And indeed the success achieved by miners was such as might well appeal to the avarice of men. A correspondent of the Portland Times stated through the columns of that paper that while he was at the Salmon river mines in October, 1861, he had known of his own knowledge that some claims yielded thirty to eighty dollars to the pan. It was stated that a man named Weiser, after whom the town of Weiser in Washington county was named, took out one thousand eighteen hundred dollars from his claim in three hours, with a rocker, two men operating it; also that a single panful of dirt from Babboon gulch was found to contain one hundred and fifty-one dollars and fifty cents. George W. Pierce told the writer that Three-Fingered Smith, who owned about the richest claim in the camp, kept three rockers at work all winter and that each of the rockers averaged a thousand dollars a day. "It was no uncommon thing," says Bancroft, "to see, on entering a miner's cabin, a gold washing pan measuring eight quarts, full to the brim or half filled with gold dust washed out in one or two weeks. All manner of vessels, such as oyster cans and yeast powder boxes or pickle bottles, were in demand in which to store the precious dust. A claim was held in small esteem that yielded only twelve dollars per day, as some claims did, while hundreds of others yielded from one to four ounces for a day's labor." Many of the stories which gained currency at the time seemed like veritable fairy tales, but men who were in Florence during the fall and winter seem to have no hesitancy in fully crediting them. The gold deposits were so very rich that the would-be boomer, if any such there was, was outdone by the simple truth itself.

With such stories on the lips of miners returned to spend the winter in Walla Walla or Portland and such accounts in the columns of the newspaper, what wonder that the fortune hunting public could not brook a wait until spring, before starting to the land of gold! In vain did the newspapers endeavor to persuade the people into a reasonable state of mind; in vain did they protest that roads in the upper country were impassable; in vain did the Portland Advertiser call attention to the fact that snow at The Dalles was still (on March 14th) two feet deep and from one to four between that and Lewiston, with proportionately greater depths in the mountains; that provisions along the whole distance were exhausted; that riding or pack animals fit for service could not be obtained as all such were either dead or so reduced in strength and flesh by the severe winter as to be useless; and that a supply of fuel could not be obtained along the road except at long intervals. Men crowded into the interior as far as they could get notwithstanding these warnings, and it is said that so many men unable to pay the high prices of living crowded into The Dalles that that town was at one time temporarily subjected to the rule of a mob, the members of which proceeded to help themselves to such things as they needed. Indeed the severity of the winter in one way augmented the rush, as it made many Oregon farmers who had suffered severe losses by the floods of December especially anxious to retrieve their fortunes. Merchants were in haste to be first in with their goods. Miners, who had left their claims in the fall, were anxious to return to them, lest they should be taken possession of by others.

Regular communication between The Dalles and Walla Walla had ceased in January after a disastrous trip of the stage, in which Johnson Mulkey, father-in-law of Senator Dolph, and a prominent Lewiston merchant named Jaggers had lost their lives. But about the middle of March a saddle train, with passengers, arrived from Walla Walla and that was the signal for a forward movement on the part of many who had crowded into The Dalles. A sudden thaw on the 22d made the roads almost impassable and swelled the streams so that fording was out of the question, but at this juncture the steamboat Colonel Wright succeeded in making a trip from Celilo to Wallula, enabling those who had not already started to secure easy transportation that far on their journey. But more than a month must yet elapse before the anxious fortune hunters could force their way to the land of promise. As before related, the first pack trains to arrive failed to get nearer Florence than ten or twelve miles and the goods were packed the rest of the way on the backs of starving men.

Though the richness of the discoveries already made was quite widely known, the extent of the auriferous sands was a matter of uncertainty. The lateness in the season of the discovery and the opposition of Indians had prevented thorough prospecting that fall, the severity of the cold and depth of snow made it impossible during the winter and early spring, so it was not until June that much could be done. The general appearance of the country for many miles around was similar to that in which the gold was being obtained, an encouraging, but, as it afterwards proved, delusive circumstance. The Florence country consists of an extensive basin surrounded by lofty mountains. Extended around its outer edge and snug up against the base of its rugged natural wall is a deep canyon, while in the center are numerous pine and tamarack-clad elevations. Evidences of fire were visible in many places and there were other extensive areas in which the trees were dead, but did not bear any marks of fire. Judge Poe thinks that the most probably theory to account for these dead forests is that at some time a season of unusual severity had killed the tree roots.

It was in the gulches between these elevations that the gold was found. On the surface was a turf of six inches to a foot in thickness, beneath which was a loam varying in depth from one to six feet. Beneath this again was a bed of gravel, then another layer of earth and then a red gravel, said to be peculiar to the Florence and Warren regions, bearing gold. The sand possessed no magnetic qualities and resembled gold dust so closely that it might easily be mistaken therefor. Humorous stories are told of its being passed upon unsuspecting tenderfeet for the much-prized, much-sought yellow metal. The sand was, however, of a greatly lower specific gravity, hence could be separated from the gold by blowing. The bedrock is granite.

Some of the gulches were dry, but water could generally be secured by digging and the method employed by those not so fortunate as to possess streams or ditches was to make an excavation, allow it to fill with water, use this over and over again in the rockers until it became too thick, then dip the well dry and wait for it to fill again from the water-soaked gravels around.

Such was the country to be prospected during the summer of 1862 by the motley crowds that had flocked to it. Thousands explored it in all directions, testing every creek and guich. This thorough exploration proved that outside of an area perhaps five miles square no pay dirt could be found, and the number of disappointments may be imagined. A relatively small number found the wealth they had come so far to seek, but the vast majority learned that the sacrifices of their toilsome journey in the spring of 1862 would remain forever unrewarded. The hunger and fatigue, the cold and exposure, the dreary journeyings over muddy roads, through flood-swollen streams and by snow-filled, mountain trails were to win no smile from fickle Fortuna, who bestows her favors with an arbitrary, whimsical hand. Some cursed their ill luck; some gave away to despondency; some with apparent jollity and abandon laughed the laugh which told too plainly despite its apparent meriment, that penury had always been their lot; that nothing better was expected in the future and that they had determined to defy evil fate by seeming indifference to its persistent lashings.

Prospecting parties did not confine their operations, during 1862, to the Florence basin, although that was the principal scene of operations. Many small companies scoured the hills and mountains in all directions and one of these made a discovery, which, had not its importance been magnified many diameters by false reports, would have long since been forgotten. The discovery in question was made in the vicinity of Buffalo Hump, a mountain some twenty miles northeast of Florence. It was not of sufficient importance to hold people enough to found a new camp, but a rush was occasioned of no small magnitude. Rumor said that the miners there were taking out dust by the teacupful and that even gum boots were being called into requisition as receptacles in which to store the dust. Excitement ran high. Rich claims in Florence were temporarily abandoned by men anxious to join the stampede. The falsity of the report was, however, soon discovered, though not until some of the merchants had pofited by it, as the circulators of the false reports doubtless intended they should.

But one new discovery of real merit was made during the year. In July, 1862, James Warren, Matt Bledsoe and a few others set out on an exploring and prospecting tour of the Salmon river country. Warren, the leader, was a college man, generally liked, but like most men of the region, he had drifted into bad habits and bad company. After prospecting all along Salmon river, the party at length decided to try the high mountain country to the southward. Crossing Salmon river at a point nearly due south of Florence they continued their journey to a small stream, which coursed seven or eight miles through a beautiful meadow, perhaps a mile wide in places. Near the head of this little mountain torrent the party camped and, according to the usual custom, some of their number busied themselves with the gold pan. Better prospects were discovered than had before rewarded their efforts on the trip and a number of claims were staked out. The credit of this find was given to Warren, after whom the entire camp was subsequently named. The gold was fine and did not exist in such large quantities as in the other camps, though Judge Poe tells us that as high as sixty ounces per diem to the rocker were taken out. The rich find at the head of the creek led to the settlement of the district, but it was subsequent discoveries that gave the camp permanence.

Of course the usual rush followed as soon as the facts became known. The news reached Florence first, causing a commotion in that camp. Judge J. W. Poe, who at the time was engaged in the mercantile business in Florence with Joseph Haines and S. S. Smith, under the firm name of Smith & Company, told the writer the story of the early days of Warren as follows:

"The news reached me early. Smith was in Oregon. Haines was then at Lewiston and just preparing to start for Fleronce with a pack train of forty animals. I immediately sent a mesenger to him, telling him of the new discovery across the Salmon and asking him to come at once as I was unable to leave the store. Meanwhile the rush to the new district began and thousands deserted Florence in search of a fortune in the new mines. The trail led from Florence down the Salmon river, across this stream and several miles up a mountain, past Marshall lake and over a divide onto Warren creek. The Indian trails usually followed the summits of mountain ranges, that the red men might be the better able to keep their bearings, and it was on this account that mineral deposits happened to be discovered in such elevated places.

"Among the first who went to Warren was my partner, Joseph Haines, who had returned in haste from Lewiston on receipt of my message. He and a man named White met the returning crowds at Salmon river, and heard their discouraging reports, but nevertheless, determined to push on. They camped near the mouth of a little stream afterward called Slaughter creek because the cattle brought into camp were killed there, a stream which empties into Warren's creek, two or three miles above the canyon. In this locality they noticed a deep washout, left by the flood of springtime, and repairing thither, they quickly washed from a pan of the dirt about one dollar and seventy-five cents in gold. The party staked out claims for themselves and one each for Smith and myself and one discovery claim, thus inaugurating the real Warren camp. Others took claims along the creek bed and soon several hundred men were at work. Returning to Florence for his packtrain, Haines took it through to the new camp, gaining the distinction of being the first to enter with a mercantile train. The date of his second arrival was September 8, 1862. The miners assisted in building a rude house and before night the first store in the new district was standing at the mouth of Slaughter creek. The settlement which sprang up around it was named Richmond, after the confederate capital, a circumstance which soon gave it a rival, for the Unionists, not to be outdone, established another settlement a mile below, to which they gave the name Washington. Richmond did not long survive the confederate cause, for by 1866 it was abandoned by nearly all its inhabitants. The reason of its decay was not political, however, but rather that it had the misfortune to be built on rich placer ground, which in time had to be surrendered to claim owners. Washington's site was just off the pay streak, and its growth was augmented by the decline of its rival. It became the county seat of Idaho county in 1869, succeeding Florence in the enjoyment of that distinction.

"Early in the fall of 1862 a miners' meting was held at Richmond at which I was elected by acclamation to the office of district recorder. For recording a claim I received a fee of one dollar and fifty cents, and sometimes I recorded as many as one hundred a day. When the law reduced this fee to one dollar, I resigned, not caring to bother with such work, and believing that I could make more in the mines."

The rush to the Warren mines never seems to have gained the magnitude of that incited by the Florence discovery, probably because the former deposits were not anything like as rich as the latter; that is, they never yielded such enormous per diem returns, though they proved of much greater permanence. The number who joined the stampede to the new diggings is perhaps impossible to estimate, but the population of the camp simmered down to about a thousand during the fall, including those at Summit, Richmond and Washington. By 1863 the population had increased to fully fifteen hundred and the population four years later was not less than twelve hundred. The discovery of quartz in 1868 brought in a few more men, though no great influx resulted from this cause owing to the fact that gold bearing quartz so far inland cannot be profitably worked. As the placers began to show signs of exhaustion they were turned over to Chinamen, several hundred of whom found employment in the abandoned placers for many years. In 1872 the white population of the camp had declined to between three and four hundred.

As before stated, the original trail to Warren led over an exceeding high mountain, necessitating a climb of some twelve miles. The difficulties and rigors of this road led to efforts for another and better one, and eventually a new trail was made crossing Salmon river ten miles below the original crossing. This road ascended Elk crek four miles, then turned southeasterly across the summit of the divide and proceeded to Lake creek, which it pursued for twelve miles or until the Warm Springs were reached. From this point it followed Secesh creek ten miles, then crossed the divide to Steamboat creek, then down that to Warren creek and up the last named stream to the camp. It was ten miles longer than the former route of travel, but on account of its easier grade it nevertheless soon became the principal thoroughfare to the mines.

One peculiarity of the Warren district was that though the man credited with its discovery was of loose morals, showing a decided predilection for the company of the rougher classes of society, and though at least one of the men with him at the time of the discovery was an out and out desperado, yet the camp never became the prey of ruffians, never was placed under the necessity of organizing a vigilance committee for its own defense and never witnessed a popular execution.

"The most serious difficulty which I remember," says Judge Poe, "grew out of a robbery which took place during the winter following the opening of the mines. While Mike Reynolds, one of the miners, was at work near the creek, someone went into his cabin and carried off $400 or $500 worth of gold dust. Two men whose names I cannot now recall, were suspected and arrested. I was appointed to defend one and Charles McKay the other. The trial was set for the next day.

"That evening while I was sleeping Three-Fingered Smith, my partner, came to the room and aroused me, telling me that the miners' meeting, in which I should be interested, was in progress across the street in a saloon. I hurriedly dressed and hastened to the place indicated. I found it crowded with men, eagerly discussing the question of hanging my client. Strangely enough, McKay was one of the ardent supporters of this extreme measure. His client was not present, nor was there any talk of punishing him, but when I arrived preparations had already begun for the summary execution of my man. I straightway mounted a counter and began an impassioned plea for the poor fellow's life, the result of which was that either on my own personal account or through compassion for the accused, incited by my words, the rope was laid aside and the man held for civil trial. He was afterwards convicted and sentenced to a short term in the penitentiary."

In this manner was averted an unfortunate event which came near staining the fair name of the Warren mining district. That a resort to extreme measures was never here necessary is due to the fact that the discovery of mines in what is now Montana had drawn away the rough element before the importance of the Warren district had been established.

Having now outlined in a general way the events culminating in the discovery and first development of the early mining camps, we must essay to give some insight into the social conditions of the times. The task is a difficult one and adaquately to discharge it is impossible under the limitations imposed by the plan of this volume, but from the testimony of those who were in north Idaho during the earliest days, we may, perhaps, be able to draw an outline picture. The summer months are utilized by the miner to the best possible advantage in separating, by the different processes known to practical mineralogy, the precious yellow metal from the sand and gravel in which it lies. There is enough of excitement about the search to keep every man doing his utmost during the long hours of labor, and by the time the miner has repaired in the evening to his rude cabin, cooked and eaten his supper of bread, pork and beans and coffee, and enjoyed his evening smoke, he is ready to retire, for he must be at his task again at an early hour. When Sunday comes it does not always bring repose or even a change of task, but generally the pick and shovel are laid aside and the miner busies himself in washing his soiled shirts, darning his socks, mending clothes, chopping firewood for the week, baking bread and the like. There is little time for drinking, gambling or dissipation, though the miner may occasionally indulge in the pleasures of the appetite, even during this busy season. His main pleasure is, however, the gratification of his master passion, the pursuit of wealth. The reputation of the mining town for immorality and vice must be kept up during the summer months, if it is maintained at all, by the gambling and carousing class, the enemy of all morality, canker worms on the body politic.

But when winter's snows and surly blasts put an end to the pursuit of gold, then it is that the manhood of the miner is severely tested. Nothing but gold can induce him to overcome the gregarious instincts of his nature. When that pursuit is no longer possible he must repair to the town, there to run the gauntlet of ten thousand dangers; to avoid the traps and pitfalls set to capture his money and his manhood, or falling into them, to part with both. The conflict which rages within his breast is nine times out of ten an unequal one. The kindly influences of home and church and pure, enobling society are all wanting. External restraints upon him there are none. Pure amusements, refined society he cannot have. Fortunate indeed is he, if his morality and his principles are so firmly set in the unyielding granite of his nature, that he can pass the several months of enforced idleness without a lapse or a plunge into impurity, licentiousness and debauchery.

If it were possible for the miner to keep busy during the winter, he could easily withstand the blandishments of vice. But the ennui of protracted idleness, who can indure? To pass the time pleasantly, all the books and papers of the camp are read and reread. The social card game is restored to. It is kept up until all interest in it cloys. The passion for novelty and excitement becomes well nigh uncontrollable. It drives its poor victim at first to the more nearly respectable places of resort. Ah, now he is treading on the dangerous ground! The convivial instincts of his own nature, the examples of men still held in high esteem in this frontier community, with its lowered social standards, the allurements of abandoned Delilahs, the persuasions of some fallen men, the ridicule of others, all tend to lead or to drive him deeper into the mirey slough of dissipation. The punishment swift, and condign which in an older community would be visited upon the man who openly takes his first plunge into license is not here meted out and the poor victim does not always realize that nature has provided her own punishment for the violation of her moral and physical laws; a punishment which though slower in its visitations is sure never to miscarry as that of society often does. Without uplifting influences, without the usual restraints, without danger of social ostracism, without even civil law, with the higher cravings of nature unsatisfied, in the midst of all the temptations which a society composed largely of gamblers, vagabonds, fallen women and even thieves, desperadoes and murderers can furnish, is it to be wondered that so many well meaning men fell by the wayside? Yet out of this heterogeneous society have come unseared many of the noblest and brightest of the leaders and builders of our western institutions.

When the miners first invaded north Idaho there was practically no law for their government. The region was a part of the territory of Washington, but from the nature of the case it could not be efficiently governed from Olympia. There were no county organizations; no local officers of the law; no courts. In fact the country was a veritable haven for escaped convicts, desperadoes, thugs and thieves and abandoned characters of every variety. Let the reader picture in his imagination a society so constituted, made up so largely of a desperate criminal class, without restraint of any kind, and he will have a picture of north Idaho as it was in 1861 and 1862. In forming this mental picture he should give due weight also to the fact that the Civil war was then in progress, that it drove to the west many from both north and south who were unwilling to bear the responsibilities it imposed upon them; that these brought with them all the bitterness and prejudice engendered by that strife, and that the violent expression of this prejudice was the occasion of many a personal encounter. Truly the conditions obtaining were such as can never again exist upon the American continent.

As might be expected the catalogue of crime was a long one. The insecurity of life and property upon the highways may easily be imagined. The well disposed citizens were so greatly in the minority that they dared not offer resistance to the reign of crime, and red handed, blazen eyed murder stalked unmasked at midday through the streets of the towns. A full history of this carnival of crime cannot here be attempted; would not add to the value of the work if presented in detail, but as affording some idea of this modern reign of terror we quote the following from Bancroft's summary, gleaned from the journals of the times: "Robert Upcreek, shot at Oro Fino by a Frenchman in September, 1861; Hypolite, owner of a large packtrain and $500 in gold, murdered on the road in October, 1861; Ned Meany, killed in a quarrel at Jackson's ferry, near Lewiston, November, 1861; two masked men entered a house in Lewiston in December and in spite of resistance carried off $500, shooting fatally one of the inmates; Matt. Bledsoe killed James H. Harmon at Slate creek, Salmon river, in a quarrel over cards, December, 1861; four murders were committed in two weeks at Lewiston in the fall of 1861; three in March, 1862, at Florence; William Kirby killed John Maples in July, 1863; William H. Tower, while threatening others, was shot and killed at Florence, February 23, 1863; Morrissy, a desperado, was killed at Elk City about the same time; George Reed was shot by Isaac Warwick in a quarrel about a claim in April, 1863; Frank Gallagher was murdered by one Berryman, with whom he was traveling; at a ball at Florence on New Year's eve, a cyprian was ejected from the dancing room, whereupon Henry J. Talbotte (better known as Cherokee Bob) and William Willoughby armed themselves and prepared for vengance; later they were both killed in an attempt to get it; one Bull, living near Elk City, kindly entertained over night two men who asked for shelter, in the morning the men and five horses were missing. Bull followed them for twenty days, coming up with them at a camp on Gold creek, 265 miles from home, on seeing him one of the men sprang on a horse and fled, the other, William Arnett, was shot; a party pursuing the fleeing robber brought him back and hanged him. Enoch Fruit was a chief of road agents; James Robinson, a mere boy, was one of his assistants; in the autumn of 1862 they were prominent among the knights of the road between Florence and Lewiston; both met violent deaths; James Crow, Michael Mulkie and Jack McCoy robbed three travelers between Oro Fino and Lewiston; William Rowland and George Law were a couple of horse thieves operating on Camas Prairie; George A. Noble of Oregon City, was robbed of 100 pounds of gold dust between Florence and Oro Fino in December, 1862; two horsethieves, for stealing from a government train, were shot dead." Besides the homocides and robberies above noted and scores of others which came to the knowledge of the people at the time, there were perhaps hundreds of which nothing was ever known; at least it was judged so from the number of inquiries which kept coming in for years afterward from persons in the east, whose relatives were lost track of.

Early in the history of the north Idaho mining region, there seems to have been formed organizations of thugs for the systematic prosecution of their nefarious vocation. The most notorious of these, it is said, had two strongholds or points of rendezvous, known in the vernacular of the times as "shebangs." The leadership of this band is accredited by some to Henry Plummer, though there are many in Lewiston who, having known this man in no other capacity than that of a gambler, are doubtful of his having had anything to do with greater crimes while here. But if the pictures of Plummer's character, furnished by those who professed to know his record quite intimately, are not colored to his disadvantage, he was hypocritical enough to keep the baser side of his nature in the background when it suited him, by his urbanity, polish and personal magnetism, winning the confidence of such as he wished to impress favorably. From the previous record accorded to Plummer in California and his subsequent career in Montana it is not hard to believe him guilty of having acted a double part in Lewiston.

However this may be the robbers of the country became organized during his stay there and by means of intelligent co-operation were enabled to defy law, moral and civil, commit the coldest blooded murders with impunity, and appropriate to themselves the valuables of travelers, packers, miners returning from a successful summer's work, anybody who might be caught unprotected with gold on his person.

Patiently for many months the good people bore these multiplied wrongs. If any inquiry was made into the question of who was responsible for a given crime, such inquiry was turned into a farce, for the friends of law and order were in the minority and dared not assert themselves. The few who defied the roughs and openly opposed them were marked for early slaughter. The customary method of disposal of all such was to embroil them in a quarrel and under color of self-defense to inflict a death wound with the ever ready pistol or bowie knife.

But this rule of the roughs could not last always. Justice may be outraged for a time, but like Truth, when crushed to earth it will rise again. Villainy soon over-reached itself and brought destruction upon its own head. The first determined resistance to crime on the part of a united people, of which we have any knowledge, was made at Elk City in the summer of 1862. An account of it was kindly furnished us by Joel D. Martin and James Witt, both of whom were eye witnesses. From their statements, it appears that early in the spring James Maguire and one Finnigan became entangled in a quarrel which led to blows. After fighting several rounds they finally agreed to settle their difficulties amicably and let bygones be bygones. As was customary in those days, the bargain was sealed over the bar. Between drinks protestations of friendship were made again and again, but one party to the compact of amity was a traitor. In keeping with the unenviable reputation for treachery he sustained in California, the detestable Maguire broke in upon the expressions of good will, by stealthily seizing the handle of Finnigan's knife and unsheathing the weapon with intent to bury its blade in its owner's bosom. But the bystanders saw the movement, threw themselves upon the aggressor and prevented the consummation of the atrocious deed. Later the two men again met. Finnigan fired five shots, wounding Maguire in the leg and in the neck. Friends carried the injured man to a room over Maltby's saloon and there left him, expecting to return in the morning. During the night Finnigan returned and slipping up stairs, killed his foe in a most atrocious manner, leaving the cruel bowie knife in Maguire's throat. Had Finnigan occasioned Maguire's death in a fair fight, the spirit of the times would have condoned him; but cowardice and treachery were unpardonable. Finnigan was arrested and put on trial before a popular tribunal. He admitted the crime but claimed in extenuation, what was no doubt true, that he had to kill Maguire in order to save his own life. A newly elected justice of the peace presided as judge, and one Colonel Johnson, a lawyer recently from California but originally from the Middle West, acted as defendant's council. The testimony elicited some expressions of sympathy for the prisoner, but the jury nevertheless rendered a verdict of guilty. The following afternoon, a man named Powers, who was acting as sheriff, led Finnigan to the gallows. Brackett, a shoemaker, tied the hangman's knot and when all was ready the Irishman was launched into space. Then occurred one of those incidents which are said to have taken place not infrequently in the hasty popular executions of early days and to have resulted occasionally in the saving of a life. The knot, having probably been tampered with by the sympathetic sheriff, failed to hold, and Finnigan fell to terra firma. He soon recovered from the shock, gained his feet and, accompanied by Moses Hart and Joseph Ritchie, two of his friends, started to run away from the scene. The crowd was so dumbfounded that for a short time not a man moved. Then Josh. Phipps started in pursuit and soon overtaking the fugitives, instantly covered them with his rifle and demanded that they halt. Phipps expected that others would come to his assistance but none came, so he lowered his gun and told Finnigan to go, a command which the latter was quick to obey. It is said that he was later seen in San Francisco by one who knew him in Idaho and that the tell tale mark of the rope was still on his neck.

The next assumption of judicial functions on the part of the populace was in Lewiston in the fall of 1862. The occasion was the robbery of the Berry brothers, while on their way from Florence to Lewiston with a pack train. When near what is known as Rocky canyon, each of the men was confronted by a masked highwayman armed with a shot gun and ordered to throw up his hands. Compliance under such circumstances was a matter of necessity and the men were relieved of between $1,100 and $1,400 in gold dust. They were then commanded to camp at Rocky canyon under pain of death, but when the dangerous looking shot gun was no longer pointed their way, they did not choose to render further obedience to the commands of the robbers. No sooner had the highwaymen passed out of sight than William Berry mounted the best mule in the train and started in pursuit. The robbers were riding the best running horses, and in the race easily outstripped the big man on the mule.

When Berry arrived in Lewiston he found that the robbers had gone on to Walla Walla. Then commenced the pursuit. The Berrys had one advantage in that they recognized the voices of the two men, Bill Peoples and Dave English, who held them up (for both were well known to them personally.) They later ascertained that one Charley Scott was also in the infamous plot.

In company with Gus Meamber, a Frenchman, and others who joined him at Lewiston, the outraged merchant proceeded post haste to Walla Walla, traveling with a four horse team and breaking the record for fast time. They arrived just behind the highwaymen. Berry met Peoples in a saloon, disarmed him, and took him into custody. Meamber found and arrested Scott. Dave English had not stopped in Walla Walla but had gone on to Wallula. His arrest was effected by Sheriff James Buckley, his deputy and a saloon keeper named Vancise. It is said that an attempt was made to secure for the prisoner a civil trial in the Walla Walla courts, which failed; also that the roughs of that city attempted the rescue of their captured confreres. But the capturers escaped with their prisoners to Lewiston. Here the outlaws were confined in a little log building. Had they known of the doom awaiting them, they would doubtless have made a more determined effort to escape, but they trusted to the rough element for their rescue, and were not greatly alarmed.

The people of Lewiston were more thoroughly aroused over this crime than they had been over any other. The victims of the robbery were well known and well liked; furthermore there was a general feeling that the time had arrived when the rule of the roughs must be brought to its termination, and accordingly efficient means were provided for the safe guarding of the prisoners. The men were confined in a little building situated on the point formed by the confluence of the Clearwater and Snake rivers. Two men, thoroughly armed, guarded them day and night and these were to bring to their assistance the entire populace in case of an attempted rescue, by ringing a large triangle near at hand. It is said that the roughs from other parts did begin gathering with intent to rally to the support of their doomed comrades. One plot for their release was led by an uncle of Peoples named Marshall, but the raid was defeated by Jonas Whaley, of the guard, a shot from whose Kentucky squirrel rifle served the double purpose of temporarily disabling Marshall and alarming the populace.

Eventually a trial was given the accused men in George H. Sandy's store, at the corner of D and Second streets, which trial ended in their conviction. That night the guards were notified that their services were no longer needed. The next morning those who went over to the jail to see about the prisoners found the earthly remains of the three men hanging by their necks from the rafters, and their cold rigid bodies, drawn, bloodless faces and glassy eyes told that life had been extinct for several hours. The date of this summary execution, according to a notation in the old Luna hotel register, now in the possession of Charles F. Leland, was November 9, 1862. It marked the decline of lawlessness in the vicinity of Clearwater, for the villainous element departed one by one and in small squads to points in the interior and in Montana, where most of them ended their careers as such men usually do, either at the hands of their kind during quarrels or by the merciless ropes of vigilance committees. Among those to depart this life by the latter route was Henry Plummer himself, the reputed leader of the largest band, and the known author of many murders, homicides and robberies.

Lewiston first, then Oro Fino and finally Florence had been centers of operation for these bands of criminals. In the last mentioned town a species of vigilance committee had been formed. Its members met after the death of Cherokee Bob and Willoughby and instructed their executive committee to warn all suspicious characters to leave the town forthwith. The most notorious characters had, however, taken refuge in flight, fearing lest a more condign punishment should be meted out to them at the hands of the thoroughly aroused people, and the committee had no other task to perform than the expulsion of a minor criminal

But the most terrible deed in the history of north Idaho was committed after the reign of the desperadoes in the towns was practically over, though there was yet a considerable element of these villains in this mining region and their supremacy in what is now Montana was still maintained. We refer to the murder of Lloyd Magruder and companions in the Bitter Root mountains, an account of which will be presented in its proper chronological place.

CHAPTER II.

POLITICAL ORGANIZATION AND PASSING EVENTS.

Naturally the influx of miners and fortune-hunters into north Idaho had many results incidental to the great purpose. The country was settled and developed during the first two or three years in a way that it could hardly have been in as many decades had its sands been without gold or had their wealth remained hidden. While there was some complaint on the part of the narrower-visioned Willamette valley papers that the Idaho mines had caused a costly drain upon the resources of that section, others saw that in their ultimate and even in many of their promixate results they were a blessing. In speaking of the effect upon the metropolis of Oregon, Judge Deady in his manuscript history said: "The Colville and Oro Fino mines helped Portland greatly, and in 1861 built up the Oregon Steam Navigation Company. Loaded drays used to stand in lines half a mile long, unloading at night freight to go in the morning that involved a fortune." The more liberal newspapers also stated that, contrary to preconceived opinions of what was possible, persons who had engaged in agriculture on the route between The Dalles and Lewiston were raising excellent crops, a statement going to show that the agricultural possibilities of the east side were even then beginning to be surmised. The discovery of the Idaho mines was certainly a boon to Walla Walla. It was the direct cause of the unearthing of vast mineral wealth in the John Day country and in the Boise basin, which discoveries, with that of the Auburn mines in Baker county, encouraged the agricultural development of eastern Oregon. From this source Portland has drawn millions of dollars and continues to draw millions, yet its citizens for many years seemed to fail to realize that its chief hope of greatness lay in the development of its whole tributary country. They used every means to encourage immigration from the east to continue on through to the Willamette valley, and not a few efforts were made to decry the inland empire in the columns of the public press. Such a policy seems indeep a narrow one when viewed in retrospect.

Mention has been previously made of the settlement of Seth S. Slater and others at the confluence of the Snake and Clearwater rivers in May, 1861. The land upon which these men pitched their tents was then a part of the Nez Perce reservation, but necessity knew no law, and in June the merchants and miners determined that a town must be laid out, notwithstanding the opposition of the Indians and United States authorities. Nevertheless the town builders were notified by the latter that they must not erect any permanent buildings. Partly as a result of this prohibition, but more especially from the haste with which the town was called into existence, it was at first a very frail little city. Almost all its buildings, business places and residences alike consisted of a light framework of wood, covered with canvas, roof and sides. From the distant hill tops the town in the day time had the appearance of having been built of marble, and at night, when lights were burning within the canvas walls, it had a decidedly holiday look. From its very inception it was an important business point. Being most favorably situated at the head of navigation on the Snake river, it was the natural outfitting place for parties going into the mines of the interior, and long, heavily loaded trains left it daily.

The causes which necessitated the building of the temparary town, despite the fact that it was a violation of treaty rights, were seen to be permanent in their nature. Remonstrances from Indians or military men were unavailing, when the exigencies of the case were impelling the steamboat company and the miners to oppose their wishes, and in October, 1861, the townsite of Lewiston was laid off. To pacify Lawyer and other head men of his tribe some compensation was given them for the privilege. The Nez Perces were not very determined in their opposition to white occupancy, and danger of a general war was never a deterrent force in the settlement and development of the country.

The erection of permanent buildings was not accomplished in time to prevent great suffering from cold in Lewiston. During the severe winter of 1861-2 its inhabitants were almost solely dependent for shelter upon the canvas walls and roofs put up during the first rush, and the suffering was further augmented by the scarcity of fuel. To add to the people's multiplied discomfitures the rivers rose during the spring of 1862 to an unwonted height, inundating their town, as well as The Dalles and part of Portland. But all these drawbacks were as impotent to stay the progress of Lewiston as to quiet the mining excitement which called it into being. Its growth was exceedingly rapid the first few years, and only after the removal of the superfluous mining population tributray to it and the consequent loss of its political honors did it cease to march forward at a double quick.

The rapid settlement of the country was not without its political effects, though, as before related, it out ran the forms of government and made it neccessary that the miners should become a law unto themselves, not alone in civil matters, but in criminal procedure as well. That it was possible for communities of frontiersmen, brought together and animated by a thirst for gold, to calmly frame and adopt laws for their own government, to enforce compliance with these laws among their own number and in general to discharge all necessary functions, legislative, judicial and executive, is a favorable portent for the future of the civil institutions of America. The pioneers of north Idaho were also surprisingly temperate and self-contained in their popular criminal proceedings. No such thing as a vigilance committee was organized until patience had ceased to be a virtue, and then due care was taken that none but the guilty should suffer. But a regularly constituted government is always welcomed by order-loving and law-abiding Americans, and the establishment of such in what is now north Idaho was eagerly sought for from the first.

The territorial government of Washington had organized Shoshone county in January, 1858, comprising all of the country north of the Snake river and between the Columbia river and the Rocky mountains, with the county seat on the land claim of Angus McDonald. In 1861 it established the official boundaries of this political entity as follows:

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the territory of Washington, That the boundaries of Shoshone county shall be as follows, to-wit: Beginning at the mouth of the South Fork of the Clearwater; thence south with said river to the Lolo Fork of the same; thence east with said Lolo stream in an easterly direction to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence north to the main divide between the Palouse river and the North Fork of the Clearwater; thence in a westerly direction with said main divide to a point from which running due south would strike the mouth of the South Fork of the Clearwater to the place of beginning. Passed December 21, 1861.

JAMES LEO FURGUSON,
Speaker, House of Representatives.
A. R. BURBANK, President of the Council."

The day previous another act had been passed creating and organizing the county of Nez Perce, the language of which was as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Washington, That all that part of Washington Territory lying within the following boundaries, be organized into a county called Nez Perce, to-wit: Beginning at the mouth of the Clearwater; thence up same to the South Fork of the Clearwater; thence with the South Fork to the Lolo creek; thence with the southern boundary of Shoshone county to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence south to the main divide between the waters of the Salmon River and the South Fork of the Clearwater to the Snake River; thence with the Snake River west to the mouth of the Clearwater to the place of beginning.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That J. M. Van Valsah be appointed county auditor; A Creacy, Whitfield Kirtly and —— be appointed county commissioners; Sanford Owens, sheriff; and —— Justice of the Peace for said county until the next general election.

"Passed December 20, 1861.

JAMES LEO FURGUSON,
Speaker, House of Representatives.
A. R. BURBANK, President of the Council."

On this day, too, an act was passed creating and organizing Idaho county, the language of which, title omitted, is as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Washington, That all that part of Washington Territory south of Nez Perce county and east of Snake river, be organized into a county called Idaho.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That L. Lindsey be and is hereby, appointed county auditor; Robert Gray, Robert Burns, and ——— Sanburn be appointed county commissioners; Joseph Standifer, sheriff; ———Parker, Justice of the Peace for said county until the next general election.

"Passed December 20, 1861.

JAMES LEO FURGUSON.
Speaker, House of Representatives.
A. R. BURBANK, President of the Council."

The formation of these political divisions gave the people some kind of a home government other than a strictly popular one without sanction of law, but the judicial function, except in probate and minor matters, was with the three federal judges. The hands of these had been full enough when they had no duties outside of the coast counties, and now that the population east of the Cascades was sufficiently large to more than double their work, a problem was presented not easy to solve. Certainly a country into which vagabonds, desperadoes and abandoned characters had flocked from all parts of the west was very badly in need of courts, if the peace and dignity of the territory was to be maintained there at all. The solution finally adopted was the passage of acts authorizing the holding of district courts at different county seats having concurrent jurisdiction with the regular federal district courts, except in cases where the United States was a party, with right of appeal to the supreme court of federal judges. The expenses of each special district court were to be paid by the county in which it was held.

No more eloquent commentary upon the rapid rate at which the country now constituting north Idaho developed during 1861-2 need be sought than the notice it demanded from the Washington Legislature, by which, as compiled from the statute books by Bancroft, the right to keep ferries was granted as follows: "To D. W. Lichtenthaler and John C. Smith, across Snake river opposite Powder river; to Green White and C. R. Driggs, across Snake river at mouth of Grande Ronde river; to John Messenger and Walter H. Manly, across Salmon river on the Nez Perce trail to Fort Boise; to Gilmore Hays, across Snake river within one mile from the junction of the Clearwater; to E. H. Lewis and Egbert French, across the Columbia, near The Dalles; to J. T. Hicklin, across the Yakima between the mouths of the Ahtanaham and Nachess; to W. D. Bigelow, across Snake river on the territorial road from Walla Walla to Colville; to Lyman Shaffer and W. F. Bassett, across the south branch of the Clearwater on the main wagon road from Lewiston to Oro Fino; to Orrington Cashman on the same stream at or near the camp of Lawyer; to W. W. DeLacy and Jared S. Hurd, on Snake river at some point between Grande Ronde and Powder rivers, to be selected by them; W. W. DeLacy and associates on Salmon river; to George A. Tykel, to grade a bluff of Snake river in constructing a wagon road and establishing a ferry over the same near the mouth of Powder river; to Richard Holmes and James Clinton, across Salmon river on the Indian trail from Lapwai to Grande Ronde valley; to John Drumhaller, on the main Clearwater, two miles above Lewiston; to W. Greenville, at or near the mouth of Slate creek on Salmon river; to Sanford Owens, to build a bridge across the south branch of the Clearwater on the road from Lewiston to Elk City. The rates for foot passengers on these ferries were generally 50 cents; loose cattle, 50 cents; two-horse wagon, $2.50; four-horse wagon, $4.50; horse and buggy, $2.25; pack animal, 75 cents."

The men who had wrought this development, being ambitions to become the founders and builders of a new state, early began to point out the inconvenience to themselves of Olympia as a capital, the diversity of interest between them and the Puget Sound people and the adaptability of their region to autonomy. They instructed their representatives in the territorial legislature to advocate the sending of a memorial to Congress asking that the eastern portion of the territory be set off and organized into a new territory. However, the legislators in general thought that the interior had need of the sound as a seaboard, and that no benefit could result to it from political segregation; on the other hand such would prove a decided detriment to the sound. The memorial, therefore, was not sanctioned by the majority, and the movement failed. Nevertheless discontent still continued, and on March 3, 1863, the territory of Idaho was organized by act of Congress. The origin of the euphonious name applied to the new political entity is a matter of dispute, but it is generally supposed to be a corruption of an Indian word signifying gem or diadem of the mountains, referring to the lustrous rim of the crests of the north Idaho uplands at sunrise on a fair day. The name was applied to one of the counties organized by the Washington legislature in 1861, which county formed part of the new territory. But whatever the origin of the word or its exact English signification, the people of this rich and prosperous state have reason to be highly pleased with the poetic name chosen for it by the United States Congress.

The creating act was exceedingly liberal in the extent of territory it bestowed upon the new political entity, the official boundaries of which were described as follows:

"All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, to-wit: Beginning at a point in the middle channel of the Snake river, where the north boundary of Oregon intersects the same; then following down the said channel of Snake river to a point opposite the mouth of the Kooskoospier (Kooskooskie) or Clearwater river, thence due north to the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, thence east along said parallel to the twenty-seventh degree of longitude west of Washington; thence south along said degree of longitude to the northern boundary of Colorado territory; thence west along said boundary to the thirty-third degree of longitude west of Washington, thence north along said degree to the forty-second parallel of latitude; thence west along said parallel to the eastern boundary of the state of Oregon." From this it will be seen that the original original Idaho extended over thirteen degrees of longitude and seven of latitude. Its area was given as 326,373 square miles, which was greater than that possessed by any other state or territory in the Union. "It was not," says Bancroft, "regarded with favor by any class of men, not even the most earth-hungry. Over its arid plains and among its fantastic upheavals of volcanic rocks roamed savage tribes. Of the climate little was known, and that little was unfavorable, from the circumstance that the fur companies, who spent the winters in certain localities in the mountains, regarded all others as inhospitable, and the immigrants judged of it by the heat and drought of midsummer." The initial winter spent by miners in the northern part was one of great severity, the temperature being uncomfortably low, the snows deep and the floods destructive. Even the scenery was so wild, weird and rugged as to seem unattractive to persons habituated to more delicate environs, and the conditions on the whole were such as to create an unpleasant impression in the public mind.

Of this vast country, imperial in its extent, gigantic in its mold and possessed of a wealth of undeveloped resources but dimly surmised at the time, Lewiston was made the capital. To this infant town of two years, a town of canvas walls and rude primitive structures, of dens of unbridled vice and iniquity, a town which just before had had to resort to a vigilance committee in order to cow the rough element, to such a town was given the honor of posing as the seat of government of a region more than twice as large as California and seven times the size of the Empire state, and, "taken altogether, the most grand, wonderful, romantic and mysterious part of the domain enclosed within the Federal Union."

More than six months elapsed between the passage of the organic act and the issuance of the proclamation carrying its provisions into effect. But on September 22, 1863, William H. Wallace, who had been appointed governor of the territory by President Lincoln, formally organized the new government by proclamation. Previously, however, political conventions had been called, resulting in the nomination of Governor Wallace for delegate to Congress on the Republican ticket, and J. M. Cannady on the Democratic. Wallace received in the election ensuing a majority of about 500 votes, a result which caused the promotion of Secretary of State W. B. Daniels, of Yamhill county, Oregon, to the post of acting governor.

The first session of the Idaho territorial legislature was not distinguished for brilliance. The laws enacted by it were of the regular routine kind, not specially original in character, but such as any newly organized territory must adopt to set the machinery of government in motion. A movement for the sequestration of the territory east of the mountains into a separate organization was begun, likewise one to move the capital to some point more nearly central to the west side residents. The new territory was created in 1864, and an act was passed late that same year removing the capital to Boise. But of this latter, more anon.

According to the usual custom the territory was granted three federal judges, each presiding over a district. Idaho, Nez Perces and Shoshone counties constituted district No. 1, of which Justice A. C. Smith was in charge. One of the first acts the court was called upon to perform was to try for their lives three men accused of a foul and desperately wicked crime, which on account of its historic interest must now be described in some detail.

From the mystery and heroism of the discovery of the crime and the pursuit and capture of its perpetrators and from the fiendish atrocity which characterized the enactment of the tragedy, this Magruder murder forms at once the strangest and darkest chapter in north Idaho's criminal annals. On these accounts, doubtless, and from the fact that the principal victim of the awful outrage was a man of such prominence in northwest history, the affair is well remembered by all old pioneers, its details having impressed themselves so deeply upon their minds that the lapse of nearly four decades has not sufficed to erase them. The horrible deed and its sequel bring into bold relief the dark depths into which abandoned humanity sometimes falls, and the courage, tenacity and ingenuity of the best developed representatives of the pioneer, when, animated by pure motives, he sets out to accomplish a desperate object. All the leading characters in this tragedy were men of unusual prominence in their way. Lloyd Magruder, the victim, was credited by practically all the early miners with the honor of having been the first trail-maker into Canyon creek and the leader of the party which discovered the immensely rich John Day mines. Coming to north Idaho in the spring of 1862, he became a merchant of prominence and a packer of intrepedity. To the perpetrators of the crime, the devils of the tragedy, no one will deny the right to a bad eminence among those of their character. Hill Beachy, the avenger of the terrible deed, proved himself not only a man endowed with all the noblest qualities of manhood, but one with a mysterious development of the intuitive faculties and a rare genius for detective work. The ingenuity and courage displayed in bringing the Magruder murderers to justice shows that had circumstances led him into the secret service he might have performed feats rivaling those attributed to the heroes of romance.

In the summer of 1863 Magruder set out for the Bannock mines with a pack train of fifty animals laden with miner's supplies. A long, hard journey brought him safely to his destination, but disappointment met him there. True to their nomadic habits, the miners had gone to the latest center of interest, the Alder gulch placers at Virginia City, almost completely deserting Bannock. Thither Magruder followed them. He found a prosperous camp of several thousand inhabitants, ready to purchase his wares as soon as these were exposed for sale. Soon he found himself in possession of several thousand dollars in gold dust and about seventy-five mules. When ready to start upon the home journey he was joined by Charles Allen, William Phillips and two young men, who were afterward referred to in the indictment as unknown, but who proved to be Horace and Robert Chalmers, recent arrivals from Booneville, Missouri. Besides those mentioned there were in the company Daniel Howard, familiarly known as "Doc," whose real name was Renton, Christopher Lower (or Lowry), James Romaine and William Page. Page had met Magruder at Bannock about the middle of September, and five or six days later at Virginia City, where he had assisted the merchant in stocking his store. His testimony is the only account we have of the awful tragedy enacted in the Bitter Root mountains and the events leading up to it. The story told by him was complete and circumstantial, bearing the stamp of truthfulness upon its face, and proving its narrator a man of remarkable memory. The transcript of it, taken in court, is, however, very brief and not at all clear on some points. Page states that Renton, Lower and Romaine were in Virginia City during the latter part of the summer, and that they stayed around Magruder's store at least a portion of the time. There is reason to believe that they left Lewiston with no other intent than to murder Magruder and take his money. Their presence about his store was probably due to their desire to ingratiate themselves into his confidence that they might the better accomplish their designs. If this was their object they certainly succeeded well, for Magruder seems to have never suspected them in the slightest, though it is said that he was warned by a man named Baker against traveling with them, as they were tough men. Magruder heard that Page was going to Lewiston, and employed him to assist in driving through the horses and mules.

There was nothing untoward in their start for home and friends nor hint of approaching tragedy in the face of laughing nature as they set out from Virginia City on that bright autumn morning. No intuitive sense of danger, no dark forebodings of any kind disturbed the equipoise of Magruder's mind. The exhilaration of the crisp air and bright sunshine was no doubt felt by him and his companions, though there were those among the latter into the blackness of whose dark souls no beams of light could ever penetrate.

Those who started with Magruder on October 3d were Page, Renton, Romaine, William Phillips and the two brothers. At Beaverhead, where they camped the first night, they were joined by Charles Allen, and the next day at Rattlesnake they met Christopher Lower. The party proceeded that day to the vicinity of Bannock, where they remained two or three days while Magruder was buying mules and attending to other business. About the 8th they resumed their journey. "There were nine of us," said Page, "Lower, Renton, Romaine, Phillips, Allen, Magruder, the two brothers and myself." For three days they traveled without casualty, meeting travelers and conversing with them occasionally. During the fourth Lower asked Page to drop behind, as Renton and Romaine wished to speak to him. Page did so, and was greatly startled by the nature of their communications. Renton stated that Magruder had a great deal of money, that they purposed to have it, and that he wished Page to sleep with Phillips. He admonished his auditor not to be frightened, as he, Lower and Romaine would do all the "dirty work," told him that he must take no notice of any noise he might hear in the night, but if it became necessary he was to shoot Phillips in the abdomen. Several times during the day the conspirators told Page not to be frightened. That night, however, nothing unusual transpired. Next day the conspirators again declared their determination to have Magruder's money and renewed their admonitions to Page against being frightened. After a journey of about thirty miles they camped in a lonely spot in the Bitter Root mountains within a short distance of the point where a view of the north Idaho country first greets the eye of the traveler. This spot has been rendered memorable by the commission upon it of a deed seldom equaled or surpassed for cold-blooded atrocity.

The transcript of Page's testimony is so incoherent, indefinite and confused that it is impossible to gain from it a clear and detailed idea of what transpired during that dreadful night. It appears, however, that it was the turn of Magruder and Lower to guard the animals throughout the first watch. Page said he saw the two start up the hill, Lower ahead with an axe. The latter had given as an excuse for taking the weapon along that he wished to fence the trail so as to prevent the escape of the mules and to build a fire. The other travelers went to bed as usual. About midnight, as he thought, Page heard somebody coming down the hill, and on investigation found that it was Renton and Lower. Renton lay down upon the blankets with Romaine, but soon both got up and passed by Page with axes in their hands. They went in the direction of the two brothers, and forthwith Page heard blows and mournful groans. After a few moments they returned and lay down upon Page's bed. They arose again shortly. Renton shot Allen and Romaine struck Phillips with an axe. Allen seems to have been killed instantly. Phillips, however, made an outcry of murder after being hit, but the repeated blows of the heartless assassin speedily silenced him. Page says that as Romaine struck the first blow he said to his victim: "You ——— fool, I told you at Virginia City not to come. You had no business to come. I wish that Jim Rhodes had come, for I have wanted to kill him a long time."

The assassins then directed Page, who had arisen and dressed, to get ready such things as they wished to take along with them. When this was done he was next sent up the hill to look after the animals. Lower told him that if he would go a long way up he would see a fire to the right hand of the trail, but that this marked the spot where Magruder was killed. On his return they asked him if he had seen the fire. He replied: "Yes; it had got to running about among the leaves and dry logs, and I put it out." "That's where the job was done for Magruder," said Lower. "I kicked it about to burn the blood up." The assassins told Page they had searched the bodies during his absence and had failed to find as much money as they expected. They had tied Phillips and Allen up in a tent cloth with picket ropes. "I helped," said Page, "to tie the two brothers up—helped Lower and Romaine. They carried them on a stick—I had hold of the stick—to a large, flat rock, whence they were to be rolled down the hill."

Throughout a great part of the night the four men busied themselves in destroying evidences of their crime. All the equipage not needed was burned and the ashes searched for rings and buckles, which, with the excess tinware and other incombustibles, were put into a sack, taken down the hill and hidden behind a log. Renton and Lower disposed of Magruder's body, while Romaine and Page rolled the other bodies down the canyon. "I rolled Phillips and Allen down," said Page, "Romaine, the two brothers." As we were going to roll them down he gave me a pair of moccasins to put on, so that if anybody saw traces they would think it the work of Indians."

At last these grewsome tasks were all successfully accomplished. Lower and Renton returned from disposing of Magruder's remains, bringing some of the mules. About twelve or fourteen were missing, one in particular that they wanted, and they spent some time in an unsuccessful search for him. Soon after they started they began shooting the mules, which were following the big sorrel lead horse that Page was riding. Several were killed before they got up the Clearwater hill and the remainder were led onto a little prairie to one side of the trail, where all were despatched except eight and one horse. The things were overhauled thoroughly on this prairie and the money estimated. It amounted to eleven or twelve thousand dollars, Page understood. Here also the handle was burned out of Lower's axe and a new one put in.

The miscreants went straight to Lewiston, traveling with about average speed and consuming several days in making the trip from the scene of the murder. It was nine o'clock when they came into town. Renton and Romaine looked for a boat in which to go down the Snake river but failed to find any. Page busied himself in hunting for a farmer named Goodman (or Goodrich), wishing to leave the animals with him. He eventually found the ranchman and bargained for the keep of the mules and horse until spring. Everything was left in Goodman's care, saddles and blankets, bridles, shot gun, leggings, spurs, etc. All four slept at the Hotel de France that night, and the following morning took the stage for Walla Walla. One of their number had secured the seats the evening previous, having himself and his companions waybilled under assumed names. The escape from the dangerous town of Lewiston, where they were well known and their presence was likely to excite suspicion, was successfully effected. They were now to enjoy in peace, as they supposed, the fruits of their dastardly deed.

How sadly were these miscreants to be undeceived. Their presence in Lewiston had become known, and the avenger was already on their track. Hill Beachy was in the stage office when the murderer stalked in with an assumed swagger, walked up to the clerk's desk, threw down three twenties and asked that he and his companions be waybilled to Walla Walla. Beachy scrutinized him carefully from behind the stove and recognized him. He examined the waybill as soon as the man had departed. He then proceeded to the Luna house stables, which were in charge of Chester P. Coburn, from whom we obtained this part of our story. "Coburn," said Beachy, "you must persuade your friends (for he had some intending to take the stage) not to go on the stage in the morning."

"Why?" asked the man addressed with eager interest.

"Because there is danger in the air." Beachy then communicated his discoveries and suspicions. The two men together visited the other stables of the town, but no trace of the animals the men had ridden could be found. Neither had the ferryman brought them across the river.

"Well," said Beachy finally, "try to keep your friends here until the next stage. Have they any money?"

"Yes, one of them has $2,500 I know of and the other may have some; but they won't stay, because the boat leaves Portland for 'Frisco only every two weeks, and if they miss this stage they will have to lay over."

"Well, then, tell them our suspicions and warn them to be sure to take the back seat and keep their guns handy; also let the others get in the coach first. Tell them to keep a close watch all the time."

So, when Mr. Coburn awoke his friends the next morning a little after one o'clock, he communicated to them his fears. They got into the stage at the stables, taking the back seat. Beachy and Coburn rode the brake blocks to the hotel. There the four strangers, closely muffled, took their places, the horses were given the reins and the sextette and driver were speedily borne out into the night. As the coach rolled away Beachy remarked to his companion that he thought there was no danger of a robbery, as the men seemed to have considerable gold with them. But Beachy felt instinctively that something was wrong, and very soon a suspicion took hold of him that either Magruder or Ankeny was murdered and that these men were the murderers. All night he and Mr. Coburn continued their investigations. At daybreak Mose Druilard was despatched over the trail to seek tidings of Captain Ankeny, an Oro Fino merchant, and another messenger, named Schull, was sent toward Elk City in search of news about Magruder.

Later in the day in which the suspicious characters left by stage the continued investigation of Beachy and Coburn resulted in the discovery that the men had left their horses in charge of Mr. Goodman and that Goodman had just moved the animals and trappings out to his place in Tammany hollow, a short distance south of Lewiston. The horses and accoutrements were soon brought into town, where one of the animals was identied as having been Magruder's property. A saddle also was thought to be his. This was enough for Beachy. He swore out warrants for the four men, obtained requisition papers from Governor Wallace at the Capitol and set out in pursuit, determined to follow the quartette until he had effected their arrest. He was accompanied as far as Portland by Thomas Pike. By every possible means he accelerated his speed. At The Dalles he arrived just in time to miss the steamer, though he learned that his men had passed that way and knew that he was on the right track. When he reached Portland he found on inquiry that the miscreants had left on the steamer, which had departed for San Francisco just two hours before his arrival. Meanwhile he had been joined by Captain A. P. Ankeny, who had reached Lewiston in safety the day of Beachy's departure, and together they consulted hastily and decided upon a plan of action. It was determined that Captain Ankeny should attempt in a tug boat to intercept the ocean steamer at the bar in case adverse winds had detained her, while Beachy made preparations for the overland trip to San Francisco in case of Ankeny's failure. Ankeny's tug arrived too late, as the steamer had gone out to sea without delay. Accordingly Beachy started. There was no telegraph nearer than Yreka, California, and consequently no rest for the grim pursuer until that point was reached. Arrived at last, he wired descriptions of the men to the San Francisco police. The telegrams did not arrive until after the boat had landed, but the descriptions were such as to enable the police to identify their men with ease, and soon the culprits were behind prison bars. Beachy got custody of the men after some delay and started back to Lewiston with them. At Walla Walla an escort of soldiers was furnished him. The party reached Lewiston during the early days of December and was met by the vigilantes of that town, but Beachy stoutly defended his prisoners, telling the people he had promised the men a regular trial. The vigilantes eventually decided to withdraw and trust the courts to administer justice. The prisoners were confined in upstairs rooms of the Luna house, Page by himself. The last mentioned turned state's evidence, and it was essential that no opportunity be allowed his partners in guilt to intimidate him, as he was the main reliance of the prosecution. Renton, Lower and Romaine maintained an attitude of sullen indifference throughout their incarceration, declining to affirm or deny the grave charges against them. Romaine was a schoolmate of Mrs. Beachy and hoped for some clemency on this account.

The following incident is related as throwing light on the character of Lower. The officers had one day conceived the idea of securing photographs of the prisoners. The subject was broached to the men, who listened intently and then announced that they would not consent to give the photographer a sitting. Several efforts were made to secure their acquiescense, but each failed, until finally one day Lower said he would sit, so word was sent to the photographer at Walla Walla, who arrived in a short time with his outfit. Lower was sent to a tent near the Luna house. The photographer set up his machine and prepared to take the picture. Lower posed willingly. When all was in readiness the artist stepped into the dark room to fill the plate-holder. Suddenly Lower jumped from his chair, rushed over to the camera, and, picking it up, dashed it to pieces.

The sheriff and the photographer rushed over to the man, and the former inquired: "Why did you do that, Lower?" With a demoniacal grin Lower replied: "I thought it was loaded." No further attempts were made to photograph the murderer or his comrades.

In due course the case against the three accused men came on for adjudication. The grand jury had no difficulty in returning an indictment, as the evidence of Page was direct and satisfactory. In the trial following Samuel C. Parks, the judge of the Second judicial district, presided in place of A. C. Smith, of the First district, who was absent. J. W. Anderson and W. W. Thayer appeared as attorneys for the defendants—Renton, alias Howard, Lower and Romaine. Prosecutor Gray was assisted by Attorneys Rheems and Kelly. The jury finally selected to try the case was composed of George H. Sandy, foreman; Henry Hershell, Francis Gabe, Joseph Wagner, Michael Leitch, Samuel Ramsey, Nathan W. Earl, J. P. Shockly, John Mooney, Ezekiel Beam, Henry Myers and W. B. Holbrook. On the evening of January 23d the case was given to the jury, which, after a short absence from the trial room, returned a verdict of "guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment, and that the punishment therefor shall be death." Three days later the convicted men were sentenced to be hanged on the 4th of the following March, on which date they were led to a scaffold erected near the spot on which Judge Poe's residence now stands, on ground now owned by John P. Vollmer. Several hundred citizens had gathered to witness the vindication of justice and a company of soldiers from Fort Lapwai was present, also a number of Indians from the reservation. Before the trap was sprung the condemned men were asked if they had anything to say. Lower with characteristic bravado replied: "Launch your old boat; it's nothing but an old mud scow anyhow." This miscreant also left a letter to be opened after his death, which was found to be extremely obscene and insulting in its language. Page, who escaped the scaffold by betraying his companions in guilt, was foully murdered by a man named Albert Igo, with whom he had quarreled previously, and such was the prejudice against the murdered man that no very energetic efforts were made to apprehend his slayer, notwithstanding the cowardly manner in which the crime had been committed. The vigilance committee, seeing by the result of the trial of Magruder's murderers that the courts were disposed to mete out justice, disbanded soon after the execution, and though there have been lynchings since, the days of popular tribunals in north Idaho were over.

The following May Sheriff James H. Fisk and Hill Beachy took Page to the scene of the tragedy. The remains of the victims were found in the places indicated by the testimony. The entire locality tallied with Page's descriptions; the sack of rings, buckles and tinware was discovered under the log as he had said; in fact the story was corroborated in every detail by mute but truthful witnesses. It was by a notebook found on the person of one of the Chalmers brothers that the identity of these unfortunate young men was established.

It is pleasing to add that the efficient services of the brave Beachy did not go unrewarded. Five weeks of unremitting effort had been expended by him, as well as considerable sums of money, in the capture of the murderous quartette. For his reimbursement and compensation there was appropriated out of the territorial treasury, by an act approved February 2, 1864, $6,244.

The population of southern Idaho, induced thither in flocks by the discovery and development of the mines of Boise basin and other districts, was greatly swelled during the early part of 1864 by immense immigrations from the southern states. The results of this infusion of secession sentiment may be easily imagined. The political complexion of the entire state was changed and a disturbing element introduced into society in general, making good government for the time an impossibility. It is stated that in southern Idaho it was all a man's life was worth to express Union sentiments in a demonstrative way, and the number of homicides in Boise county alone during 1864 is said by Bancroft to have exceeded twenty, "with assaults and robberies a long list." To combat this disloyal sentiment as much as lay in its power the district court held in that county exacted of persons applying to practice in it as attorneys that they subscribe to the following oath: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the constitution and government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign; that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any state or convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatever; and further, that I will well and truly perform all duties which may be required of me by law, so help me God."

But no oath could be required which would deprive the citizens, however disloyal or unworthy, of political rights. Just one Union man was elected to the legislative assembly in the election of 1864. Soon the governing body of Idaho, being composed largely of men at variance with the general government, and careless of the responsibilities of their positions, entered upon a career of infamy comparable only to the carpet-bag governments which shortly afterward came into power in the south. "The third session," a writer is quoted as having said, "was by all good men, irrespective of party, pronounced infamous, but this one (the fourth) is satanic." The governors, acting under federal appointment, were, of course, loyal men, though some of them had nothing else to their credit. They could and did veto bills at open variance with the constitution, the organic act or the plain interests of the people. These were in general passed without the governor's signature, but fortunately ran up against an insurmountable barrier in the United States Congress, which had the power to nullify such acts of territorial legislatures as failed to meet its approval.

Happily north Idaho was not distracted and torn in any such manner by the inroads of an army of disloyal people. That part of the territory had had its era of bloodshed and anarchy. Now, however, the ruffian elements had gone to the Boise basin, Montana and elsewhere, stable local governments were being established, the miners were busily engaged in garnering the wealth of their claims and the entire community was settling down to an era of quiet progress and the evolution of a law-abiding, social esprit de corps. But north Idaho was far from pleased with the doings of its legislature. The act which most deeply incensed the people of this section was that depriving Lewiston of its proud prestige as the seat of government, which act, approved December 7, 1864, title omitted, was indited thus:

Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the territory of Idaho, as follows: That the capitol of the territory of Idaho be and the same is hereby permanently located at Boise City, in the county of Boise and said territory of Idaho.

"Section 2. The capitol buildings are hereby located on the grounds known in and described on the plot of said Boise City, as the Capitol Square, and the Honorables Caleb Lyon, C. B. White and J. M. Kenedy are hereby appointed as commissioners to receive a deed to said Capitol Square, and such other grounds as may be deemed necessary to hold in trust for the Territory, for the purpose of erecting the capitol buildings aforesaid.

"Section 3. The Secretary of said Territory is hereby authorized to immediately draw a warrant upon the treasurer of the territory for such sum, not exceeding the sum of two thousand dollars, as shall be necessary to remove the papers, books, documents and other property belonging to his office to said Boise City.

"Section 4. This Act shall take effect from and after the twenty-fourth day of December, A. D., 1864."

Naturally the measure above quoted was received with great disfavor by the citizens of north Idaho in general and those of Lewiston in particular. As is customary in such cases the parties aggrieved by the act of the legislature resorted to the courts, hoping thereby to win their point. Referring to this litigation some years later, Alonzo Leland, through the columns of his paper, The Teller, reviewed the case as follows:

"The last part of the 11th section of the organic act of Idaho reads thus: 'And no expenditure shall be made by said legislative assembly for objects not specially authorized by the acts of congress making the appropriations nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects'. The whole of said section makes provision for the expenses of our territorial government, including the governor, secretary, judges, legislative members, clerks and other officers, and all contingent expenses including rents of buildings for the meeting of the legislature and offices for other officers of the United States, and these appropriations are made upon estimates made by the secretary of the treasury annually, and the legislative assembly cannot, in the language of the act, expend money 'for objects not specially authorized by acts of congress nor can that body go beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.'

"The organic act says that 'the legislative assembly of the territory shall hold its first session at such time and place in said territory as the governor shall appoint and direct.' Governor Wallace, by proclamation, duly ordered that the first legislature convene at Lewiston, on the 7th day of December, 1863. They so convened and held their session 60 days, and passed an act providing that their next legislature should convene on the second Monday in November, 1864. The organic act further says 'and at said first session or as soon thereafter as they deem expedient, the governor and legislative assembly shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for said territory at such place as they may deem eligible; provided, that the seat of government fixed by the governor and legislative assembly shall not be at any time changed except by an act of the said assembly duly passed, and which shall be approved after due notice, at the first general election thereafter, by a majority of the legal votes cast on that question.'

"At the first session an attempt was made to pass an act to remove the seat of government, but the attempt failed and the second legislature met at Lewiston in November, 1864. During that session they essayed to pass an act permanently locating the capitol of Idaho Territory at Boise City, and the governor signed the bill, without making any provision for submitting the question to the people for ratification, and attempted to move the seal and archives, whereupon a suit to enjoin the removal was brought on the part of the people of the United States to restrain them, and was heard in the district court, at the April term of the court in 1865.

"Following is the bill of complaint filed in the court:

The people of the United States of the Territory of Idaho, per T. M. Pomeroy, relator, plaintiff, vs Caleb Lyon, of Lyonsdale, governor of Idaho Territory, and S. D. Cochran, acting secretary of Idaho Territory, or any person acting in said capacity, defendants.

In the District Court of the First Judicial District, Territory of Idaho, county of Nez Perce, A. C. Smith, presiding. Complaint for injunction. Thomas M. Pomeroy, district attorney for the First Judicial District, of the Territory of Idaho, having been duly sworn, in behalf of the people of said territory, would respectfully show to the court:

That on the third day of March, A. D., 1863, the Congress of the United States passed an act creating the territory of Idaho; subsequent to which creation said territory was duly organized by the appointment of a governor, secretary and other officers and on or about the 10th day of July, A. D., 1863, said governor and secretary arrived at Lewiston in said territory and there temporarily located the seat of government of said territory, from which place the said governor issued his proclamation for an election of members of the Council and House of Representatives to convene at said Lewiston on the 7th day of December, A. D., 1863, and qualify and organize as the Legislative Assembly of said territory.

In pursuance of said proclamation said election was held and said legislators convened at Lewiston on the 7th day of December aforesaid, and qualified as members of said assembly and proceeded to the business of legislation for the people of said territory. By the provisions of said act creating said territory of Idaho, the term of service of each member of the legislative council was to continue two years, and the term of service of each member of the House of Representatives was to continue one year.

The said legislative assembly at said first session passed an act in conformity with said organic act, creating sundry offices for said territory among which were the offices of councilmen and members of the House of Representatives and limiting their term of service respectively to two and one years. Said assembly further passed an act relative to elections providing for the election of councilmen and members of the House or Representatives on the first Monday in September annually, which act provides as follows:

"The term of office of all officers elected shall begin on the first Monday in January next ensuing, unless some other express provision is made by law." Said assembly also passed an act providing, as follows: "Hereafter the legislative assembly of the territory shall convene on the second Monday of November of each year, at the territorial capital, at the hour of twelve o'clock M."

Congress during its session in 1863-64, passed an act amendatory to the organic act creating Idaho territory, which deferred the time of the annual election for the year 1864, from the first Monday in September to the second Monday in October, without changing the time at which the officers elected should begin their term of office.

On said second Monday in November, the time fixed for the meeting of the legislative assembly, sundry persons claiming to have been elected as members of the House of Representatives at the October election aforesaid, assembled at Lewiston, aforesaid, and assumed to proceed to organize as a House of Representatives for the territory of Idaho, contrary to law and the statutes, and also to the rights of the people of said territory.

Said House of Representatives further assumed to enact laws to be in force and to govern the people of said territory, among which was an act purporting to permanently locate and establish the seat of government at Boise City and to appoint Caleb Lyon, a federal officer, a commissioner for receiving and holding of deeds to grounds upon which the capitol buildings are to be erected; authorizing the secretary of the territory to draw a warrant upon the territorial treasurer for moneys to defray the expenses of the removal of the territorial archives from Lewiston, aforesaid, to said Boise City. All of which provisions are contrary to law and against the rights and interests of the people of said territory.

This affiant is informed that the bill for said act of removal has passed this illegal House of Representatives and also the legislative council, and received the signature of Caleb Lyon, of Lyonsdale, who claimed to act as the governor of said territory.

This affiant is not informed that said Caleb Lyon, of Lyonsdale, has ever filed his official oath in manner provided by law, and further believes that no such oath has ever been legally filed or recorded, so as to duly qualify him to approve acts passed by the legislative assembly of said territory. This affiant is informed and verily believes that Silas D. Cochran, the acting secretary of said territory, or some person acting in said capacity in conjunction with the said Caleb Lyon of Lyonsdale, acting as governor, are about to remove the seal, laws and archives of said territory, from Lewiston, the legal place for their deposit, to said Boise City, contrary to law and greatly to the damage of the people of said territory, and this affiant further believes that said governor and secretary will proceed to cause a great expenditure of the money of the people of the territory of Idaho, consequent upon such removal and location at Boise City, and the erection of capitol buildings, greatly to the damage of said people, if not restrained by the interference of the courts.

This affiant is apprised of no other relief for the people than to petition the court to issue a writ to restrain them, the said governor and secretary, from the performance of these illegal acts. Therefore this affiant prays the court to issue such writ forthwith and as in duty bound will ever pray.

THOMAS M. POMEROY,
District Attorney 1st Judicial District, I. T.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of December, A. D., 1864.

JOHN G. BERRY,
Probate Judge.

"Upon the above complaint the court issued a temporary injunction which was served upon Lyon and Cochran, December 29, 1864. The defendants filed what they claimed to be an answer, denying merely the legal conclusions of the complaint without denying any of the facts, except that which charged that the governor assumed to exercise the functions of the governor in singing the capital bill without having taken and filed his oath as required by law. Meantime the governor fled from this part of the territory in a small boat down the Snake river, under the pretense of going duck hunting, and never since then has he made his appearance in northern Idaho. Soon afterwards a new secretary was appointed from Washington and came to Lewiston, named C. DeWitt Smith, upon whom the order of injunction was duly served. He remained here some days and after a while it became known that he contemplated a violation of the injunction, and upon affidavit showing these facts, the court issued an order direct to the officer, commanding him to summon such force of citizens as he deemed necessary to assist him in enforcing the order. Meantime, Smith, unbeknown to the officer, had proceeded to the military garrison at Lapwai, and procured a detachment of U. S. troops, armed under command of Lieutenant S. R. Hammer, and with them approached the town stealthily, via a dry slough of the river, and not via the public road to the ferry, and when the civil officer and his men approached to prevent Smith from removing the seal, this military force with arms rushed forward and prevented the civil officer from executing the order and Smith, with the seal, laws and archives, went upon the ferry boat, under the escort of this military force, who continued their escort until they had proceded into Washington Territory beyond the jurisdiction of the civil officer and thus Smith escaped. The civil officer's return on the order was in the following language:

"Not served on account of defendants being escorted by an armed body of soldiers, commanded by Lieutenant S. R. Hammer, who resisted the service.

J. K. VINCENT.
Special Deputy U. S. Marshall.'

"It was afterwards learned that Smith made his appearance at Boise City with the seal, laws and archives of the territory, and there the territorial property has remained ever since. At the April term of the court, 1865, the case was heard at Lewiston, able counsel appearing on both sides, and on the 17th of April the temporary order of injunction was made perpetual.

"Judgment was entered as follows:

Lewiston, Monday, April 17, 1865.

"Court convened at 10 A. M., pursuant to adjournment. Present, Hon. A. C. Smith, presiding and E. C. Mayhew, clerk; proceedings of the previous day read and approved.

"People of the United States of Territory of Idaho. T. M. Pomeroy, relator, plaintiff, vs. Caleb Lyon and S. D. Cochran, defendants. An action to restrain the defendants from removing the seal and archives of the Territory.

"T. M. Pomeroy, assisted by Anderson, Trayer and Leland of counsel for the plaintiff, and T. M. Reed, assisted by Samuel E. Darnes of counsel for defendants.

"It is the decision of the court that the act permanently locating the capitol of Idaho Territory at Boise City is invalid, having been passed by an illegal and unauthorized body. Therefore let judgment be entered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

ALLECK C. SMITH,
Judge 1st Judicial District, Idaho Territory.'

"A similar judgment was entered against the territorial treasurer from moving his office to Boise City, and there both of these judgments stand on the records to this day, unreversed by the supreme court of the territory nor any other court having jurisdiction. In defiance of this they moved the seal and archives by a military force away from this part of the territory, beyond the reach of the people of Lewiston and north Idaho.

* * * * * *

"From this decision the defendants filed a notice of appeal on the 20th day of April to the supreme court of the territory. That appeal was never heard and determined in the supreme court, and we do not know that the appeal was ever perfected, although we were an attorney for the plaintiff in the case. We find no report of the case in the supreme court reports. Where is the capital by law? Surely not at Boise City."

But whether the territorial capital was legally removed to Boise City or not, the case has now been put at rest forever by provision of the Enabling Act by which the territory became a state. However, the breach caused by this act of the legislature was many years in healing, if, indeed, it has ever been fully healed. It and the fact that natural barriers cut the territory into two distinct divisions having little of common interest to bind them together have resulted in the north Idaho people's having striven for a full quarter of a century with singular unanimity for political segregation from Idaho and union to Washington. The struggle toward that end, taken up shortly after the removal of the capital from Lewiston, was not given up until Washington Territory's admission to statehood made success hopeless and further effort useless.

The establishment of routes of travel incident to the discovery of the mines continued almost without abatement, judging by the number of licenses granted during the legislative session of 1864. Charles W. Frush and associates were licensed to establish a ferry across the Pend Oreille or Clark's fork of the Columbia river at or near the point where the military commission road crosses said river, but as far as we know nothing was done under this franchise. John Silcott was granted the right to establish a ferry across the St. Joseph river, at or near the point where the direct or main trail leading to the Coeur d'Alene mission crosses said river. S. A. Woodward and L. P. Brown were licensed to construct and maintain a toll road from Brown's Mountain House (where Mt. Idaho now stands) in Nez Perces county, along the most direct and practicable route to Florence, in Idaho county, for a period of ten years. Charles Addis was granted a ferry right across the Coeur d'Alene river at or near the point where the trail to Coeur d'Alene mission crossed said river. Thomas Kirkpatrick, George Sears, A. P. Ankney, Alonzo Leland, James Tufts, S. S. Slater, John Creighton, and George Zeigle were granted the exclusive right and privilege of establishing and maintaining a toll road from Elk City, Nez Perces county, along the most practicable route eastward to the western line of Montana Territory, the grant to extend twenty years on certain fixed conditions. This road never was anything but a trail. J. B. Roberts, A. E. Ridles and J. T. Galbraith were licensed to operate a ferry on Kootenai river at a point fifteen miles below Linklighter's station. Charles H. Canfield was granted the right to operate a ferry across the Pend Oreille or Clarke's Fork of the Columbia, at a point about twelve miles above where military or boundary commission road crossed said river. John W. Hillin was licensed to operate a ferry across the Spokane river at or near Indian crossing, and both former and subsequent ligislatures were many times called upon for similar franchises and privileges, showing the rapidity with which the country was becoming networked with routes of commerce and general transportation.

Much of this, however, was stimulated by the discovery in 1863 and 1864 of mines in the Kootenai country of British Columbia, which drew away from the mining districts of north Idaho a considerable portion of this population. Indeed the miners were in great readiness for some new excitment, for even then some of the richest placer fields, especially in the Florence district, were giving premonitions of coming exhaustion. The mining rules prohibiting persons of the Mongolian race from operating in the different districts were beginning to be but laxly enforced and gradually the less valuable claims passed into the hands of Chinamen. These conservative, patient operatives were eventually, by an act of the legislature approved January 11, 1866, permitted to work the mines on payment of a license of five dollars per month for the entire time they remained in the territory. Later still other licenses were exacted.

The interest and excitment of the earliest mining days were temporarily reviewed late in the summer of 1865 by the circulation in Lewiston and Walla Walla of a rather strange report. It was stated that a man named Wilson had discovered a new gold district in northern Idaho, which promised to rival the celebrated Florence and Boise discoveries. While on a wandering prospecting tour, so Dame Rumor stated, he had stumbled into three auriferous basins in the Coeur d'Alene region, each one equaling the Boise district in extent. A stampede ensued forthwith. Thousands hurried to the scene. Charles G. Kress, of Lewiston, estimates that the number from Boise that passed through that town must have aggregated between three and four thousand and that perhaps as many more went into the region by other routes.

The gold seeking hordes made the Coeur d'Alene mission their objective point, expecting to be led without delay to the discovery. Wilson was hunted up. He proved reticent at first and finally claimed that he had forgotten the location of the diggings and was unable to find them. The disappointment and consternation of the expectant miners may well be imagined. Chagrin soon gave place to anger, and Wilson's life was threatened. He was eventually compelled to appeal to the priest at the mission for protection and it was through the intercession of the clergyman that he escaped lynching.

Meanwhile prospecting parties threaded the valleys and canyons and climbed the impending hills, hoping to find some return for their outlay and trouble. They spread out widely over northern Idaho and into western Montana, in the latter of which regions rich diggings were eventually struck. This induced much travel through Lewiston, causing a decided improvement in financial conditions for a time. The boom lasted all that fall. Mr. Kress tells us incidentally of a train of six camels which passed through town during the excitement, enroute for Montana, certainly a novel trading outfit in this part of terra firma.

During all these early years no attempt was made at agriculture in the mining sections and no domestic animals disputed with the elk and the deer for the pasturage upon a thousand hills, except the herds of Indian ponies on the reservation, the pack mules of the trader and the few head of horses and mules needful to the miner, the prospector and the primitive sawmill man. Occasionally, too, a herd of mutton sheep or a band of beef cattle might be driven into the mines on foot, designed for immediate slaughter upon arrival, and these of course found sustenance while enroute on the gratutious bounties of generous nature. In 1865 however, the Rice Brothers brought in a band of stock sheep, and about the same time C. P. Coburn imported one hundred and fifty head of cattle into northern Nez Perces county. These he took out southeast of Lewiston to what is known as the Junction House ranch. A little later Captain Ankeny and his sons brought in 500 neat cattle from Oregon.

About this time, also, Thomas Moore took up what is now known as the Dowd ranch in Tammany hollow, but for years he used it to pasture horses, without any attempt at cultivation. Another horse ranch was taken possession of probably as early as 1865 by Schissler & Siers, from whose brand the place came to be named the "21" ranch. At the numerous stations along the route to the Kootenai mines there were small settlements and portions of the land adjacent were cultivated to furnish garden supplies. There were doubtless other small attempts at agriculture in different parts of north Idaho, but the industry was slow in becoming established and when it was at last found that farm products could be successfully raised, progress was still slow for a time owing to the lack of transportation, the danger of trouble with Indians and other causes. Mr. Coburn thinks that Caldwell & Hall, who took a farm at the top of the high Clearwater bluff above Lewiston about the year 1869, were probably the earliest wheat farmers in the Idaho part of that great stretch of country now so famous for its production of cereals.

But throughout the first decade at least the main industry of the country was mining. After the richest product of the placers had been exhausted with rocker and sluice box, the hydraulic was brought into operation wherever possible, thus keeping up the annual output to nearly its old proportions, though with a smaller population and less excitement. No statistics of output are vailable for the counties of northern Idaho, but the estimates for the entire territory show an annual increase until 1865, when the mines yielded nearly $13,000,000, then a decrease till 1869, which year is credited with a production of $1,600,000. Thereafter the mineral output increased slowly, reaching $3,600,000 in 1873. It dropped to about two millions in 1875, then increased and decreased alternately until 1881, when it jumped to nearly $5,000,000. The existence of gold-bearing quartz in north Idaho was known to the earliest miners and prospectors, but they paid no attention to it, being without means to purchase machinery for its reduction or ways of transporting it to the mines if they had it. In 1868, however, Rescue ledge on Warren creek and another just above it on Slaughter creek were discovered. Judge Poe, Alonzo Leland and others became interested in the former property. They built a small mill on it, while an eastern mining expert named Isenbeck, in company with Godfrey Gamble, erected one on the Slaughter creek ledge. Litigation soon took the Rescue property temporarily out of the hands of its owners, and while thus alienated it yielded considerable gold. Upon its recovery by Poe, Leland and their partners, these men succeeded in interesting eastern capital by which means they were enabled to take the initial steps toward installing a large stamp mill. Some of the machinery reached Mount Idaho, where it still remains as a relic of an abandoned enterprise and a monument to the inaccessibility of the Warren region.

The Isenbeck-Gamble Company eventually removed its stamp mill to what was known as the W. B. Knott mine, on Steamboat creek, but the mine failing to yield as expected, the company was forced into bankruptcy. Leland and Starr also had a small mill on a branch of Steamboat creek, at the Hic Jacket mine, which, however, never proved a property of any great merit. The mill was afterward operated on the Rescue ledge. Another unsuccessful quartz mill was erected on the Charity mine, four miles south of the W. B. Knott ledge. But the richest quartz mine in the Warren district was the Little Giant, on Smith's gulch, about a mile from the town of Washington. It belonged to a man named George Riebold, who erected a ten stamp mill on it, the product of which is supposed to have aggregated fully $500,000. Quartz ledges were known to exist also in almost all the old placer camps, but their development was never undertaken with energy until comparatively recent years.

Comparison between a census of Idaho Territory taken in 1864 and the United States census of 1870 shows that the population of north Idaho counties neither increased nor diminished materially during the six years. The population of north Idaho according to the former census was 2,634, but the enumeration was no doubt very carelessly made.

"In 1870," says C. P. Coburn, who took the census of Nez Perces county that year, "there were at Palouse bridge, about three miles east of the state line, Frank and William Points, John Buchanan, and one or two others. They had in a small crop when I passed through. At the California ranch, east of Spokane, and at the Spokane bridge, on the state line, I found a few settlers farming in a small way. There were probably a dozen men at the bridge settlement. On Camas prairie were perhaps twenty-five or thirty settlers besides those in Mount Idaho, which then consisted of the hotel of Loyal P. Brown, Rudolph's general store, a blacksmith shop and a few houses. It had been founded by one Moses Milner, who in 1862, when the Florence rush was at its height, conceived the idea of establishing a station at the foot of the mountain. Accordingly he cut a trail through from this point to Florence, built a cabin and began advertising the route."

The year 1871 may be considered as the date of the first decided advance in the agricultural development of north Idaho. During the fall of that year the country around Moscow, the Paradise valley region, received its first influx of settlers, and the remarkable success which attended their efforts in all forms of agriculture was a stimulus to further settlement. Almost incredible are the stories told of the enormous size of vegetable products and the yields per acre. Another stimulus in the same direction was the rapid decline of the placer output and still another the hope of railroad transportation for products in the near future, as the Northern Pacific was known to be pushing westward to the coast and was supposed to be about ready to build across Idaho The northern counties in common with other parts of the great inland empire were passing through a transition period, the middle ages of the country, during which mining as the main pursuit was giving place to agriculture. The period was not without its manifold discouragements. Agricultural products could not be packed out on the backs of mules, as was the gold dust of the 'sixties, and adequate means of transportation were not at hand, neither were they to arrive as soon as expected, for the slowness of the Northern Pacific became proverbial.

At this time it was fully believed by the residents of north Idaho that the Northern Pacific Company would build through the Lolo pass and down the Clearwater to Lewiston, thence into the territory of Washington and beyond. It was pointed out by the newspapers that the route was many miles shorter than that via Pend Oreille lake and in the absence of surveys, the pass was supposed to be lower than the alternative pass, the Coeur d'Alene. Doubtless many people settled in Nez Perces and Idaho counties in full confidence that they would soon have a railroad, but in this they were doomed to disappointment, for the road, when at last it did come, chose the Pend Oreille route.

An incident of the year 1872, well remembered by old settlers throughout the entire inland empire, was the earthquake shock of December 14th. The seismic disturbance was very general, being felt at least over all of eastern Oregon and Washington as well as in north Idaho. The story of the shock as experienced in Lewiston and vicinity was described by the Signal as follows:

"On Saturday evening last, at twenty minutes past ten o'clock, this region of country was visited by a series of earthquake shocks. The first oscillation appeared to be from west to east and was of about eight seconds' duration. The first shock was followed by a second, ten minutes later, but of much less force. The violence of the first shock created considerable alarm among those who had never experienced such a thing before. Persons who were up at the time ran into the streets, while those who had retired supposed that a fierce and sudden gust of wind caused their buildings to sway and rock. Clocks were stopped and crockery and glassware caused to jingle. Frightened chickens flew about as though possessed of the devil. Dogs howled, cattle lowed, and all nature, animate and inanimate, was much disturbed. From all we can learn the greatest force of the shock followed the streams, as those residing on the uplands felt it but slightly. To the westward from here the vibration seems to have been more severe than east of Camas prairie. To the east of here, as far as Elk City, it was felt very plainly—at Camas prairie more particularly than elsewhere except at Reed's ferry, northeast of the latter place, where the shock lasted two minutes and was followed by two others of less duration and violence. North of here, in the vicinity of Paradise valley, the shock was so severe as to make everything fairly dance. In this place and the immediate vicinity the force of the shock was greater along the margins of the streams than elsewhere. Along the water front of the town on the Clearwater it was more severe than back near the bluff."

Among the improvements of the year 1872 were several in the mail service which had developed by this time so as to be fairly adequate to the country's needs. A daily mail was established between Lewiston and Walla Walla and a contract was let to C. C. Huntly to carry mail from the former town to Spokane Bridge. Mail was also carried by the O. S. N. steamers between Lewiston and Snake river points. The Baird Brothers were operating between Lewiston and Elk City and the Capps Brothers ran a stage, express and mail line from the former point to Pierce. The post-offices established in Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties at this time, with postmasters so far as known were: In Nez Perces county—Lewiston, C. A. Thatcher; Fort Lapwai, D. C. Kelly; Mount Idaho, L. P. Brown; Elk City, C. Collins; in Idaho county—White, Bird, ———; Slate Creek (Freedom post office), ———Barman; John Day creek,——; Florence, W. H. Rhett; Washington, C. A. Sears; in Shoshone county ———; Pierce City, I. B. Cowen.

The year 1873 was a rather unpropitious one in north Idaho as elsewhere in the northwest. This, it will be remembered, was a year of panic and distress the United States over and besides the general causes of stringency there were special causes in this portion of Idaho Territory. The decline of the mines had deprived the country not alone of its abundant supply of money but of its excellent local market for farm products; the means of transportation at hand were inadequate and unbearably expensive, and the excellent crops harvested in the fall of 1872, the normal increase of cattle, sheep and horses and the many other favorable conditions were unavailing when a market for produce was not to be had. Nevertheless the acreage cultivated during this year was estimated as being six times as great as that of the preceding twelvemonth. The number of bushels garnered from each acre was prodigious, and the singular anomaly was presented of the occurrence together of abundant harvests and hard times.

The year 1874 brought no amelioration of conditions, but rather an augmentation of the distress, and during the following twelvemonth affairs in north Idaho reached a very low ebb. In 1876, notwithstanding the fact that the Northern Pacific railroad was still many miles away and the transportation problem was in statu quo, there was some improvement in the outlook. Three small mining camps came into existence during the year, all of which were very prosperous and thriving when winter came. Two of these were on the north fork of the Clearwater and the third at Marshall lake. Crops still continued abundant, and the enormous yield of wheat and other grains proved what the country might become if it were only supplied with means of transportating its products to the markets of the world.

The winter of 1874-5 was so severe that thousands of head of cattle perished, bankrupting several stockmen.

Hardly had the sky begun to clear of financial clouds than it was suddenly overcast with the shadows of approaching conflict, and before north Idaho was to emerge from the darkness of its medieval days, it was fated to be baptized with a baptism of fire.

CHAPTER III.

THE NEZ PERCE INDIAN WAR.

When the indomitable Anglo-Saxon race began following the course of destiny to the westward the doom of the thriftless aboriginal peoples was sealed. The time had arrived in the progress of the world when the dusky, nomadic savage had become a cumberer of the soil. The day of a grander development for this vast, prodigious west, teeming with the crude elements of wealth production, had at last dawned. The night of savagery was over. The red man must himself become a factor in pushing forward the car of progress or be crushed beneath its wheels. Poor child of the darkness and the night! Without knowing it he was face to face with the harshest, most inexcrable law of life, the law of the survival of the fittest. No longer could he worship the Great Spirit in his own blind way; no longer could he roam at will over the bosom of his much loved mother earth; he must lay aside at once his ancestral habits and adopt those of another and superior race or he must perish and perish miserably.

Had the Indians tried the plan of adopting the white man's customs hardly would it have been possible for them to effect with sufficient alacrity a change so radical, to measure up to the required standard in time to save themselves from destruction in accordance with the mandates of natural law, but they did not try. They chose rather to set themselves in opposition to manifest destiny and the result is that their race is hopelessly doomed. This contest with fate furnishes many of the saddest chapters in the history of our country. It could have but one issue. Even the Indian could hardly fail to foresee its outcome, but it is not in human nature to yield the field without a struggle. The red men fought valiantly and long. They fought with a bitterness almost amounting to frenzy, and with the courage of despair, but they fought in a hopeless conflict and the heel of the conqueror is upon their necks.

It is the purpose of this chapter to chronicle one of the last, fierce struggles in that long continued race war by which the soil of the new world was wrested from the hands of its aboriginal possessors. The animosities growing out of former contests furnished the venom with which to poison the shaft of both whites and reds, but the causes of the war of 1877 have their roots deep in the incapacity of our government officials to understand Indian character and to deal with it in a sensible business like manner. When in 1855 Governor I. I. Stevens for Washington and Joel Palmer for Oregon negotiated their treaty with the Indians by which the latter disposed of a vast area of land to the United States, making certain reservations as homes for themselves, old Chief Joseph insisted that Wallowa valley should form a part of the reservation for the Nez Perces tribe. This beautiful valley had been used by him and his followers for years as a species of summer resort. On account of its beauty, grass, fish, game, various roots, camas, etc., or for some other causes, it occupied a warm place in the savage heart of this old veteran brave and had not the white negotiators agreed that it should form a part of the reserve their efforts to treat with the Indians would undoubtedly have ended in failure and the great benefits accruing to the whites from the treaty would have been lost, at least for the time being. As a matter of fact, Joseph, Three-Feathers, White Bird, Big Thunder, Looking Glass and others of the Nez Perces chiefs signed the treaty without being fully aware just what lands they were resigning their claim to, so the Indians aver, and when it was found that the Wallowa country was included in these lands an outbreak was imminent forthwith. However, the Indians were pacified by Stevens and Palmer, who promised that the Wallowa country should be reserved and the matter was settled for the time being.

While the Wallowa valley was, therefore, through the importunity of Joseph, made a part of the Nez Perces reservation and consequently the property of the whole tribe, it was understood both by the Indians and the white representatives of the government to belong especially to Joseph and his band. Legally the Wallowa was undoubtedly the property of the Nez Perces; equitably it was Joseph's. Herein lay the cause of the whole difficulty.

In 1863 an amendatory treaty was negotiated with the Nez Perces by which the Wallowa valley, with other territory, was surrendered to the United States government. Joseph was present at the council in which this action was taken, but he positively refused to sign the treaty and never acknowledged its validity. He continued his annual visits to the Wallowa until his death, impressing upon the mind of his sons and his followers that the valley was theirs and that they should hold it at all costs as a home for themselves and their children. The grave of old Joseph is in this valley, a circumstance which renders the spot hallowed in the minds of those allied to him by kinship or other ties. Meanwhile the United States government confirmed the treaty negotiated by its commissioners and naturally assumed that the valley was a part of the public domain. The seeds of trouble were sown but they did not bear fruit until some years later.

In due time the Wallowa valley was thrown open to settlement. In 1871 James Tulley entered it in search of range for stock. The next year he and his brother drove in a herd of three hundred head. James A. Masterson came also, and these three pioneers formed the entering wedge of white occupancy of the Wallowa. They saw Indians occasionally during the summer, but beyond making signs of displeasure at the presence of the whites, the Indians offered no resistance to their operations. Early that fall, however, the red men unequivocally expressed their displeasure at the encroachment of the whites in a council between themselves, numbering forty or fifty, and as many settlers. The council convened August 14th pursuant to a written call emanating from Indian sources. It seems to have been conducted in a friendly spirit, nevertheless the Indians were imperative in their assertions of right to the Wallowa valley and the whites were equally positive in refusing to withdraw from lands on which they had settled by permission of their government. The council broke up with nothing definite accomplished save that the whites sent two men to consult the Indian agent at Lapwai regarding the matter, who were to report at a future council.

In the spring of 1875 the residents, not alone of the Wallowa country but of the Grande Ronde valley and of eastern Oregon generally, were greatly incensed by an order of the department of the interior looking toward the removal of the whites from the disputed territory and the establishment of the Indians therein. The substance of this obnoxious order is contained in a letter to superintendent Odeneal, which we reproduce as follows:

Department of the Interior,
Office Indian Affairs,
April 30, 1873.

Sir:—Your communication of the 7th inst., and the report dated the 4th inst. of yourself and Agent Monteith relative to the band of Indians in the Wallowa valley, Oregon, were submitted to the Honorable Secretary of the Interior on the 25th inst.

Under date of the 28th inst, the Honorable Secretary returned the same and adopted without modification the suggestions and recommendations of this office, viz:

"That the band of Indians referred to be permitted to remain in said valley and occupy it during the summer and autumn or for such time as the weather is suitable according to a previous custom and that assurance be given them that it is not the intention of the department to disturb them so long as they remain quiet and permit no depredations upon white settlers."

The Hon. Secretary therefore directs that a proper description of the said valley be obtained for the purpose of an executive order setting apart this valley for the use of the said Indians and that white settlers be advised that they are prohibited from entering or settling in said valley.

He also authorizes an appraisement to be made of the value of the improvements of said settlers in the Wallowa valley in order that Congress may be asked at its session for an appropriation sufficient to pay for said improvements at their appraised value in order that the claims of the settlers may be extinguished.

You will therefore proceed to carry out the instructions of the Hon. Secretary of the Interior as above indicated, and for this purpose you will cause an appraisement of the improvements referred to to be made by two or more disinterested and competent persons, whose report shall be prepared in tabular form and submitted to you through this office.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
H. R. CLUM, Act. Comm.

To T. B. Odeneal,
Sup't Indian Affairs,
Salem, Oregon.

To further enforce the order, letters were sent out to the surveyor general and to the register and receiver of the United States land office at La Grande.

Some of the comments upon this action of the interior department were revolutionary in the extreme, and go to prove that the sentiment of patriotism is not so deeply seated in most men's minds but that it may be quickly crushed out when the power of the government seems to have been turned against their individual interest. There was much excuse for chagrin and disappointment among the pioneer settlers of the Wallowa valley. Many of them had made considerable sacrifices in locating within its borders, not supposing that there would be any danger incurred in so doing, as they were under the protection of a wise and just government. They felt that to be compelled to sell their homes for a sum fixed by appraisers, relinquish their prospects of future gain, pull up stakes and set out again in search of the natural means of winning a livelihood, all for the sake of a few shiftless, nomadic Indians, was an almost unendurable wrong. Some of them boldly declared that they would defend their rights in the Wallowa valley "against the savages or any other corrupt power."

The interior department was clearly in a dilemma. It could not deny the justice of Joseph's contention, for his right to the Wallowa certainly had never been extinguished in fairness and equity, though it had legally passed to the United States. On the other hand the department could not return the land to the Indians without doing a palpable injustice to white settlers who had invaded the valley and built homes there, planting the seed of civilization and progress, and all by invitation of the government. The horn which it chose at first is indicated by the department instructions in the letter above quoted.

The immediate settlers in the Wallowa valley and even their neighbors in other parts of eastern Oregon were not the only ones who took an interest in the Wallowa matter. The people of western Oregon watched its development with interest, and the governor of the state went so far as to address a letter to the secretary of the interior, which is so clear an exposition of the whole subject from the settlers' standpoint that we feel constrained to quote it. It reads:

STATE OF OREGON, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Salem, July 21, 1873.

HON. COLUMBUS DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

Sir:—I beg leave to call your attention to a very grave and important question now pending before your department touching the subject of vacating the Wallowa valley in Union county, Oregon, for the purpose of securing the same to Joseph's band of Nez Perces Indians and to submit the following views thereon for your consideration:

On and prior to the 11th day of June 1855, the Nez Perces tribe of Indians occupied lands lying partly in Oregon and partly in Washington territory between the Cascade and Bitter Root mountains. On said 11th day of June, 1855, the said tribe by their chief, head men and delegates, numbering fifty-eight officials, made and concluded a treaty of peace and boundaries with the United States, Isaac I. Stevens acting on behalf of the United States for Washington territory and Joel Palmer for Oregon. By said treaty the Nez Perces ceded and relinquished to the United States all their rights, title and interest in and to all territory before that time claimed and occupied by them except a certain tract described therein, specifically reserved from the ceded lands, as a general reservation, for the use and occupancy of said tribe, and for friendly tribes and bands of Indians in Washington territory. This general reservation embraced lands lying in part in Oregon, including Wallowa (Woll-low-how) valley.

On the 9th day of June, 1863, a supplementary and amendatory treaty was concluded between the said Nez Perces tribe and the United States, the former being represented by fifty-one chiefs, head men and delegates, and the latter by Calvin H. Hale, Charles Hutchins and S. D. Howe as commissioners specifically delegated.

By the latter treaty the Nez Perces tribe agreed to relinquish and did relinquish to the United States all the lands reserved by the treaty of 1855 excepting a certain specified tract designated as a "home and for the sole use and occupancy of said tribe." By this amendatory treaty the Nez Perces tribe relinquished to the United States all the territory embraced in the reservation created by the treaty of 1855, which lay within the boundaries of the state of Oregon, including the said Wallowa valley; so that on and after said 9th of June, 1863, the Nez Perces tribe did not lawfully hold or occupy any land within the state of Oregon. Joseph's band of Nez Perces Indians were in the treaty council of 1855 and Joseph signed the treaty. Their action recognized the tribal resolutions of their band and bound all the persons and territory described therein. The reservation named became the common property of the whole tribe. Joseph and his band acknowledged these conclusions also by accepting the benefits of the treaty of 1855. But Joseph refused to acknowledge the treaty of 1863 while a large majority of the chiefs and head men of the Nez Perces tribe signed the same Joseph died in 1871 and his sons claim the land which was relinquished to the United States in 1863, including Wallowa valley. This claim is based on the idea that the band which they represent were not bound by the treaty of 1863.

The United States had established the policy of treating with the Indians as tribes and nations. This policy was based on the necessary fact that organized action by the tribe or nation binds the whole body and all of its members. The treaty of 1863 is the organized action of the Nez Perce tribe, in relation to land in which the whole tribe had a common interest. If the government shall admit that one sub-chief, out of more than fifty joined in council, can by refusing his signature or absenting himself, defeat the operation of the treaty, the policy of making treaties would be valueless and but few treaties would be binding. For there exists hardly a treaty with Indians west of the Rocky mountains in which all of the sub-chiefs and head men joined, and against which they have not positively protested. If we draw our conclusions from the former practice of the government or from assimilated cases of foreign treaties, it must be admitted that the treaty of 1863 bound all the Nez Perces and extinguished the Indian title to all lands previously occupied by that tribe lying within the state of Oregon.

Acting upon this conclusion by order of the general land office, bearing date May 28, 1867, the public lands in Wallowa valley and vicinity were directed to be surveyed and opened for settlement. The surveys made under this order amounted to eleven townships, which were approved May 9, 1868. From time to time since that period, citizens of this state have become settlers upon these lands to such an extent, as I am informed, that eighty-seven farms have been located and preemption and homestead claims have been filed thereto in the United States land office at La Grande.

Upon this statement of facts, I urge that the Indian title to the land occupied by these settlers has been doubly extinguished: first by treaty and second by force of law. As the Indians have only a right of occupancy and the United States have the legal title, subject to occupancy, and an absolute and exclusive right to extinguish the Indian title of occupancy, either by purchase, conquest, or by legal enactment, it would follow that if the treaty of 1863 did not completely extinguish the Indian title to the lands in question the acts of the government in surveying the Wallowa valley and opening the same for settlement and the consequent occupancy of the same by settlers under the provisions of the several acts of congress affecting such lands, and the recognition of these claims by the local land office of the United States, would work a complete extinguishment of the Indian title by operation of law, as far as the occupied lands are concerned.

There are other chiefs and head men of the Nez Perces who did not sign the treaty of 1863 and who have refused and still do refuse to acknowledge its binding force.. If the government shall in this instance accede to the demand of Joseph's band and create a new reservation for them, or shall admit in their favor the nullity of the treaty of 1863, as far as they are concerned, a score of like demands from other discontented bands connected with other neighboring tribes, under treaties negotiated in a similar way,, will be immediately pressed upon the attention of the Indian bureau. I am thoroughly persuaded that if the proposed surrender of the Wallowa valley and the adjacent region to these Indians be now consummated as now demanded, the measure, if it works as a special pacification in this instance, will cause a general dissatisfaction, not only with the Nez Perces, but with all neighboring tribes living under treaty relations, and this character of work will have to be entered upon and carried out as to all.

The declaration as made by congress March 3, 1871, that "hereafter no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with whom the United States may contract by treaty," appears to me to relieve the department from entangling itself with an effort to reform past treaties, as such, and to leave the Indian office unembarrassed to adopt such policy as will subserve the best interests of both whites and Indians, without submitting its judgment to the caprices of untutored savages.

In addition to what I have urged against re-establishing any part of the Nez Perces Indians in Oregon on grounds growing out of this particular case, I would respectfully press upon your consideration the general policy of the government heretofore steadily pursued, of removing, as expeditiously as circumstances would permit of, all Indians from the confines of the new states in order to give them the opportunity of early settlement and development and to make way for civilization. This state has already much of its best soil withheld from being occupied by an industrial population in favor of Indians.

The region of country in eastern Oregon not now settled, and to which the Wallowa valley is the key, is greater in area than the state of Massachusetts. If this section of our state, which is now occupied by enterprising white families, should be remanded to its aboriginal character, and the families should be removed to make roaming ground for nomadic savages, a very serious check will have been given to the growth of our frontier settlements, and to the spirit of our frontier people in their effort to redeem the wilderness and make it fruitful of civilized life.

There is abundant room for Joseph's band on the present Nez Perces reservation and the tribe desires to have this band observe the treaty of 1863. I learn that young Joseph does not object to going on the reservation at this time, but that certain leading spirits of his band do object, for the reason that by so doing they would have to abandon some of their nomadic habits and haunts. The very objection which they make is a strong reason why they should be required to do so; for no beneficial influence can be exerted by agents and missionaries among the Indians while they maintain their aboriginal habits. JOSEPH'S BAND DO NOT DESIRE WALLOWA VALLEY FOR A RESERVATION AND FOR A HOME. I understand that they will not accept it on condition that they shall occupy it as such. The reason of this is obvious; they can have better land and a more congenial climate at a location which has been tendered them upon the Nez Perces reservation. This small band wish the possession of this large section of Oregon simply for room to gratify a wild, roaming disposition and not for a home.

There are but seventy-two warriors in this band. The white settlers in the Wallowa country number eighty-seven. There are also in the Wallowa valley two incorporated companies, the Wallowa Road and Bridge Company and the Prairie Creek Ditch Company. The improvements of these settlers and companies have been assessed, as I am informed, by commissioners appointed under direction of your department, to amount to sixty-seven thousand, eight hundred and sixty dollars.

Considering that the demand of Joseph's band was made during the period of the apparently successful resistance of the Modoc outlaws against the treaty stipulation with the Klamaths, and that now the Modocs are subdued, it will doubtless be much less expensive to the government, and much more consistent with its general Indian policy, to induce Joseph's band by peaceful means to make their homes on the Nez Perces reservation, than to purchase the right of white citizens now in the Wallowa valley. The people of this state have uniformly recognized the boundaries of legally defined Indian reservations, and have abstained from attempting to establish settlements thereon. In all instances of various difficulties between settlers and Indians on our frontier since the reservation system has been extended to Oregon, hostilities have resulted rather from the Indians refusing to confine themselves to their treaty limits than from any attempt of the settlers to encroach upon reservations. This was the case with the Yakimas in 1855, who killed three miners outside of their treaty limits, and then murdered Indian Agent Bolon, who visited them to remonstrate against their perfidy. This was the case last autumn with the Modocs and is now the case with Joseph's band in the light in which the treaty of 1863 has heretofore been held by the general government and by the people of Oregon.

I believe that facts will sustain me in saying that at all times and under all circumstances our frontier settlers have been as well disposed toward the Indians, and as moderate and forbearing as those of any other frontier and as much so as the people of any other state would have been under the circumstances.

Urgently pressing upon your careful consideration the peculiar features of this subject and on behalf of the interests of this state and of the settlers in the Wallowa valley and the vicinity asking that the preliminary steps taken for the vacation of said valley for the purpose of creating a reservation for Indians may be rescinded, I have the honor to be

Your obedient servant,

L. F. GROVER,
Governor of Oregon.

The reasoning of Governor Grover in the above communication is certainly sound in everything except that it seems to overlook what we believe to be a fact of history that, in the treaty of 1855 the Wallowa valley was understood by both Indians and whites to be reserved especially for the use of old Joseph and his band. Joseph's assent to the treaty was certainly given with that understanding, and while technically and as a matter of strict legal construction, the Wallowa was, under the treaty of 1855, the property of the whole Nez Perces tribe, the other chiefs of the Nez Perces seem to have taken no real interest in it. When the opportunity presented itself to sell to the United States what had never really been claimed by them why should they not embrace it? They would have given it up without protest in 1855 anyway. Why not sell Joseph's property when they had a chance to do so and receive a full portion of the price to themselves? Even white men are not always above taking advantage of their legal rights and privileges, though the letter of the law may chance to give them what equity and abstract justice would deny. From Joseph's point of view the chiefs sold to the United States what was his and not theirs, and we can hardly blame him if his untutored mind failed to grasp all the legal aspects of the case, and he saw only through the eye of his innate sense of right.

It should be emphasized, however, that the pioneer settlers of the Wallowa were in no wise to blame in this matter. Attempts on the part of United States officers to make them responsible in any measure for the troubles which arose are utterly indefensible, as were also those made at a later date to throw the blame for the outbreak of the Nez Perces war upon certain citizens of north Idaho. When lands were surveyed and offered for homestead and preemption location, the would-be settler is not supposed to go back to history in order to determine whether the government has a right to do as it has done. He should and does trust to the integrity and honor of his country for that. The first settlers of the Wallowa deserve the same credit which is usually accorded to those who in spite of danger and hardships carry the seeds of civilization into the heart of the wilderness, there to plant and nurture them until they grow to full maturity.

Influenced no doubt by some such consideration as those we have been alluding to, the department of the interior made an abortive attempt to secure the vacation of the Wallowa on the part of the whites and the reinstating of Joseph. It was a serious blunder. If a wrong was done to Joseph in the negotiations of 1863 it could not be remedied without an equally great, perhaps a greater, wrong to the white settlers, in 1873. The attempt to do so was fortunately not carried to completion.

In the spring of 1874 the Indian bureau determined to abandon its plan of attempting to establish an Indian reservation in northeastern Oregon. The letter which conveyed definite information of this change of policy to the people of the west was indited as follows:

U. S. SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, May 18, 1874.

HON. JAMES H. SLATER.

Dear Sir: I have recently received letters from our citizens of Union county inquiring what the Indian department was going to do in regard to the reservation of the Wallowa valley for Joseph's band of Nez Perces Indians; and whether the sums of money awarded to settlers in that valley for their improvements there would be paid. I have answered these letters, but as the subject is one of general interest to the whole people of eastern Oregon, I deem it proper to write you, so that you may give publicity to the views of the Indian department on the subject.

Some time ago I had a conversation with Hon. E. P. Smith, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on this matter and urged upon him the propriety of rescinding his order setting apart Wallowa valley as an Indian reservation for Joseph's band of Nez Perces. He then said that probably this would be done, and the matter might remain there until further notice. On Saturday last I again had an interview and explained how important it was for those in the valley and others who intended going there that it be determined at once either to rescind the order establishing this reservation or make it known that it would be adhered to, so that that the settlers might govern their movements accordingly. The commissioner then assured me that nothing more would be done toward establishing a reservation there, and that the settlers in the Wallowa valley would not be molested in any way by the Indian department. Of course the whole valley is now open to settlement by the whole people. In the conversation referred to, the commissioner said that having come to the conclusion to amend the order establishing the reservation, he would not ask Congress to make an appropriation to pay the sums of money awarded to the settlers some two years ago for their improvements made on lands within the boundaries of the intended reservation.

* * * * * * * * * *

I congratulate the people of Union county on the settlement of this perplexing controversy and hope no disturbance will hereafter take place with the roving bands of Indians who caused all the trouble and annoyance which have taken place in regard to that valley.

Very truly yours,

JAMES K. KELLY.

Important as this determination of the matter was to the whites, it wrought no radical change in the attitude of the Indians. Indeed, as General Howard unequivocally states, the real contention of Joseph and other malcontents, the prime cause of all the difficulty, was rebellion against submission to the United States government or any of its officers. It was summed up laconically in Toohulhulsote's insolent query, "Who gave Washington rule over me?" Denying as they did the jurisdiction of the United States, the Indians were not likely to pay any great heed to the order opening again to settlement the Wallawo valley. They continued their summer wanderings over its broad acres and exercised freely the prerogative claimed by them of going when and where they pleased. But aside from bickerings and threat and pow wows, creating uncertainty and dread in the minds of all white residents in and contiguous to Wallowa valley, no hostile movements were made by the Indians until the summer of 1876. The immediate cause of this disturbance was a personal conflict between two white men, A. B. Findley and Wells McNall, on the one side, and non-treaty Indians on the other. The white men were hunting some lost horses which they believed the Indians had stolen. Locating an Indian camp they proceeded to search the vicinity for the horses. The Indians became angered; an altercation arose, and one Indian engaged in a hand-to-hand encounter with McNall, attempting to take his gun from him. McNall called to Findley to shoot the Indian, which was done, the redskin being killed instantly. Both white men submitted to trial at Union and were acquitted, but the Indians were not satisfied and demanded their surrender that they might be tried by Indian law. This was denied of course and Joseph ordered the whites to leave the valley within a specified time, upon pain of being driven out in case they failed to go peacefully. The whites appealed to their neighbors for help. Citizens of Union and other towns responded promptly and arrived at the McNall ranch in middle Wallowa valley at three o'clock in the afternoon of the day preceding that upon which Joseph was to begin operations in case the valley should not be vacated by the whites.

Inasmuch as the volunteers numbered only about forty it was determined to make no attack upon the Indians, but simply to prepare for defense. Lieutenant Henry Rinehart was, however, ordered to march with fifteen men to the upper valley for the purpose of assisting the settlers there in case of attack. Rinehart and his command, escorting a number of settlers and their families returned about twelve o'clock that night and about two o'clock next morning, Lieutenant Forse from Walla Walla arrived with forty-eight regulars, having made a forced march to reach the scene in time to avert or participate in the expected hostilities. Next day the soldiers and volunteers were marched to the upper valley. Forse found the Indians on the summit of a hill near the Wallowa lake, all of them divested of superfluous clothing, decked in war paint, well armed and mounted, drawn up in battle array and prepared generally for warfare. Forse made certain demands upon them, chiefly to the effect that they should remain on the opposite side of Hurricane creek from the whites and abstain from depredations. Joseph yielded a ready compliance; his followers washed off their paint and sweet peace continued to reign in the beautiful Wallowa valley.

In November, 1876, in accordance with the recommendations of General Howard, a commision was sent to Lapwai for the purpose of endeavoring to adjust matters with Joseph, his brother Ollicut, and all other disaffected non-treaty Indians. The arguments of the commissioners in their endeavor to induce the Indians to settle permanently upon some reservation were met by the old superstitious doctrines of the Dreamers, who taught "that the earth being created by God complete, should not be disturbed by man, and that any cultivation of the soil, or other improvements, to interfere with its natural production,—any improvements in the way of schools, churches, etc.—are crimes from which they shrink."

"This fanaticism," continued Howard, "is kept up by the superstition of these 'dreamers', who industriously teach that if they continue steadfast in their present belief a leader will be raised up in the east who will restore all the dead Indians to life, who will unite with them in expelling the whites from their country, when they will again enter upon and repossess the lands of their ancestors.

"Influenced by such a belief, Joseph and his band firmly declined to enter into any negotiations, or make any arrangements that looked to a final settlement of the questions pending between them and the government. While the commission gave all due respect to the precedents and authorities in the government dealings with the Indians, and to the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, which recognizes an undefined right of occupancy by Indians to large sections of the country, yet in view of the fact that these Indians do not claim simply this, but set up an absolute title to the land, an absolute and independent sovereignty, and refuse even to be limited in their claim and control, necessity, humanity and good sense constrain the government to set metes and bounds, and give regulations to these non-treaty Indians. * * * And if the principle usually applied by the government, of holding that the Indians with whom they have treaties are bound by the majority, is here applied, Joseph should be required to live within the limits of the present reservation. * * *

"If these Indians overrun lands belonging to the whites, and commit depredations on their property, disturb the peace by threats or otherwise, or commit any other overt acts of hostility, we recommend the employment of sufficient force to bring them into subjection, and to place them upon the Nez Perces reservation. The Indian agent at Lapwai should be fully instructed to carry into execution these suggestions, relying at all times upon the department commander for aid when necessary."

With unusual promptness the government early in January, 1877, issued orders to Indian Agent J. B. Monteith to carry out the recommendations of the commission. Howard was directed to occupy the Wallowa valley and co-operate with the agent. That officer was sending friendly Nez Perces to Joseph, striving vainly to induce him to do what he had plainly told the commission he would not do, come upon the Nez Perce reservation. Joseph was interpreting all his friendly overtures as signs of weakness, and seemingly was becoming more and more established in his determination to yield no whit of his freedom but strengthening his own hands by effecting understandings with other disaffected Indians.

In a conference with General Howard at Walla Walla, April 20, 1877, Ollicut arranged a council to meet at Lapwai in twelve days, in which the demands of the government and the position of the Indians were to be fully set forth. Howard was there per appointment. On the 3d of May the first talk was held at Fort Lapwai, Agent Monteith, P. B. Whitman, official interpreter, Joseph, Ollicut and about fifty of Joseph's band being present. Two days of council, during which the demand of the government that the Indians go upon some reservation was unequivocally and emphatically made, then a recess until May 7th. Meanwhile there are many accessions to the numbers of the red men from all directions. On the 7th a somewhat stormy council is held in which Toohulhulsote becomes insolent, refuses to go upon the reservation and is arrested by Howard. "My conduct," says the general, "was summary, it is true, but I knew it was hopeless to get the Indians to agree to anything so long as they could keep this old dreamer on the lead and defy the agents of the government, and I believe that the Modoc massacre would very soon be repeated if I gave time for concert of action. In fact, in dealing with Indians, my conviction is strong that the true policy is to demand obedience to the requirements of the government of the United States. The crisis had come, when either this demand must be made, or these wild Indians be allowed all the latitude and leisure that their hearts desired."

When Toohulhulsote's evil influence was gone the Indians readily agreed to go next day to examine the Lapwai valley, and later the Clearwater country to see how they would like them for homes. They did so, giving all the time evidences of benevolent intentions. Soon word came that they had determined to go upon the reserve, they even designating what parts each band desired. On May 14th all came together again at Lapwai for a final conference. At this it was agreed that the Indians should be upon the reservation in one month, or by June 14th, except Hushhushcute, who was given thirty-five days: the object of the council seemed to have been satisfactorily accomplished and there was rejoicing in consequence.

All the traditions and history of the Nez Perces tribe favored the assumption that the non-treaties would do just as they agreed and that there would be no more trouble. The agents of the government occupied the intervening thirty days in gathering in other bands to the Yakima reservation, so as to weaken the power of Joseph in case he should meditate treachery, though this was considered a very remote possibility. To one looking backward it would seem that the wiser course would have been to put in practice the European maxim, "In time of peace prepare for war." Had a sufficient force been concentrated in the storm center, it it probable that the malcontent Indians would have gone on the reserve without resistance, but in endeavoring to win the Indians by smiles, rather than subdue them by a show of force, the agents of the government were acting in consistency with the general peace policy of the government,—the policy which has resulted in much unnecessary bloodshed. That policy has been fostered by many eastern would-be philanthropists, whose knowledge of Indian character comes from the imaginings of the romance writer, and to whose superfine sensibilities a vigorous demand of the government that the Indians obey its laws as white men have to, a determined purpose to compel them to do so at whatever cost, is an unthinkable cruelty. But the conduct of the various malcontent bands during the thirty days of grace certainly looked much like peace; the gathering of Indians on the borders of the Nez Perces reservation was naturally interpreted as a step in compliance with their agreement of May 14, and the burst of war came, therefore, as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. Even the settlers in the immediate vicinity of the reserve were deceived, though there were some signs of the approaching storm had they been interpreted aright.

There were four distinct bands of non-treaty Indians: Joseph's, who made their home in the Wallowa and Imnaha valleys; White Bird's, or the Salmon river Indians; Looking Glass's, whose home was on Clear creek, a branch of the Middle Fork of the Clearwater; and a small band under Toohulhulsote, the "Dreamer," who remained on the Snake river most of the year. Of the friendly chiefs who were in close proximity to Camas prairie we may mention Kooskoos-Nela, Captain John, Eagle-of-the-Light and Blacktail. Of course there was more or less intercourse continually among these Indians and between the Indians and the settlers around them. For years the whites on Camas prairie and their dark skinned neighbors had lived at peace with each other, save that now and then some altercation of minor importance might occur. They had traded together, herded stock together and been very neighborly. No serious animosities existed between them.

Down on the Salmon, however, the feeling between the two races was not as fraternal as it should have been. There, many serious quarrels had arisen over the possession of land and over other important matters. Many of the whites had settled upon choice tracts of land, which, although not included in the reservation, the Indians considered as still theirs by reason of the fact that they had never relinquished their title to it to the United States. The case was parallel to that existing in the Wallowa valley. The whites considered that the land was public domain and acted accordingly without consulting the desires of the Indians. Then, too, two or three traders on the Salmon frequently supplied the redskins with liquor and in one instance this practice led to an open fight between the proprietor of the establishment and the Indians, in the course of which one of the Indians was seriously wounded. This white, too, was remembered by the revengeful hostiles and when war broke out he lost his life among the very first. Some of the settlers here considered these and all other Indians as wholly bad and treated them accordingly, all of which fostered the enmity slowly rising. The remainder of the settlers, those who were on friendly terms with the Indians, were generally well treated by the latter until hostilities had commenced when the universal Indian trait of indiscrimination asserted itself.

This was the status of affairs when, a short time before the council, a petition was circulated among the residents of Idaho county praying the government to remove the non-treaty Indians onto the reservation. Some signed the petition; some refused, in the belief that these Indians could be more easily handled by not confining them too closely. This latter class were also wise enough to see that the enforcement of this order would lead to immediate trouble, which they wished to avoid as long as possible. The crisis came as soon as the government attempted to carry out the wish of these petitioners and it is worth noting that the blow fell most heavily on those whom the Indians found had signed the document.

Sometime in April, 1877, friendly Salmon River Indians came to the house of Charles Cone on the Salmon and told him that the Indians were surely going to fight; that they would never go on the reservation; and that the Indians expected to settle some old scores, naming their intended victims. They warned the settlers of what was coming, but few believed that the Indians were really in earnest. The Cones, Woods, and Joshua Fockler, however, organized for protection, preparing their weapons and replenishing their supply of ammunition and for one night, stood guard.

On Camas prairie the Indians were slowly gathering all through the month of May and preparing for the conflict. From time to time they warned their white friends that trouble was coming and to them they reiterated their intention of refusing to go upon the reservation. The redskins visited Grangeville and Mount Idaho in large numbers and purchased all the ammunition and weapons they could secure, concealing their hostile motives of course. They gathered their hundreds of ponies, bought cattle or obtained them by trade, purchased and by other means secured all the provisions and supplies possible, and in different ways prepared for the coming conflict. From outside appearances they might have been preparing to go on the reservation and in fact this was the interpretation placed upon their actions by a majority of the settlers on the prairie.

The Indians' rendezvous was at the head of Rocky canyon, one of the eastern arms of the Salmon river canyon, lying eight miles west of Grangeville. The smaller canyon derives its name from its rocky appearance. It cuts a furrow hundreds of feet deep and four miles in length through basalt, forming a region unexcelled for the Indians' purposes. Here they herded their stock, killed beef cattle and "jerked" the meat, stored their supplies in a wonderful cave, and prepared to sell their lives as dearly as possible in defense of their liberty. At the head of the south fork of this canyon were two beautiful, crystal lakes whose waters came from the timbered mountain a few miles southward and finally found their way through the narrow canyon to the rushing river hundreds of feet below. Around these lakes the Indians erected their tepees. During the early days of June the non-treaties, with the exception of Looking-glass's band, assembled in larger numbers than ever at this delightful camping ground, holding councils and drills during the day time and dances at night. Regular picket lines were established which apprised the plotting redskins of the approach of whites and in some cases warned them off the grounds. Here they argued for and against war, a large number protesting against such a radical step. Subsequently it was learned that the Indians were about evenly divided on the question of submitting peaceably to the inevitable or going to war.

Hon. Frank A. Fenn says that word was sent to the commander at Fort Lapwai by L. P. Brown nearly ten days previous to the outbreak, notifying that officer of the alarming condition of affairs on the prairie and suggesting that it would be well to watch them closely. On the 13th, Mr. Fenn says Tucallacasena, a brother of Looking-glass, notified Ad. Chapman and M. H. Rice that the Indians were practically on the war path and warned the whites that they must be on their guard.

General Howard says that the first slight inkling of something wrong came to Fort Lapwai in the shape of a letter, bearing date of June 14th, from L. P. Brown, of Mount Idaho, stating that Mr. Overman from the head of Rocky canyon had come in with his friends, very much alarmed at the actions of the Indians, who, they said, were insolent, taciturn in their communications with the whites, and hostile in their general demeanor. "Yesterday," continues the letter, "they had a grand parade. About a hundred were mounted, and well armed and went through the maneuvers of a fight—were thus engaged for about two hours. They say, openly, that they are going to fight the soldiers when they come to put them on the reservation, and I understand that they expect them up on Friday next. A good many were in town today, and were trying to obtain powder and other ammunition. * * * I do not feel any alarm, but thought it well to inform you of what was going on among them. * * * I believe it would be well for you to send up, as soon as you can, a sufficient force to handle them without gloves, should they be disposed to resist. Sharp and prompt action will bring them to understand that they must comply with the orders of the government. We trust such action will be taken by you, so as to remove them from the neighborhood and quiet the feelings of the people."

This was followed up next day by two communications of a much more startling nature which follow:

MOUNT IDAHO, 7A. M., Friday, June 15, '77.

COMMANDING OFFICER FORT LAPWAI.

Last night we started a messenger to you, who reached Cottonwood House, where he was wounded and driven back by the Indians. The people of Cottonwood undertook to come here during the night; were interrupted, all wounded or killed. Parties this morning found some of them on the prairie. The wounded will be here shortly, when we will get full particulars. The whites are engaged, about forty of them, in getting in the wounded. One thing is certain; we are in the midst of an Indian war. Every family is here, and we have taken all the precautions we can, but are poorly armed. We want arms and ammunition and help at once. Don't delay a moment. We have a report that some whites were killed yesterday on the Salmon river. No later word from them; fear that the people are all killed, as a party of Indians were seen going that way last night. Send to Lewiston, and hasten up. You cannot imagine the people in a worse condition than they are here. Mr. West has volunteered to go to Lapwai; rely on his statements.

Yours truly,

L. P. BROWN.

MOUNT IDAHO, 8 A. M., June 15,'77.
COMMANDING OFFICER FORT LAPWAI.

I have just sent a dispatch by Mr. West, half-breed. Since that was written the wounded have come in—Mr. Day, mortally; Mrs. Norton with both legs broken; Moore shot through the hip; Norton killed and left in the road, six miles from here. Teams were attacked on the road and abandoned. The Indians have possession of the prairie, and threaten Mount Idaho. All the people are here, and we will do the best we can. Lose no time in getting up with a force. Stop the stage and all "through travelers." Give us relief, arms and ammunition. Chapman has got this Indian, Looking-glass's brother, (Tucullacasena) hoping he may get through. I fear the people on Salmon have all been killed, as a party was seen going that way last night. We had a report last night that seven whites had been killed on Salmon. Notify the people of Lewiston. Hurry up; hurry! Rely on this Indian's statements; I have known him for a long time; he is with us. L. P. BROWN.

P. S.—Send a despatch to town for the express not to start up unless heavily escorted. Give the bearer a fresh horse, and send him back. CHAPMAN.

Howard sent a brief reply to Mr. Brown, announcing the despatch of two companies of cavalry and enjoining upon him to "cheer the people." Meanwhile all was bustle at Fort Lapwai. Colonel Perry was despatched forthwith to the scene of the trouble with ninety men, all that could be spared from the fort. Captain Wilkinson and Lieutenant Bomus were sent post haste to Walla Walla with messages for more troops from Wallowa, Walla Walla and Portland, with a request for supplies from the last named point, also for twenty-five scouts from General McDowell at San Francisco.

But before proceeding further in the account of the military operations, we must turn back to the evening of June 13th in order to find out more definitely the cause of all this bustle and excitement. During the day several Indians came down from the prairie to the Manuel ranch on White Bird creek, where they utilized Mr. Manuel's grindstone in sharpening their knives and other edged weapons. They acted very friendly and aroused no suspicions in the minds of the doomed family who watched the operations. Farther up the Salmon at early dusk three young Indians drew up their ponies at the Cone ranch and dismounting, entered the house. None of them was over twenty-one years old and two of them, Tipulahna-Caps-Caps (Strong Eagle) and Sopsis-Ilp-Ilp (Red Leggins), Salmon Rivers, were old friends of the Cone family. The other Indian was a member of Joseph's band. They asked for bread for themselves and bullets for their weapon, a 44-calibre Colt's cap and ball revolver. The Indians were given the bread, and Charles, one of the sons, would have supplied the ammunition asked for as he and the Indians were good friends and had often hunted together, but for the fact that the amount he had on hand was very limited. The Indians explained that they were on a hunting expedition and after exchanging a few more words again mounted their animals and pushed on up the river. That night they camped as is supposed in the brush near Richard Divine's place.

Richard Divine was an old, retired English sailor living alone on his ranch on the Salmon six miles above John Day creek. So far as known he had never wronged the Indians nor had he ever had any trouble with them. But he did possess a new, improved rifle, fitted with hair sights, and reputed to be one of the finest in this section. The possession of this weapon proved the cause of his death. As the old man came out of the house some time that night or the next morning, a pistol shot rang out and he fell. Whether his wound was instantly fatal or not is unknown, but he was dead when found, though his body was still warm.

Securing the coveted rifle the three young murderers took the trail down the river. Arriving at the Elfers ranch at the mouth of John Day creek, they became the chief actors in another tragedy. Mrs. Elfers, now Mrs. C. M. Cleary, is our authority for the story of this terrible event. She says she saw the Indians pass her home on their way up to Divine's place on the evening of June 13th, and that they stopped at the stock corral to talk with Mr. Elfers and the other men. On the morning of the 14th, (she is positive as to the date) her husband, Robert Bland and "Harry" Beckroge were killed by them. The real name of the last mentioned individual was Burn Beckroge, but he was universally named Harry after a brother of his who had been a resident of the Salmon river and had died previous to Burn's coming. On the morning of the fatal day Beckroge and Bland went up to the bench land south of and above the house to get the horses. The men were engaged in hay making at the time.

Mr. Elfers remained at the house, attending to the cows. He had just gone into a room of the house and was putting on a pair of moccasins, when two of the Indians came up and entered the office, apparently looking for him. Mrs. Elfers came out of the milk house just in time to see them and one of them spoke to her. She passed around the further end of the house to enter the kitchen by the back door. The Indian was standing at the entrance of the office when he spoke. Soon the Indians disappeared and Mrs. Elfers believed they had left the place entirely. When Mr. Elfers finished putting on his moccasins, he started up the hill to the field, and his wife followed him with her eyes some distance. That was the last time she saw him alive. The Indians shot him immediately after he reached the edge of the plateau above. It appears that they had already killed Bland and Beckroge and that one of their number had been left on guard in the field while the two others came to the house to look for Elfers. Mrs. Elfers did not hear the shots, the noise of the guns having been drowned by that of the stream, but Victor, a Frenchman living further down John Day creek, saw the smoke of the guns and became suspicious that something was wrong. He communicated his fears to some of the other miners, who came up to investigate. An invalid named Whitfield, who had been out hunting mountain sheep, had returned and discovered the remains of Elfers, Bland and Beckroge. He notified Norman Gould and his hired man at the saw mill and the two accompanied him to the scene of the murder, bringing their guns. Mrs. Elfers saw the Indians return to the house after they had killed the three men. They entered the office, but soon came out again passed by her at the milk house, mounted the horses and rode away. Mrs. Elfers did not notice that they were riding her husband's animals, though it was later ascertained that they had exchanged their ponies for three of their victim's horses. They also secured Mr. Elfers' rifle without her knowing of it. The horses stolen were considered very fine animals, one being a trained race horse. The Indians did not tarry long at the Elfers place, fearing the return of Whitfield, who they knew was armed and out hunting mountain sheep.

Having departed from the Elfers ranch, the three Indians passed on down the river avoiding the Cone house by leaving the trail. A mile and a half below the Cone ranch, Charles Cone, Sr., was at his placer mine. When the redskins came in sight of him they rushed down upon him in a threatening manner and demanded if he knew their horses. Cone had of course immediately recognized the horses and detected that something was wrong, but with admirable presence of mind he answered in the negative. The Indians told him to go home and stay there; that they were very mad and would fight. Glad of the change to escape so easily, Mr. Cone obeyed their command.

Not far below the mine, on the opposite side of the river, Joe Amera, a friendly California Indian lived. Opposite his place the three hostiles stopped and sought to entice him across the river. Whether they wished to kill him or simply wanted him to join their crowd is not known, but at all events Joe simply parleyed with them without yielding to their wishes and at last they retired.

Probably being well aware that Harry Mason and William Osborne were well armed and the former was an experienced Indian fighter, the Indians avoided an encounter at the Mason place. Near the mouth of White Bird they met Samuel Benedict, who was out looking after stock, and wounded him, the bullet taking effect in his legs. Although seriously injured he managed to make his way home, where he gave his wife his valuable papers and some gold dust and urged her to flee to the woods. This the brave woman refused to do, preferring to remain with and care for her wounded husband. A number of Indians had a quarrel with Benedict shortly before the outbreak of the war, during which one named Nosenocope had received a charge of fine shot, and the shooting of Benedict is thought by some to have been in revenge for this injury.

After the attack on Benedict the young warriors turned their horses up White Bird creek and during the afternoon rejoined their fellows at the head of Rocky canyon. On arriving here they announced, "Now you have to fight," and appeared to be in high glee over the part they had taken. It was true that the Rubicon had been crossed; the war party was so strong that it would never permit the murderers to be arrested and now that the breach had been opened, the Indians voted to commence general hostilities. Here the three secured about fifteen recruits and under the leadership of Mox Mox (Yellow Bull) immediately returned to the Salmon river.

Meanwhile, James Baker, a man seventy-four years old living on White Bird creek, and Patrick Price (or Brice) had become aware of the attack on Benedict and had warned the Manuels of their danger. They decided to seek a place of greater safety at once. Mrs. Manuel and her baby were placed on one horse. Mr. Manuel and his seven year old daughter Maggie mounted another and Mr. Baker rode a third. Mrs. Manuel's father, George Popham, and Pat Price remained in the brush near the house to await developments. The Manuels and Baker started for the latter's stone cellar, where they purposed to defend themselves. Hardly had they started, however, before Mox Mox and his band were upon them. Manuel and his daughter were wounded and fell from the horse they were riding, Mrs. Manuel and her baby were thrown from their horse, and Baker fell to the ground, pierced by arrows. Manuel, wounded, ultimately escaped to the settlements after wandering in the brush and woods for thirteen days, while Maggie was carried to the fort at Mount Idaho by Pat Price. The Indians carried Mrs. Manuel and her baby back to the house and forced her to give up the ammunition left there. After securing this they again took the trail down the creek, passing the Masons and Osbornes and William George, but this party kept in the brush and the Indians appear to have been afraid to go in after them. In the exchange of shots which followed the meeting George was wounded in the thumb. That night he left the rest of the party and proceeded to Mount Idaho, where he gave the first authentic news of the Salmon river murders.

At the mouth of White Bird creek the Indians found Benedict in his store and saloon and killed him. A Frenchman named August Bacon who was with Benedict was also killed here. Indians state that they offered Bacon his life of he would come out, leaving Benedict, but he refused to desert his wounded companion.

From the mouth of the creek the Indians went down the river a mile to H. C. Brown's store. Brown saw them coming and together with his wife and brother-in-law, Andrew Bensching, escaped across the Salmon in a boat, though Brown was slightly wounded. All took refuge in the woods. Several days later Bensching came to Mount Idaho and subsequently Brown and his wife were rescued near Cottonwood by a party under Henry C. Johnson. The night of the 14th the Indians spent in debauchery at Brown's store, which they looted, helping themselves freely to the goods and liquors on the shelves. They remained until morning, when they started for the Mason ranch.

During the previous night the Masons and Osbornes had decided to return to their homes. They proceeded to the Mason ranch, where they concealed themselves in a nearby gluch. Here they remained for some time, but eventually, as the story is told, the children became hungry and the party was forced to do something for them. They accordingly went to the house of Osborne to procure something edible, and while they were there the Indians attacked them. As afterwards told the Cone brothers by Yellow Bull, the redskins offered to allow the rest of the party to go unmolested if they would deliver Mason. It seems that Mason had had difficulty with an Indian early in the spring and moreover he was a thorough Indian hater. Of course the whites refused to deliver him and the redskins attacked the little party. Osborne, Francois Chodozo and Mason were killed, after which the women, Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Osborne and Mrs. Walsh, a sister of Mason, fell into the hands of the savages and were shamefully treated. Subsequently the Indians allowed them to proceed to Slate creek where the first news of this last of the Salmon river outrages was reported. A Frenchman known as "Shoemake," who had escaped the Indians, joined the women a short distance from the scene of the attack and accompanied them to the fort. After the battle of White Bird the Indians returned to Mason's store and spent a night in carousing and general debauchery, ending their merry making by burning the buildings. In fact nearly all of the buildings destroyed along the Salmon were burned after this Indian victory.

But we must return to the home of John J. Manuel whose wife and baby were left unharmed by Mox Mox's band after these Indians had secured the coveted ammunition. There has been much discussion relative to the murder of Mrs. Manuel and her little son and some difference of opinion exists as to whether or not Chief Joseph was a participant in it.

It is generally believed by Salmon river residents that the famous chieftain was guilty of participation in the dastardly affair, and that he killed Mrs. Manuel with his own hand. The following is the story of Mrs. Maggie Bowman, nee Manuel, the only white eye-witness, who was but seven years old at the time:

"Our family consisted of my father and mother, sister Julia (now Mrs. W. K. Knox, of Grangeville), a baby brother eleven months old, grandfather and myself. With the exception of my sister Julia, who was in school at Mount Idaho, we were all at home when James Baker and Patrick Price came to the house and told us that the Indians had wounded Mr. Benedict and that we had better flee for our lives. They suggested that we go to Mr. Baker's stone cellar, about a mile down the creek, and there leave the women while the men defended the place.

"We started immediately. I mounted father's horse behind him, while mother and the baby took another animal. Grandfather (George Popham), and Patrick Price remained at the house. We had proceeded about half a mile on our journey when, looking to a hill we had descended, I saw several Indians coming toward us on a run, yelling and whooping at the top of their voices. 'The Indians are coming,' I said to father. Just as the Indians appeared, the horses we rode became frightened at the noise and stampeded, separating father from mother. The Indians opened fire on us with arrows, the first arrow striking my left arm near the shoulder. An arrow struck me in the back of the head and glanced and pierced my father's neck. An Indian, who had only two cartridges as we afterward learned, fired at father at the same time and shot him through the hips. A second bullet burned one of his ears. Father was also wounded between the shoulders by an arrow. The wound through the hips caused him to fall from the horse, dragging me with him. Our horse had taken us to the top of the hill before we fell from the saddle.

"Father saw that our only chance was to roll down the hillside into the brush and this we did, meanwhile undergoing the rock throwing of the Indians. One rock broke father's little finger and another struck me on the forehead. The redskins were afraid to follow us, doubtless thinking that father still had his pistols. Very foolishly we had left all weapons and ammunition at the house with the idea of showing any Indians we might meet that we were peaceable.

"Meanwhile, Mr. Baker had fallen from his horse at the first flight of arrows. The redskins surrounded him and one of them pointed an arrow into the old man's face. He courageously thrust it away, but was unable to maintain the unequal contest and the next instant fell lifeless, being riddled with arrows.

"Mother's horse threw her and the baby and in the fall one of her knee caps was broken* and the baby injured. Afterwards she said that two or three of the Indians took her to the house and promised not to injure her if she would give up the ammunition and a fine rifle that father had. She did this and was uninjured by her captors.

"As soon as the Indians left the place, grandfather and Mr. Price came into the house. Mother told them where we had crawled and grandfather came to us. He brought me to the house about dark and left blankets, food and water for father.

"That night mother, the baby, myself, Mrs. Benedict and children (who had come over to the house after Mr. Benedict's death) and the men stayed in the brush. The next morning Mrs. Benedict tried to persuade us to go up the creek and escape to the prairie, but mother and grandfather decided to return to the house, thinking that the danger was past. Then, too, mother refused to leave father alone in the brush, wounded and without aid. So we returned to the house, except Mrs. Benedict who took her children and started up the creek where she was subsequently rescued.

"Mother and I went to bed while Mr. Popham and Mr. Price stood guard. Along in the forenoon, Mox Mox and a band of White Bird Indians, nearly all of whom we knew very well as their camping ground was on a part of our place, came to the house. They ransacked it, but did not offer to molest us. They finally told us that Chief Joseph's Indians were following them, advising Mr. Popham and Mr. Price to go to the brush and promised to protect us.

*Mrs. Robie (formerly Mrs. Benedict) told the writer that the Indians made two knife cuts over each of Mrs. Manuel's knees, one lengthwise and the other crosswise, their object being to prevent her getting away. Mrs. Robie says she knows this because the wounds were shown her by Mrs. Manuel.

"Early in the afternoon Joseph and his band came up. Joseph was dressed as a chief and told us that he was Chief Joseph. The Indians called him Joseph and I am positive that it was he. Mox Mox and White Bird were also there. Mox Mox had promised to keep the hostile Indians out of the house but had failed to keep his word.

"Joseph had not been in the house over an hour before he took a seat on a trunk in the room where mother, baby and I were. Mother sat on a trundle bed and was nursing the baby when Joseph addressed her with some remark. They were only a few feet apart. Joseph reached over and without any preliminaries, plunged a knife into her heart. Mother fell back on the bed and the only words she said were: 'Don't kill my children.' She repeated these words three times. The redskins dragged her to the floor and stripped off her clothing. All this I saw from my bed in the same room and just across from mother's.

"After this the Indians took me to an adjoining room and shut me in. Of course I cried and I remember that one of the White Bird Indians slapped me. Being sick and exhausted, I fell asleep and didn't wake up until nearly dark. Then I went into the other room where mother had been killed. I was barefooted and even now I can recall the horrible feeling that came over me as the blood oozed between my toes. The body was naked and lying in a pool of her life's blood. At her head lay baby Johnnie, also dead.

"My first impulse was to find grandfather and I started in search of him. Instead of him, however, I found Pat Price with whom I stayed in the brush that night. In the morning the Indians attacked Mr. Price and me in the brush. He determined to go straight to them and try a ruse, so he went up to Chief White Bird. To him Mr. Price showed the cross tattooed on his breast with India ink. He proposed to the Indians that if they would allow him to take me to Mount Idaho he would return and surrender himself to them. This the chief agreed to and after we had gone into the house and seen mother's and baby's bodies, we left for the prairie. I was barefooted and in my night clothes. We traveled all day, Mr. Price carrying me a portion of the way, and stayed that night at Harris's place near the head of Rocky canyon. There, Mr. Price fixed me a chair, fashioning it out of a dry goods box. With a rope he fastened it on his back. At this place he found an old white shirt and put it on me. During all this time and until I reached Mount Idaho, my left arm, which had been broken in the fall from the horse, hung limp by my side, the older people in the excitement not even fixing me a sling. In this box chair I rode into Mount Idaho, reaching there about noon. Mr. Price risked his life to carry me through to the settlement and of course I never forgot this kindness and devotion.

"The same day we left the house the Indians burned it, together with the bodies of mother and baby. Subsequently their charred bones and mother's ear rings were found in the ruins. One ear ring was partially melted, the other was in its natural state, except for being blackened by the fire. The house was built of logs and lined with lumber and must have made a very hot fire. From his place of concealment in the brush, grandfather witnessed the destruction of the buildings.

"Father remained in the brush and small outbuildings on the ranch for thirteen days, living upon berries and vegetables that he was able to secure from the little garden. After suffering for five days from the arrow in his neck, he cut it out with his knife and dressed the wound, using horseradish leaves and cold water from the creek. His hip wounds had crippled him so seriously that he was unable to travel. The soldiers found him and brought him to Mount Idaho, where he eventually recovered.

"Grandfather came into Mount Idaho several days after Mr. Price and I arrived.

"This is the story as I now remember it and the recollection of it all comes to me very vividly despite the long years that have rolled by.

"The above facts are given from personal knowledge and not from hearsay.

SIGNED:—MAGGIE BOWMAN.

"Grangeville, Idaho,
April 1, 1903."

Meanwhile events of considerable importance were transpiring on the prairie. As early as June 9th the situation had become alarming and some of the settlers felt that the Indians were about to carry out their threat of commencing war although the settlers generally seemed disposed to discredit these rumors. Previous to the 14th Cyrus Overman and M. V. Jarrett, who lived near the lakes, brought their families in nearer to Grangeville and Mount Idaho and left them with friends, in order to assure their safety in case of trouble.

Considerable activity was manifested by the Indians on the 13th. Sometime during the day Seth Jones and Charles Horton passed two bands attired in full war dress. The white men were unmolested, however.

Along in the afternoon of the 14th (Mr. Johnson says 13th) Henry C. Johnson and Cyrus Overman noticed, from the Johnson place which overlooked the Indian camp, that the Indians were acting very restlessly. They saw several of them leave in small bands of from two to four each toward the Salmon.

About three o'clock, Mr. Overman told Mr. Johnson that he had concluded to go over to his farm, sack up a little wheat and proceed to town. Upon reaching home, he saw Mr. and Mrs. Watson driving rapidly across the prairie toward Mount Idaho. He also saw a band of seven Indians coming away from Watson's place. Quickly saddling and mounting his horse, he set out to overtake the Watsons, which he succeeded in doing after a ride of three miles. From them he learned that Crooks had been driven out of an Indian camp that afternoon and that the settlers had been warned by messenger to come into Mount Idaho. The courier had turned back before reaching the Johnson place. Mr. Overman continued his journey to Mount Idaho, arriving about eleven o'clock that night.

Later in the day, Mr. Johnson, whom Mr. Overman had been assisting until three o'clock, saw the Indians tearing down their tepees and concentrating their vast herd of horses, of which they had, according to his estimate, fully ten thousand. He says it was fascinating to watch the agile Indians slowly moving the seething bands across the prairie toward Craig's Mountain.

Mr. Johnson decided to remain at his ranch that night, though he took the precaution to sleep out of doors in one of his fields. The last he saw of the Indians before darkness cut off his view, they were still engaged in moving their ponies toward Craig's mountain and only five or six tepees were still standing at their old camping ground. He believed that at last the red men were moving upon the reservation and his apprehension of danger, if any he had, were at least partially removed.

Next morning he was unable to see any sign of Indians so he decided to drive over to the settlement and inquire for news concerning them. Arriving at the saw-mill on Three Mile creek, he there learned that the Norton party had been attacked the night before, so of course gave up all thought of returning to his home.

On the afternoon of the 14th (or according to some the 13th) John M. Crooks, the cattle king of the county at that time and a friend of the Indians, volunteered to ride out to their camp from Grangeville and learn what he could regarding their intentions. He did not believe that the Indians meant to go on the warpath, but undertook the journey for the purpose of reassuring himself and his neighbors. Mr. Crooks reached the Indian camp in safety. There, however, he was greeted with hostile demonstrations and warnings to leave immediately, so he wheeled his horse and started on his return to Grangeville. One Indian pursued him nearly to town, once riding up close to him and flourishing a revolver in his face.

Upon arriving at Grangeville, Mr. Crooks turned in a general alarm. Mounted men were at once sent to all residing outside of Mount Idaho and Grangeville and families came rushing in from every direction.

By nightfall nearly all of the inhabitants of Camas prairie had gathered at Mount Idaho. There they prepared for defense as best they could. They were unusually poorly armed for a pioneer people and had the Indians attacked them a general massacre would surely have followed. But, as stated elsewhere, the Indians were well disposed toward the settlers of the prairie and treated them far more generously than is usually the case in an Indian war. In fact they told the settlers to leave them alone and not take sides in the trouble and they would not injure them.

Early in the morning L. P. Brown had sent a message, the "Overman" letter, to Fort Lapwai apprising the commandant there of the critical situation on the prairie. Late in the afternoon Arthur Chapman, who lived several miles northwest of Grangeville, received definite information from an Indian boy of the uprising on the Salmon. In a short time he was in the saddle and speeding toward Mount Idaho, where he announced what he had heard. The citizens decided to send information to Lapwai at once with a request for troops. Lew Day volunteered to carry this message and set out quite late in the afternoon.

Day had proceeded about twenty-five miles on his journey when he was joined by two Indians. They inquired where he was going. He replied that he was on his way to Lewiston for a doctor. The red men dropped behind the messenger and fired at him, wounding him in the shoulder. After returning the fire, Day proceeded on his way, but his wound resulted in a great loss of blood and he was finally obliged to turn back. He returned via Cottonwood house, of which B. B. Norton was the proprietor. There he found Mr. Norton, his wife and son, Hill, Miss Linn Bowers, John Chamberlain, wife and two children, and Joseph Moore. All immediately began preparations for the journey to Mount Idaho. About ten o'clock p. m., they started, Norton and Moore mounted on saddle horses, the others in a wagon. For ten miles they traveled without casualty; then commenced the most horrible performance of the war. The Indians rode upon them in the rear and commenced firing and yelling like mad men. Soon the horses of Norton and Moore had been shot. The men got into the wagon and the race for life was continued but before long the team was shot down and men, women and children were left apparently to the mercy of the savage demons. Miss Bowers and little Hill Norton, however, stole away in the darkness and escaped unharmed to Mount Idaho. Mr. Chamberlain, his wife and two children attempted to do likewise, but were discovered. Chamberlain and the boy were killed, the latter, so his mother said, by having his head crushed beneath the knees of a powerful Indian. The other child was snatched from the arms of its mother and a piece of its tongue was cut off; it was wounded with a knife, so many testify, in its neck and in this pitiable plight it was left alone on the prairie. The poor heartsick and sorrow crazed mother, after being subjected to outrages more horrible than death, had her flesh torn and lacerated by the nails and fingers of the incarnate fiends. Norton, Day, Moore and Mrs. Norton had remained near the wagon. Norton was shot just after he sprang from the wagon and Mrs. Norton as she stood on the wheel, but she crawled out and sought refuge behind the dead horses. The bullet which struck Norton severed an artery and resulted in his death fifteen minutes later. Moore was shot through both hips; Day received two bullets in the shoulders and one through the leg; and Mrs. Norton was wounded in both lower limbs. At daylight, for some unaccountable reason, the Indians withdrew.

Meanwhile Miss Bowers and little Hill Norton had become separated in their flight for life, but both managed to keep on the right course. Hill was picked up about daylight four miles northwest of Mount Idaho by F. A. Fenn, who was scouting. Mr. Fenn took the boy on his horse to Crooks's ranch, where a general alarm was given. Miss Bowers was found about nine o'clock by J. A. Swarts, about two miles north of Mount Idaho, and was taken to that town.

At the Crooks's ranch or Grangeville, a party consisting of Frank A. Fenn, C. L. Rice and James Atkison set out for the scene of the encounter. About three miles northwest of Grangeville they found the wagon and to it Rice and Fenn hitched their saddle horses, taking harness from the slain animals. Mrs. Norton was placed in the wagon and one of the saddles had been thrown into the box when the redskins suddenly appeared on a nearby hill. At once Fenn and Rice mounted the horses, not having any reins, for these had been used to splice the tugs, and the party commenced another race for life.. Fortunately, a second and larger party came out to their relief and the Indians drew off. Peter Ready, Lew Wilmot, E. W. Robie, Mac Williams and others went out later the same day and picked up Mrs. Chamberlain and others, living and dead. Mr. Chamberlain's body was found about a quarter of a mile from the wagon. His two children, one of whom was also dead, were lying in his arms. Half a mile farther away Mrs. Chamberlain was picked up. All were placed in the wagon and brought to Mount Idaho where every attention was given them. Day died the following afternoon from the effects of his terrible wounds and six weeks later Moore succumbed, but Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Chamberlain and the child eventually recovered. Dr. J. B. Morris, the prairie's physician, was in Lewiston when news of the outbreak reached him. He immediately set out to return, courageously riding through the lines of the hostiles to Mount Idaho, where he remained throughout the conflict.

On the night of the Norton masacre, Peter H. Ready and Lew Wilmot had camped on Shebang creek (near the present site of Denver) with their freighting outfits. Each had a four horse load consisting of dry goods, clothing, groceries, hardware and salt, and an empty hack trailed behind Wilmot's wagon. Just before nightfall Lew Day pased them on his way to Fort Lapwai and informed them of their peril, but they decided to remain in camp until morning. About eleven o'clock they were awakened by the Cottonwood party passing them. Day told them the cause of the abandoment of his trip to Lapwai and again advised them to move forward to Mount Idaho. This time they heeded the warning to the extent of harnessing their horses and otherwise preparing to move at an instant's notice. The Cottonwood party had been gone but a short time before Ready and Wilmot heard firing in the direction of Grangeville. They did not pay any serious attention to it, but remained at their camping place until daybreak when they commenced their journey toward Mount Idaho. Soon they saw Indians approaching them. Cutting loose their lead horses, each mounted one and began an exciting race. Fortunately they outran the Indians and escaped to their homes. They then got their guns and joined the party going out to bring in the Chamberlains, for these had been missed by Fenn, Rice and Atkison when they brought in Mrs. Norton.

The Indians who had been pursuing Ready and Wilmot returned to the wagons and looted them, packing some of their spoils on the wheel horses which had remained near the wagons. Before they had finished their work the band of redskins that was pursuing the first rescuing party turned from their chase and joined the pillaging crowd at the wagon, evidently fearing they would lose their portion if they did not go after it immediately.

Mr. Ready thinks that the hostiles attacked the Cottonwood party in the belief that they were attacking the freighting outfit. Indeed he was so informed by Indians after the war. The blood-thirsty set soon discovered their mistake of course but when the excitement of the slaughter had taken possession of them they cared little who their victims might be, or whether or not their dastardly deeds would be rewarded by material gain. Just what band of redmen were the chief actors in this murderous assault has never been determined.

There has been much discussion over the date of the attack upon the Nortons and Chamberlains, many who had good means of knowing contending that it took place some time during the night of the 13th of June, while others are just as positive that it took place twenty-four hours later. The preponderance of evidence seems to us to be that the attack was made upon the night of the 14th. Some who thought that the 13th was the correct date were also certain that the day of the week was Thursday, and Thursday is shown in the almanac to have fallen on the 14th, in the year 1877. The letters from L. P. Brown to the commandant at Fort Lapwai, quoted on former pages, bear the date of June 15th. The one dated 7 a. m. speaks of the attack on the Cottonwood party; says they were all wounded or killed and that "the wounded will be here shortly, when we will get more particulars." The letter dated 8 a. m. says: "I have just sent a dispatch by Mr. West, half breed. Since that was written the wounded have come in," etc., showing that unless Mr. Brown made a mistake in dating his letter, the unfortunate event transpired on the night of the 14th. Gen. Howard tells us in his book that Brown's messenger arrived toward evening and he wrote his reply at once. His reply is dated June 15th. If Mr. Brown was mistaken in his dates either the messenger must have consumed from 7 o'clock in the morning of one day to evening of the day following in going from Mount Idaho to Fort Lapwai or General Howard must have made a mistake in dating his note exactly corresponding to that made by Mr. Brown. Both these contingencies are certainly very unlikely.

Those on the Salmon river whom it was the writer's privilege to interview are practically a unit in their statement that the Salmon river murders, except that of Divine, were committed on the 14th. It has been generally understood that the Indians camped near Rocky canyon on Camas prairie did not commence their depredations until incited to them by the exciting recitals of the Salmon river horrors. Those who take the ground that the massacre of the Nortons and Chamberlains occurred on the 13th must assume that the Salmon river people are mistaken about the date of the murders there or that the outbreak on Camas prairie antedated the Salmon river outrages. The first assumption can hardly be true. Mrs. Cleary certainly is not mistaken as to the date of her husband's death, neither can other persons be mistaken as to when the most terrible events in their experience transpired. The other assumption has probably never been entertained by anyone.

The author is convinced that Elfers, Bland and Beckroge were killed on the morning of the 14th, that their murderers proceeded to the Indian camp at Rocky canyon the same day, wounding Benedict en route; that they related their experiences to the other Indians, who forthwith decided to commence hostilities; that seventeen or eighteen Indians went that night back to the Salmon river country to engage in further depredations, while the others, or some of them, began hostile movements on Camas prairie, one of which movements was the attack on the Cottonwood party. He is constrained to believe that this is the correct date and this the correct sequence of events. He admits that many who hold a contrary opinion are able to produce convincing arguments in favor of their views, but is inclined to agree with the many others who are equally insistent that the event in question happened between eleven o'clock on the night of June 14th and daybreak the following morning.

The foregoing statements concerning the outrages during the earliest days of the Nez Perces Indian war have been verified by exhaustive investigation into all printed accounts that could be secured, and by interviews with very many of those living in the storm center at the time. Unusual pains were taken by citizens during and after the war to ascertain exact facts, owing to the attempts of some to throw the blame for the outbreak of the war upon the settlers. The results of this investigation have been perused in the preparation of this work. It is therefore believed that these statements are as near the truth as it is possible for historic records to approach. The assertion of Indian Inspector Watkins that up to June 22d no houses had been burned or other depredations committed by Joseph's band, drew forth an indignant protest from the citizens. A positive counter statement was made that on the evening of June 18th, ten dwellings, three stores, seven barns and one shop had been burned, besides a large number of miners' buildings; that before the 16th, large numbers of abandoned dwellings had been plundered and some thousands of cattle and horses stolen and driven off by the Indians. "Besides this," said a citizens' letter to the Boston Sunday Herald, after referring to some of the murders heretofore spoken of, "five worthy women and mothers suffered, from the brutal fiends, outrages worse than death, part of them being stripped of their clothing and dragged about naked by the heels, others wounded, and all of them, after defending themselves to the last extremity, made the victims of the lust of the hell hounds." The statements of the letter were vouched for by George M. Shearer, major of volunteers, B. F. Morris, county recorder of Idaho county, and C. W. Case, sheriff of Idaho county.

But what of the movements by which these terrible outrages were to be checked and avenged? Colonel Perry, as we have said, set out from Lapwai on the night of the 15th. All night long his column toiled on over Craig's mountain and across Lawyer's canyon; all next day they continued their march, reaching Grangeville toward evening. Here they paused to listen to the reports of citizens and take in the situation as best they could. They were joined by eleven volunteers, who guided them over the sixteen miles to White Bird creek still to be traversed by the weary marchers and their jaded animals. Reaching the top of the canyon about an hour before dawn, they halted to await the daylight and take much needed rest. Daylight came soon enough, revealing a deep short canyon with precipitous sides and a smooth looking bottom, which was in reality a rolling prairie sloping toward the creek. From the head of this canyon to the creek the distance is probably five miles. Just before reaching the creek the trail turned abruptly to the west, passed through a small canyon or ravine between two low hills and then gradually approached the creek, reaching its banks about a mile and a quarter farther along, just above the Manuel place. At this point the brush and trees which fringe the creek were unusually dense and the trail was bounded on the north by a low bluff. A rail fence stood just south of the highway and altogether the location was an ideal one for an Indian ambuscade.

Behind this fence and in the bushes lining the trail, the main body of Indians was posted, while a small force was deployed a mile and a quarter farther up the trail to lure the soldiers onward.

Where the trail ran through the ravine heretofore mentioned the ragged basaltic rocks along the summits of the hills afforded an excellent barricade, while to the left of the trail the heavy spring floods had washed out a deep gulch which ran through the bottom of the ravine and then south and emptied into the creek. Behind these rocks but principally down in the bottom of this deep, dark gulch the Indians concealed themselves in large numbers. As soon as the skirmishers had drawn the troops through this canyon these Indians were to leap from their hiding places and open the attack. Should Perry go onward toward the Salmon he would rush into the main ambuscade and his case would be without hope. The plan was skillfully laid out and illustrative of the military genius of Joseph and White Bird. How nearly successful it was we shall see.

Perry led his command, now numbering a little over a hundred men, over the crest of the first slope of the canyon and down the narrow pass. With him and in advance were several Indian scouts, recruited from the friendly Nez Perces. When the troops had advanced about five miles from the top of the bluff and had practically reached the foot of the mountain, not over a quarter of a mile from White Bird creek, and about where the trail turns to the west, the scouts reported hostiles some distance ahead. It is said that they refused to go through the narrow and ugly looking ravine which now confronted the command, fearing that the hostiles were lying in wait.

Perry halted and dismounted his command at this point, one man out of every four being left with the horses as is customary. The remainder of the troops were then ordered forward, a portion of them deploying along the crest of one of the ridges. Suddenly the Indians appeared stretched out in a long irregular line ahead of the troops. Before these had advanced very far down the ravine an excited Indian lying in the deep gulch fired off his gun and in an instant the battle was on. Perry was not trapped, neither was he absolutely surprised as has often been intimated, and had his men been seasoned troops instead of recruits who had as yet scarcely smelled gunpowder, he might have held his own creditably or have withdrawn with honors.

Upon the opening of the engagement the redskins fired from several directions and it required all the skill at the officers' command to hold the troops in good order. Soon occurred an event, says Major Fenn, which decided to whom should belong the victory. How it happened or just why it happened can only be surmised, as the terrible calamity which followed swept away many who could have told and those who survived have left it indefinitely recorded. Certain it is that the partially demoralized troops on the line detected a retreating movement in their rear. They saw the men, who had been left with the horses, falling back up the hillside and probably thought this movement was incited by a flank movement on part of the Indians. This suspected retreat may have been only the efforts of those in charge of the horses to get on to higher ground, but being cavalrymen it was quite natural that those on the line should rely almost entirely upon their horses and that when they saw these moving farther and farther away, they should become disconcerted. The lines wavered and broke, and soon became thoroughly demoralized. The wily redskins were quick to follow up the advantage and attacked the troops more fiercely than ever. These became panic stricken and, throwing away guns, ammunition, clothing and accoutrements, fled indiscriminately. Contrary to all military usage, the saddle girths on the horses had been left loose while the men went into action and as a result some of the excited troopers slipped off the backs of their steeds. These stampeded, leaving the footmen at the mercy of their savage foes.

Upon going into action the ten volunteers under Major Shearer were assigned to the extreme left and accordingly took a position between what is known as the old Indian burying ground and the creek. Here they found some shelter in the rough surface of the ground. Hardly had they taken their position before the Indians under White Bird began a flanking movement through the brush on the opposite side of the creek; two of the volunteers, H. A. Faxon and T. D. Swarts, had been wounded, and all became aware that the troops were retreating. Under these circumstances the volunteers deemed it best to retreat also.

By this time the whole force was in headlong flight and the number of hostiles was constantly increasing by arrivals from the lower camp mounted on fresh horses. In vain Perry and his officers tried to rally their men. The bugler, who would have sounded the calls, had been killed at the first fire, so Perry and his officers were obliged to personally appeal to the troops. But the cavalrymen would not halt; they were completely demoralized and no power could prevail upon them to stand and face their tormentors who poured an incessant, withering fire upon them. Just below the steep canyon leading to the prairie above, and at the mouth of a blind canyon, the gallant Theller gathered a small body of men behind some natural breastworks and attempted to stem the tide. For a short time it seemed as if he might succeed, but the Indians finally concentrated their fire and overwhelmed the little band of brave men. The stalwart, lion-hearted, young lieutenant became the target for a score of rifles, and he soon fell, pierced through the head. This was the last stand made by the troops in White Bird canyon. The men who were still uninjured rushed up the long, steep trail, fully exposed at every step to the withering fire from above them, to the canyon's rim, where they were arranged by Perry and Parnell into a better order of retreat. Before this narrow canyon was entered, however, the volunteers had left the troops and reached the prairie by means of an old cow trail up Chapman creek. Thence they escaped unharmed to Mount Idaho, where they organized a party of citizens to go out and meet the troops. Together the troops and volunteers fought their way across the prairie and finally, exhausted, dispirited and with gaping ranks, the little command entered Grangeville.

"The Indians fought us," wrote Perry that evening, "to within four miles of Mount Idaho, and only gave it up on seeing that we would not be driven any farther, except at our own gait." This was a disastrous defeat. Nearly forty per cent. of Perry's command were left dead on the field. The chagrin of failure was the portion of the trained United States troops, while the exhilaration of victory sent its pleasing thrills through the pulses of the savage warriors. This victory supplied arms to the Indians. They secured at least fifty carbines and much ammunition, thrown away by the soldiers. Colonel Perry collected his discomfited troops at Grangeville, reorganized them there and put them in as good condition for future operations as possible.

Howard had remained at Fort Lapwai to await the arrival of reinforcements. Wilkinson, as we have said, had gone to Walla Walla, where he started the telegraph into activity with messages for aid. A courier is sent to summon Colonel Whipple from Indian valley with his two companies of cavalry, and immediately upon receipt of the message that officer is ready for the march. The soldiers at Fort Walla Walla, those near Wallula, all that can be spared from Forts Vancouver, Harney, Klamath, Stevens, Canby and Townsend are in motion as soon after despatches reach them as they can be mobilized, and most of them are headed toward Lapwai. The artillerymen, coming down from Alaska, are also directed to the front, and the call for help in time reaches to troops in California, Arizona and even to Georgia.

Citizens also are doing what they can to place the threatened country and the storm centers on a war footing, but there is great dearth of arms and ammunition, there being only seven repeating rifles on Camas prairie at this time. At Mount Idaho, as we have seen, the citizens gather for defensive purposes on the evening of the 14th. Many decide to return to their homes the following morning, believing that the scare is ill-founded, when news of the attack on the Norton and Chamberlain party reaches the town. This, of course, dispels all idea of a return to the country, and steps are immediately taken to form a military company, erect a fort and otherwise place the little community on a war footing. Every able-bodied man and boy is enlisted in the volunteer company of which Arthur Chapman is chosen captain. A retired English naval officer, H. E. Croasdale, who had recently engaged in the stock business on the prairie, is placed in charge of the defenses. On this same day, June 15th, work is commenced on the stone fort which three days later is finished. At Grangeville another military company is organized by Captain Bloomer, and Grange hall is soon fortified.

Slate creek, in the very heart of the savage-scourged country, soon has its fort, consisting of a high stockade built around Wood's hotel, in which the settlers of that section gather. Here are Mrs. Walsh and her two children, Mrs. Osborne and her four children, Mr. and Mrs. Tittman and two children, William Rhett and family, Mr. and Mrs. David Baldwin and girl, Mrs. Henry Elfers and her three children, E. R. Sherwin and family, the Woods, the Cones, John Gibbons, Joshua Fockler and others. Realizing their desperate straits, those in the fort decide to send to Florence for assistance. The mission is a dangerous one, and none can be spared from the garrison to undertake it, but finally Tolo, a friendly Nez Perce squaw, is prevailed upon to carry the message for aid. Faithfully does she serve her white friends, making the hard trip of twenty-five miles in safety and bringing back twelve men. With the addition of these the force numbers about sixty-eight capable of bearing arms, but there are few arms to bear and little ammunition.

Warren is fortified so as to defy a force of 500 Indians; Elk City has plenty of men, but only a few old-fashioned guns and a limited supply of ammunition. Lewiston has caught the alarm at the first outbreak, and its call for aid takes the form of such dispatches as the following:

LEWISTON, I. T., JUNE 17th.

TO THE MAYOR OF PORTLAND:

For humanity's sake send up 50 or 100 stand of arms with ammunition. The Indians have broken out on Salmon river and Camas prairie. They have massacred 30 or 40 men, women and children, and the work is still going on. We have men but few arms. We will be alright as far as this city is concerned. The city assumes responsibility for their safe return. The arms, etc., guaranteed by the merchants.

Subscribed, D. J. Warner, city recorder, by the order of the Common Council of the city of Lewiston, and N. B. Holbrook, mayor; John P. Vollmer, merchant; Loewenberg Bros., merchants; Grostein & Binnard, merchants; A. Damas, merchant.

P. S.—June 18th. Settlers on Palouse and Paradise valleys, and from all the country north of us, are fleeing in here for protection. Farmers are all abandoning their farms, stock and everything.

(Signed) J. P. VOLLMER.

LEWISTON, I. T., June 17, 1877.

TO THE PRESIDENT O. S. & N. COMPANY:

We have appealed to the Mayor of Portland, and aid us in this without delay. We are sadly in need of arms. Unless the country is relieved merchants must close business, farmers must flee from their crops, and this country will become depopulated. You will see our interests are identical. We want arms, soldiers and volunteers to prevent the slaughter of whites. Down with the peace policy.

By order of the city council.

(Signed) N. B. HOLBROOK, Mayor.

D. J. WARNER, City Auditor.

A subscription paper is circulated also among the leading merchants and business men of Portland by H. D. Sanborn, of Lewiston, and the sum of $2,365 is quickly subscribed for the purpose of furnishing the citizens of Lewiston, Idaho Territory, with arms and ammunition for their defense. By this means a volunteer company of sixty men under Ed McConville, which had been speedily raised for the defense of the town, is fully equipped for action, rendering this important base of supplies comparatively safe.

The excitement prevailing all over the country is intense. No one knows how many of the Coeur d'Alenes, Umatillas, Spokanes, apparently friendly Nez Perces and other northern Indians can be relied on; no one can certainly predict how many will be encouraged to join Joseph by Perry's defeat, and every one is becoming painfully cognizant of the utter unpreparedness of the military for the crisis now presented. "Although it has been held out to settlers," complains the Teller, "that ample military force should be on the ground to enforce the orders to remove Joseph upon the reservation, six months have elapsed since the issuance of the order from Washington, and today there are not soldiers enough here to hold in check the single force of Joseph's 200 warriors, and, with the advantage of position Joseph has, he will continue to make his sallies upon the unprotected settlers and small detachments of troops and cut off scores of men from the living and continue that state of things for months to come. Every success he wins strengthens his cause among the other Indians who are professedly friendly, and may involve us in a long and bloody war which may lead to the extermination of the tribes in this whole northern country. Had the force been here at the time appointed for Joseph to come upon the reserve and properly stationed Perry would not have been defeated and Joseph's power would easily have been subdued. But it was planned that the Bible, and not the sword, should subdue him, and that this missionary peace policy should have the credit of his subjection. The plan has failed."

Howard in his history of the war frankly admits the utter inadequacy of his force for the work in hand, but does not vouchsafe any explanation of the fact that the military was caught napping when it knew that

TOO-LAH,

The Friendly Nez Prece Squaw who rode to Florence from the Salmon River, warned the Whites of the Hostile Outbreak of the Indians, and brought Twenty-six Miners to the Rescue.

force might become necessary to comply with the instructions of the Indian bureau, neither does he attempt to fix responsibility for the unfortunate condition of affairs. So sure were the Indian agents and military men that Joseph would comply with his agreement to go peacably upon the reservation that they trusted almost implicitly to that promise, though they knew that treachery on his part meant death and outrage to innocent and unarmed citizens.

General Howard gives some graphic accounts of life and activities at Fort Lapwai during the few days succeeding the outbreak. "Mule trains," says he, "were hired, supplies of all kinds put in motion, couriers were coming and going; Indian messengers and escaping soldiers with their mouths full of exciting rumors and bad tidings were arriving from the field seventy miles away. By the 21st of June eight new companies of regular troops—little companies they were, for the whole made up but a few over 200 souls—were on the green plat near the Lapwai post. A small organization of volunteers under Captain Paige joined themselves to Whipple, who was in command of the cavalry, and were on hand for Indian fighting.

* * * * * *

"The time from the first news of the terrible disaster at Whitebird canyon till the morning of the 22d of June seemed long indeed. It appears long even in retrospect. Still it was only four days. Our effective men for the front now at Lapwai numbered but few more than two hundred.

"Captains Whipple and Winters had arrived from their circuitous and tedious march from Wallowa. Captains Miller and Miles had reached Lewiston by steamboat and marched to Lapwai with several companies of the Fourth Artillery and the Twenty-first Infantry under their charge. The volunteers before mentioned, a little more than twenty strong, under Paige, of Walla Walla, had also joined us. Lieutenant Bomus, the quartermaster of the post, had improvised a supply train. The numerous miners, employed in different directions about Lewiston, had been thrown out of employment by the Indian outbreak, so that their means of transportation, 'the mule pack train,' and their packers became available for our use."

By the 22d of June Howard was ready to move. His force was still smaller than that opposed to him, but with such as he had to set out from Lapwai at 12 o'clock noon. Camped next day at Norton's ranch, his description of which, as affording a glimpse of the "abomination of desolation," we quote at length:

"Mr. Norton, the late owner," says Howard, "was the man who was trying to get to Mount Idaho with his family when he and others were killed and his wife sadly wounded. We came to his house about half past one o'clock, having marched nineteen miles. Mr. Norton had kept a sort of hotel. His house was now deserted. The Indians had rummaged everything; what the family had left here was found in complete disorder. Who can realize what it is to have savage warfare break upon a family with little or no warning—to kill, wound and scatter like this? It was worse than the desolation spoken of in the scriptures, where one shall be taken and another left. None were left! There were the clothes, cut and torn and strewn about, the broken chairs, the open drawers, a mixture of flour, sugar, salt and rubbish, the evidences indeed of riot run mad. Do we wonder that those who have passed through such experiences have been slow to forget and forgive 'mad Indians'?"

At this desolated ranch the force was ordered to encamp, and there they remained over Sunday. Critics of the generalship of the Nez Perces campaign have complained much of this delay, some of them asserting that Howard stopped for the purpose of giving religious instruction to his command and distributing Bibles among the soldiers. Howard says he paused because he wished to ascertain certainly the whereabouts of the Indians, because he wished to give Captain Trimble time to get beyond the hostiles to Slate creek, so that the Indians might not be pressed back upon the little band of citizens "forted up" there, and thirdly, because he hoped that additional forces might join him from Lewiston.

On Monday the troops moved forward, the infantry going to Johnson's ranch, the cavalry, with Howard, to Grangeville, where Perry's command was. After visiting Grangeville and Mount Idaho the cavalry rejoined the remainder of the command at Johnson's ranch, whence, at 6:30 next morning, the column proceeded to the scene of Perry's defeat at White Bird canyon, for the double purpose of reconnoitering the enemy and burrying the soldiers who had fallen there more than a week previous. Approaching with extreme caution, not to be caught a second time in the same way, they reverently buried the dead. Meanwhile Paige of Walla Walla with his gallant volunteer company, guided by Arthur Chapman, had been searching for signs of the enemy, whom they eventually succeeded in locating on the safe side of the Salmon river. The general also learned from a wounded citizen that it was Joseph's intention to draw the whites into the vicinity of the Seven Devils, to get them the farther from a base of supplies.

To the military genius of the wild, savage chief, who had never seen the inside of a military college, had had no military training, had never read a work on tactics, in short was without other guidance than his own innate military judgment, the trained and experienced general pays the following compliment:

"The leadership of Joseph was indeed remarkable. No general could have chosen a safer position or one that would be more likely to puzzle and obstruct a pursuing foe. If we present a weak force he can turn upon us. If we make direct pursuit he can go southward toward Boise for at least thirty miles, and then turn our left. He can go straight to his rear and cross the Snake at Pittsburg landing. He can go down the Salmon and cross at one of several places, and then turn either to the left to his old haunts in the Wallowa valley or to the right and pass our flank, threatening our line of supplies, while he has at the same time a wonderful natural barrier between him and us in the Salmon, a river that delights itself in its furious flow."

Such was the problem presented to General Howard for solution. He had not with him a sufficient force so that he could send a part of it across the Salmon river to bring on an action with Joseph, while a portion remained to meet the enemy and protect the citizens, should the wily chieftain recross onto Camas prairie. He could not well retain his whole command on the east side of the river, for Joseph might remain in his position of safety indefinitely, and the entire country was clamoring for aggressive action.

It was over the correct procedure at this time that Howard and the volunteers had their first little tilt. "While Howard was concentrating," says F. A. Fenn, "the Idaho volunteers appointed a committee consisting of Joseph Peaseley, John McPherson and myself to go to the general and explain to him a means of escape which was open to the Indians, viz: via the Billy, or Craig, crossing, down the Salmon several miles. This crossing was the only one this side of the mouth of the Salmon, and should Joseph attempt to escape northward he would be compelled to cross here. At that time the Indians numbered not over one hundred and fifty warriors, and these were encumbered with their squaws, children and camp equipage and about 1,500 head of horses. We called upon General Howard and suggested our plan to him, viz: to send a small detachment north by the prairie to the Billy crossing, where a score of men could hold four or five times their number at bay in the rocky defile leading north from the river, while he himself should cross at White Bird and attack Joseph's rear. By so doing he would have Joseph entrapped. General Howard politely listened to our suggestions and then bowed us out with the remark that he believed himself fully competent to manage his own campaign. After events proved conclusively that we understood the country and the Indians far better than the general, for Joseph crossed his entire force at the Billy crossing and, coming up on the prairie, attacked and massacred Lieutenant Rains and party."

Howard decided to cross the Salmon with all his force, leaving only Captain Whipple's cavalry, which were sent back to arrest Looking-glass and his entire following and turn them over to the keeping of the volunteers at Mount Idaho. He had some skirmishing, but sustained no loss and probably inflicted no injuries upon the red skins, who soon disappeared. "I pressed this column," says Howard, "after the Indians to Craig's Ferry (ford). Lost our raft in attempting to cross. Too much of a torrent to cross troops and supplies without it. James Reuben, the scout, had brought clear accounts that Joseph had not turned south toward his old haunts in the Wallowa, but northward and eastward, to gather up Looking-glass and reinforcements, catch small parties like Rains's detachment and do what mischief he could.* Therefore, by turning straight back, recrossing the Salmon at Rocky canyon, or White Bird, where there were boats, and going via Grangeville, where I could bring the Cottonwood force to me, I had a short line and hoped to get a decisive battle from our doughty chief." The Teller, a severe critic of Howard, says of this short campaign: "Nature made a trap between Salmon and Snake rivers; Joseph baited it by shaking a red blanket at Howard defiantly across the river. Howard followed the bait and consumed three days in crossing his five hundred men over the stream. When over Joseph runs back on this side and returns to Camas prairie. Howard stays in his trap two weeks before he finds he is in a trap."

While the supreme in command was engaged in this bootless expedition between the Salmon and the Snake, events of considerably moment were transpiring on Camas prairie. Captain Whipple had gone to fulfill as best he could his instructions to arrest Lookingglass, who, the friendly Indians said, was awaiting a favorable opportunity to join Joseph.

Thus far Lookingglass had maintained, as some of the whites aver, a perfectly neutral attitude, if anything leaning toward the cause of the whites, although there were doubtless many would-be hostiles among the younger element. He was camped on Clear creek, a few miles east of the present town of Kooskia, which was considered his home. Captain Whipple was joined at Mount Idaho by about twenty volunteers under Captain D. B. Randall and a night ride was made to Clear creek. The utmost caution was taken by Captain Whipple to prevent the Indians from hearing of the approach of the troops. Great was the astonishment of the former when, just as the soldiers reached Clear creek, the shrill notes of the bugle rang out across the canyon and were caught and echoed back by the surrounding hills and bluffs. In an instant the camp was astir, and by the hazy light of approaching dawn the Indians could be seen running back and forth. The red skins knew what a bugle call meant.

Immediately a parley was arranged, and Captain Whipple and his escort went forth to meet Lookingglass. While this parley was progressing Washington Holmes, who had a half-breed wife, took it upon himself to commence the engagement by firing into the camp. This statement is made upon the positive assertions of two reputable men who were present—F. A. Fenn and C. M. Day—and upon the admission of Mr. Holmes himself. Of course this act of hostility caused the immediate breaking off of negotiations between Whipple and Lookingglass, and a general engagement opened. The Indians soon fled eastward into the mountains, leaving their tepees, nearly all their camp equipage and over seven hundred ponies. Some of the horses were captured by the troops and the tepees and equipage were burned. One Indian child was killed in the exchange of shots, but the whites escaped unscathed. Lookingglass soon joined Joseph and rendered that chieftain invaluable assistance in planning and executing the campaign. He appeared as spokesman in negotiations and parleys with the whites, won renown by his diplomacy and shrewdness and impressed many with the belief that to him of right belonged

*This report as given was mere surmise as to intentions of Joseph, for the first definite information Howard had that the hostiles had escaped him via the Craig or Billy crossing was conveyed to him by Peter H. much of the credit for military skill which has been given to Joseph.

Whipple marched next day to the Norton ranch (Cottonwood) in obedience to Howard's command that he should form a junction with Perry there. Upon his arrival he sent two scouts, William Foster and Charles Blewett, towards Howard's position at Craig's crossing to learn the whereabouts of the Indians. Having proceeded to Lawyer's canyon they were ascending it when they saw an Indian with a band of horses, also three other Indians in another direction. They put their horses to full speed in retreat, Foster leading. When Foster found time to cast a backward glance he saw that his companion was unhorsed and separated from him. "Take to the brush," was his advice as he made an effort to capture the frightened animal. But the horse could not be caught, and Foster was compelled to leave Blewett to his own resources and continue his retreat. He reached Whipple's command in safety and reported what he had learned as to the whereabouts of the Indians.

Whipple immediately prepared to take up the line of march, sending Second Lieutenant Rains with ten picked men and the scout Foster to reconnoiter in advance of the main command, and aid Blewett if he could. "I particularly cautioned Rains," says Whipple's report, "not to precede the command too far, to keep on high ground and report the first sign of Indians." Rains and his men rode over the first rise from Cottonwood and down into the shallow ravine to the left of the present road leading to Craig's mountain from the prairie. Here they were attacked by what proved to be a large force of Indians. Whipple, who heard the firing, came up as fast as possible, but he saw that the Indians were in such numbers and so well intrenched that he could do nothing to help except at a loss of a greater number of men, so he was compelled to watch the doomed detachment as one by one its members fell. Some sought such shelter as they could find, some attempted to retreat back to Whipple's command, but not one escaped the bullets of the Indian sharpshooters. Whipple's command formed in line on one side of the ravine while the Indians did likewise on the other, but they were too far apart for effective action, and neither combatant cared to give the other advantage by descending to lower ground. They stood menacing each other until nightfall, when Whipple returned to Cottonwood and the Indians retired toward Craig's crossing. During the night couriers arrived from Perry, who was en route to Cottonwood with a pack train from Fort Lapwai. This was supposed to be in imminent danger of attack by hostiles, therefore Whipple set out next morning, July 4th, to reinforce the escorting detachment. He met the pack train eight miles out and brought it to its destination in safety. "About midday," says Whipple, "Indians began to gather, and but a short time elapsed before the camp (Cottonwood) was surrounded by them, and for hours they made the most frantic efforts to dislodge us. Every man of the command was kept on the lines this afternoon (rifle pits having been dug at a little distance from the Cottonwood house) until about sundown, when the enemy withdrew for the night."

Perry was now chief in command at Cottonwood. On the morning of July 5th an event transpired which drew down upon him a storm of criticism, while it earned for Lieutenant D. B. Randall, before mentioned, and sixteen volunteers under his command a place among the world's heroes. The famous seventeen were seen approaching from the direction of Mount Idaho and were recognized to be volunteers. The Indians at the time were moving their stock toward Clearwater. As soon as they saw the volunteers about one hundred and fifty of them returned to intercept the doughty little squad and prevent their reaching Whipple. The Indians succeeded in getting between the volunteers and the regulars, taking a position on an elevation of ground near the intersection of the Elk City trail with the stage road. Perry was now urged to go with troops to the rescue, but he refused, saying that the volunteers were already beyond hope. No doubt the captain honestly thought that an effort to save the volunteers would be bootless, yet the sang froid of a refusal to try is hard to understand.*

Had Randall ordered a retreat it is probable that the Indians, on their fleet ponies, would have run down his men and killed most if not all of them, but Randall was not a retreating man. He continued on his course and the Indians soon had him surrounded. He ordered a fierce charge ahead, broke through their lines, secured a favorable position between the Indians and Cottonwood, ordered his men to dismount and shoot down horses, and he and they again faced the Indians, intending to hold their position until help should arrive from Cottonwood. In this charge, which differs from that of the Light Brigade in that the men did not "ride back," Randall was mortally wounded, B. F. Evans was killed and three others received injuries more or less serious. Randall was paralyzed by his wound, which was in the backbone, and died a few minutes after dismounting.

Mr. F. A. Fenn tells us that on the eminence just back of the old Cottonwood hotel, where Perry's force was stationed, a small body of troopers and citizens was engaged in throwing up breastworks when the Indians attacked the seventeen. They saw the charge of the volunteers, watched them take a more sheltered position a little over a mile from the fort at Cottonwood and waited in vain for the order to mount and go to the rescue. They saw F. D. Vansise ride in for reinforcements. They also saw the appeal pass unheeded by Colonel Perry. Then they ceased watching and acted. Sergeant Simpson sprang to the front and cried: "If your officers won't lead you I will." He was joined by twenty-five others, all of whom made their way toward the horses. Perry, seeing that his men were determined to go anyway, directed Captain Whipple to take charge of the company, and under him reinforcements went to the seventeen and brought them safely in. Sergeant Simpson was arrested on the charge of insubordination, but afterwards participated in the Clearwater fight, where he was seriously wounded. Subsequently the charge against him was withdrawn.

*"Especially so," says F. A. Fenn, "as the seventeen went there at the urgent request of Perry for reinforcements, which request he sent by a courier named Crooks the night before to Mount Idaho." F. D. Vansise is, however, of the opinion that Crooks came for volunteer reinforcements on his own account, and without the knowledge of Perry.

When the reinforcements arrived they found the men still holding their ground, having withstood nearly ten times their number for about an hour. Many are of the opinion that had the soldiers come speedily to the fray and followed up the advantage with vigor a severe whipping might have been administered to the red skins. The regular officers, however, were exonerated by a court of inquiry. Fortunately the names of the celebrated seventeen have been preserved for us. They are as follows: D. B. Randall and B. F. Evans, killed; A. B. Leland, D. H. Howser and Charles Johnson, wounded, Mr. Howser mortally; L. P. Wilmot, J. L. Cearley, James Buchanan, William B. Beemer, Charles W. Case, E. J. Bunker, Frank D. Vansise, C. M. Day, George Riggins, A. D. Bartly, H. C. Johnson and F. A. Fenn.

The war thus far had been decidedly in the Indians' favor. They had administered a disastrous defeat to Perry at White Bird; they had successfully eluded Howard at the Salmon river, causing his entire force to consume much valuable time in accomplishing nothing; they had massacreed Rains and party; they had escaped from Whipple and Perry at Cottonwood; they had effected a junction of the forces under Looking-glass with those of Joseph, despite the efforts of Whipple's cavalry and Randall's volunteers, sent to effect the arrest of the former chieftain, and the only check they had as yet received, that administered by Randall's seventeen, had inflicted slight damage.* These successes, however, had inspired Joseph with the pride which precedes a fall. Whether he thought it was impossible for the whites to concentrate, or that he dare risk a battle with Howard's entire command, is not definitely known, but at any rate he allowed himself to be brought to a decisive engagement, as a result of which he was forced to yield the struggle on Idaho soil and begin his famous retreat over the Bitter Roots and the tortuous trail beyond.

Failing to effect a crossing at Craig's ford, Howard took the backward track, recrossing the Salmon, and July 9th found him again at Grangeville. His force was weakened by the withdrawal of Hunter's Dayton volunteers, McConville's Lewiston volunteers and Captain Cearley's company, who, Howard says, "had become a little disgusted with the slowness of regulars and angry at their own fearful discomfiture near Cottonwood;" hence started on an independent movement.* They began reconnoitering for the enemy, soon struck their trail, following which they succeeded in locating the Indians near the junction of the south and middle forks of the Clearwater. Captain Cearley and L. P. Wilmot were sent out to discover their exact position, and did so. Though they saw no warriors, they judged from the number of lodges and horses that the Indians were in too great force to be successfully attacked by the small force of volunteers, and so reported. Accordingly no aggressive movement was made, but the volunteers busied themselves in throwing up fortifications and strengthening their position against a possible assault. They had a race with the Indians about two o'clock that day, when the approach of Major Shearer with fourteen men was the signal for an Indian attempt to head him off. They succeeded in bringing Shearer in safely. Upon his arrival it was determined to send a massage to Howard, twelve miles distant, apprising him of the whereabouts of the Indians and asking that he march next day to co-operate with them in an attack upon the hostiles. Howard was waiting for reinforcements, and did not do so. Meanwhile the Indians made a night attack upon the volunteers, killing and driving away forty-three of their horses. The volunteers waited for another day and night, but their messenger failed to return, on account of sickness, and, not seeing any sign of Howard and being short of provisions and horses, they withdrew toward Mount Idaho. McConville was criticised for yielding this position, which Howard wished him to hold as a part of the enveloping force, "but," says Bancroft, who seems to get his information largely from Sutherland's history of Howard's campaign, "being separated from Howard by the river, and having lost a large number of the horses, it was prudent and good tactics to retire and let the Indians fall into the trap Howard had set for them near their own camp and to place himself between the settlements and the Indians." The "trap" consisted in Howard's attacking Joseph on the opposite side from the volunteers' abandoned position, in which direction the Indians had thrown up

*Some of the volunteers state that nine new made graves were found where the Indians camped after the fight with the seventeen. One warrior was seen to fall and the Indians acknowledged that he was so badly wounded that he died a week or so later.

*"This statement," says Major Fenn, "is as base and malicious a libel as was ever published. The action of the seventeen volunteers near Cottonwood was a victory. They held almost ten times their number at bay in pitched battle for an hour and a half and finally drove them off out of range. Casualties to the Indians were nine killed, as evidenced by the graves they left; the whites had two killed and three wounded. This was the first real reverse inflicted upon the hostiles and Howard's statement passes understanding. When informed of the fight of the seventeen, McConville, who was at the time with Howard, at once set out with the citizen soldiers, including Hunter's men under his command, numbering about one hundred men, to reinforce their fellows—and Perry, who was so anxiously calling for help. McConville made a forced march from White Bird and reached Cottonwood the evening of the 5th. The next morning all of the volunteers made a forced march to Mount Idaho, in the direction of which the Indians had moved. It has always been understood that Howard desired and consented to McConville's movement to reinforce Perry."

breastworks. Joseph's camp lay not far from the mouth of Cottonwood creek, in a deep defile among the high hills. On the 11th of July Howard approached it with his entire force, Captain Trimble from Slate creek, Perry, Whipple and all. About noon Lieutenant Fletcher discovered the Indians, and by one o'clock a howitzer and two gatling guns were throwing leaden missiles at the Indians below. These were getting their horses out of range as rapidly as possible. The contour of the country favored them, and soon they were safe. Howard ordered a change of position to a bluff toward the left, which could only be reached by a trip of more than a mile around the head of a ravine. Upon reaching this position with the howitzer and gatlings they found Joseph already in line of battle and saw a number of mounted Indians attempting their flanking movement to the left. Winters with his cavalry met these flankers and foiled them in their purpose. Soon the battle began in good earnest. "My line," says Howard, "I extended to the left by the cavalry and to the right by the infantry and artillery battalions, gradually refusing my flanks, until the whole bluff was enveloped. Four hundred men, necessarily much spread out, held a line two and a half miles in extent. Our main pack train had passed by this position. Another small train with a few supplies was on the road near us. The Indian flankers by their rapid movement struck the rear of the small train, killed two of the packers and disabled a couple of mules, loaded with howitzer ammunition. The prompt fire from Perry's and Whipple's cavalry saved the attendant ammunition from capture, luckily. The main supply train was saved only by the quick work of a messenger, guiding it within the lines."

Charges and counter charges were made during the day, in one of which, led by Captain Miles, Captain Bancroft and Lieutenant Williams were seriously injured and a number of the enemy were killed and wounded. A charge near the center by Miller gave the whites a disputed ravine, but the repeated charges of the enemy were successfully repelled. The whites, however, were not in the best position at nightfall, as their water supply, a spring, was commanded by the Indian sharpshooters, so that it was only by running the gauntlet of a dangerous fire that the officers obtained during the night sufficient water to slake the thirst of their men. Throughout most of the hours of darkness the combatants on both sides worked hard constructing stone barricades and rifle pits.

"At daylight on the 12th," says Howard, "every available man was on the line. I directed that food should be cooked and coffee made at the center and carried to the front. This was not easy to do, for we had first to get complete possession of the spring, as sufficient water was not secured in the night. This feat was executed with great spirit by Miller and Perry, using Otis's battery and Rodney's company on foot. As soon as the battery had made a rapid firing it ceased and a prompt charge at a run with shouting was undertaken by the men in support. The Indian sharpshooters were thus driven from their hiding places and the spring secured by our riflemen against recapture.

"As soon as every man had been provided with food I directed that the artillery battalion be withdrawn from the lines, thin though they were already, and that the whole stretch be held by the infantry and cavalry. This gave a reserve force to employ in an offensive movement. It should be remembered that the number of our men on the line and the number of Indian warriors that Joseph marshaled were about equal. Miller withdrew his battalion and at 2:30 p. m., the time I had selected, was preparing to execute a peculiar movement, viz: to push out by the west flank, pierce the enemy's line just west of the center, cross his barricaded ravine, then face suddenly to the right and charge so as to strike the Indian position in reverse, assisting himself meanwhile by a howitzer.

"Miller was fully ready and about to move when beyond the Indian position toward the south a dust appeared in the distance. Our glasses, quickly catching every new appearance, revealed it as the expected supply train, escorted by Jackson's cavalry. Immediately the artillery battalion, which was waiting for the other work, was sent out to meet the newcomers. This occasioned considerable skirmishing and a delay of an hour, when the train was brought in in safety. To our joy Major Keeler of General McDowell's staff accompanied the escort and brought us cheering words from his general at San Francisco as well as welcome reinforcements. At the time of these arrivals I had ridden out a few yards to secure a fair view of the field. Upon my invitation Major Keeler came forward to see the battle and took a place by my side.

"Captain Miller, instead of returning with the train, was marching slowly in column by the right flank toward us, when, as he crossed the enemy's line, just at the right point, he faced to the left, moved quickly in line for nearly a mile across our front and repeatedly charged the enemy's positions. This manner of striking at an angle and following up the break is called 'rolling up the enemy's line.' This Miller accomplished most effectually. The usual attempt to double his left was made by the Indians, when a reserved company, Rodney's, in Miller's rear deployed, flanked the flankers and drove them back.

"For a few minutes there was a stubborn resistance at Joseph's barricades; then his whole line gave way. Immediately the pursuit was taken up by the whole force, infantry and artillery, Winter's troops, dismounted, and the remaining cavalry, as soon as they could saddle and mount. This movement was decisive. The Indians are completely routed and flying over the rugged banks, through the ravines, swimming and wading the river and our forces are in close pursuit."

Jackson's cavalry had failed to reach the scene in time to participate in the battle, but it was on hand for the pursuit. It, with the force in charge of the gatling gun, quickly moved to a point overlooking the Clearwater. The howitzers also were brought to this position and a fusillade was poured into the retreating Indians and their ponies. Meanwhile other troops pressed down the ravines and steep hillsides to the river's edge, but further they could not go, owing to the depth of the water. Soon Perry's cavalry came to the canyon's bottom and across the river, but for some reason Perry did not press the pursuit up the opposite bank, contenting himself rather with taking a position near the deserted Indian lodges. Howard, scanning the field with his glass, noticed a movement of Indians which indicated to him a possible intention on their part to return to the conflict. He warned Perry of the danger to his cavalry and ordered him to ferry the infantry across so as to present a sufficient force in opposition should the red men evince a taste for further battle. The whites could not effect a crossing of the stream as expeditiously as did their dusky foe; the time consumed gave the Indians opportunity of escape to a point so far remote as to make their overhauling before dark an impossibility; the troops, therefore, concluded to camp for the night, and the battle of the Clearwater was over. The Indian loss was twenty-three killed, perhaps forty wounded and as many more captured, besides the stores of blankets, buffalo robes, provisions and promiscuous equipage they were compelled to abandon at their camp. Howard reports his loss as thirteen killed and twenty-two wounded.

The most severe criticism made against Howard in the Clearwater battle is that he failed to follow up the advantage which Miller's successful charge gave him. McConville's volunteers had returned during the last day of the fight and were stationed on the west bank of the Clearwater several miles from the battlefield. They were holding themselves in readiness to attack the Indians in front whenever the troops gave evidence that they would support the attack from the rear. Had the troops crossed behind the Indians and hung on Joseph's flanks and the volunteers under Major McConville attacked them in front the war, so many critics aver, might have been ended then and there. Instead, however, the Indians were allowed to proceed leisurely to Kamiah, where they crossed the river and commenced their retreat.

Next morning Howard reached Kamiah in time to see the last of Joseph's band crossing the Clearwater. When the river was reached the last Indian was across, and, though the gatling guns were put into operation, they inflicted little damage. Joseph took a position at the beginning of the Lolo trail, where, by sending scouts in all directions, he could keep close watch upon the movements of the soldiers and learn the outlines of Howard's plans.

That general had it in mind to reach, if he could, a position some fifteen or twenty miles beyond Joseph, where there was a junction of trails, thus cutting off his escape, but Joseph's scouts were too vigilant; the plan was surmised and the Indians hastily set out to anticipate him.

In pursuit of this plan Howard started on the 15th of July, ostensibly for Lapwai, but intending to go down the river to Dunwell's ferry, thence to a position in Joseph's rear. When he discovered that his intentions were surmised he went back to Kamiah, leaving Jackson and some volunteers who had just rejoined the regulars to guard against a possible return by the Indians across the river at Dunwell's. He was met by a messenger from Joseph asking upon what terms the chief might surrender. While the conference was in progress a shot, fired by the Indians, struck near the consulting party, a circumstance which certainly looked like bad faith on the part of the Indians, though Sutherland, author of "Howard's Nez Perces Campaign," thinks Joseph really intended to surrender and was only deterred by Howard's reply that he and his men would be tried before a court-martial of regular officers. Howard considered the proposal a ruse to delay his movements. At any rate Joseph did not surrender, though the messenger, his family and some other Indians afterward did.

Meanwhile the cavalry, scouts and volunteers had been ferried across the river, and these Howard sent under Colonel Mason to pursue the enemy, to learn his intentions and engage him in battle if such could be done with fair prospect of success. The scouts ran into Joseph's rear guard near Oro Fino creek and had a brush with it, in which one scout was killed and one wounded. One of the enemy was also killed. Believing it unsafe to attempt to use cavalry in a country so favorable for ambuscades, Mason returned and the campaign in Idaho was ended. Howard summarizes the war thus far in this language:

"The Indians had been well led and well fought. They had defeated two companies in a pitched battle. They had eluded pursuit and crossed the Salmon. They had turned back and crossed our communications, had kept our cavalry on the defensive and defeated a company of volunteers* They had finally been forced to concentrate, it is true, and had been brought to battle. But, in battle with regular troops, they had held out for nearly two days before they were beaten, and after that were still able to keep together, cross a river to deep to be forded and then check our pursuing cavalry and make off to other parts beyond Idaho. The result would necessitate a long and tedious chase.

"Still, on our side, the Indians had been stopped in their murders, had been resolutely met everywhere and driven into position and beaten; and by subsequent pursuit the vast country was freed from their terrible presence."

It is practically impossible at this late date to so come into possession of the details of the war as to enable one to express a definite opinion about the merits of the dispute between the regulars and volunteers, even if a historian were justified in usurping the function of a judge or jury and dealing in generalizations and deductions from facts rather than in the facts themselves. Many severe criticisms have been made upon Howard's slowness of movement, and it is the general opinion of volunteers and others that, while he proved himself a gentleman of many virtues, he failed to adapted himself to the condition presented by the known methods of Indian warfare; that he was not aggressive and vigorous enough to be called a "good Indian fighter." Howard, in his valuable work entitled "Nez Perces Joseph," has attempted an answer to these objections, mainly by pointing out the difficulties which surrounded him and contending that greater expedition was impossible under the circumstances. Severe strictures were made by citizens upon some of the inferior officers, particularly Captain Perry, whose military movements were made the occasion for the sessions of two courts of inquiry. Charges of lack of discipline and incompetence were brought by some officers of the regular army against the volunteers also, the most bitter being by Major Keeler, of General McDowell's staff, who had the least opportunity to know whereof he spoke. Howard, be it said to his credit, frankly commended the volunteers, more than once publicly, thanking them for valuable assistance rendered him.

After the return of Mason with the report that Joseph had certainly gone toward the buffalo country, Howard naturally began revolving in his mind plans for future operations. He thought at first of leaving a small garrison at Kamiah and going to Missoula at once, trusting Colonel Green, who was bringing a force from Fort Boise, and General Wheaton, coming to Lewiston from Georgia as fast as steam could carry him, with the task of protecting Camas prairie and the rest of north Idaho. This plan had to be abandoned on account of the alarm lest Joseph should suddenly return and swoop down again upon the temporarily unprotected settlements. So Howard himself awaited the arrival of Green's advance guard, thus giving the hostiles a splendid lead in the race and occasioning a loud clamor from the impatient journalists and people. The plan evolved during the period of waiting was to form two columns and a reserve, the right column to be led by Howard in person, the left by Wheaton, and the reserve to stay with Green at Camas prairie. Howard's force was to take the Lolo trail; Wheaton's the Mullan road and the reserve to "watch all trails, keep inter-communication, be ready for hostile Indians, should they double back, and give heart to all neighboring farmers, miners, prospectors, and friendly Indians by the show of protection at hand."

Howard with his right column took the trail on the 26th of July, 1877. His journeyings from that time until the capture of Joseph are replete with adventures and incidents, but all this is extra-territorial to the historian of north Idaho and though completeness demands a brief narration of the long chase, yet it must be brief. Day after day the column toiled on, slipping, sliding, up the steep acclivities, down the precipitous mountain sides, following the windings of the interminable "hogs-backs," as connecting ridges between two mountain uplifts are called, vigilant always to keep out of traps the wily red skins may set, the commanding general not alone burdened with the responsibility of a campaign, presenting at times grave danger of ambush and surprise, but smarting under the lash that is being applied by numerous newspapers the whole country over. The Indians, familiar with the country by frequent former trips to the buffalo grounds, possessing an ability to get work out of a horse such as no white man can, and led by one whom Miles has characterized the greatest military genius of the Indian race, are making one of the most brilliant retreats in the annals of Indian warfare. Once they might have been stopped and held for Howard. A small force of regulars under Captain Rawn and a considerable number of citizen soldiers had built a fort at the enterance of the Lolo trail into the Lolo valley. The pass was narrow, the walls high and precipitous. The fort, though a hastily constructed affair, was so favorably situated that it commanded the situation completely. When the Indians arrived they quickly saw their disadvantage. Being diplomats as well as warriors, they determined to try the effect of a parley where bullets would be plainly ineffective. They promised to do no damage to the citizens of the valley if only they should be allowed to proceed. Why should they not make such a promise? They not only hoped to gain a present advantage but to placate the people and perhaps get them in the notion of trade, for they were sorely in need of fresh horses, and fresh supplies of ammunition and provisions. Looking-glass's diplomacy triumphed. The soldiers and citizens withdrew, allowing the red men to pass without opposition through a trail they had been busily preparing during the four days of parley to the left of the fort. An unpatriotic act, certainly, but Howard did not blame them and surely we can afford to be no less charitable. Hardly, however, can we imagine Randall or McConville or Paige or Cearley doing such a thing.

Space forbids narration of the day and night riding of messengers between Howard's advance column and the United States forces to the eastward who were now becoming interested in the campaign. Even a war of small magnitude develops numerous heroes, for the world is full of heroism, so full that it cannot pay its meed of hero-worship to each. If it could the despatch-bearers who rode furiously and without rest day or night over the danger-beset, roadless, rough and rugged country between Howard and the Indian rear guard, would come in for a full share.

One of these messengers reached Howard on the 6th of August, announced his name as Pardee and brought the news that General Gibbon had left his headquarters at Helena; had hastened to Missoula, arriving just after the Indians had passed Rawn's fort, was pushing forward on Joseph's trail with less than two hundred men and wanted reinforcements. Another, named Sutherland, left the same evening with Howard's reply which was that "General Howard is coming on, as fast as possible, by forced marches with two hundred cavalrymen, to give the needed reinforcements."

In compliance with this promise, Howard quickened his pace, but the horses were weary with long marches, weakened by insufficient nutrition and unable to satisfy with their speed the eagerness of the commander. On the 10th of August, therefore, Howard determined to take twenty-five picked horses and men and seventeen scouts, with whom to ride as fast and as far as possible in quest of Gibbon, leaving the remaining cavalry to pursue as quickly as they could. At dusk this advance guard encountered seven citizens, from whom they learned that Gibbon had had a fight the day before. The citizens gave a gloomy account and, though little credit was accorded it as it seemed like the semi-imaginative report of men who run as soon as a battle commences, a messenger is sent forward that night to apprise Gibbon of the help coming. Gibbon's messenger missed Howard's small force but delivered the message to Mason, in the rear, with whom were the much needed medical officers.

By 10 A. M. on the morning of August 11th, Howard came up to Gibbon's fortified camp, where the train and a small guard of soldiers and volunteers had been left. Hastening onward he soon reached Gibbon's position, and found him, as his message would have told had it been received, near the mouth of Big Hole pass in rather sorry plight. The camp looked very much like a hospital from the number lying helpless and the profusion of bandages.

Gibbon had arrived at a point within six miles of the Indians' camp on the 7th of August. On the 8th a party under Lieutenant Bradley managed to steal up close enough to observe the Indians, and in the middle of the night Gibbon's main force secured a position within a mile or so of their camp. Reconnoisance proved the central Indian position to be across a bend on the north fork of the Big Hole river and that the lodges numbered eighty nine. Before daylight Gibbon's forces were very close to the enemy and still unobserved. Dawn brought the attack. Bradley was killed at the willows which lined the stream. Before the Indians could get out of their lodges, the whites were across the stream and upon them. A stubborn hand to hand fight ensued, Indian boys and squaws taking part and fighting with desperation. Eventually the Indians fell back to the brush and high points commanding their camp, whence they poured a melting fire upon the troops, busily engaged in destroying the camp. As the Indians outnumbered the whites two to one the latter were at a disadvantage as soon as their antagonists recovered from their surprise. The soldiers were therefore compelled to withdraw from the open to a wooded point near the canyon by which the troops had effected their approach. In so doing they had a fierce fight with the Indians. Gibbon expected his howitzer to be brought to this position, but it was captured, one of its six defenders being killed and one wounded. White Bird was heard and seen endeavoring to inspire the Indians with courage to attack Gibbon's position. In this, however, he failed. One attempt was made to capture Gibbon's supply train, but it was so valiantly defended by Kirkendall's little squad, that the small force of Indians sent against it dared not attack it and a larger force could not be spared from the main engagement. This surprise would have been fraught with grave consequences to the Indians had they been led with less consummate ability, but thanks to the generalship of their commander, they were effectually rallied and inflicted upon the attacking column a loss of twenty-nine killed and thirty or more wounded. During the night the Indians moved away. Gibbon was in no condition to follow, himself having been wounded in the engagement and many of his small command disabled. Looking-glass, the Indian diplomat, was killed at the last battle on Milk river.

Howard remained near Gibbon's battlefield during the 12th of August awaiting for the rest of his force to come up, and on the 13th again took the pursuit. At his encampment that night, he learned from two excited messengers that eight citizens had been murdered by Joseph on Horse prairie, and that two hundred and fifty fine horses had been secured by the hostiles.

On the evening of the 15th, word was sent that the Indians had turned back into Idaho and surrounded temporary fortifications at a junction of two cross-roads in Lemhi valley. "Push straight for Fort Lemhi and you will have the Indians" was the message of Colonel Shoup, in command of sixty Idaho volunteers. Howard did decide to turn to his right into Lemhi valley and was making preparations for doing so when after midnight, another messenger arrived, reporting that the Indians had broken camp, rushed past the temporary fort doing it no harm and gone eastward, so Howard pushed on as at first intended.

August 17th found him at Junction station. Here he was met by stage men, who persuaded him to abandon his purpose of proceeding straight to what was known as Tacher's Pass, going rather by the road via Dry creek. Lieutenant Bacon, with forty picked men, and Robbins, with the Indian scouts, were, however, sent direct to the coveted pass and Henry Lake. On the 18th the camp of the Indians was discovered by Buffalo Horn about eighteen miles from Dry creek station in Camas meadows, and Howard was appraised of the whereabouts of his wily foe.

"How confident I then felt!" says the General. "Bacon and Robbins ahead of Joseph and my cavalry only eighteen miles behind on the direct trail! If it were possible, I would reinforce Bacon; but he is seventy miles off! 'He can annoy and stop them, if he cannot do more.' I exclaim."

The general condition of things was far from favorable however. The cavalry horses were so jaded and slow that eighteen miles was a considerable trip for them; the Montana volunteers were still farther behind and the infantry at least a day's march behind them. But on the night of August 19th, Howard with the cavalry, Calloway's volunteers and fifty infantry were in camp together in Camas meadows, where Buffalo Horn had seen Joseph's band the day before. The trail of the hostiles was distinctly visible. They were supposed to be in a camp some fifteen miles beyond. Suddenly in the middle of the night, the multitudinous noises of battle and the wild Indian war whoop burst upon the ears of the sleepers.

Joseph has determined to double back and, with a few of his men, distract the attention of the soldiers, while some of his skilled horse thieves are cutting the hobbles on the mules and making away with these animals. Howard saw the herd in full stampede. He sent Major Sanford after them with the cavalry and soon that officer sent word that he had recovered between fifty and seventy-five head of the lost stock. A second messenger brought less pleasing tidings. He informed Howard that the Indians were returning in force and turning Sanford's left. The remainder of the force was quickly ordered to the rescue. It met Sanford returning and inquired for Norwood, but no one knew definitely where that officer was. The advance was continued and eventually the missing cavalry officer and his force were discovered. He had had quite a skirmish, one which cost him the loss of one man killed and six wounded. This surprise of Howard and the capture of some of his mules was the theme of much fun-making among eastern journalists.

The march was not resumed until the 21st. On the 22d some scouts joined the pursuing party from Fort Hall, also Captain Bainbridge with more scouts and a small guard of soldiers. The night of the 23d there must have been little sleeping, for the Bannock scouts had a dance and council; then some of their number came to Howard with a request for permission to kill three professedly friendly Indians, claiming they were traitors, which request was denied; then to make matters worse at two o'clock reveille was sounded. Daylight revealed Tacher's gap and the Indian camp near it. A rapid advance was made and the gap soon reached but the birds had again flown. How discouraged and disgusted the soldiers must have been! Bacon and his party not seeing any Indians had left Henry lake, in plain sight of the pass, turning back and by this unfortunate move coming out far in the rear of the main column. Howard's messengers to him had failed in duty and as a consequence this splendid chance of cutting off the retreat of the foe and terminating the war was lost.

For many weary miles the soldiers had striven to overtake the Indians and now that they were on the heels of the redskins, they must again allow the latter to get a lead of several days. Howard's order to follow Fisher's scouts on through the pass was met by the protest of the physician, the quarter-master, the inspector and other officers. "We cannot, we cannot, general!," said they. "Come look at your soldiers; look at their clothing, ragged already and tied with strings; look at their feet, some barefooted and the most with shoes so badly worn that in one or two days they will be gone. The ice froze an inch in our basins last night, and we have no overcoats, nothing but thin blankets, now falling to pieces. You can go no farther."

The was no gainsaying this reasoning. The command was allowed to rest four days on the banks of Henry lake while the commander, the quarter-master, and Lieutenant Howard set out by wagon to Virginia City for supplies. Cushing and Norwood were directed to proceed to Fort Ellis for supplies, joining the main body two hundred miles farther on. Blankets, provisions, fresh horses, everything needful were procured; the general and those accompanying him returned and on the 27th of August, the march was resumed under more favorable conditions. The famed National Park was soon entered, and some members of the ill-starred Geyser party encountered, which, while on a pleasure trip had the misfortune to fall into the hands of the hostile Indians. The first man reported his comrades all dead, but two others, wounded, were afterward met. The women were spared by Joseph and eventually rescued.

In the park Howard received news of Joseph's whereabouts from a man who had been captured by the Indians and recaptured by Fisher's scouts, which information saved the command nearly one hundred miles of marching. About the same time evidences were discovered of Bannack treachery. Ten of these Indians were arrested, disarmed and held as prisoners until their comrades, by bringing in the horses which the Bannocks were accused of having stolen, earned the liberty of all except one, the leader, who was sent under guard to Fort Ellis.

Under the guidance of the rescued prisoner the soldiers proceeded to the Yellowstone river at Baronet's bridge and across it, the scouts finding "too abundant evidence of their (the Indian's) usual murder and rapine for twenty miles down the river to the Mammoth Falls, where a raiding party from Chief Joseph had met and robbed some wagons and burned a store." The scouts found evidences that Gilbert's calvary had been there, but through want of knowledge as to Howard's whereabouts their commander had swung off, coming upon the trail of the pursuing party one hundred miles in the rear. He tried to overtake Howard, but failed and finally returned to Fort Ellis. Unfortunately the cavalry of Cushing, who left the main column, as we have said, at Henry lake, had been taken to reinforce Gilbert, but with the remnant Cushing made a race for the valley of Clark's Fork to head off Joseph, when he should come down from the mountains. He failed to anticipate the swift-footed chieftain, but effected a junction with Howard, turning over to that general the supplies he had been sent for. Arriving at the Soda Butte silver mine, the command came upon about twenty armed miners, all of whom were employed as guides. These led the main column by a short route, while the scouts on fresh horses followed the trail of the hostiles, and learned of the outrages committed by Joseph in his march. Three miners were robbed of everything, then killed in spite of earnest begging for mercy. A fourth, robbed and dreadfully wounded, made his escape to the soldiers.

On the march from Soda Butte mountains, Howard was met by three messengers, who brought the news that General Sturgis, with several cavalry companies, was within fifty miles and was moving to Hart's mountains to cut the Indians off from their only practicable route to the mouth of Clark's fork. Had he only done so the war might have been speedily terminated, but he allowed himself to be deceived, probably by treacherous Crow Indians, and sent on a wild goose chase to the right. This and the audacity of Joseph in striking into an apparently impenetrable forest and through a narrow canyon opening into Clark's valley again saved the fortunate Indians.

Sturgis discovered his mistake, returned, was reinforced by Howard with a few picked horses and men and sent ahead in the chase. He overtook the enemy and had a battle with them on the heights beyond the Yellowstone, capturing hundreds of ponies. A running fight was kept up with the retreating redskins all the way to the Musselshell river. Howard, however, despairing of Sturgis' or his own ability to overtake the Indians, who were going night and day, sent a message by boat down the Yellowstone, also by a horseman, to General Miles at Tongue river, asking that officer to strike northwestward to the Missouri, intercepting the hostiles if possible.

Meanwhile the forces with Howard concentrated on the Yellowstone below Clark's fork, pushed down the river to Baker's battlefield and turned thence northward with intent to rejoin Sturgis at the Musselshell. By September 20th they were on that river, and there they received a message from General Miles, who promised to move at once. The march of the pursuers was continued with somewhat less haste than theretofore, the generals, Sturgis and Howard, not wishing to press the hostiles too hard, lest they should not give Miles time to come up before them. This continued until a messenger arrived stating that Miles had crossed the Missouri and was in pursuit, then the command quickened its march until it reached Carroll, where Howard, leaving his main command with Sturgis, took passage with an artillery battalion, two aides and a few scouts, on a steamer for Cow Island. Disembarking there, he pushed on northward with an escort of seventeen armed men, to the Bear Paw mountains. On the 4th of October, after dark, the party came to a point whence numerous small fires could be seen and the firing of musketry heard. It was the Indian warriors doing what damage they could to the forces around them. Soon Howard joined Miles and learned of the situation from him.

General Miles had made a rapid march to the Missouri, crossed that river, gone to Bear Paw mountain, making the long journey without any knowledge of his movements reaching the hostiles, had come upon Joseph in a ravine, had surprised him completely and by a bold charge had defeated him badly, capturing his herd of ponies. The Indians were forced to take refuge in the deep ravines, where they fortified and held out as long as they could. On the 5th of October, the day after Howard's arrival, firing was kept up by the troops, with an occasional reply from the enemy, until 11 o'clock, when two of Howard's Indian scouts were sent into the camp of the chief with a flag of truce. After some lively negotiating Joseph finally, at 2 P. M., agreed to surrender. He handed his rifle to General Howard, who directed that it should be given to Colonel Miles, and the remainder of the day was spent by the Indians in coming into camp with their arms. White Bird slipped out through the lines and escaped with a considerable following, Indians say about forty, to the British possessions. Ollicut, Joseph's brother, was killed in the four days' battle with Miles. The Nez Perces were promised that they should be returned to the reservation in Idaho, but General Sheridan, in whose department they were, directed that they should be sent to the Indian territory. Years afterward they were brought back to the west and settled partly on the Nez Perces and partly on the Colville reservation.

The fame of Joseph became widespread on account of his military prowess, and no doubt the glory accorded him was a potent factor in inciting the Bannock and Piute war of the following year. Buffalo Horn, who had seen the entire campaign, became ambitious to emulate Joseph's career, but fortunately for the whites did not possess the generalship with which to do so. Joseph was indeed a military leader of extraordinary ability. With less than four hundred fighting men and encumbered with large numbers of women and children, he had succeeded in leading Howard a chase that exhausted his mules and horses and wore out his men, reducing them to a condition in which they were truly objects of commiseration. How he could, with weak women and helpless children, keep ahead of soldiers not thus encumbered, and having the support of the government, is a mystery. It shows how marvelous is the energy that lies latent within the Indian race, inspiring the wish that by some means this force might be called into activity in a nobler cause than contending against manifest destiny in warfare fraught with horrors indescribable. Those who, admiring Joseph's admitted abilities, claim that he carried on his campaign in accordance with the laws of civilized warfare, are evidently not cognizant of the facts, for the number of persons killed by his forces outside of battle must have been nearly fifty. In the several engagements thirteen volunteers were killed, according to Bancroft's account, and 105 officers and men of the regular army. Not less than 120 were wounded.

CHIEF JOSEPH.

CHAPTER IV.

ANNEXATION—STATEHOOD—RAILROAD PROJECTS.

The progress of our narative has brought us through the era of Indian difficulties and at the same time by the romantic early epoch of north Idaho history and quite well past that secondary or transition period, during which the more stable industries were slowly supplanting the semi-nomadic mining of the earlier days. Hereafter the germ of social order, always existing in the country, though at times obscured under a superficial overflow of sin and folly, is to have full opportunity to grow and develop, bringing not alone the comforts and luxuries of physical life, but the refinements of education, religion and the fine arts. Soon must we address ourselves to the individual counties, with whose history our volume purposes to deal, but before doing so we must give attention to two or three other matters of general concern.

Mention has already been made of a certain lack of community of interest between the residents of northern and those of southern Idaho. The territory was cut into two by the Salmon river range of mountains, making it impossible for the Panhandle residents to reach their capital without a long trip through Oregon and Washington. The folly of this arrangement soon attracted attention after the removal of the capital from Lewiston, and the press and the people of north Idaho as well as those of Washington territory, began advocating the re-annexation of Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties to the latter commonwealth, or as an alternative measure, the establishment of a new territory out of northern Idaho, western Montana and eastern Washington. During its session of 1865-6, the legislature of Idaho passed the following memorial to congress:

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the territory of Idaho, would most respectfully represent that, Whereas the northern and southern portions of our territory are divided by a high mountain range, known as the Blue mountain, or Salmon river range, rendering communication almost impossible for one-half the year, unless by a circuitous route, of five or six hundred miles, passing through the state of Oregon and Washington territory; and that unless mineral discoveries are hereafter made, a tract of country one hundred miles in width, between the two, will forever remain almost uninhabitable; and whereas there is no community of interest between the two sections, the interests of the northern portion being identified with those of the upper Columbia and Missouri rivers, and the territory of Montana; while the interests of the southern portion of our territory are identified with those of the states of Nevada and California, the territory of Utah, and Lower Columbia river; and whereas the material interests of both sections would be advanced by dissolving the present territorial relations between them, and by having territorial governments so established as to unite all the people within their limits by community of interest, thereby increasing our present rapidly growing population, and developing the immense mineral and agricultural resources of both portions of the territory, and which your memorialists believe to be unsurpassed west of the Rocky mountains; Your memorialists would therefore most respectfully request of your honorable body the passage of an act by which all that portion of the territory of Utah lying north of forty-one degrees and thirty minutes of north latitude be annexed to the territory of Idaho, and a new territory be established out of the northern portion of the territory of Idaho, the western portion of the territory of Montana and the eastern portion of the territory of Washington, to be called the territory of Columbia, with the following boundaries: Commencing in the middle of the channel of Snake river, where the parallel of forty-four degrees and forty-five minutes north latitude crosses said river; thence east on said parallel to the western line of the territory of Montana; thence westerly on the summit of the Wind River mountains, to a point where the meridian of thirty-five degrees and thirty minutes longitude west from Washington crosses said summit; thence north, on said meridian of longitude until the same reaches the summit of the Rocky mountains; thence northerly following the summit of the Rocky mountains to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence west along said parallel to the forty-second meridian of longitude west from Washington; thence south to the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel of latitude to the middle of the channel of Snake river; thence up the middle of the channel of said Snake river to the place of beginning. And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Approved, January 10th, A. D., 1866.

The movement for this territory of Columbia became strong during 1866 and 1867, meetings being held and memorials adopted not alone in Lewiston, but in Walla Walla also, for the latter town was likewise dissatisfied with the existing condition of things. But Montana wished to retain the Bitter Root valley and southern Idaho was fearful lest its burden of taxation might become unbearably heavy if it lost any more population, for already many were departing on account of the exhaustion of the placer mines. It was found impossible to carry the measure.

In 1869 Nevada came forth with a proposition to annex to itself all of Idaho's territory south of the Snake river and between the Oregon boundary line and an extension of the eastern boundary of Nevada, an important mining section known as the Owyhee country. To this neither Idaho nor congress would agree. The Idaho legislature memorialized congress again in 1870 for a change in territorial metes and bounds, "but none that would leave the territory less able to maintain the burden of government, interfere with the congressional ratio of representation, or decrease the prospect of arriving at the dignity of statehood." These were obviously rather hard conditions with which to comply. Meanwhile the newspapers were still advocating the formation of the territory of Columbia, with boundaries as described in the memorial to congress above quoted.

Prior to the convening of congress in December, 1873, the old project of annexing northern Idaho to Washington was revived with great earnestness. Meetings were held in the territory directly affected; resolutions were adopted and committees were appointed to press the matter. On November 13th, the house of representatives of Washington territory passed a memorial praying congress for the annexation of Nez Perces, Shoshone and Idaho counties to their commonwealth. Southern Idaho supported the measure in part and the sentiment of the Panhandle was practically unanimous in its favor. Rarely indeed is there such ananimity in any political matter of major import. The Panhandle counties undertook to do a little memorializing on their own account, sending to congress the following self-explanatory document:

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

Your memorialists, an executive committee appointed by the citizens of the counties of Nez Perces, Shoshone and Idaho, of Idaho territory, at a mass meeting held at Lewiston, October, 30, 1873, to properly represent the views of the people of said counties on the question of annextion to Washington territory, would respectfully represent to your honorable body:

First, That the counties of Nez Perces, Shoshone and Idaho, in Idaho territory, embrace that part of the present territory of Idaho north of the great chain of the Salmon river range of mountains, which extend nearly on a line with the 45th parallel north latitude, easterly from Snake river, through the entire territory; that this range is covered with snow to a great depth annually from the first of December to the first day of June, thus rendering communication between the two sections known as north and south Idaho almost impossible during said period, save by a circuitous route of five or six hundred miles to Boise City, the capital of Idaho; that one hundred miles of this circuitous route lies in the territory of Washington, and about two hundred of it lies in the state of Oregon.

Second, That along in the vicinity of this high range of mountains is a section of country varying from fifty to one hundred miles in width, so elevated and so destitute of inducements for settlement that unless rich mineral discoveries are hereafter made in this mountain region it will remain uninhabited by civilized man for centuries.

Third, That the entire white population of our territory is about twenty thousand souls.

Fourth, That said counties of Nez Perces, Shoshone and Idaho contain only about one-fifth of said white population of the territory, which is organized into well regulated, industrious, thriving and established communities, engaged in agricultural, mining and mercantile pursuits.

Fifth, That the interests of the people of the two sections, north and south Idaho, are diverse in almost every particular, those of the former being allied to those of Washington territory and the valley of the main Columbia river, while those of the latter are in identity with those of the states of Nevada and California and the territory of Utah.

Sixth, That the said Salmon range of mountains divides north from south Idaho as completely as nature ever makes such divisions

Seventh, That the boundary between north Idaho and Washington territory is for the most part wholly imaginary and artificial.

Eighth, That there exists now no social or commercial bond between the people of north Idaho and those of south Idaho, nor can there become such with the existing impassable natural barrier between them.

Ninth. That both commercially and socially the bond of union between the people of north Idaho and those of eastern Washington, including those of Walla Walla, Whitman and Stevens counties, is as complete as identity of social and commercial interests ever make the union of a people.

Tenth, That the people of north Idaho are seriously inconvenienced by their present territorial government relations with south Idaho; that their want of interest in common with the body politic of which they now form a part, tends greatly to retard the development of their natural resources, as well as retard their increase of population and general prosperity.

Eleventh, That to maintain their political relations with south Idaho imposes upon the people of north Idaho a serious burden of annual expenditure, such that a large class of the people are compelled to forego the attempt to secure their proper legal political rights, obtainable only at the capital of the territory.

Twelfth, That the commercial and social intercourse of the people of the said Nez Perces, Shoshone and Idaho counties is now mainly with Walla Walla county, Washington territory, and the counties west of Walla Walla along the Columbia river, and the roads and other channels of communication leading thither are always open and easy of access,—all the business of north Idaho is done by and through these channels, no one of which leads to or near south Idaho.

Thirteenth. That the union of north Idaho and Washington territory will hasten the period when said Washington territory will possess the requisites for admission into the Union, clothed in the habiliments of one of the sovereignties of the Republic.

Fourteenth, That the commercial men of the country, who have inaugurated and have now in process of construction the great northern trans-continental railway, have significantly pointed to the proper union of north Idaho and Washington in the plan of their road and a western branch which is to have its junction in north Idaho west of the Bitter Root mountains and near the present eastern boundary of said Washington territory, and that no part of south Idaho gives prospect of ever becoming tributary to said railway or its western branch.

Wherefore, your memorialists pray that, at the coming session of your honorable body, all that part of Idaho territory lying north of the forty-fifth parallel be annexed to Washington territory as organized with her present boundaries, and your memorialists will ever pray.

Done at Lewiston, Idaho territory, this 22d day of November, A. D. 1873.

The question was up before congress again in 1875 and yet again in 1877. The petitions in the latter year were filed by Delegate Fenn. They differed from former documents in describing the territory to be transferred as Nez Perces county and all the teritory attached to it for judicial purposes, rather than designating the southern boundary by a fixed parallel. Orange Jacobs, delegate from Washington territory, was pledged to the support of the measure. The sentiment of southern Idaho was probably correctly expressed by the following language in the Boise Statesman:

"Any proposition, coming from whatever quarter, which looks to the dismemberment of the territory, will always be opposed by the people of Idaho taken as a whole, even if what might be considered as compensating advantages are offered in return."

In 1878 the governor of Washington territory issued a proclamation for a convention of delegates at Walla Walla on June 11th for the purpose of framing a constitution, preparatory to statehood. The plan was to include in the limits of the territory, in which it was expected the constitution would some day be in force, the then territory of Washington and the Panhandle of Idaho. Accordingly an invitation was extended to Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties to send a delegate to the convention, who, however, was to be denied the privilege of a vote, though he might freely participate in all debates. For the purpose of electing this delegate a general convention was called at Lewiston, April 9th, on which date sixty delegates and proxies were present at the court house. They adopted certain resolutions, framed by J. W. Poe, Ezra Baird and M. Storm, the purport of which was that the convention concurred gladly in the aims and purposes of the Walla Walla convention; that they would send a delegate in whose intelligence, honesty, energy and ability to fairly and truly represent them they had unbounded confidence, and that the delegate would be fully justified in representing to the convention that more than nineteen-twentieths of all the people of Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties were earnestly in favor of uniting their political fortunes with the people of Washington territory.

The choice of the Lewiston convention was Alonzo Leland. He experienced some difficulty in gaining a seat in the Walla Walla convention as the delegates from western Washington were opposed to him, and not much in favor of the annexation movement, for they feared annexation would transfer the balance of political power from the western to the eastern side of the Cascade range. But Mr. Leland secured his right to a voice. He not only represented north Idaho with great ability, but by the wisdom of his counsels, added much to the excellence of the constitution of 1878, which is admittedly an able state paper.

In the November election, northern Idaho voted on the question of adopting the Washington constitution. The vote was lighter than that for candidates, chiefly on account of misunderstandings, but those who expressed themselves were almost unanimous in its support. The official figures were as follows: Nez Perces county, 485 votes for and 13 against; Idaho county, 221 votes for and 14 against; Shoshone county, 36 for and 1 against.

From this time forth the memorials to congress took a different tone. Instead of asking for immediate segregation from Idaho and annexation to the territory of Washington, they asked that they should be admitted as a part of the state, when that commonwealth was clothed in the habiliments of statehood. The vote on the question in 1880 was more nearly unanimous than ever before, but two ballots being cast against the proposition in Nez Perces county, and not one in Shoshone. So determined were the people of the Panhandle in this matter that they freely cast aside for the time being their political affiliations, when these were in conflict with their great project, and supported annexationists regardless of party. It was thought that congress could not turn a deaf ear to the plain voice of the people, expressed so unequivocally in their memorials, conventions and elections, but the ways of politicians are devious and the real motives for their acts sometimes hard to discover. Petition after petition was slighted, and now that north Idaho had united its fortunes with Washington in its efforts for admission to the Union, there was an additional cause for procrastination in the settlement of the annexation question. Then there was besides the open opposition of southern Idaho, whose representatives claimed that the proposed change would despoil, disintegrate and tend to Mormonize Idaho; occasion a readjustment of territorial districts, disarrange the courts, legislature and other internal machinery; make unequal division of territory; be unjust to the citizens of south Idaho and unsafe at present and finally that Washington would be too large and unstately. The bill for the admission of Washington with north Idaho was, however, reported favorably by the house committee in 1882, but though it elicited a vigorous debate, no definite and final action was taken.

In the teritorial legislative session of 1884-5, an annexation memorial to congress passed the Idaho council by a vote of nine to three and the house by a vote of twenty to four. In January, 1886, the movement was again brought up in congress and pushed with vigor. The bill as presented by Delegate Hailey provided that the northern counties should not be released from their just share of Idaho's bonded indebtedness and that the southern boundary of the transferred territory should "commence at a point in the middle of the main channel of Snake river due west of the head waters of Rabbit creek; thence due east to the head waters of Rabbit creek; thence down the middle of said Rabbit creek to its junction with the Salmon river; thence up the middle of said Salmon river to the junction of Horse creek; thence up the middle of said Horse creek to the junction of the east fork of said creek; thence up the middle of said east fork of Horse creek to the crest of the Bitter Root range of mountains."

The committee on territories recommended the passage of the bill and the house passed it February 24th.

The senate, however, refused to consider the measure until that creating the state of Washoington had been put upon its passage.

Meanwhile southern Idaho was all activity in its opposition to the movement. So long had agitation proved of no avail that the people south of the Salmon river had become somewhat apathetic, but now that they seemed in actual danger of losing their territory, they awoke to a realization of the momentous consequences to them which must result from its loss. Mass meetings were held; protests were framed and sent to congress, and all the leading newspapers took up the fight with vehemence. Some opposition was expressed by residents south of the Salmon river, and two of the commissioners of Idaho county protested against the spoliation of the county's territory and petitioned that if annexation carried, the county should go as a whole. Opposition was also brought forward by Montana's delegate in congress, who claimed that all of Idaho north of the forty-seventh parallel, including the Couer d'Alene mining district, of right ought to be given to Montana. A petition signed by citizens in and contiguous to the town of Murray urged that the Panhandle be annexed to Montana, for the reason that that commonwealth, being a mining territory, could better take care of the district's interests than could Washington, which was not a mining region.

On the other hand, the annexationists were not idle. March 19th, the citizens of Kootenai county met at Rathdrum and passed resolutions strongly favoring the union with Washington and urging the senate to pass the bill. Resolutions of similar import were likewise adopted by mass meetings at Mount Idaho, Grangeville and elsewhere, and indeed friends and foes of the measure were intensely in earnest, both parties deeming success of vital importance.

On April 10th, the United States senate passed a bill by a vote of thirty to thirteen admitting to statehood Washington territory with north Idaho attached. Both houses of congress had now expressed themselves in favor of annexation, and it needed but their formal consent to the same bill and the signature of the president to enact the eagerly sought and bitterly fought law. But the desired concurrence was not obtained at the 1886 session, and delay in this instance proved fatal.

As the reader has no doubt already perceived unanimity on the annexation question no longer prevailed in north Idaho. The discovery of the Coeur d'Alene mines had caused an influx of Montana miners into the country, who brought with them a bias in favor of their own commonwealth. These began to advocate annexation of the Panhandle to Montana. Furthermore the desire to be identified with Washington had been fostered by the fact that that territory was striding forward at a rapid rate, owing to the impetus given it by the building of the Northern Pacific. Now, however, Idaho was itself enjoying a period of prosperity, and its development was encouraging the hope that it might soon, if it could escape dismemberment, gain the dignity and prestige of statehood. But the sentiment was still strong as shown by the fact that in November, 1886, Kootenai county gave one hundred and sixty-five votes for union with Washington as against twenty-six for annexation to Montana and fourteen for the maintenance of the existing order of things. Murray and Delta favored remaining with Idaho, and though Wardner gave Montana over two hundred votes, the rest of the county more than counteracted them. Nez Perces and Idaho counties were still strong in their advocacy of union with Washington, but the case in 1887 certainly seemed less hopeful than it had previously. Nevertheless, on March 2d, the senate took up and passed the annexation bill which we have referred to as having been passed by the house of representatives at its previous session, and all that was now needful was the signature of the president. The people of north Idaho felt sure that this would not be withheld, as Cleveland was thought to be favorably disposed toward the measure, so the friends of annexation, those who had labored so zealously for it during so many years, gave themselves up to unstinted rejoicing. But the jubilation was premature, for, though Delegate Hailey, Oregon's representation, Nevado's delegate, Washington's delegate, and others importuned Cleveland for his signature, Governor Stevenson, of Idaho, seemed to have more weight with him than their united importunities, and the bill was "pocket vetoed."

The annexation movement was now on the wane, though its friends were still legion and much enthusiasm in its favor was later manifested. Petitions and counter petitions were signed and forwarded to congress. Southern Idaho feared that if the northern counties were cut off the southern portion would be unable to support a government of any kind and would be attached to Nevada. Delegate Dubois therefore fought with vehemence against the measure, as if the life of his territory depended on its defeat. Delegate Voorhees, of Washington, aided by his illustrious father, also Oregon's and Nevada's senators, were in the fight in behalf of the project. In north Idaho sentiment was divided, the mining region opposing annexation. Both the political conventions in Nez Perces county passed resolutions favoring the union of the northern counties with Washington, and repudiating the acts of Delegate Dubois, the Republicans criticising him in scathing language. On October 15th the annexationists of north Idaho held at Cove, Latah county, what was said to be one of the largest mass meetings that ever convened in this entire section. H. E. Hall presided. Letters were read from persons in the southern portion of the state recognizing the justice of the north's position. Judge Norman Buck accepted the invitation of this mass meeting to become an independent annexation candidate for delegate to congress, and though his candidacy was announced but a few days before the election, he received a very considerable vote in the counties north of the Salmon rivr, now increased to five in number by the organization of Latah county.

But the annexation movement was somewhat embarrassed in December, 1888, by the introduction into the house of representatives of a very popular bill, that for the admission of Idaho, including the northern section, to statehood. This placed the people of north Idaho in the dilemma of giving up their annexation scheme or opposing what under ordinary circumstances they would very much desire, the admission of their territory to the Union. There were also other forces in the northwest generally which were militating against the annexation movement. The Republican victories of November assured the admission of Montana, Washington and the Dakotas at the next session of congress, and it was believed that Idaho, if united, would be admitted also. The political power which Idaho's two senators and congressman would give to the northwest was very much to be desired. If north Idaho should be segregated the southern portion could not maintain a state government and the whole northwest would be so much the loser. Furthermore, the Mormon question and Nevada's ambition for more territory would probably result in the swallowing up of southern Idaho and the permanent loss of a western state. These considerations induced Senator Mitchell of Oregon, hitherto an ardent annexationist, to publicly renounce his former position and to remove his standards to the opposition camp.

The Idaho legislature did much also to mollify the people of the north by granting them many liberal concessions, principal among which were the state university and a large appropriation for a wagon road from Camas prairie to Warm Springs, via Florence, uniting more closely the two sections of the territory. These concessions seem to have had the desired effect, for on the 22d of January, 1889, a significant event transpired. This was four days after the passage in the federal house of representatives of the Omnibus bill, providing for the admission to the Union of North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington, the last without the counties of north Idaho. The date referred to witnessed a meeting in Grostein & Binnard's hall, Lewiston, for the purpose of exchanging views upon the subject of ways and means of securing statehood for Idaho. Hon. James W. Poe was made chairman of the meeting, and a committee on resolutions was appointed which in due time reported the following for adoption as the sense of the assembly:

"Whereas the territory of Idaho is possessed of sufficient area, resources, intelligence and population to maintain a state government and to authorize and require its admission into the Union, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we insist upon and respectfully demand of congress admission as a state into the federal Union.

"Resolved, That we endorse the efforts of our delegate in congress, Hon. Fred T. Dubois, Senator J. H. Mitchell and Hon. William H. Springer to secure statehood for Idaho, and to this end we earnestly petition that congress pass an enabling act at its present session.

"Resolved, That we call upon our territorial legislature, and our sister towns and counties in Idaho, to unite with us, by resolution and memorial, in urging upon congress immediate action in the premises."

The debate on the resolutions waxed warm and finally ended in a division of the assembly, those opposing statehood on account of their wish for annexation adjourning to Grostein & Binnard's new hall. The number in attendance before the split was perhaps 125, and of these all but fifty withdrew. By those remaining the resolutions were adopted as a matter of course.

The opposition meeting likewise expressed itself most emphatically by resolutions, but no language it might use could be strong enough to counteract the effect of the original meeting. An anti-annexation assembly had convened in the city that had always been considered the very heart and center of the annexation movement. The announcement of this fact was hailed with delight by the people of south Idaho as indicating that the north had receded far from the position it had held with such singular unanimity for so many years. This action meant not only that the danger of a loss of territory was past, but that the commonwealth could hope for assistance from its every quarter in the effort to secure entrance into the federal sisterhood.

The Omnibus bill passed the senate as it had passed the house, without making provision for the annexation of north Idaho to Washington. Cleveland signed it during the closing days of his administration. Washington complied with its conditions and achieved the boon of statehood and the annexation question was settled at last.

There was now but one thing within the territory militating against a united campaign for admission, and that was the Mormon question. Of a population of 113,777, according to Governor Shoup's estimate, twenty-five thousand were Mormons. To the crushing out of the objectionable features in their religion the territory had set its face like flint from the earliest times. The legislature of 1884-5 passed a registry law requiring voters to take the following rigid oath:

"I do solemnly swear, (or affirm) that I am a male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one (21) years, (or will be the ——— day of ————, 18—, (naming date of next succeeding election), that I have (or will have) actually resided in this territory for four (4) months, and in this county for thirty (30) days next preceding the day of the next ensuing election; (in case of any election requiring a different time of residence, so make it) that I have never been convicted of treason, felony or bribery; that I am not now registered, or entitled to vote, at any other place in this territory; and I do further swear that I am not a bigamist or polygamist; that I am not a member of any order, organization or association which teaches, advises, counsels or encourages its members, devotees or any other person to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, as a duty arising or resulting from membership in such order, organization or association, or which practices bigamy or polygamy, or plural or celestial marriage, as a doctrinal rite of such organization; that I do not, and will not, publicly or privately, or in any manner whatever, teach, advise, counsel or encourage any person to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a religious duty or otherwise; that I do regard the constitution of the United States, and the laws thereof, and of this territory, as interpreted by the courts, as the supreme law of the land, the teachings of any order, organization or association to the contrary notwithstanding; (when made before a judge of election, add 'and I have not previously voted at this election') so help me God."

Much depended upon whether this "test oath" or one similar to it could be maintained in the courts. Pursuant to a proclamation issued April 2, 1889, by Governor E. A. Stevenson and supplemented May 11th by his successor, Governor George L. Shoup, a convention of seventy-two delegates met in session at Boise on July 4th for the purpose of framing a state constitution. Upon the instrument framed by them it is needless to comment here, further than to state that one of its clauses forever prohibited bigamy and polygamy. The Mormons claimed that this provision and the test oath were both in violation of the United States constitution which, by its first amendment, prohibits the passage of any law "respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." As it was a matter of great importance to determine whether the distinctive provision of the constitution of Idaho would be maintained in the courts or not, a Mormon voter was arrested on a charge of conspiracy. The case was taken to the supreme court of the United States, which held: "that the term 'religion' has reference to one's views of his relations to his Creator and to the obligations they impose and reverence for His being and character, and of obedience to His will. It is often confounded with the cultus or form of worship of a particular sect, but is distinguished from the latter. The first amendment to the constitution, in declaring that 'congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibit the free exercise thereof,' was intended to allow everyone under the jurisdiction of the United States to entertain such notions respecting his relations to his Maker and the duties they impose as may be approved by his judgment and conscience, and to exhibit his sentiments in such form of worship as he may think proper not injurious to the equal rights of others, and to prohibit legislation for the support of any religious tenets or the modes of worship of any religious sect. It was never intended or supposed that the amendment could be invoked as a protection against legislation for the punishment of acts inimical to the peace, good order and morals of society. However free the exercise of religion may be, it must be subordinate to the criminal laws of the country passed with reference to actions regarded by general consent as properly the subjects of punitive legislation. Probably never before in the history of this country has it been seriously contended that the whole punitive power of the government, for acts recognized by the general consent of the Christian world in modern times as proper matters for prohibitory legislation, must be suspended in order that the tenets of a religious sect encouraging crime may be carried out without hindrance."

This decision removed the last internal stumbling block in the way of Idaho's admission to the Union. However, there were difficulties to be overcome in congress. Delegate Dubois's bill was vigorously opposed by the Democrats, who refused to support measures for the admission of Idaho or Wyoming unless Arizona and New Mexico were also admitted so as to keep political powers more nearly balanced. When the admission bill came before the house of representatives April 3, 1890, the Democrats abstained from voting or answering to the roll call and raised the point of no quorum. Speaker Reed refused to sustain them; the vote was taken and resulted in the passage of the bill with but one dissenting voice. The act passed the senate on July 1st, was signed by the president July 3d and Idaho, her people having adopted at the November election the constitution signed at Boise August 7th, was ready to enter forthwith upon her career as a sovereign state.

Though it is not expedient or consistent with the plan of this work that a detailed account of all railway projects to be incorporated, yet a faithful portraiture of the life and commercial activity of north Idaho's population is not possible without reference to a few of the efforts which have been made to solve the transportation problem. While the Pacific Northwest was in the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company, it was contended by the members and employees of that corporation that even a wagon road over the Rocky mountains was an impossibility. It fell to the lot of an American missionary, Dr. Marcus Whitman, to disprove this assertion. That was in 1843. Less than a decade later men of prominence in the west and railroad builders in the east began asking themselves whether the construction of a Pacific railroad might not prove feasible. Soon after the title to Oregon territory was settled between the United States and the British crown, in 1846, all exploring parties under the direction of the government were charged with the task of taking incidental observations and securing data which might help settle this question of feasibility. In time the conviction that a road was possible became fixed; indeed the question became rather which of several routes was the most practicable.

Before the end of the 'fifties Governor Isaac I. Stevens, of Washington territory, advanced the theory that at least three transcontinental railways would ultimately prove necessary, in the same report advocating that the northern route was the one which should first be utilized. During the 'sixties active work in the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad was begun, and by the dawn of the 'seventies it was so far along that the west generally was feeling the benign effects of the anticipated railway connections.

The question most intimately affecting north Idaho was "where will the line cross the territory?" There appeared to be three routes open to the company, each of which had its special advantages, one through the Coeur d'Alene pass, thence via Lake Pend Oreille; one through the Bitter Roots, by the Lolo pass, down the Clearwater and Snake rivers and by the Columbia to the sea; and one down Salmon river. A survey of this last was completed by Colonel DeLacy in the fall of 1872. Several advantages were presented by it, among them that it was one hundred and fifty miles shorter than via Pend Oreille lake; that it would always be below the snow line; that it would render possible a dry and permanent road bed; that its grade would be less and more uniform than any other; that it would be more nearly in the latitude of Bozeman pass; that it would draw some support from sources that would otherwise send their trade to the Union and Central Pacific or The Dalles and Salt Lake road; that it would open a promising mineral country. On the other hand a road following this course would take longer to construct than one on the more northerly route; its cost per mile would be much greater and for two hundred miles of the distance it woul pass through land of slight agricultural value.

The Pend Oreille route was objectionable, or supposed to be, on account of the low marshy ground over which the road must of necessity pass and on account of its length. The Lolo and Clearwater route was admittedly the best, provided the pass was practicable, a question which nothing but a survey could definitely answer. Several engineer corps were kept busy during the year 1872 endeavoring to solve the route problem, but before the company had made a decision the panic of 1873 came, effectually putting an end to all railway construction for the time being. Northern Pacific stock fell until it was regarded as next to worthless, and the road went into the hands of a receiver. Gradually, however, the company recovered itself, and by 1878 it was able to resume the work of constructing a road to the coast.

The failure of the Northern Pacific to build west in the early 'seventies had a very depressing effect upon the Northwest generally, and various were the reasons advanced for this failure by the discouraged and disheartened settlers. All sorts of evil motives were ascribed to the corporation, but the more intelligent, those who studied the financial situation and comprehended the magnitude of the work to be accomplished, were disposed to view the matter in a kindlier light and to consider the company not responsible for the inconveniences incident to the delay. Congress dealt patiently and generously with the corporation throughout its trials, passing in 1878 a bill renewing the land grants, which had expired by limitation. By the provisions of this act the company was to commence the construction of the road at or near the mouth of Snake river within nine months from the passage of the act and twenty-five miles were to be constructed eastwardly within one year thereafter and forty miles each succeeding year, and, including the extension westward, one hundred miles per annum were to be constructed somewhere on the line, after the first year; a line was to be built around the dalles of the Columbia within two and one half years and around the Cascades within two years; and the company was to take all freights from above or below without discrimination in rates, giving an equal chance to all freighters. In case it failed to construct a road around these barriers within the time limit, the company was to forfeit its grant down the Columbia from Umatilla. Subsequently the law was changed so as to allow the Northern Pacific to build north to the sound.

With the rejuvenation of the Northern Pacific in 1878 the people of north Idaho again became hopeful, believing that at last the darkness surrounding them was about to be disseminated and that the sun which would pierce the gloom and again brighten the land was the Northern Pacific. They also had hopes that the line would cross the Bitter Root range and come down the Clearwater, through Lewiston, thence along the Snake river to its mouth. The Lewiston Teller was the exponent of the opinion that this was a feasible route and through its columns its public-spirited and indefatigable editor, Alonzo Leland, renewed the agitation of the railway question. Mr. Leland was not alone in favoring a proposition to extend to the Northern Pacific an earnest petition to again explore the Bitter Roots with a view to utilizing if possible the Clearwater route. This request was formerly presented in 1879 by the people of Lewiston and vicinity, and despite the fact that the company had made several unsuccessful explorations in search of a feasible route, the wishes of the people were complied with, the company detailing H. M. McCartney to make the surveys from the western slope. The expenses of this expedition were paid by several prominent citizens of Lewiston, chief among whom was John P. Vollmer, who furnished three-fourths of the sum necessary. The exploring party, accompanied by guides, spent several weeks in the mountains making observations. The perseverance and public spirit of the men who placed the expedition in the field were partially rewarded for McCartney found that the construction of a line through the Lolo pass was not an impracticability, though it would require much more time than was possible to give it under the time limit placed upon the company by congress for the completion of the line. This was the substance of his report and very naturally the company announced that under these circumstances it would have to abandon the Clearwater route. It therefore immediately commenced the final survey of the route from the mouth of Snake river northward through the Pend Oreille pass, J. P. Vollmer, of Lewiston, receiving the contract for furnishing the survey stakes.

But the people of Lewiston and many other points in north Idaho had not been convinced of the impracticability of building a railroad across the Bitter Root mountains, holding that McCartney had not found the lowest pass in that range, and the activity displayed by the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company only urged them the more in their efforts to secure a railroad. The outcome of this feeling was the organization, at Lewiston, of the Idaho, Clearwater & Montana Transportation Company, composed of Alonzo Leland, Jasper Rand, I. N. Maxwell, C. A. Thatcher, C. C. Bunnell, John Brearley, A. McGregor, L. P. Brown, B. F. Morris, J. M. Crooks, W. C. Pearson, Charles E. Monteith, Joseph Alexander, Hazen Squier, William F. Kettenbach, Jerry Dorman and S. C. Hale, all residents of Nez Perces and Idaho counties. The organizers of this company freely admitted that they did not possess the capital to carry out their projects, the main one of which was the construction of a railroad across the Bitter Roots. They announced that their purpose was to make several surveys and if they found a feasible route to attempt to interest capital in the enterprise. And now we come to the most interesting feature of the whole Clearwater railway question.

There seems to have been a widespread impression among the inhabitants of north Idaho that a very low pass, whose existence was known only to the Indians and a few fortunate trappers, existed in the Bitter Root range. This was called the Skakaho pass and according to the meagre information passessed regarding it, was south of the Lolo. Its entrance from the Montana side was impossible to distinguish and its entrance on the western slope was so hidden from man's view that only a minute examination could result in its discovery. As the story went, the location of this pass was a secret possessed by few but through those it had been learned that the pass was easily approached from both east and west and was perfectly feasible for railroad purposes. The Indians were said to have used it as a winter route through the mountains. All agreed that nature had succeeded well in her efforts to thoroughly hide it from the curious world.

To discover and explore this mysterious pass was the task the Idaho, Clearwater & Mantana Transportation Company proposed to itself. Accordingly late in the summer or 1881, the company sent an exploring party under Alfred J. Beall in search of the hidden pass and a feasible route to and through it. On September 22d, after an absence of six weeks, Beall returned with the information that he had found the Skakaho pass, that it was only 4,550 feet above the sea and that the gradients to it from the west were very easy, the maximum being only 48 feet and the minimum 13 feet to the mile. Mr. Beall describes this route as "up the Clearwater to the Selway fork; up the Selway fork to Fast creek; up Fast creek to Loyal creek, and thence through the canyon." The pass was taken possession of in the name of the Idaho, Clearwater & Montana Transportation Company. He reported an excellent route through the pass and into Montana.

It is needless to say that this report created no little excitement for if the purported discovery proved genuine it would probably result in the Northern Pacific's changing its route. That it did receive the serious notice of that company is evidenced by the fact that Major Truax, an O. R. & N. engineer but really in the employ of the Northern Pacific also, as at that time these two corporations were under the same control, was sent to the Bitter Root mountains to make an exploration. The Beall report was placed in his hands and he was urged to make an examination of the Skakaho pass. Major Truax reported a total failure to find the Beall pass, as it now came to be named, after a careful examination of the mountain range. He also reported that the Lolo pass was less than 5,000 feet high, in opposition to the statements of McCartney that it was 7,500 feet. Traux said that there was a practicable railroad grade through the pass. He found that the maximum grade was less than 100 feet to the mile and that the maximum grade from the mouth of the middle fork of the Clearwater to where the road would leave Lolo creek was less than fifty feet. To construct a road over such a route would require an enormous amount of work, however, and much time, so that he believed it would be impracticable for the Northern Pacific to utilize the route then, as congress was insisting upon the company's living up to its contract to push the road to a rapid completion. The richest and most fertile part of north Idaho was, therefore, left as much isolated as ever and not until recent years did the northern part of the state really receive any great direct benefit from the building of the Northern Pacific railroad. The controversy over the Beall pass continued for many years after Truax made his report and not a few refused to believe in its non-existance. John P. Vollmer, an official of the Northern Pacific Railway Company since 1879, to whom we are indebted for access to many papers and considerable correspondence in the preparation of this chapter, gives it as his belief that the Skakaho pass does not exist and that the report of Beall was not based on work actually and honestly performed. Many attempts have been made to rediscover the famous pass, one by Mr. Beall himself, but so far all have ended in failure. From personal letters writted to Mr. Vollmer by the president of the Northern Pacific in the early 'eighties, the author is convinced that the Northern Pacific was desirous of adopting the Clearwater route to the Columbia and that if it had been practicable to build through the Lolo or any other pass within the time limit this route would have been chosen in preference to the northern.

It is a noteworthy fact that in recent years the company has built a line up the Clearwater to Stites, encouraging the hope that some day, when money may be obtained at a much lower rate of interest than it now commands, it will extend this Clearwater Short Line over the Bitter Roots to a connection with its main line and down the Snake to the Columbia, giving Nez Perces and Idaho counties the benefit of direct trans-continental communication.

Hardly had hope of relief from the Northern Pacific failed before the residents of north Idaho were encouraged to look in another direction for aid. The Oregon Short Line was building westward through the southern part of the territory at this time. It desired very much to reach the ocean, while the O. R. & N., building through eastern Oregon and over the Blue mountains, was very desirous of getting into southern Idaho. The Burnt river canyon was the only practicable route for the O. R. & N. It was likewise the only route for the Oregon Short Line to reach the sea, except by Snake river canyon to the mouth of that stream, thence down the Columbia. The Burnt river pass was of such contour that both railways could not well occupy it; and it was not definitely known that the Snake river route was not preferable anyway. Early in 1883 a survey was undertaken to determine the feasibility of the latter course. Engineer Moscript was entrusted to make the survey in a southerly direction, while Chief Engineer Clark, starting at the mouth of Burnt river, should survey northward to meet him. After completing their task the two parties came to Lewiston, where they reported that the distance between that town and Burnt river was 187 miles, that the maximum grade of any one mile in the survey was less than twenty feet, the average being not more than six of seven, but there were no curves to exceed six degrees, and that the surveying parties saw no sign of snow slides. Mr. Clark was highly pleased with the route. He said a road could be built, he estimated for one-third less than the cost of construction through Burnt river canyon and over the Blue mountains. An approximate location survey was completed in September of that year confirming Clark's report and the residents of Nez Perces and Idaho counties entertained not unreasonable hopes that they might have a railroad in the near future.

But they were doomed to disappointment. Arrangements were effected between the O. R. & N. Company and the Oregon Short Line, by which both roads were to build to Huntington and join each other, dividing the profits on an agreed basis. The fact that north Idaho need not hope for any immediate relief from the Oregon Short Line was officially communicated in July, 1884, by a letter from a Union Pacific officer to Alonzo Leland, from which some extracts are here given as follows:

Dear Sir: Yours of the 21st ult. was found here on my return from a two weeks' absence in the east. I can well understand the interest your people feel regarding the extension of the Oregon Short Line down Snake river and I wish I could speak more encouragingly to you on the subject; but the fact is that the present demoralized market for railroad securities makes it impossible to raise money for any extended new constructions, and the attempt to do so would be simply suicidal. Our company will not engage in any new work at this time but merely complete works already begun to redeem its obligations in that behalf so far as it is committed. The Oregon Short Line track is at the mouth of Burnt river. As soon as the Snake river falls sufficiently we will complete the bridge at that place and lay the rails the remaining three and a half miles to Huntington, completing our part of the work, which we expect to accomplish about the last of September."

The joint traffic agreement and the depressed condition of railway stocks obtaining at the time were responsible for this disappointment, as the Union Pacific undoubtedly intended to build down the Snake and Columbia rivers to tidewater.

In 1886 the Union Pacific R. R. Company was again in the field with surveyors, this time to determine the distance and grades to be overcome by a railroad from Lewiston to some point on the Utah Northern, also the character of the country tributary to such road. The next spring a corps of engineers from Omaha started at the Lewiston end of the old Clark Snake river survey and proceeded to run a line down the north side of the Snake to the Columbia. Another party in the employ of the O. R. & N. took the field at Pomeroy, Washington, surveying towards Lewiston. A survey was also made from the Short Line road up the Weiser river, over the divide and down the Little and main Salmon rivers to connect with other surveys from Clearwater. There is little doubt but that the Union Pacific really intended undertaking some operations by which north Idaho would greatly profit, but its energies were again paralyzed in the fall of 1887 by an agreement entered into in New York city between its directors and those of the Northern Pacific Company, whereby the northwest was divided between the two corporations, all north of an east and west line passing through the mouth of Snake river, being given to the Northern Pacific. This arrangement effectually shut off during its continuance Lewiston and vicinity from hope centering in the Union Pacific, dashing to the ground the expectations engendered by the numerous surveys.

Still the Spokane and Palouse branch was being built at this time and but little doubt was entertained that it would be extended to Lewiston and beyond. The O. R. & N. also gave evidence, by its activity in surveying routes, of an intent to build into the Clearwater and Camas prairie countries; so the hopes of our citizenship were continually receiving fresh inspiration. But the Spokane and Palouse branch stopped at Genesee; the O. R. & N. came no nearer than Moscow; and the people of Nez Perces and Idaho counties were left to their isolation for more than a decade longer. The discovery of mineral wealth in northern Shoshone county had led to the building of railways into that section, however.

Another railway enterprise which promised partial relief to the southern portion of the Panhandle, but which failed to bring it was the Idaho Transit Company, organized in 1887 by J. P. Vollmer and others in Lewiston and Asotin. This company surveyed a line from Lewiston to Camas prairie, via Tammany hollow and Lake Waha, intending to connect that rich section by rail with the boat lines on the Snake river. Financial arrangements were made whereby the company might build the first twenty miles immediately and in fact, $50,000 were spent in grading the roadbed in Tammany hollow and in construction work. Mr. Vollmer tells us that the Northern Pacific Company was behind this movement from the first. He was the leader and main stockholder in the Transit company and he undertook the work with the understanding that the road, when completed, was to be sold to the Northern Pacific. The other stockholders were not aware of this, and of course the people generally were not. The Northern Pacific's idea in these negotiations was to get the road constructed and in its hands without inciting the rivalry of the O. R. & N. For some reason the Northern Pacific changed its plan, bought the Tammany hollow road before much work had been done on it, and abandoned the enterprise entirely.

During the latter 'eighties and the early 'nineties no little interest centered in the projects of the Midland Pacific Railway Company. The organizers of this corporation were Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, president;

William N. Coler, vice-president; S. L. Tate, second vice-president; J. A. Gargiulo, treasurer; and H. M. McDonald, secretary; and its capital stock was $15,000,000 preferred and $65,000,000 common. Its purpose was to build a road from Sioux Falls to the coast, which road was to find an outlet through the Illinois Central, Chicago & Northwestern and other lines to the east. The route outlined by the company for its own road was through northern Wyoming, skirting Yellowstone park on the south; down the Salmon river to White Bird; thence across through Camas prairie and on to Lewiston, thence to an easy grade into the Palouse country, which it was to cross in a northwesterly direction going to Seattle. Mr. Vollmer tells us that though the fact is not generally known a survey of this route was made and plans were matured for financing the enterprise. The crisis of 1893 and subsequent depression caused operations for the time being to be suspended, but it is possible that the scheme may yet materialize and shortly. Another survey which excited little comment at the time and of which few people have any knowledge, Mr. Vollmer tells us, was made by the Illinois Central Railway Company, also ambitious to reach the coast. This survey likewise passed through parts of Idaho and Nez Perces counties. It is surely significant that so many railway companies seeking a route to the seaboard, have looked toward the Snake river and its tributaries as most likely to furnish the route desired, and there certainly is much foundation for the hope that this rich portion of north Idaho may yet be traversed by a trans-continental line.

The chief sensation in Nez Perces county during 1898, aside from the war, was the building of the extension of the Spokane & Palouse branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad to Lewiston and the railroad war which grew out of this activity. Strange it seems to those on the outside that railway companies so often neglect the numerous calls to them for aid from communities suffering for lack of transportation and continue to turn a deaf ear to all proposals for years, then suddenly become so anxious for the advantages they have before seemed to spurn that they struggle and contend with each other to secure them. For thirty years the Clearwater country had been agonizing for a railroad. Its cry was unanswered. Then, when at last the Northern Pacific determined to do something for it, the jealousy of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company is aroused, and a war is the result. In this case, however, it is evident that both corporations had been fully aware of the prize that lay ungrasped before them, but for one reason or another neither was before able to make the effort necessary to appropriate it. Prior to 1895 the reservation exerted a deterrent influence and when that was no more the financial stringency was in the way. But the return of good times brought a renewal of activity in railway circles; the Northern Pacific's operations directed attention again to the rich field yet unentered in north Idaho, and the commencement of condemnation proceedings against all the Indian land owners on the north bank of the Clearwater between Potlatch creek and the reservation line precipitated hostilities between the rival corporations.

It is difficult to write of such matters with historical accuracy, for men who are able to speak with authority are generally believers in the adage that "Speech is silver but silence gold," and the outside world has to do considerable guessing and reasoning from appearances in attempting to arrive at conclusions as to what transpires in the conferences of railway magnates. However, President Mellen of the Northern Pacific, in an interview, gave his side of the case with considerable freedom. Among other things, he said that: "There are contracts which have been in existence since 1880, signed by the presidents of the two companies and ratified by both boards of directors, specifically assigning the Clearwater and much other territory in that region to the Northern Pacific." Upon these he relied as a basis upon which an agreement was to be affected, amicably settling the differences between the two roads. Portland, of course, favored the O. R. & N. In commenting on the situation the Oregonian said:

"Perhaps the most important territory in the Columbia basin, still unoccupied by railways, is the Clearwater valley. Here is a territory in extent equal or nearly equal to the Palouse country,—the subject heretofore and still the subject of so much railway contention. It is a territory of enormous agricultural capabilities and may easily ship ten million bushels of wheat a year. It is also a great stock country, for the grazing lands in and about it are to prodigious extent, and it lies in the vicinity of great timber and great mining regions. The traffic of that country it would not be easy to overestimate, and, like that of other localities in the great basin of the Columbia, it will come down to Portland by the gradients on which the water flows.

"It is of the highest importance to that country, to the O. R. & N. as a property, to the city of Portland as the commercial entrepot and shipping port of the Columbia basin, that this territory be furnished with railway transportation through the O. R. & N. system. This will require the construction of perhaps one hundred miles of road east of Lewiston, and with it an extension of the Snake river line from Riparia to Lewiston, about seventy miles. It is all practicable, all easy."

To succinctly convey an idea of the controversy between the two railroads we cannot do better than to quote an interview given in July, 1899, by a high official of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company to the New York correspondent of the Spokesman-Review. It reads as follows:

"It is difficult to appreciate the merits of the Clearwater controversy without studying the map of the Clearwater country. There is a great deal of misapprehension regarding the points of contention between the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific. The former has now a line from Wallula to Riparia through the Palouse country. This line is not satisfactory, and so the company has projected a line between the points mentioned following the Snake river. The water course gives easy grades and a better route. At Alto on the present line, there is a three per cent. grade, so that practically all trains from Spokane and the north have to be broken up there. This will be avoided by the new line. The old line will then become merely a feeder for the Palouse country. Now there is no dispute, as generally supposed, over this new line along the Snake river, the Northern Pacific rather favoring its construction. This line the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company has about completed. What the Northern Pacific objects to is a continuation of this line, as projected, along the Snake river from Riparia to Lewiston, where the Oregon Navigation now operates a line of steamers. .

"The Northern Pacific has a line from Moscow to Lewiston, to which the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company has no objection, but is building lines east of Lewiston in the Nez Perces and Camas prairie districts, to which the O. R. & N. seriously objects, because the Northern Pacific has made no arrangements with it for hauling traffic from this rich country.

"The O. R. & N. will not only build the surveyed line, from Riparia to Lewiston, but will also build east of Lewiston and fight the Northern Pacific in the Nez Perces and Camas prairie districts. It believes that the Northern Pacific has not been fortunate in the selection of its routes and discounts its threats to subsequently parallel the Riparia-Lewiston line. One who knows the value of the Nez Perces and Camas prairie territory can easily understand how the two companies have got into such a dispute over it, for it promises to rank with the Walla Walla and Palouse sections in the richness and abundance of its wheat fields and other agricultural resources.

"For the present there can be no open collision because the Northern Pacific has its lines east of Lewiston to complete and the O. R. & N. has its Riparia-Lewiston line to build. When these are constructed, unless by that time a traffic arrangement has been agreed upon, the fight between the two companies will begin in earnest, and a fight of no mean proportions it will be.

"The O. R. & N. is so situated geographically that it cannot abandon the rich opportunities offered by the Clearwater country. Its line for the most part runs south of the Columbia river, and it cannot get a very valuable traffic from the country north of it. Its terminus is Portland, where it has large interests, and Portland's prosperity depends considerably upon its keeping open the channel from the richest wheat fields of the Pacific northwest.

"It has offered the Northern Pacific a short route via Connel, but the Northern Pacific wants more liberal considerations than the O. R. & N. deems reasonable or than are usually recognized. The Northern Pacific now has to take its freight to near Spokane and down again, and of course if it built right through west of Lewiston to its coast line it would have as short a route, or even shorter, than the O. R. & N. could offer it."

The controversy occasioned much activity on the part of both corporations in surveying for routes and negotiating for rights of way. The Northern Pacific sought to bring its adversary to terms by threatening not only to parallel its proposed line up Snake river to Lewiston, but if necessary to do likewise with the road down the Columbia to Portland. The O. R. & N. by purchasing as much of the right of way up the north side of Clearwater as it could and instituting condemnation proceedings for yard and depot grounds on the Silcott farm, opposite Lewiston, gave evidence of its intention to push into the Clearwater country. Both companies were active in surveying east of Lewiston, and both were searching for passes through the Bitter Roots and examining those already found. The Northern Pacific was pushing with great energy its construction work on the Cleawater Shirt Line extension, and it was reported that in April, 1899, the road practically completed as far as the Big Eddy, where a a cut had to be made. Work was also being pushed vigorously on the Lapwai spur, which it was at first intended to extend into Camas prairie,—a scheme afterward abandoned on account of the high divide to the northward from Cottonwood.

In Portland, early in August, 1899, a conference took place between President C. S. Mellen, of the Northern Pacific, and E. H. Harriman, chairman of the Union Pacific board of directors, President A. L. Mohler of the O. R. & N. being also present. It was understood that the main question up for consideration was the Northern Pacific's ultimatum to the O. R. & N. that it should promise to keep out of the Nez Perces country and give the Northern Pacific full trackage rights down the Columbia from Lewiston to Portland, or have its line paralleled down the Columbia. What transpired at the conference was a secret; we do not know that its results have ever become fully known to the public, but it is certain that some kind of a truce was arranged whereby the O. R. & N. suspended operations in the Nez Perces country.

In the efforts of the press and people to gain as much information as possible about the railway situation, not a little weight was given to the utterances of the Orgonian, which was known to be in close touch with the O. R. & N. That journal in an issue appearing shortly after the conference used this language:

"There is at present a truce, for a given or terminable period, between the Union Pacific and Northern Pacific, as to territory in the Columbia basin, and construction on both sides is for the present suspended. But it will be resumed within a short time, either through rivalry or through agreement. The road along Snake river from Riparia to Lewiston will be built next year, either by the O. R. & N. alone, or by combination between the O. R. & N. and the Northern Pacific. The railroad problems of the Northwest are simply in abeyance for the present, but the inaction will not last long. Agreement is possible, in order to avoid the duplication of lines; and yet the nature of the rivalry is such that no basis on which agreement may be reached is apparent."

But subsequent events have gone to show that if not at this conference, then at some later one an adjustment of differences much more favorable to the Northern Pacific than the above would indicate was agreed upon. There was doubtless not a little truth in the Minneapolis Journal's statement based on the best information then obtainable and published early in 1900, averring that "when President Mellen was looking about for some feature that would encourage an arbitration of the difficulty he sought E. H. Harriman, chairman of the Union Pacific board of directors. Mr. Harriman never approved of the policy of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company that sought to invade the Clearwater country and obtain territory by conquest. In Mr. Harriman's opinion the Oregon road was going out of its way to continue a quarrel. But the man with the hoe was James J. Hill, and both Mellen and Harriman knew this fact only too well. As soon as Hill was left out of the calculation a settlement was speedily brought about. It was Harriman who proposed that the Oregon road abandon the Clearwater country. But he also decided that the Northern Pacific should pay its competitor for all the expenses incurred in making surveys and buying a right of way. This bill of expense was only a trifling sum of $50,000, and by its payment the Northern Pacific succeeds to the complete title to a right of way through the very center of Camas prairie, which will become more valuable every day. Thus did President Mellen make a concession that redounds to the everlasting benefit of the Northern Pacific."

It has been stated also that an important factor in effecting this truce between the rival companies was their common transportation enemy, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. That road was seeking a Pacific coast connection through the Lewiston valley and was so well fortified in its demands as to be able to force from the Northern Pacific very valuable concessions in the Northwest. The C. B. & Q. had surveying parties in north Idaho during the summer and fall of 1900, giving color to the belief that it would build through to the coast, most likely by the Salmon river route. It is understood, however, that this road is now under the control of the Northern Pacific, so that that company is apparently absolute master of the situation in the Clearwater country at present. Further activity in railway construction in that section has been confidently looked for ever since the completion of the road to Stites and is still expected. There can be little doubt but that the Northern Pacific Company will push its lines farther into that section in the near future.

But the first railway construction to effect the section of which we are treating will be the Lewiston-Riparia road. A dispatch from Portland bearing date of August 2, 1902, announced that the contract for the building of this road had been that day awarded by the O. R. & N. to Wren & Greenough, contractors, the agreement being that work should begin at once and be completed by April 15, 1903, including a steel bridge across the Clearwater at Lewiston to cost $350,000. The truth of the dispatch was vouched for a few days later by President Mohler of the O. R. & N., also by President Mellen of the Northern Pacific Company, who also gave the information that the road would be operated jointly by the corporations they represent.

Construction work was, however, delayed by a controversy between the two interests over the right of way, also, it is said, by the fear that legislation might be enacted seriously affecting the capitalization of the venture, but it is now claimed that all these difficulties are out of the way and that work will be resumed in the near future.

PART II.

HISTORY OF NEZ PERCES COUNTY

CHAPTER I.

CURRENT HISTORY.

In previous chapters have been detailed the causes which led to the settlement of Nez Perces county, the inception of that settlement, the founding of Lewiston and much of the earliest history of this important political entity. Its creation by legislative enactment has also been referred to and its earliest boundary lines described. It remains now to take up the thread of its history and as far as possible to trace the various events which have transpired among its people, the growth of its wealth and industries and the divers forces which have contributed to its social and industrial evolution.

The original boundaries of the county as given it by act of the Washington legislature in December, 1861, were modified by the Idaho legislature in 1867, which enacted that they should be as follows: "Beginning at the middle channel of Snake river, opposite the mouth of Clearwater river; and thence due north along the west line of Idaho Territory to the main divide between the waters of the Palouse river and Lahtoh or Hangeman's creek; thence easterly to the westerly line of Shoshone county; thence southerly along said line to the Clearwater river; thence up the south fork of Clearwater river to Lolo creek; thence with Lolo creek in an easterly direction to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence southerly along the summit of said mountains to the junction of Salmon river and Bitter Root mountains; thence in a westerly direction along the summit of Salmon river and Clearwater mountains to a prominent landmark known as 'Buffalo Hump'; thence westerly along said divide between the waters of White Bird creek and Camas prairie, to a point where the road leading from Lewiston to Slate creek crosses said divide; thence in a direct line to the foot of Ponto bar on Salmon river; thence in a direct line to a point on Snake river known as Pittsburg landing; thence down the channel of Snake river to the place of beginning." This extensive area in 1870 contained a white population of 1,588, which, however, increased during the next decade to 4,583.

During the late 'sixties and early 'seventies Nez Perces county was sharing in that transition from mining to agriculture and stockraising which we have before mentioned in connection with north Idaho in general and this portion of the inland empire. It shared also in the relative depression which visited the country when the golden days were over, yet considering its youth it had a goodly number of wealthy and well-to-do men within its limits as shown by the Signal's list of persons paying taxes on property valued at one thousand dollars or over in 1872, which list, for the sake of preserving as far as possible the names of those who at the time occupied positions of prominence in industrial circles, and were thechief wealth holders of the county, we reproduce as follows:

Levi Ankeny, $23,200; L. B. Boise, $1,500; John Brearley, $4,100; Bunker & Squier, $2,850; J. J. Bonner, $1,600; C. C. Bunnell, $5,000; A. Benson, $4,510; Crites & Curry, $1,650; C. P. Coburn, $5,585; Curry & Holbrook, $1,375; Cook & Shultz, $1,240; H. Crites, $1,200; C. Cooper, $2,635; Cummings & Company, $2,000; Grostein Binnard, $20,000; A. Gilman, $1,500; James Gage, $3,160; Hung Wan Chung, $2,500; Hexter & Brother, $9,000; Harris & Story, $1,550; McGregor, $1,677; George Mitchell, $1,140; M. A. Kelly, $8,310; J. Karney, $1,590; Leland & Rowley, $1,400; C. Le Francois, $9,565; Loewenberg Brothers, $17,400; Wesley Mulkey, $6,555; R. J. Monroe, $4,800; McElwee, $1,000; John Proctor, $2,720;

J. Perrault, $3,640; Rowley & Leach, $1,550; H. W. Stainton, $1,450; P. Sholl, $4,300; S. S. Slater, $1,666; T. Schenck, $1,188; John Silcott, $1,490; A. W. Shumway, $1,080; Tremble & Company, $1,600; C. A. Thatcher, $9,165; S. C. Thompson, $4,300; J. P. Vollmer, $2,542; S. W. Whitfield, $1,100; E. Weisgerber, $2,150; C. Walker, $1,125; C. Wintsch, $3,000; T. H. Worden, $3,645; P. B. Whitman, $1,800.

In January, 1873, a bill was introduced into the Idaho legislature cutting off a portion of Nez Perces and adding it to Idaho county. Already Idaho county had seven thousand square miles of territory or approximately that, and it was proposed to give it over four thousand more, leaving to Nez Perces county only fifteen hundred square miles, exclusive of the Indian reservation. As the territory proposed to be transferred contained several old farming settlements, four prominent mining camps, 450 inhabitants and about $185,000 worth of taxable property, it was but natural that the citizens of the county from which the territory was to be taken should offer vigorous opposition. But the friends of Idaho county colluded with the representatives from Lemhi, Boise and Ada counties, giving them each a small slice from the eastern and southern portion of its original domain. It was a shrewd move and so adroitly managed that Idaho county succeeded in securing the passage in both branches of the legislature of a bill by which it exchanged twelve hundred square miles of territory of no special value to itself for about 4,500 square miles from Nez Perces county. Fortunately, however, for the taxpayers of the latter political division, the bill was vetoed by Governor Bennett.

Many causes of discouragement were operative among the people of Nez Perces county during the year 1873. Hard times and lack of a market for products were exerting their baneful influence upon the farming communities, where, however, abundant crops were being garnered. To add to the general discomfiture, the Indians, who afterward took the war path under Joseph, were showing signs of hostility, going so far, it was said, as to debate among themselves, when intoxicated, the chances of success in committing depredations upon the whites. To their boldness not a little was contributed by the removal of the mounted troops from the garrison at Lapwai. The newspapers called attention to the danger and the men of Lewiston responded by organizing on the evening of March 29th a military company of 107 members, with Hazen Squier as captain, John M. Dormer, first lieutenant, Isaac Kipp, second lieutenant, George Young, orderly sergeant, and a full quota of minor officers.

The ensuing two or three years brought little amelioration in conditions. The financial stringency continued and the uncertainty and apprehension incident to the Indian difficulties were still exerting their depressing influence, nevertheless throughout this seemingly unprogressive period, the foundations of future development were being laid, and the country was getting ready for the dawn of a brighter day, when the incubus of doubt and dread should be removed.

Notwithstanding the various discouragements and the danger of an Indian outbreak, which, strange to say, did not lead to adequate preparation for defense on the part of either the citizens or the military, while it had its injurious effect upon industry, the country made rapid strides forward in 1876, especially that part north of the Snake river, or what is now embraced in Latah county. A correspondent of the Oregonian, writing in the spring of 1877, stated that after an extensive tour of eastern Oregon, eastern Washington and north Idaho, he had found the prospects in Nez Perces county, and in Whitman county, Wyoming Territory, contiguous to it, especially bright. Their population was rapidly increasing, and they were being encouraged to engage in wheat raising by the fact that the soil was especially suited to that industry, and that the Oregon Steam Navigation Company had made a liberal reduction in the charges for transporting the product. The same writer also refers to the rapid growth of the sheep industry and states that the amount of flax seed shipped from Nez Perces and Whitman counties indicates that that product will become one of the sources of wealth of that section. "It is observable also," he continues, "that among the people settling there the regard for schools, churches and all facilities for general intelligence and improvement is as high as that which characterizes the American people everywhere."

Of course the Indian war paralyzed industry in this and Idaho counties during its continuance, greatly retarding all industrial operations, also in contiguous counties of the territory and of Washington. Farmers were obliged to take their families to places of security in the towns, and those on the frontier, miners and stockmen alike, in many instances left their work entirely, remaining away during what would otherwise have been the busiest season. Even where there was no real danger, rumors and false reports kept the settlers continually on the qui vive, and an occasional panic would send them pell mell to the nearest port of safety, leaving their places to take care of themselves. Unfenced grain fields were destroyed and all growing products which required cultivation after seeding were neglected. The presence of the troops, however, settled the market problem for the time being.

The presence of the troops had another good effect also in that it gave the people a feeling of confidence during the Bannock and Piute war of 1878, in eastern Oregon. The baptism of fire the citizens of north Idaho had just passed through resulted in their being quite well supplied with arms and ammunition; the companies of volunteers formed during the Nez Perces outbreak were another safeguard, and these, together with the martial spirit of the people, were sufficient to check any turbulent spirit among the reservation Indians.

The effect of the war is plainly shown in the assessor's census for 1878, which shows that out of a population of 2,793, the number of voters was 859, making the ratio between total population and voters entirely too small. The women and children had moved to other communities and others who would have settled in the county were deterred from so doing, making the number of adult males disproportionately large. Thorn creek precinct had 413 inhabitants and 141 voters; Paradise, 691 and 203; Palouse Bridge, 419 and 142; Pine creek, 117 and 37; Camas creek, 61 and 26; Lake, 98 and 45; Lewiston, 994 and 265. The number of horses was shown to be 3,672; of cattle, 3,925; of mules, 276; of hogs, 2,785; of sheep, 14,960. The valuation of real estate was $180,138; of personal property, $327,504; the total valuation $507,642, and the number of taxpayers, 577. The increase in the property valuation over that of the preceding year was nearly $200,000.

During the winter of 1879 a slight misfortune befell the county, which was described by The Teller in the following language:

"On Saturday last (February 23d) a regular chinook visited us at this place. One had visited the foothills south and west of us a day or two previously and caused much of the snow to melt and run off into the gulches and valleys. On Monday the Clearwater was full from bank to bank with floating ice, and this continued, except at intervals, until late on Tuesday, and even on Wednesday much ice went down the river. The Lapwai, Sweetwater, Hatwai and Potlach creeks were much swollen, also the Asotin and Alpowa creeks on the Washington side. Small gulches and ravines discharged vast quantities of water and some of them much debris and small rocks. Roads were in many places rendered entirely impassable by reason of the road beds being washed out in many places. Small bridges were washed away. The mails on the different routes leading to Lewiston failed of reaching here on time, save the Mount Idaho, and the northern mail did not depart until Wednesday noon owing to ice in the Clearwater.

"At 3 o'clock P. M. on Monday the saw and grist mill at the Lapwai agency with a considerable quantity of wheat were undermined and swept away into and down the Clearwater. Two men, Nicholson and Toombs, being in the mill at the time it was swept away, were carried out into the river and down it about a mile and a half before they could be rescued, and their ultimate escape from death was almost miraculous. Much other damage was done along the Lapwai creek. The Soldier canyon road was badly washed for about two miles and it will require the labor of forty men several days to repair it and make it as good as before. The flume of the Lewiston ditch above Lindsley's orchard was washed away and the ditch in many places filled with debris from the side gulches. The boom at the saw mill was broken and about 100,000 feet of logs were carried away; also the wood boom above the mill, and about 125 cords of wood were lost. The stage which left here for Walla Walla on Monday with mails, express and one passenger was upset at the third crossing of the Alpowa. The driver and passenger were swept down the stream about 150 yards before they could get out. The two lead horses became detached and got out of the stream while the wheel horses, stage, mails and express were carried six hundred yards and were rescued by the Indians. The express box with about $2,000 in it drifted to within twenty feet of the Snake river, where it became lodged against some willows and was found on Tuesday. The whole section was damaged considerably and the loss will amount to many thousands of dollars."

Yet it is certain that the year 1879 was on the whole one of progress and prosperity. Considerable government money was expended in improving the Clearwater and Snake rivers, congesting temporarily in some measure the local circulating medium. The Sheepeater disturbances in Idaho county had been quieted by the defeat and capture of the hostiles, permitting the vanguard of the homeseeking army to advance farther inland. The Lewiston land office, recently established, reported in June that since March 1st preceding, there had been filed in the district embracing all Idaho north of the Salmon River range 854 pre-emptions, 437 homesteads and 306 timber claim entries, an aggregate of 1,597 filings, each embracing a quarter section. Those already established in the business of agriculture and cattle raising were meeting with splendid success, and the numbers of those seeking to obtain homesteads and join their ranks continued undiminished—were increasing rather.

But the opening of the year 1880 was a somewhat unpropitious one. The spring was cold, rainy and disagreeable in the valleys, while in the hills and mountains the snow lay deep until far into the summer, being over four feet in depth on the Warren trail as late as the 15th of June. Neither did the middle life of the year bring any special encouragement to the agriculturist but rather the opposite, for the kindly warmth of the summer sun proved congenial not alone to man and his domestic friends but likewise to his loathsome and detested enemy, the grasshopper. Thousands of these voracious winged pests visited the country, harvesting the grain crops at an untimely season and desolating flower gardens, orchards, etc. Fortunately the omnivorous insects were not as thorough in their work of destruction as they sometimes are and only certain localities were visited by them. But the agricultural development of the country had begun in earnest and not the presence of a temporary plague nor the absence of speedy transportation nor the scarcity of money nor any other obstacle which labor and patience could surmount was potent to stay the onward movement.No observing person could ride out through the country at intervals without noticing the signs of progress on every hand. In 1879 the Waha prairie was almost unoccupied, the only indication of its being the dwelling place of man being a cabin here and there contiguous to or surrounded by a small patch of enclosed land. Before 1880 had passed into history the old trails and roads were rendered no longer passable on account of the fences of the ranchmen and the traveler must perforce traverse the long lanes leading across the valley.

It must be remembered that all this development was wrought in spite of many trying conditions. While the mining wealth of the country was by no means exhausted, that which could be garnered by the poor man had long since found its way into the pocket of the miner and thence into the world's marts of trade. Capital is never a pioneer. However heroic a man may be he needs the spur of necessity to force him into the loneliness and uncertainty and danger and privation to be met in the van of civilization's march. Without the capital to develop them, the deep lying wealth materials must remain unutilized; without cheap transportation the markets of the world are closed to the isolated community. Speaking of the conditions obtaining during the winter of 1881 the Teller says:

"Probably at no time for ten years past has the first of January found the great mass of the farmers so destitute of money as during the present month—at least such is the burden of their song, and there are reasons for this. They strained every nerve the past season to raise a good surplus of wheat and flax in the confident hope that they could get it shipped to a paying market and get good returns before January arrived. But with few exceptions, the people of this section have not been able to get their wheat and flax off to a market, and while a few have sold to the agents of buyers who were sent out into the country and received a small payment to bind the sales, yet the great bulk of the value of their products has not yet been realized. They have grain in abundance but no money. This scarcity is seriously felt by the merchants, mechanics and laborers whom they owe. Patience and forbearance becomes necessary in such a crisis. These producers will work themselves out of the dilemma as soon as they have a fair show. The Walla Walla and Touchet valleys had a much better show, and money is reported to be plentiful among the farmers of those valleys. Our turn will come after a while, if we can hold fast and not be too exacting upon each other."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the fields of Clearwater country did their best for the farmer during the year 1881, even if the opportunity to turn their products into cash was tardy in coming and the ready liquidation of debts was for that reason rendered impossible. The only climatic drawback to agriculture this year of which we have found record was a very heavy hail storm, the severest ever experienced in this part of the country up to that time. It occurred on the 3d of June and though its duration was not greater than ten minutes, it lasted long enough to cut down fields of grain in places, to destroy gardens and to kill scores of domestic animals. Paradise valley, the Potlach creek country and other farming communities suffered damage aggregating hundreds of dollars, while at Elk City a Chinaman lost his life, being struck by a limb blown from a tree under which he was seeking shelter.

Comparatively insignificant though the industrial activities of the Nez Perces Indians were yet in our summary of the year 1881 we must give them credit for having added at least slightly to the wealth production of the county. The number of the tribe at this time seems to have been 2,036, of whom 257 were farmers. The Indian dwelling places consisted of forty-eight frame houses, one hundred and twenty-eight log houses, seventy-two cloth, eighteen skin and twelve bark lodges. Four thousand, seven hundred and thirteen acres of their reserve were in cultivation. The red men were the possessors of 12,696 horses, 870 cows, ten oxen, 1,500 other cattle, 675 swine and 1,200 domestic fowls. The sole product of their manufacturing skill consisted of about three hundred yards of matting.

Up to this time the legislative and judicial business of Nez Perces county had been transacted in a one-story frame building, back of the site which Alexander's general store now occupies, but the building had long been felt to be inadequate for the purpose and in January, 1882, the county commissioners purchased the old Luna property from Conrad Wintsch, designing to repair the building and fit it up to conserve the purpose of a county court house.

The annals of 1882 were darkened by the commission on Camas creek of a crime which for atrocity deserves rank with the murder of Magruder in 1863. The victims of this dastardly act were three Chinese miners who were delving for the precious metal on the creek at a point about seventeen miles above Palouse bridge. The perpetrator or perpetrators of the terrible crime burned the Chinese cabin and with it two of the bodies. The remains of the third victim, who is said to have been a highly educated, intelligent representative of his race, were found buried in the snow. They were in a state of perfect preservation, owing to the cold, which was sufficient to freeze them. A bullet hole in the back, another in the left side of the head and a gash across the throat showed at once the manner of the Mongolian's taking off and the extreme atrocity of his murderer. The only incentive to the enactment of this terrible tragedy seems to have been robbery, for the Chinamen were supposed to have several hundred dollars in gold dust at the time of their demise, no trace of which was discoverable around their burned and despoiled place of abode. Abe Galloway, who discovered the charred remains of the burned cabin, was given an examination which resulted in his being completely exonerated from any complicity in the crime. Although Governor Neil on behalf of the territory offered a reward of $500 each for the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties and although a determined effort was made to solve the mystery, the murderer or murderers have never been brought to justice.

During the fall of 1882 and the winter following a determined effort was made by the people north of the Clearwater to effect segregation from Nez Perces county and the formation of a new political division. As is usual in such movements the leading agitators were men who hoped to gain some financial benefit by the establishment of a new county seat. The ambitious town in this instance was Moscow, in the rich and prosperous Paradise valley. Petitions were circulated and numerously signed, praying for the erection of the proposed new county and these called forth counter petitions among the south side residents, who admitted that county division at some time was inevitable, but considered this movement premature.

Then, too, it was urged that as soon as northern Idaho should be attached to Washington a readjustment of county lines would become necessary, therefore the people desiring to be clothed with the authority to organize a separate local government ought to await incorporation into the territory of Washington before pressing forward their schemes. So numerous were the remonstrators and so strong their opposition that the bill for the new county could not be carried in the legislature.

Disappointed in this project the friends of the movement, through Councilman Taylor, introduced a bill providing for a special election to be held on the first Monday in June in Nez Perces county at which the advisability of relocating the county seat should be submitted to a vote of the people. The bill was, of course, introduced in the interest of Moscow. One of its provisions was that if the electors decided to remove the county seat from Lewiston, the place selected should deposit with the treasurer a sum sufficient to erect new county buildings and pay all the expenses of removing the records, etc., to the new seat of government. The bill passed both houses. A lively campaign followed, both parties to the contest making a thorough canvass and arguing the question in all its phases with spirit. The result on election day was in favor of Lewiston, that town receiving 922 votes whereas its rival, Moscow, received only 642 votes. Lewiston had a majority in ten out of the thirteen princincts of the county.

The year 1884 seems to have been a rather quiet one in Nez Perces county, the Coeur d'Alene country being the chief center of attraction in north Idaho at that time. Autumn, however, brought an abundant yield of wheat not alone in Idaho but in the cereal belt of the neighboring territory of Washington also. The crop was sufficiently large to have enabled the farmers to liquidate practically all their debts had the prices been good. The great bane of pioneer communities, lack of adequate transportation facilities, was militating against these, however, and many ranchmen began discussing the advisability of turning their farms into stock ranches.

During this year General Miles testified his faith in the good intentions of the Nez Perces Indians by ordering that thereafter Fort Lapwai be treated as an outpost of Walla Walla and garrisoned by a lieutenant and only twelve men of the second cavalry. The remainder of that company he sent to Fort Boise, making that a four company post. The faith of General Miles was not shared by the settlers in the vicinity of of the reservation, who remonstrated earnestly, pointing out that the Nez Perces were still a strong tribe and that there were many among them who could be easily incited to acts of hostility. But the subsequent good conduct of the Nez Perces has justified the faith of Miles.

As illustrating the rapidity with which Nez Perces county was growing at this period of its history we have taken a few figures from the tax roll summaries, according to which the total taxable property, real and personal, in the year 1882 was $1,327,516; in 1883, $1,817,229; in 1884, $2,050,546; the number of taxpayers in 1882 was 1,560; in 1883, 1,832; in 1884, 2,080.

The year 1885 was one of uninterrupted tranquility but 1886 brought a movement for the formation of a new county with, no doubt, some of the intense interest and bitterness usually attending such efforts. The proposition was to take for the new political division the southern portion of Shoshone county and that part of the Nez Perces lying between the Lolo and the south middle forks of the Clearwater. As an alternative in case this movement did not meet with favor it was suggested that the settlers in southern Shoshone might seek annexation to either Nez Perces or Idaho counties. The reason of their discontent with their existing political affinities was the distance to Murray, their county seat. The proposal seems not to have been carried into a definite effort before the legislature, but agitation for redress of grievances has never solely died out and at this writing the erection of a new county to embrace the inhabitants of southern Shoshone is a living issue.

The next few years in Nez Perces county were years of quiet and steady advancement along all lines, very little transpiring which has a sensational flavor when reduced to narrative. The two questions most deeply agitating the public mind during this period, the problem of securing railroad communication with neighboring states and the world and the annexation movement, have been discussed at some length in previous chapters. It is needless to state that citizens of Nez Perces county were equally with other citizens of the territory of Idaho solicitous for the early admission of their commonwealth to statehood, taking their full part in the initiatory steps in that direction. This also has been treated in its proper place. In the general prosperity obtaining throughout Idaho during the few years preceding its admission to statehood Nez Perces county had its full share. Crops were good, the outlook in the spring of 1888 being especially faorable. As the Teller informs us reports of great promise of good and large yields of grain came in from every section of the Clearwater country, from Lapwai, Sweetwater, Tammany, Asotin, Camas Prairie, Weipe, etc.

Aside from the larger questions above mentioned the one political movement to agitate the general public was a renewed effort to secure the removal of the county seat from Lewiston to Moscow. The course pursued by the friends of Paradise prairie's ambitious business center was the same as that formerly taken, namely the circulation of petitions, agitation through the local press, etc. The friends of Lewiston again took up the gauntlet and so effective was their opposition that a change of tactics by the Moscow people became necessary. Through Delegate Dubois and Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, they secured the introduction into both houses of congress of a bill creating Latah county out of the northern portion of Nez Perces county. The measure carried despite the protests and efforts of its opponents in the southern part, becoming a law May 14, 1888.

In June, 1889, Miss Alice C. Fletcher arrived at the Lapwai agency to take charge of the work of allotment of lands to the Indians in accordance with the provisions of the Severalty act of February 8, 1887, which provided that each head of a family on the reservation should receive a quarter section of land; each single person over eighteen, one-eighth section; each single person under eighteen then living or who might be born before the president's order directing the allotment, one-sixteenth of a section. Her arrival and the inception of this work was a favorable sign as it proved the animus of the government to open the reserve as soon as possible. The people of the surrounding country looked upon the movement with much favor, hoping that the incubus upon progress arising out of the ownership of large tracts of valuable agricultural land by an unprogressive and comparatively degenerate people would soon be removed, but it was full half a decade before the work of opening the reserve was accomplished.

With the opening of the prosperous year 1890 began a determined effort to secure transportation facilities for the Clearwater country. In February the citizens of Lewiston held a mass meeting in the Vollmer block at which the railroad question was thoroughly discussed and a committee appointed to formulate a plan of action. A meeting was also held at Nelson's schoolhouse, at which the citizens manifested their willingness to raise a bonus of $25,000 in their neighborhood to help bring a railroad to the country. By April a bonus of $50,000 had been subscribed, which, with the right of way from Lewiston to the reservation line, a distance of seven miles, was offered the Northern Pacific Company to extend their Spokane and Palouse branch to Lewiston. Later the subsidy was increased to $65,000 and still later to over $100,000. The railroad officials promised to build the extension during 1890, and gave earnest of their bona fide intentions by investing quite heavily in Lewiston real estate, but for some reason the road was not built as agreed, so the company lost this magnificent subsidy and the people the benefit of the road for several years more.

The good year 1892 was darkened in Nez Perces county during its final month by the enactment of a tragedy which led to another, leaving a still darker stain upon the county's annals. The facts as we have been able to glean them from the rather meager records at hand are as follows: Albert B. Roberts, the author of the first homicide and the victim of the second, had been working for several months in the employ of one John Sutherland and his brother, residence in the vicinity of Leland. When the Sutherlands discharged Roberts they held back five dollars of his pay, alleging that he had stolen twenty dollars from them. A quarrel ensued, of course. Roberts went to Leland and when John Sutherland visited that town a few days later the trouble was renewed. Roberts demanded the five dollars he claimed was due him; his late employer refused; angry words followed which soon led to blows. During the melee Roberts threw his right arm about Sutherland's neck and while he had his adversary thus held in a comparatively helpless position, drew a revolver and discharged it three times into Sutherland's abdomen, killing him almost instantly. Roberts was arrested and brought to Lewiston.

The sequel proves that the Clearwater country had not yet progressed so far in its development of civil institutions and orderly society but that there was danger of a temporary lapse, when the occasion seemed to warrant it, into the well known practices of the vigilantes of its early history. On the 2d of January, 1893, a masked mob visited the jail in which Roberts was confined and compelled Deputy Sheriff W. W. Wright to open the doors. Proceeding to the cell of their intended victim, they gagged him so that he could make no outcry, then took him into the office and bound him securely hands and feet, meanwhile keeping strict guard over the deputy sheriff and one Timothy Ryan, who happened to be his bedfellow on this particular night. After giving their companions time to get a safe distance away, the guard thrust Wright and Ryan into a room, closed the door and hastily retreated into the open. The deputy and his companion ran to their rooms, secured their revolvers and fired several shots in succession to alarm the sheriff. That officer, together with Sheriff-elect Mounce soon joined in the chase. The mob, however, made good their escape and the identity of none of them was ever discovered. In due time the body of their victim was found in Mulkey's mill, still warm but lifeless.

The year 1893 was an important one in the history of Nez Perces county, and notwithstanding the fact that the sun of financial prosperity throughout the United States began to be eclipsed during the twelvemonth, several events transpired looking toward the general progress of this section. Not the least among these was the passage in the Idaho legislature of a bill establishing a state normal school at Lewiston and appropriating for its use fifty thousand acres of the one hundred thousand given to the state by the United States government for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of such institutions.

A matter of even greater moment to the industrial development of the county was the successful negotiation of a treaty with the Nez Perces Indians whereby their reservation was to be opened for settlement. In December, 1892, a commission appointed by the president, which commission consisted of Robert Schleicher of Lewiston, chairman, Cyrus Beede, of Iowa, and James Allen, of Washington, D. C., convened at Lewiston with authority to offer to the Indians for their lands as liberal prices as ever were offered to any tribe by the United States. For more than two months the commission labored strenuously to secure the opening of the reserve, but they were opposed in their efforts by certain outsiders who hoped to gain personal benefits through maintaining the existing conditions of things and by wealthy Indians who wished the ranges for the pasturing of their herds of ponies. On February 19th, the commission adjourned sine die. They had succeeded in securing the signatures to the treaty of only 118 adult males, out of a total of 407. Negotiations were resumed shortly, however, and in April the commission authorized the statement that enough signatures had been secured to confirm the treaty.

But the work of the commissioners was of no practical avail until the treaty negotiated by them should be ratified by congress. A bill for that purpose was introduced into the house by Representative Sweet in June, 1894. The measure was referred to the committee on Indian affairs and though it was reported back favorably by the majority, a minority report was also submitted by Representative Holman, the "Great Objector," making it uncertain whether the bill could be reached that session. Senator Shoup saved the day by a shrewd parliamentary move. He succeeded in tacking onto the general Indian appropriation measure an amendment providing for the ratification of the treaty and the appropriation of the necessary funds. Objector Holman waged aggressive warfare against the amendment but was unsuccessful in defeating it, and it was enacted:

"That the said agreement (referring to the treaty) be and the same is accepted, ratified and confirmed.

"That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,668,622, of which amount the sum of $1,000,000 shall be placed to the credit of the Nez Perces Indians of Idaho in the territory of the United States and shall bear interest at the rate of five per centum per annum. Said sum of $1,668,622, together with the interest on said sum of one million dollars shall be paid to the Indians or expended for their benefit, as provided in articles two, three, four and eight of said agreement, out of which sum the secretary of the interior shall pay to the heirs, administrators or legal representatives of William C. Langford, deceased, the sum of $20,000, upon a release and relinquishment to the United States by said heirs, administrators or legal representatives of all right, titles and interest in or claim either legal or equitable, in and to the tract of land described in article two of said agreement as therein provided. Provided that none of the money paid said Indians, nor any of the interest thereon, shall be or become liable to the payment of any judgment or claim for depredations committed by said tribe or any member thereof before the date of said agreement.

"That immediately after the issuance and receipt by the Indians of trust patents for the allotted lands, as provided for in said agreement, the lands so ceded, sold, relinquished and conveyed to the United States shall be opened to settlement by proclamation of the president and shall be subject to disposal only under the homestead, townsite, stone and timber and mining laws of the United States, excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each congressional township, which shall be reserved for common school purposes and be subject to the laws of Idaho: Provided, That each settler on said lands, shall before making proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States for the lands so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $3.75 per acre for agriculture lands, half of which shall be paid within three years from the date of the original entry; and the sum of $5.00 per acre for stone, timber and mineral lands, subject to the regulations prescribed by existing laws; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the revised statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

"That the commissioner of Indian affairs be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a competent surveyor for a period not exceeding two years, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 per annum for the purposes stipulated in article four of said agreement, and he is also authorized to purchase two portable saw mills, as provided in article four.

"That the secretary of the interior is hereby authorized to examine the claim of those Indians who served the United States under General O. O. Howard in the late war with Joseph's band of said tribe, as scouts, couriers and messengers, referred to in article ten of said agreement, and also as to the claim of Abraham Brooks, mentioned in said article, and report his findings and recommendations to congress."

In 1900 an act was passed amendatory to the bill just quoted repealing the proviso that homesteaders should be required to pay for their lands the sum of $3.75 per acre and allowing all bona fide entrymen under the homestead laws to obtain title upon payment of only such fees as were required of all homesteaders.

It is needless to state that the opening of the reservation was hailed with delight and enthusiasm by the citizens of Lewiston and Nez Perces county. Coming, as it did, at a time when financial darkness overshadowed the land, the distribution of over six hundred thousand dollars in cash among the Indians, much of which speedily made its way into the hands of the merchants, was an important factor in keeping the wheels of industry oiled. But of vastly greater moment to the present and prospective development of the county was the fact that the power of a lethargic, nonproducing and conservative people to hinder progressive movements was broken forever, and in the room of the shiftless, nomadic red man must soon come the thrifty homebuilder to garner the rich treasurers of the fertile reservation soil. The land passed rapidly into hands of men whose interests led them to favor instead of retard the construction of railroads and the inauguration of commercial enterprises. The wealth of agriculture, of pasturage, of timber and of minerals, in which the reservation acres were known to abound, would be developed to the fullest and brought forth to assist in the upbuilding of commerce, educational establishments, the arts and refinements of civilization and in the working out of the Clearwater country's highest destiny.

The effect of the opening upon the Indians probably received little attention from settlers in their vicinity. The price paid them for the lands was sufficient to keep them all in luxury for the rest of their days, and if carefully conserved and bequeathed to their posterity to provide against want during at least the next generation of time. That the money will be so husbanded is doubtful and the destiny of the tribe when their resources are gone and they are no longer the wards of the government is for the anthropologist to foresee if he can and for the philanthropist to help determine as far as he may be able. Certain it is that the red man cannot always live on the bounty of the government or the funds arising from the sale of his possessory rights in the soil of his forefathers. The day must come when he must live by his own unaided efforts or perish and perhaps the present is as good a time as any in which to throw him upon his own resources, teaching him by bitter experiences, if need be, what he will not learn in any other way, that if he would enjoy the fruits of industry he must endure its pains and sacrifices.

But we must return to our current review of events in Nez Perces county taking up the thread where we left it in 1893. The county did not fail to provide for its proper representation at the Columbian exposition in Chicago, but while enroute the car containing the soil, grass and grain exhibits of this and several other counties of Idaho was burned and its contents destroyed. The fruits, however, arrived safely.

One event causing a great shock to the residents of the county transpired during the fall of this year, namely, the explosion in the steamer Annie Faxon, of which Harry Baughman was captain, causing the death of eight persons and the wounding of nearly every member of the crew. The vessel at the time of the accident was making a landing at a point below Almota and fifty miles down the river from Lewiston. So violent was the explosion that the vessel was practically blown to pieces, nothing being left above the hull but splinters. The cause of the accident probably was that the boiler was allowed to become dry.

In 1895 occurred what was perhaps the most terrible tragedy that has shadowed the fair name of Nez Perces county since the days of Plummer's gang. Waha lake was the scene and Sunday, May 19th, the date. One of the central figures in the tragedy was John Siers, a pioneer of that section and a successful stockman. In the early sixties he had entered into partnership with Joseph Shissler; fortune had smiled benignly on the partners and by industry and economy they became the owners of a large tract of land, one of the finest farms in the Clearwater country, also of extensive herds of cattle. As time passed other settlers were attracted to the favored region, among them Mrs. Mary E. Goddard, who settled on land adjoining Siers and Shissler's place, in 1884. Naturally the large stock interests of these pioneer cattlemen involved them in numerous neighborhood disputes, among them one of great bitterness with Mrs. Goddard.

The accidental death of Mr. Shissler in 1886 necessitated division of the estate, and Mr. Siers took the stock interests of the firm, leaving the realty to the Shissler heirs. He then leased the land, associating with him in this venture his former foreman, Frank Ward, who later became a son-in-law of Mrs. Goddard. Siers went east and remained until 1894, on which date he returned, dispossessed Ward and took possession of the property himself. He took up his abode in the old house, allowing Mrs. Goddard, who had resided with her daughter and son-in-law in a new house erected by the latter, to remain in possession of the same. About the middle of April Ward brought suit against Siers to recover $1,000 claimed to be due him, and the Shissler heirs also went into court to compel Siers to comply with the terms of the lease. While the suit was pending the property was placed in the hands of a receiver, who leased the place to Mrs. Goddard. Siers acquiesced, only asking for sufficient time to collect his personal effects, but when he attempted to do this he found that many of them were held by Mrs. Goddard as part of the estate. He appealed to the receiver, who sent Mrs. Goddard an order to turn over the property, which order was disobeyed by her. Siers again went to the receiver, and it was agreed that the difficulty should be adjusted the following Sunday in the presence of that officer, at the residence of Mrs. Goddard. On that Sunday the fatal affray took place. The tragedy and events leading up to it are described by one of the Lewiston newspapers of the time:

"Sunday morning about six o'clock, Siers, in company with his employes, Elmer Shorthill, Frank Kincaid, J. Manee and William Fay, departed from their temporary quarters at the Monroe farm for Lambert's place, about four miles distant, to secure some horses which were pastured there. Upon reaching the Shissler ranch the party stopped in front of the old house and Siers entered, returning shortly. At the barn yard the party again stopped to allow Mr. Siers to visit a man named Mott, who was sick and quartered in the granary. Siers said he wished to see about removing Mott to the Monroe place, and as he would probably need their assistance he asked his men to wait. Mott was a brother of Mrs. Goddard. He then passed through the gateway opening into the barn yard, leaving a rifle leaning against the fence, and proceeded onward. Siers had nearly reached the door when he was confronted by Ward, who held a pistol. A few words passed between them, and almost immediately Mrs. Goddard appeared, and, after engaging in a heated conversation with Siers, passed on toward the gate where the men were. She stopped about forty feet from Siers, who was between her and Ward, and addressed Siers. The latter turned toward her, and as he did so Ward fired two shots at him. Siers reached for his revolver and succeeded in returning the fire. Mrs. Goddard now rushed up, and, taking a revolver from her waist, placed the muzzle near Siers' back and fired several times in rapid succession. Siers fell forward, and as he did so Ward struck him over the head with his revolver. Siers expired instantly.

"At the commencement of the fight Fred Goddard, the thirteen-year-old son, appeared in the doorway and ordered the men at the gate to remain where they were, emphasizing this command with a rifle shot over their heads. Shorthill picked up Siers' rifle and, with the intention of assisting his fallen comrade, snapped the hammer at the combatants in the barnyard. The cap refused to explode, however. He then loaded the gun and again pulled the trigger, this time with more success, though the testimony exonerated him from any blame attaching to the death of the murderer, as it was proved that the bullet flew wide of the mark.

"Ward sank upon the floor upon reaching the house, and in falling discharged his pistol, the bullet from which grazed the limbs of Mrs. Boyer, who was standing in the doorway. Forty-eight hours later he died in excruiating agony. Mrs. Goddard was wounded, a pistol ball lacerating her right arm.

"Hundreds of neighbors and Lewiston people congregated at the scene of the terrible tragedy during the day, and excitement over the affair overshadowed all other interests. Coroner Strong impaneled a jury and on Monday a verdict was rendered, holding Ward, Mrs. Goddard and Fred Goddard responsible for Siers' death. Later Shorthill was arrested for murder and then for assault with intent to kill. At a fair trial he was completely exonerated and acquitted."

When the Goddard case came on for trial in the superior court there was begun one of the most memorable legal contests in the history of the county. Attorneys McNamee and Clagget conducted the case for the state, while Reid and Griffits appeared for the defense. Forty days were consumed in the taking of testimony and the making of arguments, etc., entailing upon the taxpayers an expense of many thousands of dollars. The defendants were acquitted, to the indignant surprise of hundreds who followed the testimony carefully.

On Monday, August 26, 1895, the first payment to Indians of moneys due them in accordance with the treaty began at the agency. The Lewiston banks established temporary quarters on the reservation for the purpose of cashing the checks, and it is stated that the Indians deposited with these institutions about one-third of their newly-acquired wealth, also that they acted honestly in liquidating their outstanding debts.

Speaking editorially of the events on this memorable time, the Teller in its issue of August 29th said:

"The past week has been one of active life in a commercial sense. Every channel of trade has been swelled to its flood tide. The impulse derived from the disbursement of Indian money has not yet subsided. Coming, as the revival did, at the beginnig of a season of general prosperity, Lewiston may reasonably expect a rapid development of neglected resources. One thing noticeable is the fact that the Indians use good judgment in making their purchases. Indian goods have always been shoddy goods in trade circles, but the Nez Perces have been selecting the best of everything this week. They have purchased largely of spring wagons, but they have avoided the cheaper goods, preferring to pay good prices for substantial family carriages. The payment of the Indian money proceeded very quietly all week at the agency. The red men were more indifferent than white men would have been had such a prize been ready for the latter for the simple asking. The sum of two hundred thousand dollars awaited the Kamiahs for a week while they deliberated over the preliminaries. At first they seemed nonplused by the final awakening to the fact that they would soon be surrounded by the whites and have to shoulder the responsibilities of the white men, and sent word that they had deeded no land and would therefore receipt for no money. They finally took a philosophic view of the matter, however, and decided to acquiesce.

"The Indians as a class have contemplated, secured and utilized this money with better judgment and more in accordance with true business principles than a chance selection of an equal number of white men would have done. This speaks well for their future. The foundation of civilization is true business thrift of the individuals of any community, and commercial prosperity is a natural trait of first importance in political economy."

When the news of the opening of the reservation spread abroad scores of prospective homesteaders flocked into the country, camping where they might and doing what they could to earn a subsistence. Only the better class came, as the fact that the land was expected to cost $3.75 per acre deterred the rougher and less thrifty element.

On November 18th, at 12 o'clock noon, the firing of a cannon at the local land office gave warning of the official opening of the reserve. As usual in such cases there was a great rush for choice locations, but the ruffianism so generally characteristic of these races for homes was conspicuous for its absence. The first claims were filed by Stephen Haaser for Colonel Hammel, Captin Tamblin and W. O. Human, old soldiers. A noteworthy event of the first day was the race for the quartz ledges on Eckert's butte, which for many years was supposed to be a veritable bonanza. J. L. Eckert and C. E. Holt were the winners, the latter securing first choice. Nezperce City, the new government townsite, was likewise the center of considerable interest. Great confusion obtained there for a while in the matter of selecting lots, but the friends of order finally effected an organization, and, on the suggestion of Dr. Morris, adopted a species of lot drawing to determine the distribution of prizes.

The settlement of the reservation enabled Nez Perces county to advance by a single leap to a place among the wealthiest and most populous counties of the state. Of the reservation lands, 533,500 acres were in Nez Perces, much of this domain being exceedingly rich agricultural land, and its settlement by a thrifty, homebuilding population was fraught with momentous consequences for the future greatness of the county.

No new movements characterized the year 1896, but it was nevertheless a busy one. It witnessed an increase of over 4,000 in the population of Nez Perces county and the settlement of practically all the reservation not taken in the first grand rush. Thousands of acres of virgin soil were broken, hundreds of homes were built, several towns were started and signs of healthy development were apparent on every hand. During the year the Clearwater was opened to navigation as far as Kamiah by the utilization of twenty-five thousand dollars provided for the purpose by appropriation, and thus the final year of the financial stringency, the year in which so little was accomplished in many other parts of the west, was made fruitful of much progress in Nez Perces county.

In February, 1897, Representative Fuller, of Shoshone county, introduced into the legislature a bill to create Clearwater county out of the southern portion of Shoshone, the northern portion of Idaho and the eastern portion of Nez Perces county, the seat of government of the new political division to be Pierce City. Some of the boundaries were unnatural, and most of the section embraced was unpatented homestead land, not taxable. The number of votes cast at the previous election by residents in the section seeking segregation numbered barely three hundred. Opponents of the measure within and without the proposed new subdivision of the state called attention to these facts; the hopelessness of the task they had undertaken soon became apparent to its friends and the bill was allowed to drop.

It will be remembered that in 1897 there was a revival of business throughout the entire northwest. Naturally Nez Perces county, which had not suffered by the hard times as did other parts of the country, was prepared to keep step in this renewed forward march, and the year was fruitful of many improvements and some departures in industrial circles. Thousands of dollars were invested in reviving some of the old mining camps of north Idaho, erecting stamp mills, opening roads, etc. The reorganization of the Northern Pacific Company after its lines had been in the receiver's hands for five years was an event of no little promise to a region which must look to that corporation for the transportation facilities it so much needed and so ardently desired. Lastly, and in time to give the homebuilders on the newly-opened Nez Perces reservation the encouragement so necessary and so helpful under those circumstances, came the abundant harvests and excellent prices which have made 1897 a memorable year in the history of the inland empire generally. Prosperity among the farmers meant prosperity among the merchants, laborers mechanics and all other classes, and every one felt that the night of financial distress had given place to a more glorious day than had ever before broken upon the hills and valleys of the Clearwater country.

It was no doubt their perception of this golden future that impelled the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to commence in December, 1897, the extension of their Spokane and Palouse branch to Lewiston, taking up in good earnest a project which it had long been contemplating but for various reasons had never carried into effect. At any rate, the company notified the people, through its agent, J. P. Vollmer, that it would commence work immediately provided the right of way and depot grounds in Lewiston were donated. The proposal drew forth an immediate response; the bonus asked for was speedily granted, also the necessary franchise. The company proved true to its promise. Work was pushed speedily and steadily and on September 8, 1898, the first passenger train entered Lewiston. That it received a hearty welcome need not be stated when it is remembered that the town had begun agitation for a railroad as early as 1872—perhaps earlier—and had wrought assiduously during all the intervening years to the end that its industrial development might receive the impetus which nothing but speedy transportation could give, at times offering enormous bonuses and ever standing ready to offer the company which should build to them all the encouragement in their power.

The activity of the Northern Pacific seemed to stimulate other transpartation companies, and in March, 1898, articles of incorporation of the Snake River Valley Railroad Company were filed in the county clerk's office. The object of this company was to build a line from Umatilla, Oregon, to a point in the state of Washington contiguous to the mouth of Snake river, thence along the valley of that stream via Riparia, Washington, and Lewiston, Idaho, to the vicinity of Huntington. The proposed road would be of great benefit to the Clearwater section, and the people thereof are ever alert for the good of their part of the state, so considerable attention was paid to this new project. However, the people were too well used to the ways of railway projectors to be greatly disappointed when the road did not materialize.

The winter of 1897-8 was a mild one, and, as is usual under those circumstances, the fall of snow was correspondingly heavy. The precipitation during January was very great, and conditions were right for an era of floods as soon as a warm wind should begin blowing. On the 14th of February the balmy "Chinook" came with its furnace breath, the snow was speedily converted into torrents of water, the streams were swelled to their utmost, the former high-water records of the Potlatch, especially, being badly broken. Much damage resulted to the railroad bed; the new construction work was injured and its progress delayed; travel was rendered impossible for three days and the entire Potlatch country was cut off from mail communication with the outside world. The Clearwater at Lewiston rose six feet in one day and the current in it became so swift as to stop the ferries; but inconvenience from high water was of short duration.

As the year advanced it brought with it blessings and a substantial increase of wealth to the citizens of Nez Perces county and vicinity. Copious rains in June insured excellent crops. Much of the land of the region was new, so that the enormous crop of 1897 did not render another large crop in 1898 a practical impossibility, and it is stated that the wheat yield of that year was the greatest known up to the time. The acreage devoted to the different cereal products during the year, as compiled by Assessor Cantril, were as follows: Wheat, 44,507 acres; barley, 4,131 acres; flax, 2,924 acres; oats, 1,572 acres; corn, 275 acres. The number of acres devoted to hay was 2,344.

The outbreak of the Spanish-American war was in Nez Perces county, as in other parts of Idaho and the west, the occasion of a great outburst of patriotic ferver. This ebullition of the martial spirit found expression at a public meeting held at the court house Saturday, April 23d, 1898, at which the militia, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, several Confederate veterans, many students and a representation of the citizenship of Lewiston—far beyond the capacity of the audience room to accommodate—were present. Judge J. W. Poe presided. Speeches were made by Supreme Judges Sullivan and Quarles, Colonels Lane and Danford, J. N. Stacy and James W. Reid, and these, with the martial music, stirred all hearts to their profoundest depths.

Shortly after the issuance of the call of President McKinley for one hundred and twenty-five thousand volunteers, Company B received orders to hold itself in readiness to furnish thirty-five of its best men to fill up the state quota, and the boys had been drilling assiduously in anticipation of the opportunity to participate for the first time in active warfare. On Monday, May 2d, they received the anticipated marching orders, commanding them to repair at once to the rendezvous at Boise, but on account of some difficulty about transportation they were delayed in their compliance until Thursday. At noon on Monday Company C, of Grangeville, Captain Murphy commanding, arrived in Lewiston. They and the home boys were tendered a reception by the ladies of the Women's Relief Corps on Tuesday evening, at which they enjoyed not only the usual bounties of good things, but heart-felt words of welcome and farewell expressed in glowing language by eloquent speakers. A flag was presented to the soldiers by C. P. Coburn, accompanied by words well-calculated to inspire in the breasts of its recipients a determination to carry it on to victory and to never disgrace it by any act of cowardice or dishonor.

The interest of the residents of Lewiston in their chosen sons was further manifested on the morning of their departure, when a concourse of between 2,500 and 3,000 people assembled at the boat landing to give them a parting hand-shake. The public schools were closed, also the Normal; stores and public offices were deserted, and men, women and children gathered to see the start for war. More speeches were indulged in; another flag was given the company by the Grand Army of the Republic, much hand-shaking, some caressing, no doubt, a little of that overflow of feeling which the soldier dreads worse than the battle's front, and the boys were off to meet the uncertainties which beset the soldier in fighting the battles of the republic. Two weeks were spent in camp at Boise; then the Idaho volunteers were ordered to join General Merritt at the Presidio, San Francisco.

From the records of Company B, First Regiment, Idaho Volunteer Infantry, the same being the Nez Perces county company, we learn that the officers were Lieutenant Colonel Daniel M. Figgins, commanding; Captain Edward O. Martinson, First Lieutenant Robert D. Stainton, Second Lieutenant Chipear Wilcut; and that the privates were Charles W. Alkire, Robert L. Baldwin, Herbert M. Caswell, James Cleary, David D. Crites, John O. Derr, Frank C. Duncan, Fred Folsom, Harry B. Ford, William H. Frederick, Frank B. Gorman, George H. Hammersly, Herbert Hennes, Isaac Hutcheson, Hyrum Jenson, James Jenson, Oliver B. Jones, Richard B. Jones (wounded February 5, 1899), Adam Kobel, Stanley C. Lebrook, John Lucey, Dennis Likens, John H. Little, Donald O. Merritt, Joseph Oswald, Richard D. Pelkey, Louis Peterson, William M. Pipkin, Walter W. Rhoades, Alfred E. Riter, William N. Robinson, Robert Ross, Guy Simpson, Frank Stark, Bert Weeks, James Weston and William C. Woodside. Privates discharged from the company before the register was made were: John W. Frederick, James C. Henderson, Theodore Link, William A. Bicknell, Darius P. Gray, William Hall, Caleb P. Hahn, Charles F. Krise, John N. Luitjens (wounded February 5, 1899), Harry McConville, J. C. McFadden, Frederick B. McKee, Charles C. Miles, G. E. Overstreet, Lewis A. Powless, William B. Rea, Joseph Rustmeyer, Frederick W. Soule, Martin Starling, William B. Strong, Horace D. Van Alstine. Officers resigned: Captain L. D. Schattner, April 25, 1899; Second Lieutenant John O. Barbour, March 17, 1899. Discharged to accept commisions: First Sergeant, Robert D. Stainton, Private Frank A. McCall (wounded February 5, 1899), Chipear Wilcut. Those who served as sergeants were: Joseph Strobel, Ernest Scott (wounded February 5, 1899), John Wiggins, William M. Keller (wounded February 5, 1899), Charles Gordon, Fred S. Beckwith. As corporals: Samuel W. Blue, Alois Kalous, Charles W. Byers, Frank Cerveny, Frank B. Flora, Len Koen, Thomas Martin. As musicians: William H. Ritzheimer and William E. Merriam. As artificer, Thomas Nance. As wagoner, Herman Wilde. Those transferred were: Mack K. Cunningham, Fred Farr, Joseph A. Gill, Elmore A. McKenna and Amos A. Smith, all privates. Those killed in action were: Corporal Frank R. Caldwell, Privates James R. Fraser and George W. Hall.

The company's record of events reads as follows: "Left Boise, May 19, 1898; arrived at San Francisco, California, May 22d and went into Camp Merritt. Embarked on Steamship 'Morgan City' June 26th; left San Francisco bay en route for Manila June 27th. Arrived at Honolulu July 6th, leaving July 9th; arrived at Manila bay July 31. Landed August 6th at Paranaque and went into camp at Camp Dewey. In trenches August 8th and 9th. In barracks at Malate August 13th to October 11th. In barracks, Exposition building, Manila, to January 2d. In barracks at Aco, Manila, to February 4th. On guard and outpost duty until February 4, 1899. In trenches and on firing line from February 4th to July 12th. Embarked on United States Army Transport Grant, en route for San Francisco via Magaski, Island Sea and Yokohama July 31st; arrived August 29th. Went into camp at Presidio August 31st."

The company took part in one engagement with Spanish forces—the assault and capture of Manila, August 13th, 1898, and battled against Philippino insurgents at Santa Ana on February 4th and 5th at Calcoocan, February 10th and 11th, 1899. Detachments of the company were in the Laguna bay expedition, April 7th to 17th; at Santa Cruz, April 9th and 10th; at Pagsanjan, April 11th; at Lumban, April 11th, and at Paete, April 13th.

Besides the volunteers above mentioned, Harry Matheson, Ed Sutherland, James Jacks, Ed Sears, John Neal, Harry Lee, Bob Winger and Moxie Alexander, all Lewiston boys, took part in the war, having enlisted in Company C, First Battalion, Second Regiment, Washington Volunteers.

The Second Battalion, Idaho Volunteers, including all the north Idaho companies, was commanded by Major Ed McConville (the Colonel McConville of Nez Perces Indian war fame), a man of splendid military ability. Brave, determined, heroic, possessing the gift of inspiring others with the enthusiasm and ardor which fired his own patriotic heart, he kept adding laurels to his wreath of fame until he met at last a soldier's fate. Brigadier General Charles King, who was in command of the brigade in the battle of Santa Ana, in which the Idaho regiment covered itself with glory, refers to the Idaho volunteers and to Major McConville in this language:

"Just as the center of the Idahos reached a little clump of trees and shrubbery half way across the plain they were greeted by a sudden and furious volley, which staggered them. In an instant McConville leaped to the front, shouting to his men: 'Come on! Come on, Idaho!' and then, as he turned and led the rush into the shrubbery a shot struck him square in the breast and down he went. Even then, they told me, he strove to crawl forward, but the wound was mortal, and presently the brave old fellow realized that he had but an hour or two to live. I never saw him again. The order he received from my lips on the Santa Ana road was his last, and to the letter had he striven to obey it.

"Five insurgents lay dead about the Krupps in the middle of the redoubt, where, side by side, California and Idaho leaped in to the capture, and a dozen lay strewn over the field in front of where the honored old major fell. The big redoubt on the mound to his left was littered with the bodies of insurgents. Hemmed in between McConville, Fortson and the river and unable to beat back the dashing charge of the 'Americanos,' they raised the white flag and then shot dead the first soldier to reach the work. The roar of musketry was resumed for three minutes and was followed by scattering shots as the fugitives ran for the stream, but there was a smile on McConville's grizzled face as they bore him off the field."

The remains of the heroic McConville were brought home for interment. On April 12th the steamer Spokane, with its flag at half-mast, steamed into port bearing the body, and during the afternoon of the next day all that was mortal of the courageous patriot was laid to rest. The funeral was attended by hundreds of people, among them the state officials, led by Governor Steunberg, the University of Idaho Cadets and members of the faculty and delegations from other cities of Idaho and Washington.

The members of Company B arrived at Lewiston on the afternoon of October 2, 1899, and were greeted in a manner which proved that the people fully appreciated their gallant services and the honor they reflected upon the city and county that sent them forth. The boat was met by members of fraternal orders, by fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and sweethearts, by young and old and middle aged, all in gala attire and striving to outdo one another in the warmth of their welcome and the heartiness of their tributes of honor.

But we must take up again the current of events in Nez Perces county. The year 1899 was a very lively one. The railroad activity of which we have spoken in a previous chapter contributed not a little to this prosperity and there were other causes also operative in the same direction. True the winter had been a severe one occasioning heavy losses of cattle and horses, the heaviest, however, being outside of Nez Perces county, but the effect was scarcely felt, being so completely neutralized by the operation of other forces. By May, according to the Teller's statement, the entire country was on the boom. New towns and new additions to old towns were coming to the front and the price of real estate was leaping forward. "Every house of every description," says the paper referred to, "is occupied to its fullest capacity and large numbers of new ones are under construction, while many vacant lots serve as tenting ground for people who cannot otherwise get housed. The transient traveler who gets a room to himself is fortunate and still more so is he if he is not compelled to sleep at some barracks of a lodging house utilized in connection with the hotel where he may have registered." The Buffalo Hump excitement, caused by the discovery of rich gold deposits in the vicinity of that old landmark, was responsible for much of the travel through the country and the general boom conditions, but there was also a mining excitement in Nez Perces county itself. A number of locations were made near Greer's ferry on the Clearwater river, a region blest with traditions of a lost mine. "During the Nez Perces war," so the story goes, "a party of prospectors were run to cover in the canyon of the Lolo and while in hiding they found a very rich ledge. The prospectors were badly scared, did not expect to save even their scalps, but they chipped off chunks of gold bearing quartz and carried them to their homes. The confused state of their minds at the time left them with only vague recollections of the location of the ledge which they concealed with brush and dirt. Years later members of that party secretly returned to the vicinity of Greer's ferry and tramped all summer up and down the country in search of this rich ledge, which they have never found. All of these old prospectors have died. The last to visit the scene of this exciting experience came in 1896."

Whether the gold find of 1877, if such was in truth made, would, if discovered, prove as rich as the old prospectors believed is of course unknown but Greer's ferry is known to be in a promising mineral belt and it is possible that a ledge of great richness may have been discovered and lost again as alleged. At any rate it is not unlikely that some of the prospects in the vicinity will develop into paying properties.

During the year the value of property in the county according to the assessor's appraisement nearly doubled, giving it fifth place among the political divisions of the state. As the valuation of railroad property in the county was only one-sixteenth of the whole, leaving such property out of the calculation, Nez Perces would rank third.

The opening of the year 1900 was a very propitious one in the county. The mild winter left the cattlemen's stacks of hay scarcely touched while the cattle, feeding along the breaks of the rivers, were fatter than if they had been compelled by severe weather to consume all the fodder provided for their use in case of emergency. The year throughout was one of substantial progress and universal prosperity, though it was not characterized by the excitement and rush which distinguished its predecessor. When fall came it brought the largest harvests ever known in Nez Perces county with a consequent stimulus to business of all kinds. The only disaster of the year was fortunately not serious. It consisted of the wreck on the Clearwater Short Line, on June 27th, of a mixed train consisting of four carloads of hogs, two box cars, three flat cars, a steam shovel, one passenger coach and the express car. The train had just rounded a curve about two miles east of Contact and was coming onto straight road again when one of the trucks under the steam shovel left the track. The engineer saw the shovel flying up in the air and immediately applied the brakes, but the king bolt under the shovel had been broken; the trucks were pulled out from under it; the flat car behind struck it throwing it into the river and the car itself was thrown crosswise of the track. The other freight cars were badly wrecked, but fortunately the passenger coach, in which were fifteen or twenty people, was not injured, and besides being badly shaken up no one was hurt.

An event of the year 1900 which must not be overlooked was the organization on February 19th of the Nez Perces County Pioneer Association, of which all persons might become members who settled in the county prior to or during 1877. The first officers were C. G. Kress, president; C. P. Coburn, vice-president; Wallace B. Stainton, secretary; John N. Lindsay, treasurer; Edmund Pearcy, Robert Grostein, Joel Martin and M. A. Kelly, trustees. For the purpose of preserving as many as possible of the names of those who have toiled so long in the development of the county and done so much for its material and social upbuilding, we give the membership roll of the society as follows:

W. P. Bell, 1859; John M. Silcott, Thomas B. Beall, 1860; G. W. Underwood, A. R. Trimble, Thomas F. Reynolds, 1861; C. C. Bunnell, Edmund Pearcy, Chester P. Coburn, Augustus C. Sweet, Ezra Baird, W. On January 22, 1901, Representative Oxley, of Shoshone county, introduced into the legislature a bill providing for the creation of Clearwater county out of territory belonging to Nez Perces, Idaho and Shoshone counties. It was later amended to take in the Potlatch country, its first draft having taken no part of Nez Perces county except that east of the Boise meridian. The result of the change was a vigorous protest from the residents of the section affected. The bill was defeated by a vote of 22 to 21 in the house, but in the evening that body reconvened and determined by a vote of 31 to 11 to reconsider the measure. This was on March 6th. Later in the same month a substitute bill was passed, the boundaries being so defined as to take from Nez Perces county about three townships in the Potlatch and three in the reservation. The bill was promptly signed by the governor, who appointed for the new county of Clearwater the following officers: Commissioners, P. H. Blake, William LeBaron and John T. Mallory; sheriff, Frank Gaffney; assessor, J. L. Harris; treasurer, A. E. Holmberg; superintendent of schools, Mrs. Fannie Roberts; probate judge, J. S. Hogue; county attorney, J. A. Brown; surveyor, D. H. Guilland, coroner, Henry Merchant.

But the new county was not organized as speedily as at first intended, owing to several difficulties, and when at last it was ready to take its place among the legal subdivisions of the state, the state auditor refused to furnish blank licenses such as the law required him to furnish to the treasurers of the different counties, alleging that Clearwater county had not been legally created. The case was taken into court by the county treasurer of the new political division, who applied for a writ of mandate compelling the state auditor to comply with the law in this respect. The defendant, in his answer, filed in response to an order by the court to appear and show cause why the writ should not issue, set up that the county did not contain taxable property to the value of one million dollars as required by section 4, article 18 of the constitution, and further that the act creating or purporting to create it was fatally defective in its language, therefore the county of Cleawater has no legal existence. Attorneys for the county of Cleawater thought the second objection would not be seriously considered by the court and contended that the amendment upon which the first was based was unconstitutional for the reason that it was not passed by a two-thirds vote of the house. The supreme court did not pass upon the constitutionality of the amendment, but held the creating act void for the reason that it did not state specifically that the territory within the defined boundaries "shall constitute the county of Clearwater." The section at fault read: "That all portions of the state of Idaho included within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the southeast corner of Kootenai county on the water shed separating the waters of the St. Mary and Clearwater rivers; thence in an easterly direction ..... to the place of beginning." The sentence contained no verb and was obviously meaningless. Thus through a clerical mistake or literary error the hopes of the friends of Clearwater county were dashed to the ground.

This year witnessed in Whitman county and other parts of Washington a very considerable excitement over the discovery of indications of oil and natural gas, an excitement which extended to Nez Perces county also. It is stated that after two days of careful examination of the Isaman farm and adjoining lands, Prof. Aughey, an expert, concluded that Lewiston was in the gas belt and that the Lewiston valley was underlaid, at a depth of between six hundred and a thousand feet, with formations containing oil and gas. Those who were with Professor Aughey stated that from holes made in the soil at various points a gas flow was obtained. The exudations burned with a yellow flame, leading to the conclusion that they were petrolium gas. Many claims were taken in the vicinity and considerable excitement was engendered by the find and by Aughey's very conservative report.

The spring of 1902 brought another rush of gold seekers through the county, Thunder mountain being the mecca of the wealth hunting hordes this time. Some few of the travelers stopped at Lewiston to secure their outfits, but for the most part that city was left out of their calculations after the Northern Pacific time schedule was changed so as to permit passengers to proceed direct to Stites, the Clearwater terminal of the road. From that point two routes were open to the pilgrims, one via Dixie, the other via Grangeville and Warrens. The rush had a stimulating effect upon business all along the route, as all such must have.

One of the principal progressive movements of the year was that which resulted in the construction of a tramway at a site between Kamiah and Greer for the purpose of facilitating the marketing of wheat and other cereals raised on the heights far above the railroad track. The farmers of Nez Perces prairie banded themselves together for the purpose of constructing this much needed improvement, formed a stock company, looked up a suitable site, let the contract for furnishing a cable, buckets and other apparatus to a San Francisco firm and set vigorously about the work of installing the somewhat expensive plant. They had, in their efforts, the encouragement of both the grain handling firms of Lewiston, which took large blocks of the stock, while the railway company put in a side track for their accommodation. The cable used is an endless coil of steel wires 13,200 feet long, suspended on rollers and carrying a thousand steel cages or buckets. The power is furnished by a large stationary engine upon the heights above.

During the closing month of the year agitation for the formation of Clearwater county was revived. Orofino gave inception to the struggle by circulating a petition for the formation of a new county with such boundaries that it would be the logical county seat. Nez Perces at once took up the gauntlet by circulating a petition praying for a new county to include all of southern Shoshone county, part of the Potlatch and a strip off Nez Perces prairie. This action was taken not so much that the people desired a change of county affiliations as that they desired above all things to defeat the Orofino measure. Representative-elect C. D. Thomas, of Nezperce, stated the position of his home town in the following language:

"The people of Nezperce are perfectly satisfied with their present county affiliations but if a division is inevitable, they believe in dividing the county in the right way. The petition we have prepared and which is being circulated, has now been signed by every man save one in Nezperce city, and by everyone in the adjacent country to whom it has been presented. We have no intention of establishing a new county on the lines mentioned in the petition, but the people of Nezperce have discovered that Lewiston had concluded to permit the organization of Clearwater county without opposition so long as only a small strip of Nez Perces county was taken, and we have concluded to give them the alternative of either fighting against the taking of any of the old county to create Clearwater county or to submit to the dismemberment of the county on rational lines. In preparing our petition we endeavored to arrange for a county with boundaries drawn on geographical lines, following the water courses wherever possible, and in our petition we make no attempt to decide the matter of the location of a county seat."

The matter was brought up in the legislature by the introduction, by Representative Greer, of Shoshone county, of a bill creating Clearwater county out of Shoshone and Nez Perces counties with Orofino as county seat until the general election of 1904, when the voters were to select the permanent county seat. The technical description of the boundaries of the new political division was as follows:

"Beginning at the intersection of the northern boundary line of township 41, range 1 east, of the Boise meridian, with the western boundary line of Shoshone county; thence due east along the northern boundary line of said township 41 and continuing due east to the boundary line between the states of Idaho and Montana; thence in a southeasterly direction along the boundary line between the states of Idaho and Montana to its intersection with the present southern boundary line of Shoshone county; thence in a westerly direction along the present southern boundary line of Shoshone county to where the same intersects with the center of the channel of the Clearwater river; thence up the center of the main channel of the Clearwater river to the mouth of Lawyer's creek, being the present boundary line between the counties of Nez Perces and Idaho; thence in a westerly direction up the center of the main channel of Lawyer's creek, being the present northern boundary line of Idaho county, to its intersection with the Boise meridian; thence north along the Boise meridian to its intersection with the southern boundary line of township 35, range 1 west, of Boise meridian; thence west along the southern boundary line of said township to the southwest corner thereof; thence north along the western boundary line of townships 35, 36, 37, 38 to the present southern boundary line of Latah county; thence east along the present southern boundary line of Latah county to the southeast corner of said county; thence north along the present boundary line between the counties of Shoshone and Latah and Shoshone and Kootenai to the place of beginning."

February 9th of the current year, while this bill was yet in the hands of the committee, its author, Greer of Shoshone, asked the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw it, stating that he desired to press the measure in the future. The consent asked for was given, but a storm was raised later when another bill was introduced providing that the people residing within the proposed new county should have the right to vote on the question as to whether or not they desired political segregation, in the election of 1904. The boundaries prescribed by this measure included a portion of Idaho county also. The new act, known as house bill No. 115, was referred to the appropriate committee, which returned a majority report against the measure and a minority report favoring it. February 17th, on motion of Moore of Idaho county, action on the bill was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 30 to 16, effectually putting at rest all danger of loss of territory by any of the existing counties at this session of the legislature.

CHAPTER II.

POLITICAL.

Section 2 of the organic act creating Nez Perces county, passed by the legislative assembly of Washington territory December 20, 1861, enacted "That J. M. Van Valsah be appointed County Auditor; A. Creacy, Whitfield Kirtly and ———— be appointed County Commissioners; Sanford Owens, Sheriff; and ———— Justice of the Peace for said county, until the next general election." As is well known, however, the year 1862 witnessed a stampede of tens of thousands to north Idaho, and it was quite natural that there should be among this vast horde of gold seekers hundreds of desperadoes and lawless men—men who cared not whether there was a courthouse within a thousand miles of their camps and against whom it would have been a very dangerous proceeding to enforce the laws. In the mad struggle for the possession of gold the slow machinery of the law was seldom, if ever, invoked. Civil government occupied no place in these miners' thoughts. The reign of gold was supreme. Under such conditions county offices were not sought by men, but on the contrary were shunned and if, perchance, the offices were filled by appointment, the appointees eluded duty by failing to qualify.

For these reasons it is highly improbable that the above named officers ever served and we are strengthened in the belief that they did not by failing to find, by inquiries among those who were here at the time, any account of such service. Then during the winter of 1862-3 the agitation in favor of creating out of this region a new territory resulted favorably, a territorial government was organized, and this change naturally disturbed local affairs.

Thus it is not until the summer of 1863 that we find a local system of government in actual operation. Immediately after Governor Wallace arrived here, in July, 1863, he proceeded to appoint the following officers to serve in Nez Perces county: Sheriff, John Cassidy; county clerk, E. C. Mayhew; assistant clerk, S. Alexander; treasurer, Cris. Taylor; commissioners, B. C. Stevens, A. B. Brower, of Lewiston, and David Reese, of Elk City; prosecuting attorney, E. F. Gray; surveyor, J. B. Buker; probate judge, D. J. Warner; justices of the peace, E. S. Sprague and Silas B. Cochran, Lewiston, Thomas M. Pomeroy, Elk City. The offices of probate judge and surveyor were purely honorary for some time. Who the first county assessor was cannot be learned. A majority of these men were Republicans. In response to the proclamation of Governor Wallace calling for an election to be held October 31st, at which representatives to the first legislature should be elected, Nez Perces county elected E. B. Waterbury to the council and L. Bacon as its representative in the house. The records show that at this election Nez Perces county cast 208 votes for William H. Wallace for delegate to congress and 159 votes for his Democratic opponent, John M. Cannady. The story is told that when the early returns of this election came in Governor Wallace's friends saw that he was sure to be defeated by a large majority, and in order to save the territory to Republicanism, United States Marshal Payne was sent to bring in the books from the outlying precincts. Wyoming and Montana were then a portion of Idaho. Payne crossed the Clearwater river at Lewiston and started on his mission. He was gone several days and when he returned he brought back votes enough for Wallace to elect him. The boundaries of Idaho were not very clearly defined in those days, and whether the election returns brought in by Payne were bona fide or not is questionable. At the time this was regarded as a shrewd maneuver and the story treated as a huge joke, but now the legality of Wallace's election is questioned by not a few.

When Governor Wallace deputized Hill Beachey to pursue the murderers of Lloyd Magruder and party, late in the fall of 1863, it is said that Sheriff Cassidy resigned because he considered the act as a slight upon his official prestige. At any rate, he resigned and Governor Wallace appointed James H. Fisk in his stead.

Pursuant to a notice of a special meeting, the board of county commissioners assembled at Lewiston, the county seat of Nez Perces county, on the 5th day of October, 1863. Commissioners B. C. Stevens and A. B. Brower were present, as also Clerk Mayhew. The first business to come before the board was the appointment of a county treasurer to fill the vacancy then existing. F. H. Simmons was appointed and gave bonds in the sum of $5,000. At the meeting of the board on the 7th a petition signed by thirty-four citizens, asking for the erection of a county jail, was received. The board decided to submit, at the election to be held on October 31st, a proposition to the voters calling for the levy of a special $3,000 tax for the purpose of building a courthouse and jail. At this meeting the assessment roll was presented and showed that there were $248,303.75 worth of taxable property in the county. On this basis a tax of one mill was levied for territorial purposes, two mills for school purposes and four mills for county purposes. The ex-county treasurer presented his report also at this meeting. The receipts up to October 5th amounted to $1,466, $1,200 of which was from 600 polls, and the county's indebtedness was nearly $1,700.

The vote on the question of erecting county buildings having been in the affirmative, on November 18th the board ordered that a suitable house be procured for use as a temporary jail until the new building could be erected. A prize of ten dollars was offered to the person suggesting the best plan of construction. The new courthouse was never built, however, different buildings being rented from time to time until the purchase of the old Jaggers cabin on Front street.

The board held its first regular meeting April 4, 1864, in compliance with the laws enacted by the first legislative assembly, the same officers as formerly being present. It appearing that all of the county officers, with the exception of the county commissioners, had been illegally appointed, the offices were declared vacant and the following appointments made: Probate judge, John G. Berry; clerk, E. C. Mayhew; sheriff, James H. Fisk; assessor, S. R. Howlett; recorder, E. C. Mayhew; surveyor, E. F. Gray; superintendent of schools, L. C. Fitch; justices of the peace, Lewiston precinct, S. E. Darnes, Elk City precinct, Thomas M. Pomeroy; constables, Lewiston precinct, Thomas J. Patterson, Elk City precinct, Robert Hunt.

As is usually the case in communities which derive their support almost entirely from the mining industry, Nez Perces's population was constantly shifting from one place to another and was very unstable. From time to time county officers resigned, and changes were going on constantly. Thus we see that in June the commissioners were A. B. Brower, W. Leonard and A. B. Downer, the last two being recent appointees; that C. C. Chamberlain has become sheriff; that Warren A. Belcher has tendered his resignation as treasurer and that W. W. Thompson is appointed in his place. Later, in July, S. R. Howlett resigned as assessor and at this same session Dr. Robert Newell was appointed school superintendent.

Mr. Newell declined the position and S. M. Wait was appointed to serve until the newly elected corps of officers took their places the first of the year.

Preparatory to the county's first election, at the July term, the board established the following precincts: Lewiston, Elk City, Clearwater Station, Newsome Creek, Taylor's Bridge, Long Bar, Washilla Creek and Wixson's. At this term also B. F. Lamkin was authorized to construct, at a cost not to exceed $600, two cells for jail purposes in the old vegetable market on First street. The first action taken toward the establishment of county roads was taken at this term also, when the road between Hersey's mountain house and Elk City was declared a public highway and Samuel Gilman was appointed road supervisor. At the same time S. M. Wait was appointed road supervisor of the Lewiston district. From time to time the board granted ferry and toll road licenses, but as the establishment of these different enterprises has been fully dealt with in another chapter we will not stop to enumerate them here.

From the court records we see that at the election held in the fall of 1864 the following were the first regularly elected officers of Nez Perces county: A. B. Brower, Loyal P. Brown and P. W. Bell, commissioners; E. S. Sprague, probate judge; W. W. Thompson, treasurer; S. S. Stiles, clerk and recorder; James Fisk, sheriff; L. W. Bacon, assessor; representative to the legislative assembly, George Zeigle, Republican, and T. M. Reed, Democrat; member of the legislative council, E. B. Waterbury, Democrat. The report of the teritorial canvassing board shows that Nez Perces county cast 337 votes for Samuel E. Parks, Republican, and 237 votes for E. D. Holbrook, Democrat, candidates for the honor of representing Idaho in congress. The honors were divided about equally between Democrats and Republicans. Subsequently J. K. Vincent succeeded Fisk as sheriff, the latter failing to file his bond, I. C. Purcell became probate judge, and Phillip Streeter was appointed assessor.

Pursuant to law the district court for the first district of Idaho territory convened at Lewiston on January 4, 1864. Alleck C. Smith, the regularly appointed judge of this district, was unable to be present, and at the request of Acting Governor Daniels, Samuel C. Parks, of the second district, presided during the term. The Magruder murder case was the first and only case of importance to come before the first session of court in north Idaho, and as this case has been fully dealt with elsewhere we will pass immediately to the election of 1866.

The election of 1866 was a spirited one and resulted in a slight Democratic victory. During the 'sixties the tendency of the people was to spend the easily acquired gold lavishly, and this tendency obtained even among office holders. Consequently the party in power was usually open to the charge of extravagance, and anti-extravagance became the slogan of both parties. For this reason the Republicans and Democrats for many years held power alternately. J. W. Eastman, Republican, James Hays, Democrat, and Aurora Shumway, Democrat, were elected commissioners in 1866; John G. Berry, Democrat, defeated James H. Fisk for the shrievalty, this contest being the leading one of the campaign; S. S. Stiles, Republican, was elected clerk and recorder for a second term; H. O. Adams, Republican, was elected probate judge; W. W. Thayer, Democrat (later governor of Oregon), was the choice of the majority for prosecuting attorney; James Henderson, Democrat, received a majority of the votes cast for the office of treasurer; and P. Streeter, Republican, was chosen county assessor. Henderson served only a short time and was succeeded by M. A. Kelly. The following June, John Clark took up the duties of assessor, vice P. Streeter. In 1865 the law relative to the election of members of the legislative assembly was changed and an election was held. In Nez Perces county the election resulted in the choice of L. P. Brown, Republican, as a member of the council, and Joseph Morris and James Hays, Democrats, as members of the house. The election of 1866 returned Councilman Brown and resulted in the choice of J. S. Taylor, Democrat, as Nez Perces' member of the house. For delegate to congress J. M. Kirkpatrick, Republican, received 230 votes and E. D. Holbrook, Democrat, 155 votes in Nez Perces county.

The Democrats succeeded in capturing every office but one in 1868, James Crooks, county commissioner, being the only Republican elected. The officers elected were: Councilman, J. S. Taylor; members house of representatives, E. W. Bell and J. G. Zeigle; sheriff, John G. Berry; probate judge, Alonzo Gilman; clerk, James Witt; recorder, Robert McPherson, succeeded shortly afterwards by C. G. Kress; treasurer, M. A. Kelly; commissioners, James Crooks, Aurora Shumway. J. T. Schissler; prosecuting attorney, S. S. Fenn; assessor, D. H. Howser. The vote for delegate was: James K. Shafer, Democrat, 196, Thomas J. Butler, Republican, 161.

In 1870 T. J. Bunker, Republican, was elected sheriff; T. H. Worden, Republican, treasurer; John Brearley, Republican, recorder and auditor; F. B. King, Republican, assessor; C. A. Thatcher, Republican, clerk; H. O. Adams, probate judge; J. M. Crooks, J. T. Silverwood, Republican, Joseph Schissler, Democrat, commissioners; John Clark, Republican, district attorney; C. C. Call, Democrat, councilman, and J. P. Silverwood, and H. H. Wheeler, Republicans, members of the house. In this county S. A. Merritt, Democrat, received 166 votes and T. J. Butler, Republican, 150 votes for delegate to congress.

The following campaign witnessed the first clash between those who favored the annexation of north Idaho to Washington and those who were opposed. For some time past the segregation sentiment had been gaining strength in this portion of the territory, and in 1872 it became, for the first time, a strong factor in the politics of this region. The spark formerly kindled spread so rapidly that ere many years the whole of north Idaho was ablaze with the idea and all opposition was completely consumed. The Democratic county convention met in March and the Republicans the month following and placed their respective tickets in the field. The Republicans were victorious except where offices directly affecting the annexation proposition were concerned, and here the opposition, the Democrats, won the victory. The official result of this election is given below:

For delegate to congress, John Hailey, Democrat, 241 votes, J. W. Huston, Republican, 234 votes; for councilman, R. E. Miller, Anti-Division Democrat, 301, Colby Collins, Division Republican, 154; for representatives, G. W. Tomer, Anti-Division Democrat, 357, S. S. Fenn, Division Democrat, 230, J. F. Bush, Division Republican, 67, Hazen Squier, Anti-Division Republican, 152, George A. Manning, Independent, 70; for district attorney, John Clark, Republican, 352, James W. Poe, Democrat, 121; for probate judge, H. O. Adams, Republican, 243, Alexander Damas, Democrat, 216; for sheriff, D. B. Baldwin, Republican, 292, D. H. Howser, Democrat, 171; for auditor, Warren P. Hunt, Republican, 284, Frank Points, Democrat, 179; for treasurer, T. H. Worden, Republican, 294, J. W. Denny, Democrat, 156; for assessor, F. B. King, Republican, 293, L. E. Harris, Democrat, 168; for superintendent of schools, T. S. Billings, Republican, 352, J. P. Vollmer, Democrat, 195; for commissioner, W. A. Vandervort, Democrat, 44; J. T. Silverwood, Republican, 16, W. O. Pearson, Republican, 67, J. Anderson, Democrat, 10; for coroner, W. S. Dyer, Republican, 250, R. J. Devine, Democrat, 205; for surveyor, Charles Le Francois, Democrat, 218.

The official vote at the election of 1874 is missing, so that we are unable to present anything except a roll of the officers elected, which follows: Commissioners, D. H. Howser, George Dempster, M. M. Williams, Democrats; sheriff, Ezra Baird, Democrat; clerk, Warren P. Hunt, Republican; assessor, W. C. Pearson, Republican; treasurer, H. W. Stainton, Democrat; probate judge, John G. Berry, Democrat; superintendent of schools, T. S. Billings, Republican; surveyor, Edward Hannegan, Democrat; councilman, L. P. Brown, Republican; representatives, William Groat and J. C. Waldrip, Republicans. John Clark, Republican, was elected district attorney. For delegate to congress, S. S. Fenn, Democrat, received 423 votes and his opponent, T. W. Bennett, Republican, 87.

The year 1876 witnessed another Democratic victory, only one Republican being elected, D. J. Warner as probate judge. W. G. Langford was elected as Nez Perces' representative to the legislative council and Fred Points and S. B. Edwards as this county's representatives in the house. Ezra Baird was re-elected sheriff, Thomas Hudson became the county's auditor and recorder, A. Binnard was elected treasurer, J. W. Northrup was victorious in the contest for assessor and William Ewing, J. M. Curry and N. B. Holbrook were chosen county commissioners. Nez Perces county cast 176 votes for S. S. Fenn, who was again the Democratic party's nominee for delegate, and 115 votes for the Republican nominee, John Clark.

An interesting feature of the campaign of 1878 was the vote taken in northern Idaho on the state constitution adopted by the territory of Washington in anticipation of early statehood. North Idaho, which had now become so thoroughly imbued with the idea of being annexed to Washington as to almost consider itself a part of that territory, sent a delegate to this constitutional convention in the person of Alonzo Leland, the acknowledged head of the annexation movement in Idaho. This constitution was submitted to the voters of the northern counties at the election in the fall of 1878, and in Nez Perces county only 13 votes were cast against it, 485 voting for it. Political honors were about equally shared by the Democrats and Republicans, as will be seen from the following official canvass of the vote:

For delegate, George Ainslee, Democrat, 312, Jonas W. Brown, Republican, 306; district attorney, James W. Poe, Democrat, 369; councilman, Frank Points, Democrat, 283, G. A. Manning, Republican, 327; representatives, J. J. Bonner and A. A. Lieuallen, Democrats, 358 and 204 votes, respectively, William King and H. McGregor, Republicans, 306 and 232 votes, respectively; probate judge, D. J. Warner, Republican, 364, Thomas Hudson, Democrat, 262; commissioners, William Ewing, N. B. Holbrook, O. H. P. Beagle, Democrats, 365, 368 and 266 votes, respectively, S. C. Hale, J. M. Greenstreet, E. Fix, Republicans, 335, 267 and 276 votes, respectively; sheriff, Ezra Baird, Democrat, 381, L. B. Boise, Republican, 249; auditor and recorder, D. W. C. Dunwell, Democrat, 191, J. H. Evans, Republican, 417, J. K. Vincent, Independent, 19; treasurer, Abraham Binnard, Democrat, 274, Hazen Spuier, Republican, 352; assessor, J. H. Irvine, Democrat, 317, H. W. Howard, Republican, 315; surveyor, Bart. Nymeyer, Democrat, 361, Alfred Colburn, Republican, 266; coroner, Robert Grostein, Democrat, 13, C. P. Howell, Independent, 7, J. Sullivan, Republican, 3.

Southern Idaho controlled the territorial convention held in 1880, and as that section was decidedly opposed to the segregation of the north, anti-annexation planks were inserted in both the Democratic and Republican platforms. The north was so heartily in favor of annexation that it disregarded party affiliations and joined the extreme southeastern part of the territory in nominating Ex-Governor Brayman for delegate. Brayman had openly announced his endorsement of the scheme to annex northern Idaho to Washington, and it was on this platform that he was nominated. He received the almost solid vote of the north, the vote in Nez Perces county being, Brayman, 568, Ainslie, Democrat, 129, and Smith, Republican, 5. The complete official vote for the other officers in this county was as follows:

For district attorney, Quakenbush, Republican, 390, Maxwell, Democrat, 301; councilman, James W. Poe, Democrat, 682; joint councilman, I. B. Cowen, of Shoshone, Republican, 698; assemblymen, William King, I. N. Hibbs, J. M. Hedrick, Republicans, 212, 358 and 410 votes respectively, S. J. Langdon, J. H. Irvine, W. C. Cooper, Democrats, 398, 354 and 326 votes, respectively; probate judge, P. Grigsby, Democrat, 354, D. J. Warner, Republican, 347; sheriff, N. B. Holbrook, Democrat, 365, L. B. Boise, Republican, 334; treasurer, N. Hale, Democrat, 352, C. E. Monteith, Republican, 351; auditor and recorder, J. H. Evans, Republican, 420, H. Payne, Democrat, 286; assessor, H. W. Howard, Republican, 409, J. W. Northrup, Democrat, 290; commissioners, S. C. Hale, William Evans, Frank McCarrick, Republicans, 429, 354 and 281 votes, respectively, D. Spurbeck, G. B. Christie, J. N. Lindsay, Democrats, 312, 308 and 406 votes, respectively; surveyor, William Bell, Republican, 314, B. Nymeyer, Democrat, 385. Ainslie was elected delegate. The defeat of Brayman, though not unexpected, greatly chagrined the north. Nevertheless, it showed the annexationists their true strength.

Late in the summer of 1882 a call was issued for an independent north Idaho convention to be held at Lewiston October 11th for the purpose of nominating an independent candidate for congress as against either of the regular party nominees, Ainslie, Democrat, and Theodore F. Singiser, Republican, both of whom were supposed to be inimical to annexation. However. before the convention assembled, Singiser announced that he would support annexation and made a campaign in northern Idaho on that platform. This course, a shrewd political move, resulted in the independents giving him their endorsement. When the votes were counted it was found that Singiser had received 1,060 of the 1,100 votes cast in Nez Perces county, an overwhelming expression of the people's desire for annexation. Singiser was victorious in the contest. The vote for county officers follows:

For councilman, W. S. Taylor, Republican, 541, D. W. C. Dunwell, Democrat, 517; joint councilman, I. B. Cowen, Republican, 621, B. D. Donaldson, Democrat, 493; assemblymen, A. Buchanan, Wallis Fee and K. Larson, Republicans, 620, 424 and 664 votes, respectively, J. H. Irvine, Phillip Grigsby and G. W. Tomer, Democrats, 484, 540 and 602 votes, respectively; sheriff, W. D. Robbins, Republican, 499, Ezra Baird, Democrat, 627; auditor and recorder, J. H. Evans, Republican, 599, B. A. Nymeyer, Democrat, 531; assessor, L. F. Herbert, Republican, 618, W. A. Calbreath, Democrat, 516 treasurer, George Glass, Republican, 610, P. M. Davis, Democrat, 520; probate judge, William Wing, Republican, 560, I. N. Maxwell, Democrat, 553; county attorney, A. Quackenbush, Republican, 604, J. C. Elder, Democrat, 502; commissioners, E. W. Cameron, David Nottman and J. A. Lathrop, Republicans, 665, 734 and 466 votes, respectively; J. B. Menomy, Virgil Randall and D. Spurbeck, Democrats, 378, 510 and 586, respectively; surveyor, A. Colburn, Republican, 569, A. T. Beall, Democrat, 562. Thus it will be seen that the Republicans won an overwhelming victory in 1882.

So rapidly had the country north of the Clearwater settled since the first influx of settlers to that region in 1872 that in 1883 the northern portion of Nez Perces county demanded the county seat. An enabling act was passed and in June, 1883, a special election was held to decide the permanent location of Nez Perces' county seat. There were only two candidates, Lewiston and Moscow, and the former won by a majority of 280, the vote in favor of retaining the county seat at Lewiston being 922, that favoring its removal to Moscow, 642.

The all-absorbing issue of the campaign of 1884 was, like that of 1882, the annexation problem. John Hailey was nominated as delegate by the Democrats and T. F. Singiser received renomination at the hands of the Republicans. Hailey was understood to represent the anti-annexation faction and Singiser the annexation party. Both territorial conventions adopted resolutions favoring the segregation of north Idaho, but it was generally understood that south Idaho opposed it so that the fact that Hailey was an anti-annexationist and the further fact that the policy of the Democratic party in southern Idaho had always been opposed to annexation, led to the belief that the party was not sincere in its promises. The result was that Singiser again swept the north by over 700 majority, notwithstanding the great popularity of Hailey. He was, however, defeated in the territory at large. The detailed vote in Nez Perces county as gleaned from the official records we give below:

For delegate, Theodore F. Singiser, Republican, 799, John Hailey, Democrat, 471, William S. Taylor, 27; assemblymen, S. A. Moon, J. P. Quarles, L. P. Wilmot, Republicans, 675, 802 and 684 votes, respectively, W. T. McKern, N. Brocke and G. W. Tomer, Democrats, 690, 485 and 540 votes, respectively; councilman, S. G. Isaman, Republican, 800, R. L. Yantis, Democrat, 478; joint councilman, S. W. Moody, Republican, 840, D. W. C. Dunwell, Democrat, 445; district attorney, J. W. Parker, Democrat, 771, E. O'Neil, Republican, 526; probate judge, William Wing, Republican, 775, H. B. Blake, Democrat, 487; sheriff, E. W. Cameron, Republican, 597, Ezra Baird, Democrat, 550, R. H. Beeman, Independent, 131; auditor and recorder, Isaac C. Hattabaugh, Democrat, 767, George M. Wilson, Republican, 529; treasurer, George Glass, Republican, 624, P. M. Davis, Democrat, 675; assessor, Albert Fansler, Republican, 631, S. J. Langdon, Democrat, 668; commissioners, D. Nottman, Jr., J. M. McGregor, H. L. Coates, Republicans, 797, 720 and 550 votes, respectively, William Ewing, J. B. Menomy, D. Spurbeck, Democrats, 570, 489 and 687 votes, respectively; surveyor, A. Colburn, Republican, 613, Alfred Beall, Democrat, 681; coroner, E. A. Sanders, Republican, 733, W. B. Cooper, Democrat, 547.

The annexation question was again the main issue in 1886, and both county conventions passed resolutions designating it such. The Mormon question first came into prominence during this campaign, the Republicans taking an aggressive stand for the disfranchisement of all polygamists. Fred T. Dubois was nominated by the Republicans for delegate and was opposed on the Democratic ticket by John Hailey. Hailey's failure to make clearly known his position on these two leading questions is thought by many to have been mainly responsible for his defeat. Nez Perces county's political character seems to have undergone a radical change between the campaigns of 1884 and 1886, as the Democrats secured a majority of the offices at this election and returned a majority for Hailey, with the understanding that he represented the annexationists. The question of annexation itself was submitted to the people of north Idaho and in Nez Perces county received 1,675 affirmative and only 28 negative votes. The official vote:

Delegate, John Hailey, Democrat, 985, Fred T. Dubois, Republican, 681; prosecuting attorney, W. T. McKern, Democrat, 810, A. Quackenbush, Republican, 884; councilman, Charles Watson, Democrat, 954, J. M. Howe, Republican, 740; assemblymen, A. S. Chaney, D. F. Mahana, James Dellaven, Democrats, 922, 820 and 908 votes, respectively, W. A. Elyea, C. L. Kinman, J. I. Mitcham, Republicans, 897, 734 and 753 votes, respectively; probate judge, W. M. Rice, Democrat, 893, William Wing, Republican, 803; sheriff, S. J. Langdon, Democrat, 855; L. Stannus, Republican, 839; auditor and recorder, I. C. Hattabaugh, Democrat, 1,157, Robert Bruce, Republican, 543; treasurer, P. M. Davis, Democrat, 920, Richard J. Monroe, Republican, 785; assessor, James Keane, Democrat, 798, F. E. Mix, Republican, 900; superintendent of schools, J. W. Lieuallen, Republican, 743, T. N. Creekmur, Democrat, 577; surveyor, S. L. Campbell, Republican, 1,008, A. T. Beall, Democrat, 687; commissioners, C. A. Leeper, Democrat, 271, Robert Ingraham, Republican, 146, H. J. Bundy, Democrat, 338, H. H. Bangs, Republican, 269, William Ewing, Democrat, 276, J. L. Naylor, Republican, 367; coroner, W. A. Simpson, Democrat, 851, H. V. Grubbe, Republican, 829.

In 1888, for the last time, annexation was the principal issue before the people of this territory, for in 1890 Idaho, including the panhandle, became a state. In the north Dubois was denounced in no uncertain terms, for his bitter opposition in congress to the annexation movement. In Nez Perces county both the Republican and Democratic conventions passed strong resolutions reiterating their belief in annexation. The Republicans drew up a memorial to congress giving a history of the annexation movement and its advantages and characterizing Dubois's course as "unworthy of a statesman and an honorable man." The Democrats, however, in the resolution next following one favoring annexation endorsed James H. Hawley, the Democratic nominee and an avowed anti-annexationist. Just why they did this is not apparent. Perhaps Hawley had made promises of remaining neutral on the annexation question should he be elected. At all events the people of the north were dissatisfied with both candidates and at a general convention held at Moscow Judge Norman Buck, of Lewiston, was nominated as the annexationists' candidate for delegate. Judge Buck accepted the nomination a few days before the election took place and in Latah and Nez Perces counties received more votes than did Dubois and Hawley together. Kootenai, Idaho and Shoshone gave him a small vote. Dubois captured the southern vote, however, and was re-elected to congress.

The names of the victorious candidates in Nez Perces county may be gleaned from the official canvass below:

For delegate, Norman Buck, Annexationist, 431, James H. Hawley, Democrat, 155, Fred T. Dubois, Republican 49, councilman, C. A. Leeper, Democrat, 522, J. W. Brigham, Rep. 81; assemblymen, J. I. Mitcham, Rep., 588, James DeHaven, Rep., 595, W. L. Thompson, Democrat, 591, J. H. Irvine, 23; district attorney, I. N. Maxwell, Democrat, 325, J. M. Howe, Republican, 294; probate judge, W. M. Rice, Democrat, 334, William Wing, Republican, 291; auditor and recorder, R. P. Mudge, Republican, 353, A. W. Kroutinger, Jr., Democrat, 253; treasurer, George Glass, Republican, 382, P. M. Davis, Democrat, 241; sheriff, L. Stannus, Republican, 313, John Bymaster, Democrat, 304; assessor, J. Englis, Republican, 361, William Sigler, Democrat, 266; superintendent of schools, S. G. Isaman, Republican, 316, J. Q. Moxley, Democrat, 310; commissioners, Jasper Rand, Democrat, 159, D. M. White, Republican, 154, W. J. Eakin, Democrat, 53, J. L. Goodnight, Republican, 49, M. S. Freeman, Republican, 142, M. L. Ward, Democrat, 57; surveyor, W. P. Bell, Republican, 381, S. R. Southwick, Democrat 2; coroner, G. H. Lake, Republican, 332, C. H. Payne, Democrat, 284.

The act creating Latah county provided that that county was to remain in the same district as Nez Perces county for judicial and legislative purposes until the legislature should direct otherwise. As the election took place before the next meeting of the legislative assembly, the citizens of Latah and Nez Perces counties were left in a quandary as to how to proceed. They could not agree and so four legislative tickets were placed in the field, two by each county. After the election took place the question of who were and who were not entitled to seats arose. The Latah nominees received a majority of the votes cast; a few votes were cast in Latah county for Nez Perces nominees and vice versa. The auditor of Latah county demanded that the recorder of Nez Perces county issue a certificate of election to the successful candidate for councilman in Latah county. This request was refused, whereupon the applicant applied to the courts for a writ of mandamus. The court granted an alternative writ for the defendant to appear and show cause why a writ should not be issued. After several brief discussions a compromise was agreed upon on December 1st and accepted by both parties. By the terms of this compromise J. W. Brigham, of Latah county, was given a certificate of election as councilman and certificates were issued to A. S. Chaney, of Latah, and to James DeHaven and J. I. Mitcham, of Nez Perces, as representatives.

With the advent of statehood in 1890 the long and bitter contest between the north and south over the annexation question came to an end and with it the issue which had for more than two decades rent each political party asunder and caused no end of factional fights. With statehood came a closer bond between the two sections. The first state election was simply a contest for supremacy between the two great parties and national policies were the issue. The Republicans were victorious, the state majority being between 2,000 and 2,500.

A feature of the campaign in Nez Perces county was the deadlock which occurred in the Democratic district convention, composed of delegates from Latah, Idaho and Nez Perces counties. The delegates were unable to agree upon the nominations for district attorney and the district judgeship. Finally, after sixty-eight ballots had been taken without a nomination, a compromise was effected and J. H. Forney, of Idaho county, was awarded the nomination for district attorney, J. W. Poe, of Nez Perces, the nomination for district judge and the legislative offices were diveded between the three counties. The election in this county was a closely contested on as will be seen from the appended official vote:

For congressman, Willis Sweet, Republican, 367, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 330; governor, George L. Shoup, Republican, 370, Benjamin Wilson, Democrat, 327; lieutenant governor, Norman B. Willey, Republican, 378, Samuel F. Taylor, Democrat, 322; secretary of state, A. J. Pinkham, Republican, 378, A. E. Sherwin, Democrat, 331; auditor, Silas Moody, Republican, 367, James H. Wickersham, Democrat, 331; treasurer, Frank R. Coffin, Republican, 372, Timothy Regan, Democrat, 326; attorney general, George H. Roberts, Republican, 362, Richard Z. Johnson, Democrat, 335; superintendent of public instruction, J. E. Harroun, Republican, 343, Madison A. Kelly, Democrat, 349; justices supreme court, J. W. Huston, John T. Morgan, J. M. Sullivan, Republicans, 373, 367 and 339 votes respectively, Henry W. Weir, Frank E. Ensign, Isaac N. Maxwell, Democrats, 324, 329 and 347 votes respectively; judge, second district, W. G. Piper, Republican, 286, James W. Poe, Democrat, 409; district attorney, E. O'Neill, Republican, 350, J. H. Forney, Democrat, 343; senator, third district, I. S. Weiler, Republican, 381, C. W. Case, Democrat, 310; senator, fourth district, William Wing, Republican, 374, Barney Rohen Kohl, Democrat, 320; representative, I. S. Sperry, Republican, 351, J. B. Morris, Democrat, 335; joint representative with Idaho county, J. L. Goodnight, Republican, 369, Ezra Baird, Democrat, 321; county clerk, H. K. Barnett, Republican, 376, W. M. Rice, Democrat, 314; sheriff, M. S. Freeman, Republican, 317, Joseph Eakin, Democrat, 363; treasurer, George Glass, Republican, 313, D. S. Dent, Democrat, 377; probate judge, S. G. Isman, Republican, 348, M. E. Shepler, Democrat, 339; assessor, Josiah Inglis, Republican, 374, W. G. Anthony, Democrat, 316; commissioners, George Walker, Republican, 140, Andrew Schultheiss, Democrat, 138, J. A. Lathrop, Republican, 62, J. A. Wilkinson, Democrat, 79, D. M. White, Republican, 166, W. W. Brown, Democrat, 97; surveyor, W. P. Bell, Republican, elected; coroner, George H. Lake, Republican, 365, W. A. Simpson, Democrat, 336.

The year 1892 is distinguished in political history as marking the date of the entrance of the People's party upon the stage of politics. This party had been in process of organization for years past, but not until 1892 did the different societies and organizations having Populistic principles associate themselves and form one national party for the purpose of taking an active part in national affairs. Throughout the northwest the People's party organized, nominated state, district and county tickets and otherwise made its influence felt. Idaho and the county of which we are writing were no exceptions. The silver question also came into prominence for the first time this year and it is interesting to note that, as in Montana, Colorado and other western mining states, Idaho Republicans at first announced themselves in favor of the free coinage of this metal. The silver question tore the Republican party in this state into two factions. The Democratic party was also divided on this issue.

While the People's party showed considerable strength in 1892, they did not succeed in capturing any offices in Nez Perces county, the Democrats winning a great victory. The official vote is given below:

For president, Benjamin Harrison, Republican, 345, Grover Cleveland, Democrat, 428; congressman, Willis Sweet, Republican, 357, E. B. True, Democrat, 328, James Gunn, Populist, 101; governor, W. J. McConnell, Republican, 337, John M. Burke, Democrat, 358, A. J. Crook, Populist, 98; lieutenant governor, Frank B. Willis, Republican, 331, George V. Bryan, Democrat, 347, J. B. Wright, Populist, 88; supreme judge, J. N. Sullivan, Republican, 368, F. E. Ensign, Democrat, 366; secretary of state, James F. Curtis, Republican, 337, J. H. Wickersham, Democrat, 353, Benjamin F. Cheney, Populist, 91; attorney general, George M. Parsons, Republican, 342, W. T. Reaves, Democrat, 349, J. R. Webster, Populist, 87; treasurer, W. C. Hill, Republican, 344, Phillip Regan, Democrat, 351, H. J. Sutton, Populist, 82; superintendent of schools, B. B. Lower, Republican, 344, J. W. Farris, Democrat, 348, L. L. Shearer, Populist, 78; auditor, Frank Ramsey, Republican, 340, J. W. McClure, Democrat, 350, J. H. Andrews, Populist, 84; joint senator, third district, J. F. Ailshie, Republican, 329, J. B. Morris, Democrat, 387, James H. Robinson, Populist, 75; joint senator, fourth district, J. M. Howe, Republican, 347, Thomas F. Nelson, Democrat, 351, John Chenoweth, Populist, 90; joint representative with Idaho county, W. L. Thompson, Republican, 350, David C. Stephens, Democrat, 346, William Craig, Populist, 74; representative, Ira S. Sperry, Republican, 350, D. F. Mahana, Democrat, 379, O. D. Lovelace, Populist, 52; sheriff, J. B. son. Democrat, 397; commissioners, D. M. White, Republican, 395, M. A. Kelly, Democrat, 344. W. A. Nixon, Republican, 332, C. A. Leeper, Democrat, 373, James A. Ray, Populist, 50; John W. Brown, Republican, 331; O. L. Phillips, Democrat, 330, Felix McMinime, Populist, 57. The state went Republican.

In the following campaign, that of 1894, the Populists displayed considerable strength. At the Populist convention held in Lewiston July 20th, the following platform was adopted, which, because it is typical of most Populist platforms, we reproduce here:

"First—We endorse the Omaha platform.

"Second—We demand that the laws known as the initiative and referendum be enacted and made part of the state constitution.

"Third—We demand that all property be assessed at its cash value and that all indebtedness shall be exempt from taxation. All mortgages to be assessed at their face value in the county where the indebtedness exists.

"Fourth—We demand the enactment of a law forbidding the sale of property on execution unless the amount of the sale equals eighty per cent. of the appraised value.

"Fifth—We demand that all laborers shall have a first lien on the property.

"Sixth—We demand that there shall be a reduction in the salaries of the state and county officers, till the amount paid shall be a fair compensation only for the work done, and further that salaries be paid and all fees go to the county treasury.

"Seventh—We demand that taxes be made delinquent in March instead of the second Monday in December.

"Eighth—We demand a revision of the school law so that the state furnish text books to the pupils at actual cost.

"Ninth—We demand a county attorney instead of a district attorney."

The election resulted favorably to the Republicans, though the Democrats secured a few offices. The Populists did not develop enough strength to secure any offices in this county. From the official vote the names of the victorious candidates in this county will be seen:

For congressman, Edgar Wilson, Republican, 505, James M. Ballentine, Democrat, 336, James Gunn, Populist, 222; governor, William J. McConnell, Republican, 487, Edward A. Strong, Republican, 508, Madison A. Kelley, Democrat, 348, L. C. Neal, Populist, 202. A small Prohibition vote was cast.

The campaign of 1896, the most brilliant and remarkable political contest in the latter annals of our country's history, witnessed the dissolution and division of two national parties in Idaho. The rock upon which they split was was the silver issue. The Silver Republicans organized under Senator Dubois, who walked out of the national convention at St. Louis, while the Democrats either fused with the Populists or joined the gold standard forces. Some Democrats joined Dubois's new party. In Nez Perces county the Democrats and the Populists fused. The Silver Republicans and Democrats who did not care to fuse with the Populists also placed a ticket in the field for a few offices. The Fusionists carried the state and every office in Nez Perces county except one, that of probate judge. Dubois's Silver party elected twenty-five representatives to the legislature.

The vote in Nez Perces county follows:

For President of the United States, William McKinley, Republican, 675, William Jennings Bryan, Democrat, 1089, Weaver, Populist, 22; congressman, James Gunn, Fusionist, 918, John T. Morrison, Republican, 678, W. E. Borah, Silver Republican, 122; governor, Frank Steunenberg, Fusionist, 1064, D. H.

Hudlong, Republican, 674; lieutenant governor, G. F. Moore, Fusionist, 948, Vincent Bierbower, Republican, 662, E. B. True, Silver Republican, 106; secretary of state, G. J. Lewis, Fusionist, 934, I. W. Garrett, Republican, 670, Charles Durrand, Silver Republican, 103; state auditor, J. H. Anderson, Fusionist, 921, E. A. McKenna, Republican, 679, Bartlett Sinclair, Silver Republican, 98; treasurer, G. H. Storer, Democrat, 934, F. C. Ramsey, Republican, 668, Timothy Regan, Silver Republican, 100; attorney general, R. E. McFarland, Fusionist, 911, J. A. Bagley, Republican, 658, G. M. Parsons, Silver Republican, 125; superintendent public instruction, L. N. B. Anderson, Fusionist, 925, C. A. Foresman, Republican, 690, M. F. Cowley, Silver Republican, 89; mine inspector, B. F. Hastings, Fusionist,1,038, Theodore Brown, Republican, 658; justice supreme court, R. P. Morrison, Silver Republican, 109; representatives, A. H. Alford, Fusionist, 673, I. S. Sperry, Fusionist, 627, N. J. Wing, Republican, 450, W. A. Nixon, Republican, 439, J. D. Graham, Silver Republican, 66; sheriff, G. Barton, Fusionist, 941, W. S. Dyer, Republican, 768; assessor, D. Cantrill, Fusionist, 930, J. M. Williams, Republican, 758; treasurer, J. B. Morris, Fusionist, 946, Hazen Squier, Republican, 775; probate judge, Prince E. Stookey, Republican, 933, S. G. Hayes, Fusionist, 766; commissioners, J. L. Armstrong, Fusionist, 959, A. G. Wisner, Republican, 670, J. P. Parker, Fusionist, 966, W. R. Dixon, Republican, 651, Z. McCall, Fusionist, 919, J. C. Larkee, Republican, 664; surveyor, G. Moragne, Fusionist, 860, J. O. Maxon, Republican, 816; coroner, L. L. Strong, Fusionist, 962, S. Leslie Thompson, Republican, 706.

The next campaign was one of bitter factional strife amongst all the parties. Late in August the Democrats, the Populists and the Silver Republicans met at Boise. An energetic attempt was made to concentrate the silver forces into one party, but most of the Populists resisted the offer of fusion, believeing they were now strong enough to stand alone. Finally the Democrats and Silver Republicans nominated a fusion ticket and the Populist party broke up into two factions, the Blake and the Taylor factions, both of which claimed to be the regular party organization. Subsequently, however, the courts decided favorably to the Blake faction, whereupon those of the Populit party who had not cast their lot with the Democrats, came together and nominated another Populist ticket—a-middle-of-the-road ticket The Democrats and Populists again fused in this county and the Silver Republicans joined with the regular Republican party. From the official vote given below, the result of the contest in this county may easily be seen:

For congressman, W. B. Heyburn, Republican, 1,238, Edgar Wilson, Fusionist, 969, James Gunn, Populist, 385; governor, A. B. Moss, Republican, 1,324, Frank Steuenberg, Fusionist, 942, James H. Anderson, Populist, 297; lieutenant governor, J. F. Hunt, Republican 1,279, J. H. Hutchinson, Fusionist, 929, T. E. Miller, Populist, 310; secretary of state, R. S. Bragaw, Republican, 1,268, Martin Patrie, Fusionist, 912, J. S. Bonham, Populist, 30; attorney general, F. J. Wyman, Republican, 1,267, S. H. Hayes, Fusionist, 932, T. L. Glenn, Populist, 311; justice supreme court, D. W. Standrod, Republican, 1,308, J. N. Sullivan, Fusionist, 1,072; district judge, E. C. Steele, Republican, 1,253, —— Moore, Fusionist, 869, Willis Sweet, Silver Republican, 341; auditor, J. H. Vancamp, Republican, 1,260, Bartlett Sinclair, Fusionist, 917, A. G. Whittier, Populist, 308; state treasurer, G. W. Fletcher, Republican, 1,265, L. C. Rice, Fusionist, 1226; inspector of mines, J. W. Stoddard, Republican, 1,253, J. A. Czizek, Fusionist, 910, David Farmer, Populist, 448; superintendent of public instruction, Miss Dean, Republican, 1,300, Miss French, Fusionist, 1,229; state senator, J. N. Stacy, Republican, 1,299, L. C. Clark, Fusionist, 1,071, G. A. Manning, Silver Republican, 115; representatives, O. T. Hanlon, Republican, 1,256, W. D. Hardwick, Republican, 1,179, Wallace B. Stainton, Fusionist, 1,181, S. Ogden, Fusionist, 946, D. H. Haner, Silver Republican, 188; auditor, P. E. Stookey, Republican, 1,496, R. R. Steen, Fusionist, 1,199; sheriff, J. W. Rozen, Republican, 1,475, E. L. Parker, Fusionist, 1,116; assessor, Stass Spekker, Republican, 1,388, George Ruddell, Fusionist, 1,224; treasurer, C. A. Hastings, Republican, 1,357, T. S. Cantril, Fusionist, 1,158; county attorney, F. Danford, Silver Republican, 1,375, John Green, Fusionist, 1,226; probate judge, R. A. Langford, Republican, 1,372, William Kauffman, Fusionist, 1,118; superintendent of schools, Jennie Harrington, Republican, 1,488, Mary Kroh, Fusionist, 1,018; surveyor, Edson Briggs, Republican, 1,412, J. H. Day, Fusionist, 1,073; coroner, S. L. Thompson, Silver Republican, 1,279, L. C. Neal, Fusionist, 1,010, S. S. Strong, Independent, 171; commissioners, S. G. Isaman, Silver Republican, 1,319, John Wilkinson, Fusionist, 1,122, A. G. Johnson, Republican, 1,333, W. B. Martin, Fusionist, 1,089, William Black, Republican, 1,388, Ed. Vandyke, Fusionist, 1,078.

The state was carried by the Fusionists, their majorities ranging from 3,000 to 6,000. Nez Perces county gave the Republicans majorities averaging 300. From the fact that the Silver Republicans were allowed to affiliate with the regular Republican party it will be seen that the gold standard advocates in Idaho at this time were not very strong and probably for this reason not very aggresive.

Fusion again prevailed in 1900, both in state and county, the Populists, Democrats and Silver Republicans associating. There was also, however, a middle-of- the-road Populist ticket. The Fusionists carried the state, while in this county, honors were about equally divided between the Republicans and the Fusionists. It is worth noticing that the Prohibition party polled a considerable number of votes this year. The official vote of Nez Perces county was as follows:

For President of the United States, William McKinley, Republican, 2,152, William J. Bryan, Fusionist, 2,134, Populist, 22, Probititionist, 169; justice su-

Miller, Fusionist, 2,258, N. C. Busby, Prohibitionist, 126, William A. Black, Republican, 2,079, George W. Brammet, Fusionist, 2,094, Charles A. Parrott, Prohibitionist, 124; surveyor, Edson Briggs, Republican, 2,264, Benjamin F. Chaney, Fusionist, 1,959, George Hogue, Prohibitionist, 146; coroner, Lemuel C. Neal, Republican, 2,079, Jesse Watson, Fusionist, 2,092, John Black, Prohibitionist, 125.

The last campaign is too recent to require a discussion of the policies of the different parties. Suffice it to say that the Populist party as a party is now a memory, though many of its principles have been absorbed by the two historic parties, and that the silver question is not what might be termed a living issue. Those who were former adherents of the Populist faith are now numbered among either the Democrats, the Republicans or are members of one of the minor parties. With the removal of the silver question as a factor in Idaho politics and the substitution therefor, as the main issue, of the administration's foreign policy and the well known Republican doctrines of a protective tariff and conservatism in all financial and economic matters in general, the Republicans have once again assumed the reins of government in Idaho. Nez Perces county went overwhelmingly Republican at the last election, only two Democrats being elected.

The official vote:

CHAPTER III.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

LEWISTON.

From the nature of things the early history of north Idaho could not well be traced without, in part at least, presenting also the early annals of the pioneer city of the region. We have already referred to the fact that the first attempt to establish a trading point was made at the Big Eddy of the Clearwater, but abandoned at once on account of the impracticability of navigating that stream. We have likewise spoken of the difficulty in the way of building a town at the confluence of the Clearwater and the Snake rivers, on territory then a part of the Nez Perces Indian reservation, and of how circumstances compelled the whites to assume the aggressive in trenching upon the rights of the Indians and the latter race to yield an unwilling compliance. The town of Canvas has been adverted to; the unfortunate social conditions obtaining therein; and the sufferings occasioned by the frailty of protecting walls and the severity of the winter of 1861-2. Mention has been made also of the platting of the townsite in October, 1861; of the town's early political status and its career as the capital of the territory. The circumstances of its loss of political prestige and the seat of government have likewise engaged our attention and many incidental references to the town of later days have necessarily found place in former chapters. It is now our task to trace the development of Lewiston somewhat more comprehensively and to gather up the fragments of its still unrelated history.

The circumstances which caused the founding of Lewiston were favorable to its rapid early growth. The steamers which brought to the country hundreds of miners brought also large cargoes of goods to the merchants which were speedily retailed at enormous profits. Money was plentiful among all classes and prosperity abounded on every hand. But these conditions were of short duration. The discovery of the Boise mines in August, 1862, turned the current of trade in that direction, and it became apparent to the leading business men of Lewiston that if their town was to continue its rapid development, it must secure a share of the trade. They were also ambitious to establish commercial relations with Salt Lake City. In furtherance of these two objects, or rather to determine in a measure whether or not they were practicable, A. P. Ankeny sent a party consisting of Charles Clifford, Washington Murray and Joseph Denver to the site of old Fort Boise to report upon the navigability of the Snake river between that point and Lewiston. The party waited for lowest water, then descended the river to Lewiston, making part of the trip, it is thought, in a raft. They gave it as their opinion that the Snake river could be navigated by steamboats and that same fall, the Spray, of which mention has been heretofore made, ascended the river to a point fifteen miles above Lewiston, where it had to turn back. This was unfortunate, for it went to prove the impracticability of a far reaching scheme. "Lewiston's business men," says Bancroft, "contemplated placing a line of boats on Snake river to be run as far as navigable. The first important landing was to be at the mouth of Salmon river, forty miles above Lewiston. The design was to make a road direct to the mines, whereas the travel had theretofore been by the trails through the Nez Perces country. The distance from the mouth of Salmon river by water to Fort Boise was 95 miles, thence to Fishing Falls on Salmon river, 90 miles; thence to Salt Lake City, 250 miles, total 475 miles, nearly half of which, it was hoped, could be traveled by boats. Such a line would have been of great service to the military department, about to establish a post on Boise river, and to immigration, saving a long stretch of road. But the Salmon river mountains proved impassible, and the snake river unnavigable, although in the autumn of 1863 a second party of five men, with Molthrop at the lead, descended the stream in a boat built at Buena Vista bar, and a company was formed in Portland for constructing a portage through a canyon of that river, considered impracticable for steamers. It was soon made apparent, however, that Lewiston was hopelessly cut off from Salt Lake, and even from Boise basin, by craggy mountains, impassable river canyons and falls."

The failure of this Salt Lake project made it impossible for Lewiston to maintain the rate of development established during its earliest years, but its monopoly on the distributing business of the Salmon river mining country continued, giving it ample means for substantial growth.

It must be remembered that at this time the land upon which the town was built was still a part of the Nez Perces Indian reservation, and that no title to property could be secured, a fact which must have exerted a deterrent influence upon those who would otherwise be inclined to erect substantial and permanent buildings. But in due time negotiations were entered into between the United States government and the Indians looking toward the cession on the part of the latter of one mile square of their territory to be used for townsite purposes. Before these negotiations were fully concluded the town was incorporated by an act of the territorial legislature approved December 27, 1866. The first section of the incorporation bill read as follows: "Section 1. The town of Lewiston, including the following territory, to-wit: Bounded north and west by the waters of the Clearwater and Snake rivers at their confluence, and extending sufficiently far southerly and easterly therefrom to constitute in a square form, as near as practicable, according to government survey, one square mile, intended to include the square mile of land stipulated for in favor of said town in the treaty between the United States and the Nez Perces tribe of Indians now pending, is hereby organized into a municipal corporation under the name of 'The City of Lewiston.' Providing that the jurisdiction of said city hereby conferred shall extend to the middle channel of said rivers at the points oposite the territory included within said limits."

One provison of the bill was that the first election of city officers should be held on the second Monday in March of the year 1867 at the court house in Lewiston. The election was held at the appointed time and resulted as follows: mayor, W. W. Wright; treasurer, H. W. Stainton; marshal, Daniel McElwee; councilmen, Godfrey Gamble, George Scranton and Julius Loewenberg. The charter had been secured despite some opposition in the town itself to the movement for incorporation, and the opposition did not cease when officers were chosen. Indeed the forces adverse to the city government, led by Richard Hurley, were so nearly equal in numbers and influence to those of a contrary mind that little could be accomplished in the way of progress during the first few years, and nothing was attempted beyond such improvements as were deemed absolutely necessary.

It was during the year 1867, according to the statement of Charles G. Kress, one of the pioneer business men of Lewiston, that the first experiments were made in tree planting in the streets of the town and inception was given to a movement which later gained for it the soubriquet of "the City of Poplars."

"One hot May afternoon," says Mr. Kress, "during a lull in business, Seth Slater, John Clark, Dick Monroe and myself were sitting in front of Monroe's drug store on Main street at the head of what is now known as First street. The conversation turned to the extreme heat which was prevailing and Monroe suggested that shade trees should be planted. At that time our streets were entirely barren of trees and there was no vegetation at all in the business section. The suggestion appealed strongly to us and we held an informal meeting to discuss ways and means of securing and caring for the trees. We were not at all sure whether trees would grow here and the water problem was a serious one.

"Finally we decided to try the experiment anyhow. Our plan contemplated the digging of a well in front of Monroe's store, a favorite lounging place then, and the planting there of one poplar and two locust trees. The hat was passed around among the citizens and in a short time $210 were subscribed. The well was sunk at a point very nearly in the middle of the street, and cost $210, the amount of the subscription. Over the well a neat frame covering was placed and around it seats were constructed to accommodate those who cared to while away an hour or so near its cooling waters and beneath the luxuriant shade of the trees that were to be. The walls of the well were boarded up. The chain and bucket system delivered the water. Wesley Mulkey, whose place was near the city, donated to the enterprise the desired trees, which were planted as soon as the well was finished.

"The trees seemed inspired with a due sense of the importance of their mission, for they throve wonderfully from the first. The enterprise was a popular one and elicited the interest of everybody. The following year C. C. Bunnell, Dr. Stainton and others set out trees, and in 1870 a still larger number were planted, until in a comparatively short time the town was fairly embowered in luxuriant foliage. Main street was lined on both sides with poplars, but few of which now remain."

An issue of the Lewiston Signal bearing date

September 12, 1867, has fallen into our hands and from it we learn that the following market prices prevailed at that time: apples, peaches, pears, 25 cents a pound; flour, $5.50 a barrel; butter, fresh, 75 cents, Isthmus, 50 cents; eggs, 75 cents; cheese, 50 cents; bacon, 22 cents; sugar, brown, 25 cents, crushed, 28 cents; coffee, 38 cents; tea, $1.25. From its advertising patronage we have compiled the following business directory: Luna Feed and Livery stable, Jack Curry; Pioneer stables, J. B. Rowley; general stores, Grostein & Binnard, Baldwin Brothers, James Flanagan & Company, J. Loewenberg, Ankeny & Sons, Bacon & Thompson; general commission merchants, J. Vilott & Company; drug stores, H. W. Stainton, M. A. Kelly; the Luna hotel, L. H. Thompson; Hotel De France, Madame Le Francois; Globe hotel, August Bittner; wood, timber and shingles, Charles Carleton & Company; hardware, Bunnell Brothers; California bakery, C. Baker, proprietor; flour and liquor store, Vilott & Company; Challenge saloon, Norton & Bunker; J. Denny's saloon; James Hays's saloon, also the saloons of Vincent & Dyer and A. Gilman; the Asotin Mill Company; harness store, Gill & Warden; jeweler, Charles G. Kress; brewery, Gamble & Weisgerber; assay office, Richard Hurley; gunsmith, M. H. Sprague; the Oro Fino & Pierce City express, M. Fettis; the Warren's Diggings express, just established, W. P. Hunt and F. G. Hart; H. W. Stainton, physician; W. W. Thayer and Alonzo Leland, attorneys; H. O. Adams, justice of the peace.

The progressive forces, as those who had favored incorporation were styled, continued to be hampered in their efforts by a practically equally opposing force until November 6, 1871, when Levi Ankeny, a pioneer merchant, was elected mayor on a ticket pledged to progress. The first matter to elicit the attention of the new government was the securing of a title to the townsite. Under the act of congress approved in the spring of 1867, the government had granted the city a tract of land one square mile in extent at the junction of the Clearwater and Snake rivers, but the land office had as yet failed to act in granting a patent and the matter was held in abeyance. Mayor Ankeny was authorized to cause entry to be made in his name as trustee in behalf of the city and to take such further action as was necessary to secure title to the land. As a result a United States patent was in due course of time secured, though not without litigation. It appears that one Alonzo Gilman had filed a few months before Mr. Ankeny on several lots of land included in the townsite of Lewiston. Under permission of the agent to occupy a part of these tracts for trade purposes, Gilman had, in 1862, settled upon a small portion of the land claimed by him, but the department held that no acts of his either previous or subsequent to the ratification of the treaty could secure for him a valid claim to the land or any part of it and his claim was therefore rejected.

In 1871 was begun a project favoring the further extension of the tree planting and beautifying of Lewiston, referred to above. Wesley Mulkey was the moving spirit in the enterprise. He organized a joint stock company with a capital stock of $10,000 for the purpose of digging an irrigating ditch through the town. The plan was scouted by many, who offered to wager that all the water which would pass through the ditch could be caught in a hat, but the more enterprising citizens subscribed the stock at $25 per share and the project was carried to a successful issue. An ordinance granting the Lewiston Water Ditch and Mill Company, as the corporation styled itself, the right of way through the city was passed February 2, 1874, and the ditch was completed some time that year. It was intended at first for irrigation purposes only, but later S. C. Hale and John Brearley planned and built a flouring mill at its terminus, which resulted not alone in the inauguration of a valuable new enterprise but the deepening and widening of the ditch. After passing through the hands of several different owners, the part of this property running through the city was amicably transferred in 1900 to the city of Lewiston, which abandoned it as an aqueduct, thus removing one of the ancient landmarks of the town and an improvement which had done its part in building the picturesque Lewiston of the past and establishing the "olden, golden glory of the days gone by."

The half decade following the financial crash of 1873 was a period of quiet times in Lewiston, though commercial stagnation was never experienced and the town never ceased to grow slowly. The first thing to thoroughly arouse the people was the outbreak of the Nez Perces war, which occasioned a meeting of the citizens and the organization of the Home Guards, of which company, Ed. McConville, who later won so much fame in the Nez Perces and Spanish-American wars, was elected captain. Hazen Squier was first lieutenant, George Young, second lieutenant, and Charles G. Kress, orderly sergeant. The muster roll of the privates was a follows: Alexander ———, Anderson William, Billings———, Brearley John, Baird Ezra, Baird William, Binnard A., Boise L. B., Boise William, Benson A., Berry J. G., Boise F., Bunnell C. C., Cox William, Clark John, Coburn C. P., Collins, M., Connely James, Denny William, Damas A., Dunwell L., Davis P. M., Denny J. W., Frost G., Faunce C. E., Forster William, Forster Alexander, Fix John, Grostein R., Gale H., Gilman A., Glass George, Griffith ———, Hale N., Hale L. C., Holbrook N. B., Hudson Thomas, Hunt W. P., Igo William, Jain Joe, Johnson Dave, Krep C. G., Knaggs ———, Kelly M. A., Kearny J., Knifong J., Loewenberg B., Leland A., Leland Charles, Minnomy J. B., McGrave James, McConville E., Monroe R. D., Wardwell Dan., Wildenthaler S., Worden Thomas, Young George, Yane Joe, bugler.

Shortly after the organization of the Home Guards, Governor Brayman authorized the formation of the First Regiment , Idaho National Guards, commissioning Captain Ed. McConville colonel of the same. Company A was immediately organized in Lewiston, with officers and membership as follows:

Colonel Ed McConville, Randolph Kean, Henry Archer, John Bruce, Elmer Colwell, W. S. Stafford, William Ritchey, John Woosherd, Charles Warnstoff, George Pitt, Henry Pohlson, Albert Wisner, Thomas Norman, George Gaunt, Charles Adams, James Salie, J. S. Pintter.

June 17, 1877, the city council held a special meeting to consider the Indian situation. The mayor was authorized to send a telegram to Portland asking for arms and ammunition from the citizens of that city and to the O. S. N. Company, which brought a quick response in the form of forty York rifles and a supply of ammunition. The council also authorized the construction of rifle pits and other means of defense, and accordingly, eight or ten outposts were established on the high plateau south of the city. One was near the top of the present grade from Snake river avenue, another stood between that and what is now Fifth street, another to the east of the present Fifth street grade, one in front of the site of H. K. Barnett's residence and the remainder between that and the old road leading from Lewiston to Mount Idaho. At each of these outposts a semi-circular trench two or three feet deep and thirty-five or forty feet long was dug. Behind the embankment thus formed four or five men were stationed each night. Camp fires were forbidden and strict military discipline was enforced. This nightly guard was maintained until Joseph's band had been driven into Montana, though the danger of an attack was considered slight on account of the fact that it is not in accordance with Indian methods of warfare to attack large towns or cities. But it was thought that many of the reservation Indians were really in sympathy with their red brethren among the hostiles, and as a revolt among them would be indeed serious, it was best to be vigilant.

Grostein & Binnard's stone store was the strongest structure in the city and the best adapted for use as a fortress should the necessity for such arise. It was therefore arranged that in case of attack the women and children should gather in this building while the men manned the entrenchments above town. Fortunately no attack was ever made, though there were the usual number of panics among the people caused by the unfounded stories of highly imaginative persons or the fabrications of Madam Rumor.

While the war damaged Lewiston in a number of ways, as it damaged the whole of the north Idaho country, it brought a measure of compensation for the harm it did by turning the attention of the world in this direction. Then, too, Lewiston naturally became the headquarters for a number of army officers and one of the principal bases of supplies. At one time, it is said, every vacant business house in the city, at all suited to the purpose, was rented and used as a department office. The various corps of clerks and helpers, the camp followers and the strangers attracted to the place gave Lewiston a lively appearance. Some of the army men suggested that the town was a capital place for the establishment of a permanent military post, and the citizens, ever ready to push any movement for the good of their town, sent numerously signed petitions to Washington asking that a post be stationed here, but the department did not see its way clear to grant the request.

The year after the war, Lewiston began planning for a more substantial growth, and not a few of its leading business men commenced making arrangements for the erection of fire proof, brick and stone buildings. The merchants, who had theretofore catered almost entirely to the miners' trade, were asking themselves if it would not be better to seek to build up a trade with the farming districts to the north, and the press was calling attention to the fact that if more effort had been made to satisfy the farmers' necessities, the occasion for several rival towns in Washington territory would not have arisen. In short, Lewiston was casting about for something to take the place, in furnishing support, of the declining placer mines, and its people clearly saw that their hope for the future lay in the development of quartz mining and the agricultural resources of the tributary country. As the transition from one industry to another is necessarily slow in any community, so must be the growth of towns depending upon regions in which one source of revenue becomes exhausted before others can be built up to take its place.

During the summer of 1879, the first long distance telegraph line, that precursor of the railroad, was constructed into Nez Perces county and north Idaho. It was a branch of the main military line, built to connect Dayton with Fort Lapwai, and the citizens of Lewiston subsidized the enterprise with a free office in the town and several hundred poles, with the understanding that they might use the line when not in the service of the military. The following is the first telegram sent from Lewiston over the wire:

Lewiston, I. T., June 17, 1879, 5 P. M.

To the Mayor and Citizens of Dayton, W. T., Greetings

The people of Lewiston are happy to announce to you by way of first telegram over the first U. S. Government line yet established north of San Diego, California, that they hold sacred in this manner this the anniversary of the struggle of our forefathers on Bunker Hill.

Lewiston claims the honor of having had the first local telephone system in the northwest. It was put in by John P. Vollmer in 1878 and consisted of an exchange of three phones.

The decade between 1880 and 1890 does not seem to have brought any great good fortune or any serious disaster to Lewiston, and while the period was an important one and witnessed a slow, substantial growth, it is not crowded with events such as would be read about with interest if presented in full detail. The former year brought a great reduction in ferry rates across the Snake and Clearwater rivers,—an important concesion from a commercial point of view as it encouraged trade to come this way. During the fall of 1881, the city paid its tribute of respect to the memory of the martyred President Garfield. An event of unusual importance in 1883 was the 4th of July celebration, attended by large crowds from Uniontown, Genessee, Asotin, Pomeroy, Pataha, Alpowai, Waha, Lapwai and many other points in Idaho and Washington; two hundred Indians from the reservation, and last but not least Governor J. B. Neil, said to be the first chief executive of the territory to visit north Idaho since 1864. In 1883 the town experienced a fire of considerable magnitude, though fortunately very little damage was inflicted upon the white population. About half past four o'clock on the morning of November 19th, the flames burst forth in the Chinese section, and before their progress could be stayed, the entire block was in ashes. Thirteen buildings were destroyed, all of them occupied by Chinamen except a wagon shop in which Lot Wiggin's tools and equipment were, and the dwelling of J. E. Sheppard. Both the white men succeeded in saving most of their valuables, and the fire was not greatly deplored as it removed a block which had been an eyesore in the city for a long time.

On May 31, 1887, the water in the rivers rose to a height unprecedented in the experience of white men. Pioneers of 1862, who had marked the highest water of that flood year, stated that their marks were fully eighteen inches below the surface of the highest water of 1887. The greater portion of the town north of B street became seriously inundated. Fences were washed away, cellars and houses were flooded, buildings were moved from their foundations and carried down Main street in spite of the exertions of their owners and such others as could lend a hand. Dykes built for the protection of property proved inadequate and many of those who relied upon them were flooded so suddenly that they could not even save their furniture and household goods. The steamboat wharf and warehouse were washed away and much other damage done, the principal sufferers being poor people who could ill afford what they lost. No high water disaster previously experienced by the town could compare with this one in magnitude.

Lewiston's first fire of any consequence occurred in the fall of 1890, when a conflagration thought to have been of incendiary origin, took place in the shingle yard of W. S. Wyncoop. Eighteen thousand dollars' worth of bolting timber, cedar posts, shingles and other property was destroyed, also S. L. Thompson's residence. The mill and all other surrounding buildings were, however, fortunately saved, not through the efforts of the fire department, which was in a state of disintegration at the time, but by the populace with buckets of all descriptions. "Many held the opinion," says the Teller, "that the fire in the upper town was only a decoy to lure the citizens there while another fire would be started in the business portion. An additional force was, therefore, added to the night patrol, but nothing transpired to justify the suspicions held. The property loss was covered by $12,000 insurance on the mill yard; the residence was uninsured. The fire demonstrated very forcibly the need of a thoroughly organized fire department."

But the year 1890 was not one of disaster throughout,—the contrary rather, for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had promised to build a railway extension into the city and the hope of an immediate solution of the transportation problem was stimulating activity in many lines. It is stated that during the first week in May $50,000 worth of Lewiston real estate changed hands. During this year, also, the first determined effort was made to supply the town with water and electric lights. The Lewiston Water & Light Company, in which several Portland capitalists were interested, was organized with a capital stock of $100,000 and by July enough of this had been subscribed and paid up to justify the commencement of the construction work. Engineer Bloomfield, who had charge of the enterprise, is quoted as having referred to it in the following language:

"After a careful examination, the Clearwater river at a point about two and a half miles above the town, has been selected as the source of supply. That this stream is not misnamed can be seen at its confluence with the Snake river. The latter river is charged with sedimentary matter and is highly alkaline, while Clearwater is soft, clear and free from impurities, and as they meet, the two waters are as distinct as a blue and a brown ribbon, side by side.

"The works will be a pumping system having a capacity of two million gallons, raised to an elevation of 225 feet, giving a pressure of 97 pounds per square inch in the lower and business portion of the town, and will give the beautiful plateau above the bluff ample pressure for all purposes.

"The plant will consist of a brick engine and boiler house, forty by forty feet, on a concrete foundation fourteen feet high along the river front, into which is built the heavy wrought iron inlet pipe and pump well, with their attached gate and foot valve. The inlet pipe will be five feet below extreme low water. The engine will be of the modern type of double compound condensing engines. The boiler will be of steel, 85 horse power, with a steam pressure of 120 pounds. The reservoir will be cement lined and of a capacity of 1,500,000 gallons. The mains will be 8 66-100 miles long, consisting of 12, 10, 8, 5 and 4 inch pipe."

Another enterprise projected this year, which would have proved of immeasurable benefit had it been carried to a successful consummation, was that of the Sweetwater Irrigation Company, organized to construct a ditch seventeen miles in length to convey the waters of Sweetwater creek to Lewiston. It was intended to store the water in reservoirs on the flat above town, to be distributed whenever and wherever needed.

During the spring of 1891, the Lewiston Chamber of Commerce was organized with T. B. Cooper as president, and W. S. Buck, corresponding secretary. Committees were appointed to perfect the organization and attend to its detail work. The old Board of Trade had lost its vitality and a new organization was necessary that the best interests of the city should be conserved. Company I, of the Idaho National Guards, was likewise organized in Lewiston, on March 13th, Fred Kroutinger being chosen captain, C. A. Forseman and J. H. Robinson lieutenants.

The water system, begun during the previous twelvemonth, was completed this year giving the city one of the finest plants of its kind in the northwest, outside the large cities. The engine was said to have a capacity of 700,000 gallons per day of ten hours, and the reservoir, situated half a mile south of the pump house, a capacity of one million gallons.

Residents of Portland and The Dalles will remember that the year 1894 was one of grave disasters by the flood of those cities and other Columbia river towns. Naturally the same conditions obtained in Lewiston. We have spoken of the record breaking high water of 1887, but the flood of this year left the highest mark of that fully thirty inches under water. For two weeks during the last of May and first of June, citizens held back the raging torrent by means of dykes constructed of sacks of sand and loose dirt, but on the third of the latter month the force of the waters could no longer be resisted and about 2:30 o'clock the bell gave warning that the flood had gained the victory. Persons living in the lower portion of the city had moved out in anticipation of this, thereby reducing the damage to a minumum. The Main street business men had moved everything out of their basements. They were not looking for water six inches over their floors, however, but that is just what came, catching them unprepared and greatly damaging their goods. The people on the low ground in the vicinity of the courthouse were also taken by surprise, their dyke having betrayed the trust they had reposed in it. Sidewalks, fences and other movable objects were carried away and deposited around some obstruction and the irrepressible small boy found much sport in navigating the center of the street on a piece of drift. Fortunately these conditions were of short duration and in a few days the city had a force of men at work removing the debris and replacing the sidewalks. It is said that $700 was expended by the council in this manner.

It might be supposed that the flood and the financial depression would have a very deleterious effect upon the prosperity and development of the town, but we are assured that there were no hard times in Lewiston such as were experienced in other points in the northwest and that a steady forward movement was maintained, though of course the pace of the progressive march was of necessity reduced somewhat. In 1895 came the opening of the reservation, causing an influx of home seekers and the distribution of hundreds, nay thousands, of dollars of Indian money among the Lewiston merchants. These causes were efficient to overcome the depressing influence of outside conditions and to produce a period of prosperity which lasted until the clouds had cleared from the country's financial sky. When good times came Lewiston had no despondency to rally from and it was ready to enter upon a career of rapid advancement which has continued to this day.

The spring of 1896 saw the commencement of work, by the Lewiston Water & Power Company, on an irrigation ditch from Asotin creek to Lewiston flats, just across Snake river in the state of Washington. In January, 1897, the work was completed. It gave a wonderful impetus to settlement and development in that section of the country and to the upbuilding of Clarkston, Lewiston's sister city, which is so closely connected with the Idaho town by the bridge across Snake river as to make the two practically one city.

In 1897, the year of railway construction into Lewiston, and the year of unprecedented advancement in the history of the town, was marred by a rather serious fire which occurred on the evening of the 8th of August. The cause of the conflagration was the explosion of a lantern in the hay mow of Collins's livery barn, which was consumed with the outbuildings belonging thereto. The entire block was wiped out of existence, the buildings destroyed being J. B. Munshaw's house, the residence of N. B. Holbrook, that occupied by J. O. Barbour and a log building owned by Martin Collins. Mr. Munshaw, who was operating the stables under lease at the time, lost but $600, most of his property being covered by insurance, but Collins' loss was in the neighborhood of four thousand dollars and Holbrook's two thousand. Only the fortunate presence of plenty of water and the efficient work of firemen and citizens saved the lower end of the town from destruction.

No general disaster of any kind detracted from the blessings of the prosperous year 1898 in Lewiston. Five substantial brick blocks added to the solidity of the town, while numerous residences of a good class improved its appearance and added to its size. The Lewiston Commercial Club was organized this year, former institutions of the kind having apparently fallen into "innocuous desuetude." Its officers elected September 5th, were: President, B. F. Morris; vice-presidents, J. P. Vollmer and Robert Schleicher; treasurer, George H. Kester; trustees, J. Alexander, W. A. Austin, A. H. Alford, E. H. Libby, J. B. Morris, C. Weisgerber, J. E. Babb, C. C. Bunnell, J. W. Reid and O. A. Kjos. The advent of the railroad and the general prosperity were celebrated by a harvest carnival, attended by hundreds from the surrounding country and hundreds more who came in from points between Spokane and Lewiston on two special railway trains.

The causes which produced the good times of 1898, viz.: the interest in the section of transcontinental railway companies, the presence of transportation facilities, the increased knowledge of tributary resources, and the development of various Salmon river mining districts, continued operative during the ensuing twelvemonth and the year 1900 opened with bright prospects for a continuous growth and development of the town. One question of importance which arose during this year was the securing of a better and more satisfactory water supply. Those residing upon the hill complained that the provision for their necessities was insufficient and as scores of new houses were being erected and scores more were in contemplation, the need of solving the water problem was rapidly becoming more urgent. Accordingly the city council made overtures to the Lewiston Water & Light Company for the purchase of their plant, and the company expressing a willingness to sell, T. B. Cooper, an expert, was employed to estimate the value of the system. He reported its worth $54,-934.36. The company asked a much larger sum. Though the council expressed its willingness to accept the terms of the owners of the system, the transaction hung fire until the fall of 1901, when a newly elected council brought matters to a crisis by reducing the water rates more than twenty-five per cent. The company refused to accept the reduction and took the case into court where a decision was rendered against them.

Meanwhile a special election was decided upon, to vote upon the issuance of $80,000 in bonds for the purpose of enabling the city to own its water and light plant. The election was held November 19th. The bonding proposition carried by a large majority, over 90 per cent of the votes being in its favor. The Lewiston Water & Light Company again went into court asking that the city be restrained from opening bids submitted for the purchase of the bonds, alleging that the election was irregular and that the Company's franchise was exclusive. The court refused the injunction. The bids were opened and that of Teasongood & Mayer, bankers of Cincinnati, accepted. These gentlemen offered a premium of $68.80 per thousand, bonds to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The city went ahead with its plans to construct a new water system and the Lewiston Water & Light Company proceeded with its suit in the courts of the state. Meanwhile, however, negotiations were continued for the purchase of the system already constructed and after several conferences between committees representing the two interests, it was finally agreed that the city should take the company's plant for a cash price of $70,000, all suits by the latter to be held in abeyance until the contract for purchase should be signed, then dismissed without prejudice, each party paying its own costs. The terms of agreement were accepted by the council on the evening of March 10, 1902, and confirmed by the voters at an election held April 24th of the same year.

August 28, 1902, the city voted to authorize the sale of ten thousand dollars street improvement bonds, the proceeds to be used in grading Main street between Fifth street and the courthouse, the gravel to be taken from the Fifth street cut. Work upon this much needed improvement is still in progress at this writing, and the great good accruing from it in giving the city a clean and solid business street, and the people of Normal hill the benefit of an easy grade to their elevated homes is abundantly justifying the vote of 108 to 53 by which the bond issue was authorized.

Perhaps the developments that have taken place between the time when Lewiston was a town of tents encroaching upon an Indian reservation and the present cannot be better summarized than by enumerating the various business enterprises which are being sustained within its limits to-day and the men at their heads. It is difficult to be sure that some of these have not been omitted, but practically all are included in the following: The dry goods and furnishing stores of John P. Vollmer & Company, O. A. Kjos and John M. Fix, also the Grand Leader and the Bee Hive; the grocery stores of E. L. Russell, Reed & Brashears, W. R. Wyatt, Merriam Brothers, C. A. Phelps, the Lewiston Grocery & Bakery Company, the Golden Rule and the Normal Hill Grocery Company; the art store of Fair & Thompson; White Brothers and A. S. Burnett, wholesale dealers in fruits and vegetables; the music store and supply house of W. H. Young; Charles Hahn, Naylor & Norlind, plumbing; Lewiston Trading Company, dealers in agricultural implements, carriages, etc.; the drug stores of J. Q. Moxley, Ray & Osmer, Dent & Butler, the Lewiston Drug Company; the shoe store of C. A. Hastings; the hardware stores of G. W. Fletcher, Myers & Neyland, and the Cash Hardware Company; the clothing stores of Meuli & Lomax and H. A. Nixon; D. J. McGilvery, L. C. While Lewiston has suffered greatly in times past for lack of transportation facilities and is still looknig forward to the advantages which an open river to the sea and one or more transcontinental railways will give, the town has no great reason for complaint on this score at the present time. The Northern Pacific Railroad maintains a daily passenger service between the city and Spokane; the Clearwater passenger leaves Lewiston each afternoon for interior points, returning the following morning; while accommodation trains are run over the Lapwai branch to Culdesac three times weekly and oftener during the shipping season. The Oregon Railway & Navigation Company operates a fine line of passenger and freight boats between Lewiston and Riparia. At present the Spokane, the Lewiston and the Norma, each of 250 tons burden, are in use, the first two alternating with each other so as to give a daily service, the last running only when business demands. Captain E. W. Baughman, the pioneer navigator and one of the first crew to bring a steamer up the Snake river to its confluence with the Clearwater, is in charge of the Spokane, Captain E. H. Works, of the Lewiston and Captain Ralph Baughman of the Norma. A fifty ton boat, the Imnaha, is being built by local capitalists to run on the upper Snake river. During the wheat shipping season, the Northern Pacific operates the steamer J. M. Hannaford between Lewiston and points on the Columbia.

The Pacific States Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company furnish to Lewiston wire connection with all the important towns and cities of the northwest, while the Lookout Telephone Company, a local corporation, has erected a network of lines connecting various towns and stations in the country surrounding Lewiston. Stage lines radiate in several directions giving communication and close connection with numerous towns and villages not reached by the railroads. One of the finest steel bridges in the northwest, erected in 1898-9 by the promoters of Vineland, in Asotin county, Washington, spans the Snake river between Lewiston and Clarkston, making the relationship between the two towns very intimate.

The fraternal spirit is strong in Lewiston, as in most other towns of the west and many fraternities are represented. The Masons have recently subscribed $50,000 for the erection of a Masonic temple, a fact which shows the strength of that society among our people. The different Masonic bodies maintained in the city are the Knights of Rose Croix, No. 1, the Knights of Kadosh, No. 1, Lewiston Consistory No. 1, the Scottish Rite, Lewiston Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch, York Rite, Lewiston Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, Nez Perces Lodge No. 10, A. F. & A. M., and Lewiston Lodge of Perfection, No. 1. The Odd Fellows, who own a handsome brick hall in Lewiston, are represented by Clearwater Encampment No. 7, and Lewiston Lodge No. 8. Among the other fraternal orders of the town are: Excelsior Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias, Poplar Camp No. 205, Woodmen of the World, Tsceminicum Tribe No. 8, Improved Order of Red Men, Clearwater Lodge No. 11, A. O. U. W., Lewiston Council of the Royal Arcanum and a camp of Modern Woodmen, many of which have their various ladies' auxiliaries.

Two important literary clubs are maintained in the town, both women's societies. The older, organized in the fall of 1899, is known as the Tsceminicum club, deriving its name from the Nez Perces words signifying "at the forks of the river." It meets fortnightly at the homes of its members for the rendering of literary programs. This club is to be credited almost entirely with the founding, in September, 1900, of what is now the city library. The conditions upon which the ladies donated their collection of books to the city was that it should be furnished at public expense with a library home and that its use should be free to all residents of Lewiston. From time to time since, the Tsceminicum club has, by giving library benefits in the form of public entertainments, sales, lectures, etc., secured the money with which to purchase additional books. The library has also been the beneficiary of the benevolence of Charles F. Adams, the Boston philanthropist, and is indebted to Senator Heitfelt for securing it hundreds of documents and government reports. The collection consists now of 2,837 volumes, to which, according to the card issue, 1,479 persons have had access. Margaret G. Guyer has been librarian since the inception of the enterprise and to her is due the credit for the library's skillful management and its careful classification and arrangement.

The other library society, known as the Twentieth Century Club, is very similar to the Tsceminicum in its objects and organization, but it is a somewhat younger society. Besides these, there is what is known as the Cecilian society, maintained, as its name implies, for the purpose of cultivating the musical faculties of its members.

Six church societies have been organized in Lewiston, the Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Episcopal, the Christian and the Baptist, of which the presiding pastors are respectively, Revs. Hubert A. Post, S. J., E. P. Giboney, John R. Gregory, Everett Smith, J. A. Pine and R. T. Guernsey. All of these denominations are comfortably and satisfactorily housed except the Baptist, which intends building a new church edifice in the near future. These church societies are all vital and active, contributing immeasurably to the moral and spiritual life of the community. The Catholics are projecting a new hospital, to be under the charge of the sisters of St. Joseph, and to be known as St. Joseph's hospital. It will cost $25,000.

A historical review of the county's public school system is a practical impossibility owing to the complete lack of statistical or other records in the county superintendent's office, but some reminiscences of Lewiston's schools may be of interest and not inappropriate in this chapter. C. P. Coburn says that he has a very distinct recollection of the first teacher to pursue his profession in Nez Perces county. Late in the fall of 1863, according to Mr. Coburn, a middle aged man of professional appearance and quiet demeanor appeared in Lewiston and proceeded to organize a small school. He wore a tall silk hat, a suit of the blackest broadcloth and a white tie, all bearing unmistakeable signs of long usage and giving the impression that their proprietor was a broken down sport. They did not belie him, as later events proved, but for the time being the teaching ability of the man was all that was inquired into. After diligent canvassing he secured a few pupils and opened his school. Everything progressed satisfactorily until the teacher drew his first month's pay, whereupon the sporting proclivities of the pedagogue manifested themselves. He set out to double his money at the gambling table, but unfortunately for him, the fickle dame played him false at this most critical juncture and his wages passed into other hands. Not desiring to remain longer in Lewiston in the face of his ignominious downfall, he quietly departed whence he came and the school was left teacherless.

Lewiston continued without educational facilities for nearly a year thereafter, or until the fall of 1864, when one P. H. Howe arrived and opened a subscription school in a small frame building on Fourth street. It is said that Schoolmaster Howe, who taught three months, was a very ardent Unionist, so ardent indeed that he was subject to frequent fits of patriotism, when he would have his little band of scholars sing "John Brown's Body Lies A-mouldering in the Grave," when they should be engaged in more arduous mental exercises. To him, however, is due considerable credit for placing the school in Lewiston in some kind of a working condition and awakening a slight educational spirit in the town, which, for the first few years was populated by a migratory, gold-seeking class who paid but little attention to the refinements of life.

With the organization of the territory county affairs became better adjusted and the little school held at Lewiston was given support by the levying of a small tax. For some time this was the only district to derive benefit from the tax, as no other had been organized. Mount Idaho district was the next to gain an existence.

During the winter of 1865-6 the Lewiston school was taught by William Ferrell, and under his tutelage fifteen or twenty pupils were instructed in the rudiments of education. The school prospered. Next year it was placed in charge of Professor Eckels, a very popular and erudite Irishman, and the first teacher to really give the Lewiston school his serious attention. At this time Lewiston was incorporated and granted the privilege of maintaining an independent school district, such as only Boise had enjoyed theretofore. In accordance with the provisions of this law, the Lewiston independent school district was organized and a special tax levied. The school was removed to a small frame building on the corner of what are now Third and C streets, just south of the old territorial capitol and across the street from the Florence saloon. This building, erected in 1862, had been occupied for some time by Dr. Macinteney as a drug store, and later the first territorial council had met within its walls. Under Professor Eckels' supervision seats and blackboards were placed in the room and books and many other necessities procured for the children. This energetic teacher remained only one term, however. He was succeeded by Miss Ellen Kelly, a daughter of Milton Kelly, the first judge of the first judicial district of Idaho and later the founder of the Boise Statesman. Miss Kelly taught two terms and was succeeded by W. A. Goulder.

By 1871 the increased demands made upon the school showed the urgent necessity for additional room, and an agitation was commenced in favor of erecting a new school house instead of renting a larger building. The times, however, were stringent, and the problem of securing the money wherewith to buy land and put up this new building was not an easy one to solve; nevertheless, at a meeting called to consider the matter it was definitely decided to proceed with the work. Some time previously a game of poker had been played in Lewiston, the outcome of which, as it happened, had an important bearing on the school question. A certain man had squatted on a large tract of land on Main street and as the townsite still belonged to the government, his right to the property when the land became patented was as generally acknowledged as would have been a deed on record. Unfortunately for this property holder, however, cards possessed a fatal fascination for him, and on the night in question he was reduced to the extremity of placing his title to the lot against its value in money, wagered by his opponents. Fortune failed him and the result was that right to the land became vested in three persons, James W. Hays, Albert Ripson and L. W. Bacon. Later C. P. Coburn, as president of the school board, approached these men for the purpose of securing the land for a school site. Mr. Coburn's efforts were not in vain. Albert Ripson, who claimed the major share of the land, finally agreed to donate his interest to the city, which he did, quit-claiming, also, by consent, the interests of his partners. Subsequently title was perfected through the courts.

On this property the trustees decided to erect a small frame schoolhouse and a special tax was levied to raise part of the funds. To further aid the enterprise the trustees of the school, Charles G. Kress, R. J. Monroe and J. B. Rowley, also certain ladies of the city, especially prominent among whom were Mrs. John P. Vollmer, Miss Olive Martin (now Mrs. W. P. Hunt), Mrs. Robert Grostein and Mrs. T. S. Billings, gave a ball in the old Florence saloon building, which had been converted into a public hall. The ball was a most gratifying success, financially as well as socially, adding several hundred dollars to the school fund. By such means the friends of education secured a considerable portion of the money required for the construction of the new school.

As soon as title to the land above mentioned had been secured, the board of trustees let the contract for building the school to a builder named Mann, the amount agreed upon being $1,450. Mann's bid was very low. The building erected really cost in the vicinity of $2,000, the bondsmen furnishing the remainder of the money. The building was completed for occupancy in the fall of 1872 and to Miss Nancy Simons belongs the distinction of first teaching within its walls. She taught two terms. So rapidly did the attendance increase that two years later the town was compelled to add an annex to the building. Thus enlarged, it sufficed for several years.

December 30, 1880, in response to the request of the people of Lewiston, the territorial legislature passed an act providing for the establishment and maintenance of a system of graded schools in the Lewiston independent district, a bill rendered necessary by the rapid growth of the city after the Nez Perces war.

A special election was called soon after this act went into effect, at which the tax payers of the district voted to issue $10,000 bonds for the construction of a new and much larger building than was then in use. Under this authority the school board entered into a contract with Hale & Cooper, July 6, 1882, for the construction of the present frame school bouse on the site of the old building. Subsequently the bond issue was increased to $11,000, bearing eight per cent. interest. The building was erected and at the time was considered one of the finest schoolhouses in this section of the west. But the steady increase of population eventually made even this too small and again the district had to provide larger quarters and a larger corps of teachers. The last building was erected in 1897-8 at a cost of approximately $16,000, to raise which $15,000 worth of bonds had to be issued. The building is a handsome two-story, brick and stone structure, provided with all the usual conveniences and school equipment, the pride of the city. In anticipation of the removal of the frame building at no distant day, the brick school house was erected just back of the wooden one.

The rapid growth of the town during the past few years has rendered the school facilities again inadequate, and to meet the exigencies of the situation the board of trustees has decided to begin, this spring, the construction of a twelve-room school house on Normal hill, it being the intention to have the building ready for occupancy by the opening of the fall term in September. It will be two stories high and will cost about $25,000.

But Lewiston is not dependent upon its public school alone for the maintenance of an educational esprit de corps among its people and the education of its juvenile inhabitants. By dint of much effort on the part of its citizens and friends it secured in 1898 the establishment of a state normal school within its limits. The school occupies a beautiful brick building on a sightly campus on Normal hill, overlooking the business part of Lewiston and the scenic poem presented by the two rivers just beyond and their rugged farther banks. The school has enjoyed a career of uninterrupted harmony since its inception, its only drawback being insufficient funds to procure all needed equipment and enable it to rapidly expand. It offers a flexible course of study, giving the student wide latitude for selection, but requiring all to do a stated amount of professional study and to take part in the work of the literary societies. Diplomas are granted to those only who complete a four years' course, and the holders of these have all the rights and privileges attaching to state certificates for life.

Another important institution having for its object the educational advancement of the youth of Lewiston and vicinity is St. Joseph's Academy, erected in 1898 and conducted by the Sisters of the Visitation, a cloistered order. The school is exclusively for girls, but is open to all who are respectful, obedient and docile, without reference to religious belief. All the common and many of the higher branches of learning are taught, including music, languages and the arts. The present enrollment numbers sixty. Thirty pupils board at the school and those whose names are enrolled in the musical department number thirty. The academy building occupies a pleasant site on Normal hill. There is also a Catholic school for boys under the immediate direction of Father Post, the head of the church in Nez Perces county. It occupies the quarters of the old Sisters' academy, abandoned upon the establishment of the school of the Sisters of Visitation in 1898. At present twenty-four boys are receiving instruction there from Father Post and his two associate instructors.

Such is, in a brief and no doubt incomplete outline, the past and present of the city of Lewiston. One acquainted with the many advantages of climate, location and resources enjoyed by the town may be inclined to wonder why its growth has not been more rapid. The reasons are not far to seek. Until a very few years ago it was on the edge of an Indian reservation, the immense wealth of which was lying almost wholly undeveloped on account of the shiftless character of the aboriginal population. Until a still more recent date it was without railroad facilities, while its rival towns in Washington and Idaho had been enjoying these for years. Its tributary country was also without railroads and is still insufficiently supplied, but notwithstanding the immense amount of work yet to be accomplished before the great wealth tributary to Lewiston shall have been fully appropriated, the town has been forging ahead with wonderful rapidity in the past half decade, and no doubt it will continue indefinitely its rapid advance. Recently the legislature has passed an act appropriating eighteen thousand dollars of the state's money to construct a supreme court library building in the town. A great effort is being made to secure the passage by the same assembly of a bill having for its direct object the upbuilding of a large lumber manufacturing industry in Lewiston. It may be unsafe to attempt to forecast, but the conviction is almost forced upon one that a city situated at the point where it will be most benefited when the agitation in congress for an open river to the sea shall have crystalized into accomplished results, at a point that must be touched by any railroad from the east seeking to reach the ocean by a water grade and at the very gateway to incalculable riches of agriculture, of timber and of minerals, the county seat of a great and rapidly developing county, the center of a wonderful fruit growing region, must some day take rank with the largest and wealthiest cities of the Inland Empire.

NEZPERCE.

The government townsite of Nezperce, on the reservation, was thrown open to settlement November 18, 1895. George W. Tamblin was the surveyor in charge, and he selected the townsite. Probate Judge P. E. Stookey filed on the quarter section of land in behalf of the people, and the lots were distributed by lot, each applicant being allowed two tickets. Tamblin's office, a box building, was the first edifice in Nezperce. Ex-County Commissioner E. L. Parker erected a building for use for general store purposes, which he subsequently disposed of to Mr. Orbison. The first goods sold on the ground of the new town were those of Paul Johnson, and he built the second business house in the place, now owned by Steven Badger. Originally the postoffice was in the Wayland hotel, Mrs. L. A. Wayland, postmistress. The first house on the reservation was erected by Col. W. W. Hammell, and the first restaurant was started by E. C. Cassens. Mr. Orbison possessed the first home residence on the townsite, although a few years previous to this there had been a shack erected. As with all new western locations, the people who first came to the town of Nezperce lived mainly in tents. Col. Hammell was the first one to prove up under the free homestead law, and his ranch adjoins the town of Nezperce. He was closely followed by W. B. Ramsey. Along about this time A. Coles started a store in a tent, a racket store, and the first church, Presbyterian, held its initial services under canvas, M. G. Mann officiating. S. Markwell opened a store in a new building, and the first drug store was erected by A. Eitzen and a man named Towell, in the summer of 1896. This building and business passed into the hands of Wilson and Bert Bowlby, and Wilson Bowlby was the first dentist, and Drs. Howard, father and son, the first practicing physicians. Judge J. R. Crawford was elected justice of the peace, although T. O. Hanlon had been appointed to try a case previous to that time.

During the summer of 1898 a man named Orr opened a bank, and the first hotel of any consequence was built and conducted by A. McLeod, and the second by J. D. Graham. The same year a butcher shop was built by R. C. Bywaters. The town of Nezperce has never suffered from a general fire, but in 1902 a $3,500 residence owned by Z. A. Johnson was burned. The original printing establishment, the Nezperce News, was established in 1896, by Harper & Anderson. The second newspaper was the Record, by G. S. Martin. Among the pioneers of Nezperce may be mentioned Col. W. W. Hammell, G. W. Wilshire, J. T. Orbison, E. L. Parker, John D. Graham, Paul Johnson, E. G. Cassens, George W. Tamblin, A. McLeod, L. A. Wayland, Captain Human, W. D. Hardwick. An addition of twenty acres was made to Nezperce by Jacob Mowry.

The present business houses of Nezperce comprise: General merchandise, J. A. Schultz & Co.; Felt Mercantile Co.; Bargain store, Graman & Schultz, proprietors; Nezperce Cash Store, J. R. Crawford, manager; Old Store, J. T. Orbison; Badger Store, Steven Badger, proprietor; Idaho Store, Coffin Bros. Hotels—Nezperce Hotel, Charles Holm, Hotel Scofield, Williams Bros. Restaurants—Home, Kimery & Mead; Mrs. Bob Warnacut's; and L. P. Jacobson's. Livery stables—Boss, J. W. Gains; Nezperce, Miller & Miller. Grain dealers—Vollmer-

Clearwater Company, D. W. Eaves, manager; Farmers' Grain Company; Kerr, Gifford & Company; Kamiah Trading Company. Drug stores—Bowlby's City Drug Store; DeMonde's; The Kimball Drug Company, Taylor & Moraseck, proprietors. Blacksmith shops—S. J. Doggett; E. B. Wilson and Thomas Barth. Soft drinks and Confectionery—The Derby, Black & Allison; R. W. Adams and Thomas Martin. Gents' Furnishing Goods—T. J. Hardwick & Company. Furniture—Mockler, Miller & Mockler; S. N. Berry. Hardware—Mockler, Miller & Mockler; Kamiah Trading Company (Spiker & Salladay). Millinery—Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. St. Helms and Mrs. Sutton and Mrs. Hunt; Mrs. S. Badger. Banks—First National, T. M. Mockler, president, J. A. Schultz, cashier; Farmers and Merchants Bank, T. J. Dyer, of Spokane, president; Kettenbach & Company, limited, C. W. Nelson, cashier. Newspapers—Nezperce Herald, W. C. Foresman, editor and proprietor. Nezperce Roller Mill, Z. A. Johnson; Chop Mill, Lauby Bros., proprietors. Jewelry—B. F. Richardson. Harness shops—M. R. Bowman, J. F. Strickfadess. Meat markets—Warrell Bros., John M. Medved. Nezperce Brick & Lime Company, W. R. Crim, president; Heitzen & Mitchell. Draying—City Dray, C. J. Hancock, proprietor; Nezperce Delivery, A. Fuller, proprietor. Barber—A. A. Bardwell. United States Commissioner and Notary Public—W. W. Hammell. Contractor—P. Fairweather. Real Estate—B. J. McRae; Stearns & Thomas; W. E. Larson. Attorneys—Stearns & Thomas; R. H. Wallace. Physicians—John Coburn; E. Taylor; A. J. Cooper; E. L. Powell. Dentists—Dr. J. W. Lewis. Photography—Fink Bros. Contractor and Builder—E. L. Tupper & Company; Thomas Devine, Roach & Johnson.

The churches of Nezperce comprise the Presbyterians, Methodist, Christian, German Baptist, Catholic and Baptist. The graded public schools are housed in two buildings, one of four rooms and one of two, the former steam heated. The fraternal societies are the I. O. O. F., M. W. A., A. F. & A. M., Yeomen, Maccabees, L. O. T. M., Royal Neighbors, Women of Woodcraft, Rebekahs.

Nezperce is incorporated. The councilmen are W. C. Foresman, C. W. Felt, C. H. Thomas, Dr. J. H. Lewis and W. J. Ramsey. The town was bonded April 21, 1903, for $6,750, to furnish water for fire protection. There are two wells and a gasoline engine for this purpose. The water right of Lolo Creek belongs to Z. A. Johnson, who is now putting in a plant to cost $35,000 which will provide electricity for his mill and lights, water, etc., for the town. The present population of Nezperce is between 400 and 500.

MORROW.

This town is situated just on the west side of the boundary line between Nez Perces and Idaho counties. The township was laid out in 1896, a pre-emption claim of M. B. Morrow, a sheep raiser. The town was first exploited by W. L. Thompson, trustee for Mr. Morrow. In 1896 he opened a general store, the first one in the village, and this was followed by the Hotel Morrow, by D. I. Slavens. About the same period W. S. Green established a feed barn, and Harry Steel started a blacksmith shop. During the winter of 1896-7, Gibbs & Lemmons put up a butcher shop. A saw mill was built in 1896 by J. G. Downs. The postoffice is on Willow Creek, at the home of W. R. Dixon, established about 1888. The elevation of Morrow is 3,250 feet. The present business enterprises are represented by the general store of Mons Hansen, blacksmith shop and chop mill, T. M. Davis, postoffice, confectionery, etc., W. R. Dixon; hotel and saloon, Babcock & Horseman; feed stable, owned by George Wayne, leased by Ed. Ausburg. There is a four months' term of school taught by M. M. Belknap. The attendance is an average of fifty-four. The Methodist and Christian denominations hold services occasionally, presided over by visiting clergymen, in the Union building. There is a lodge of I. O. O. F.

LENORE.

Sixteen miles below Orofino and the first important station after leaving Potlatch junction is Lenore, still another small trading and shipping center along the Clearwater Short Line railway. There is already one tramway terminus here and another tramway is about to be constructed. The Lenore Trading Company has here a general store, J. B. McGuire conducts the only hotel and Charles Green is the postmaster. The Kettenbach Grain Company has a warehouse at this point. Basalt and Agatha are two other unimportant stations along the railroad, established principally to accommodate grain shipping.

FLETCHER.

The townsite of Fletcher was surveyed by the government in May, 1896, and opened for filing so soon as the survey was completed. The ground was donated by Simon L. Finney, who had homesteaded the same on the opening of the reservation. The first house, a store building, was opened for business in November, and this was followed by a blacksmith shop and saw mill. The following spring a hotel was erected by John Bielby, and that summer Naffziger & Honeyman opened a general merchandise store (1897). A grist mill was started by Wright & Ellis in 1898, and Robinson & Haynes established a drug store in 1899. The grist mill business was incorporated as a stock company March 4, 1899, and subsequently the property was destroyed by fire. Wright removed to Dublin and Ellis to Summit. The present business houses comprise the drug store of Robinson & Eckersley, general merchandise by L. E. Marchand, hardware, by Peter Klaus, and hotel by the same. The present population of the town is 200. Dublin, situated three and a quarter miles south of Fletcher, dates from the summer of 1901. The pioneer spirit in the enterprise was David Lowry. There are a few residences, a blacksmith shop and other business houses.

MOHLER.

Eight miles northwest of Nez Perces, in the southeastern part of the county, is the town of Mohler. The land on which it stands was homesteaded by T. O. Hanlon and J. B. Davis at the opening of the reservation. The town is platted but not yet incorporated. The first edifice, a store building, was erected by T. O. Hanlon in 1889. The postoffice, first known as Howard, was established four years ago at the old Howard townsite, one and a half miles southeast of Mohler. Three years ago it was removed from Howard to Mohler. The next building, a hardware store, was put up by Boozer & Giles, and this was succeeded by a creamery built in 1900. During the spring of the same year a butcher shop, erected by H. D. Haines, was established, and the succeeding building, owned by P. E. Dean, was built two years since. This was followed by a hotel by J. B. Davis. The spring of 1902 witnessed the erection of a building occupied by the Mohler Implement Company, the school house and the Methodist Church. Three years ago a blacksmith shop was built by John Howard and another in the spring of 1903 by John Collins and John Johnson.

The present business houses are: Drug store, O. DeMonde and John McGee; real estate, James Sorenson and J. H. Wann; hotel, John Biggart, proprietor; blacksmith shops, Emery and Collins & Johnson; general stores, P. E. Dean and G. S. Martin; hardware, F. A. Boozer and Charles Giles; A. G. Gross and N. F. Wright; furniture, T. O. Hanlon; barn, in connection with hotel, John Biggart; butcher shop in summer time, J. B. Davis and T. S. Belts; barber shop, Charles and A. J. Johnson. The business of Mohler is supported by the general farming in the surrounding country. A number of new buildings are projected, including a barber shop, two livery barns, three dwellings, etc.

Church services are conducted every two weeks; Sunday school each Sabbath. The officiating minister is Rev. John Taylor. Fraternal societies include the I. O. O. F., Rebekahs, Encampment, W. of W., and Women of Woodcraft. The medical practitioner is Dr. J. T. Price.

ILO.

This little town is named in honor of Ilo Leggett, who has, also, contributed a portion of his name to the Ilo Hardware & Implement Company, of this place.

The first store was erected in the spring of 1898, but was closed out the same fall. W. F. Stinson was the succeeding merchant, who, however, continued in business but six months, and in the spring of 1899 (June), O. W. Leggett opened a general merchandise store. This was, at that period, the only business house in the place. During the succeeding fall or winter a blacksmith shop was started by James Breeding, and in the winter of 1900-1 there was opposition in the shape of another blacksmith, Andrew Anderson. In the spring of 1901 Charles Larson opened a wagon repair shop. The same spring a small hotel was built by W. D. Simmons, and during the succeeding summer a general merchandise store was erected by O. W. Leggett. The drug store of Mrs. Cynthia A. Tatko was built in the spring of 1902, and Dr. J. G. Lenz dispensed the drugs. He had begun practice in Ilo in the spring of 1901. A harness shop was opened by E. C. Kness in the spring of 1902, the Kamiah Trading Company having commenced business the previous fall. This enterprise was recently sold to the Ilo Hardware and Implement Company. The Idaho Supply Company, comprising local capitalists, began business in the spring of 1902, and the Smith hotel building was erected the same period. The Bank of Ilo is a recent financial enterprise, of which J. J. Woods is cashier.

During the winter of 1901-2 William Blair opened a livery barn, and recently another was started by Simmons & Nichols. Mrs. J. C. Pearsall conducts a millinery store; A. Gardner a butcher shop, and there are two confectionery and "soft drink" stores. An ungraded school is conducted six months of the year with an attendance of fifty pupils. The Presbyterians and Christians have church organizations and buildings, erected during the summer of 1902, Revs. McLain and John McDonald pastors, respectively. The Modern Woodmen of America and the I. O. O. F. represent the fraternal societies of Ilo.

CULDESAC.

At the terminus of the Lapwai spur of the Northern Pacific railroad and snugly nestled against the base of Craig's mountain, lies Culdesac, a prosperous, thriving town of probably four hundred people. This terminal town is one of the newest and one of the most prosperous on the reservation. None has a brighter future and none can boast of a more rapid and at the same time substantial growth. Situated at the geographical center of the county, in the very heart of the grain producing section, Culdesac is fortunate in being the shipping and receiving point for a scope of country fifteen miles square and including a portion of Nez Perces prairie. It has been conservatively estimated that over one-half a million bushels of wheat, flax, barley and oats were shipped from this place last year and during the shipping season in the fall it is not uncommon for 150 four-horse teams to unload at the warehouses in a single day.

The town lies only about four hundred feet above the Clearwater valley and consequently possesses a warm climate tempered by cool breezes from the mountain and encircling hills. The valley at this point is not over half a mile wide and the town lies on a narrow flat and several slightly higher plateaus. The creek rushes angrily along the northern boundary of the place. At one time it undoubtedly occupied the whole canyon as the gravelly formation of the ground and the plentitude of rocks testify. The citizens take the greatest pride in their abundant and pure water supply. The water is obtained from a large spring on Leonard Henry's ranch, half a mile up the creek, where it is stored in a reservoir holding 11,000 cubic feet. From here it is brought to the town through a four-inch main and conveyed to the different consumers by two-inch pipes. The water has a fall of ninety feet, enough to secure an excellent fire pressure. This water system, which has been recently completed, is owned by Wilbur A. Cochran, T. W. Shreffler and W. H. Shields.

It is said that President Mellen personally bestowed the name Cul-de-sac upon the settlement at the terminus of this branch line. He was driving along the proposed route with a companion at the time and when they reached the end of the practicable route, the president remarked "This is indeed a cul-de-sac."

When the railroad was built, in the summer of 1899, John McKenzie was induced to relinquish his homestead right to a forty-acre tract which made an "L" of his farm and included the present townsite. Then J. G. and C. A. Wright purchased thirty acres of this tract with government script and subsequently W. S. Adron filed a timber and stone claim upon the remaining ten acres. Meanwhile, however, Sogart & Green, E. T. Brandon & Frank Edwards, McGraf Brothers (James, William and Thomas), T. W. Shreffler, E. J. Northcutt and several others had settled on the ten-acre tract and decided to contest the Adron claim on the ground that the land was more valuable for townsite purposes. To that end a public meeting was held of which Mr. Northcutt was chosen chairman, and a committee, consisting of James McGraf, Frank O'Mallory, Jesse Beans and Link Meadows, was appointed to take charge of the matter. Ninety-two location claims were sold at one dollar each to provide funds with which to carry on the contest and in September, 1899, the papers were filed. This contest was carried up to the secretary of the interior, who, in 1902, decided in favor of the citizens, granting their application for a townsite. A trust patent was issued to Probate Judge Stookey, who issued title to the land to those possessing squatter's rights. This tract now constitutes the main portion of the town.

The thirty-acre tract was platted in the fall of 1899, but, owing to the fact that it was individual property, was not occupied as rapidly as the government townsite. The first house was built on it by Albert Watkins, a Northern Pacific employee, in December, 1899. Mr. Watkins was followed the next year by a man named Martin who erected a lodging house, by S. E. Bemis, who built a hall, and by C. B. Wright, who opened a store. King & Wright erected a store and hotel, the Triangle House, and warehouses were constructed along the railroad track. Both towns grew rapidly and prospered.

The owners of this townsite originally christened the place Mellen. The citizens of both towns early applied for a postoffice and suggested to the department the name given the station by the railroad company, viz: Cul-de-sac, spelling it as a compound word. The postoffice was granted but the department refused to adopt the name suggested and instead bestowed the name Magnolia. Thus matters stood until last July (1902) when a citizens' petition that the postoffice be named Culdesac, writing it as one word, was granted.

The two towns were consolidated in January, 1903, when the board of county commissioners gave them the boon of corporate existence. C. B. Uptograf, Thomas Culnan, W. A. Cochran, F. M. Remington and Albert Sogard were named trustees and will soon organize and elect officers.

The citizens have from the first taken an active interest in their educational matters and three years ago, they built a handsome school house in the town, costing $1,000, to take the place of the old district school. A portion of this amount was raised by private subscriptions. In these quarters and an additional rented room, 150 pupils properly graded, are cared for by Professor Case, Miss Lillian Schoot and Mrs. Charles J. Miller.

A fine church is also being erected by the Christian society, under the pastorate of Rev. L. F. Stephens. The Presbyterians have a society and have recently secured a pastor, Rev. John Wooliver.

Among the most important enterprises in Culdesac is a new flouring mill now being built by Alt & Crossman. The mill will have a capacity of 50 barrels a day. Power is furnished by a ditch taken out of Lapwai creek at a distance above town. To secure this mill Culdesac subscribed a bonus of $1,300, E. J. Northcutt alone raising three-fourths of the amount.

Culdesac also possesses a local telephone system, owned by Keller & Bell, and is connected with the outside world by the Pacific States and Lookout systems. The Register, a weekly newspaper established in 1899 by W. L. Stephens, is another important factor in the town's welfare and under the ownership of John J. Schick is a neatly printed journal well filled with local news.

Culdesac's other business houses may be grouped as follows: General stores, F. M. Remington, Edward P. Brandon, Albert Sogard, J. G. Wright & Company, Thomas Purhum; hardware, Wilbur A. Cochran, Farr, Lewis & Farr; groceries, Chris Norbo; furniture, George Henderson, Frank Zenzengher; drugs, W. D. Keller; hotels, Walla Walla, T. W. Shreffler, proprietor; Commercial, Henry Zyrbell, proprietor, Clear, J. H. Clear, proprietor; livery stables, Walla Walla, T. W. Shreffler, proprietor, Star, Clyde Chapman, proprietor, Midway, Frank Gasaway, proprietor, West End, John Whalen, proprietor; meat markets, Joseph Ziver (J. H. McDevitt, manager), McGrath Brothers; banks, Vollmer-Clearwater Company, Bank of Culdesac; feed mill, J. G. Wright; blacksmith shops, W. J. Departee, J. S. Mack, Charles Benson; jewelry, R. J. Watkins; confectionery and notions, Thomas Culnan, Brown & Stuart; Dr. E. L. Burke is the town's physician, Dr. B. L. Cole is its dentist, while G. K. Tiffany and John Green look after the legal business of its inhabitants.

Real estate in Culdesac commands a high price at present and values are steadily increasing, a sure sign of prosperity. The business men contemplate improving the streets, the installation of a system of fire protection, police protection and many other improvements rendered necessary by the growing importance of the town. Although not yet four years old, Culdesac has attained to the position of the third town in size and importance in the county and its inhabitants firmly believe that it will eventually gain a still higher rank.

PECK.

Unfortunately, it was not the writer's privilege to visit the prosperous town of Peck, and as the letter requesting information regarding it remains unanswered, it is not possible to go into the details of its history and present business houses. It is known, however, to be a substantial little city, with a splendid farming country contiguous to it. The town lies nearly two miles south of its railway station, Contract. Writing of it in 1899 the Lewiston Teller said:

"Peck is more than its name implies. Its light cannot be hidden under a bushel, for more bushels of wheat, flax and barley will be marketed there than at any other two points combined on the Clearwater Short Line. John Herres operates the ferry.

"Peck, being removed from the railroad, escaped the boom and is consequently sound to the core. It is not overdone. There is not a shanty nor tent in the place. The buildings are large and substantial. Peck is a cozy, cheerful hamlet, and differs from some towns as a genuine home differs from a hotel. A nucleus of cultured society is here. The early inhabitants give character to the village. The Methodists, United Brethren and Dunkards have church organizations. A new schoolhouse will be erected this fall. The trade territory of Peck extends to Lawyer's canyon on the south. There is but one small area of waste land in this section, as the Big and Little canyons are so shaped as to be in the main tillable.

"The Peck Industrial Fair was held September 28th, 29th, and 30th. Its success was such that arrangements are already being made for repeating it next year. I. S. Sperry acted as president and Thomas Kirby as secretary."

These annual fairs give an excellent idea of the wealth of the country tributary to Peck. In October of last year one was held, attended by nearly ten thousand people. It was a display of fruits, vegetables, grasses and grains. It is stated that Mr. Dean, of Mohler, exhibited oats that were a part of a yield of 101 bushels, 8 pounds to the acre, and another yield of 103 bushels an acre was represented.

SPALDING.

With the opening of the reservation in 1895, the present town of Spalding came into existence. At that time a company was formed, known as the Spalding Townsite Company, which proceeded to lay out a town and name it Spalding. A great rush of business men followed and within a very short time Spalding was enjoying all of the life and feverish activity of a boom. A score of frame business houses were erected, another score of canvas structures, and many residences and the town grew and throve wonderfully.

However, in 1899 the Northern Pacific, which had built a line down the Clearwater to Lewiston the year previous, decided to build a spur up Lapwai creek to the foot of Craig's mountain, and the construction of this line proved a death blow to Spalding. This spur leaves the main line at the creek and follows closely up this little mountain stream for twelve miles. Previous to this Spalding had been the shipping point for the whole interior country, but now this immense business was transferred to points farther inland. At present only a few stores, two hotels, a butcher shop, blacksmith shop and several residences constitute the white settlement of the town and the Indians furnish most of the business support. The railroad station is at North Lapwai, about a mile west of Spalding on land condemned by the government for station and yard purposes. It is interesting to note that most of the townsite of Spalding is on Indian land and leased from individuals.

LAPWAI.

About the center of a valley formed by the widening of the Lapwai basin is situated the few buildings forming the town of Lapwai, while at the extreme southwestern end at the base of the hills is the site of old Fort Lapwai, where are located the present Indian agency and school. Lapwai creek flows through the eastern border of the valley. Along the railroad are the grain warehouses of the Vollmer-Clearwater Company and the Kettenbach Grain Company, while the general stores of Thomas Martin and Coffin Brothers, Prine & Lucas's blacksmith shop and a hotel compose the business section of the trading center. Lapwai, being the home of the agency and school, draws an extensive Indian trade which is the main support of the town, although a rich, wheat-growing section surrounds this valley. The townsite is owned by the Indians. The Presbyterian mission is located here and is under the supervision of Miss Kate Macbeth.

KAMIAH.

This pretty little town lies in the beautiful Kamiah basin on the south fork of the Clearwater river, at the mouth of Kamiah creek. It is on Indian land at present, though steps are being taken by the citizens toward the purchase of enough of this land to form a townsite. Kamiah is the trading and shipping center of a considerable section of country and a large business is transacted in consequence. A stage line connects it with Nezperce City and nearly all of the grain raised in the country tributary to Kamaih creek, or Lawyer's canyon, is shipped out over the Clearwater Short Line from the Kamiah warehouses. There are probably 150 people residing in the town and they have every reason to be hopeful of the future of their home. Inception was given to the place by the building of the railroad through the valley in 1899.

OTHER TOWNS.

Besides the towns described in the foregoing pages there are several of considerable importance, though small. The other towns and points at which post offices were established prior to January, 1903, are: Cameron, population in 1900, 68; Cavendish, Chesley, population 30; Dublin, Fairburn, Forest, population 35; Gifford, Kippen, Leland, population 150; Lookout, Melrose, population 52; Myrtle, population 43; Porters, Rosetta, population, 20; Russel, population 50; Slickpoo, population 20; Southwick, population 50; Steele, population 20; Summit, Tekean, population 25; Waha, population 24; Webb, Willola, population 78; Winchester, population 50.

CHAPTER IV.

THE NEZ PERCE INDIANS.

No history of Nez Perces county can lay claim to completeness which overlooks the aboriginal inhabitants of the soil. A history of these people is an impossibility, for they have preserved no written records of their past, and, being possessed of little architectural skill, have erected no monuments of a permanent nature to their memories. Traditions they have, to be sure, and a mythology of their own, but their character is such that only the few who have lived in intimate association with them have been instructed in their peculiar beliefs relative to their origin, past history and relations to the future life. For one who has lived apart from the Indians to attempt to treat of their traditions, mythology and original religious views would be presumptuous indeed. We are informed that a work of a historical character concerning them by an educated member of their own tribe is now in course of preparation. It is to be hoped that the project will not miscarry and that the work will be found to contain a comprehensive and exact treatment of the interesting subject with which it purposes to deal.

Prior to the advent of the horse among the Nez Perces, they must have had a miserable existence. Their only foods must have been the roots and vegetables indigenous to their native heath, such deer, elk and smaller game as they were able to take with their primitive weapons, and such species of fish as made their way into the seething waters of their swift-flowing rivers and mountain streams. But even at this time they must have been a vastly superior race to the Indians west of the Cascade mountains, who were droning away their listless lives in "a region of large, deep rivers; of numerous bays and inlets from the ocean extending far inland, all filled with fish of the finest and richest quality, easily taken, and hence inviting to a life of effortless indolence and ease. Hence these aborigines were short of stature, heavy and broad and fat of body; without alertness or perception of mind; indolent and inactive in all their habits; sleeping away nearly all but the little time that was requisite for them to throw their barbed harpoons into the shinning sides the salmon that swam in the shoals of the rivers and bays, and the few additional moments required to roast or boil the fish sufficient to gratify their uncultured tastes."

Even during the earliest times, the Nez Perces profited by the rigors of their elevated home, for though their food must have been scanty and insufficient, the battle for existence developed in them a sturdiness of manhood such as was unknown among the coast tribes. Their experience proved that a people can bear insufficient nourishment with activity far better than abundance with idleness.

The Nez Perces lived in a country covered with an abundant growth of nutritious grasses, making it a paradise for a pastoral people. They were therefore in a splendid condition to raise large bands of horses and the advent among them of these animals marked the most important epoch in their history. About the middle of the eighteenth century, horses were obtained from the Spaniards of New Mexico or California. The Indians preserve the tradition of their first acquisition of this form of live stock, and well they may for they were thereby furnished means whereby to advance by long strides toward greater comforts of life and the blessings of civilization. "There is no more instructing example of the amelioration of a savage tribe by the introduction of domestic animals and its steady growth from abject barbarism," says Hazard Stevens, "than that afforded by the Nez Perces. But little more than a century ago they were a tribe of naked savages, engaged in a perpetual struggle against starvation. Their country afforded but little game, and they subsisted almost exclusively on salmon, berries and roots. The introduction of the horse enabled them to make long journeys to the buffalo plains east of the Rocky mountains, where they could lay in great abundance of meat and furs; furnished them with a valuable animal for trading with other less favored tribes; soon raised them to comparative affluence, and developed in their hunting and trading expeditions a manly enterprising, shrewd and intelligent character."

The first white men to visit their country from the east overland were the famous Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, whose expedition into the country in 1805 is to be celebrated by a grand exposition in Portland on its centennial. Of the experiences of this party among the Nez Perces the gifted Eva Emery Dye has written in the following animated language:

Lame and weary, straight across Idaho they struggled, over seams and streaks of precious metal that the saw not, the gold of Ophir concealed in the rocky chambers of the Idaho Alps,—struggled into the Lolo trail used by the Indians for ages before any whites ever came into the country.

Over the Lolo trail went the Nez Perces to battle and to hunt buffalo in the Montana country. Down over this trail once came a war party and captured Wat-ku-ese, a Nez Perce girl, and carried her away to a distant land of white men,—So-yap-po, "the crowned ones," she called them, because they wore hats

Still ever Wat-ku-ese dreamed of her Nez Perce home, and one day escaped with her infant on her back. Along the way white traders were kind to her. On and on, foot-sore and weary, she journeyed alone. In the Flathead country her baby died and was buried there. One day some Nez Perce came over the Lolo trail bringing home Wat-ku-ese, weak, sick and dying.

She was with her people at their camas ground, Weippe, when Lewis and Clark came down over the Lolo trail.

"Let us kill them," whispered the frightened Nez Perces.

Wat-ku-ese lay dying in her tent when she heard it. "White men, did you say? No, no, do not harm them. They are the crowned ones who were so good to me. Do not be afraid of them. Go near to them."

Cautiously the Nez Perces approached. The explorers shook their hands. This was to the Indians a new form of greeting Everywhere Indian women were digging the camas root, round like an onion, and little heaps lay piled here and there. They paused in their work to watch the strangers. Some screamed and ran and hid Little girls hid their baby brothers in the brush. Others brought food.

So starved and famished were the men that they ate inordinately of the sweet camas and the kouse, the biscuit root. The sudden change to a warmer climate and laxative roots resulted in sickness, when the expedition might have been easily attacked but for those words of Wat-ku-ese, who now lay dead in her tent.

To this day the Nez Perces rehearse the story of Wat-ku-ese. It was the beginning of a life long friendship with the whites, broken only when Chief Joseph fled over the Lolo trail. But even Chief Joseph found he must give up the vast areas over which he was wont to roam, and come under the laws of civilized life.

As fast as their weakness permitted councils were held, when the Captains told the Nez Perces of the Great Father at Washington, who had sent them to visit his children.

Twisted Hair, the Nez Perce Tewat, a great medicine man, dreamer and wizard and wise one, drew on a white elkskin a chart of the rivers. Admiring redmen put their hands over their mouths in amazement.

No one but Twisted Hair could do such things. He was a learned Indian, knew all the trails, even to the Falls of the Columbia.

"White men," said he, "live at the Tim-tim (falls)."

Thus into Idaho had penetrated the story of Ko-nap-pe, the wrecked Spaniard, who with his son Soto had set out up the great river to find white people and tarried there until he died. Seven years later Astor's people met Soto, an old man dark as his Indian mother, but still the Indians called him white. Twenty years later Soto's daughter was still living on the Columbia in the days of the Hudson's Bay Company.

To save time and trouble, canoes were burnt out of logs. Leaving their horses with the Nez Perces, on October 4th the explorers were glad to get into their boats with their baggage and float down the clear Kooskooske, into the yellow green Snake, and on into the blue Columbia.

At the confluence of the rivers medals were given and councils held on the present site of Lewiston. Day by day, through wild, romantic scenes where white man's foot had never trod, the exultant young men were gliding to the sea.

Ahead of the boats, on horseback, galloped We-ark-koompt, an Indian express. Word flew. The tribes were watching. At the dinner camp, October 16th, five Indians came up the river on foot in great haste, took a look and started back, running as fast as they could.

That night Lewis and Clark were met at the Columbia by a procession of two hundred Indians with drums, singing, "Ke-hai, ke-hai," the redmen's signal of friendship.

Speaking of their experiences among the Nez Perces, the explorers themselves used this language:

As we approached the village most of the women, though apprised of our being expected, fled with their children into the neighboring woods. The men, however, received us without any apprehension, and gave us a plentiful supply of provisions. The plains were now crowded with Indians who came to see the persons of the whites and the strange things they brought with them; but as our guide was a perfect stranger to the language we could converse by signs only.

Monday, 23d (September, 1805).—The chiefs and warriors were all assembled this morning and we explained to them where we came from, the objects of our visiting them, and our pacific intentions toward all the Indians. This, being conveyed by signs, might not have been perfectly comprehended, but appeared to give perfect satisfaction. We now gave a medal to two of the chiefs, a shirt in addition to the medal already received by Twisted Hair, and delivered a flag and a handkerchief for the grand chief on his return. To these were added a knife, a handkerchief, and a small piece of tobacco for each chief. The inhabitants did not give us any provisions gratuitously. * * * The men exchanged a few old canisters for dressed elk skins, of which they made shirts. Great crowds of natives were around us all night, but we have not yet missed anything except a knife and a few other articles stolen yesterday from a shot pouch.

It is worthy of record that the horses entrusted to the care of Twisted Hair were kept faithfully and honestly returned to Lewis and Clark when they came back to the Nez Perce country on their homeward journey.

The next intercourse between whites and Nez Perces began with the advent of fur traders into the Northwest. First came Astor's party, then the North West Company and finally the Hudson's Bay Company, besides several American expeditions sent out to compete with the British corporations for the profits of the fur trade. In all their relations with the white men, the Nez Perces of early days maintained a uniform altitude of friendliness, and the fur trader who stopped to rest and refresh himself at a Nez Perce lodge was sure to receive kindly and hospitable treatment. Undoubtedly the Indians profited by the presence among them of the merchants, from whom they obtained, besides an abundance of trinkets and tinsels, much that added greatly to their comfort. It was by the British fur traders that they were taught the use of blankets both as wearing apparel and bedding. But the Hudson's Bay men were in the country for other purposes than the amelioration of conditions among the Indians. It were unfair to assert that they were entirely without benevolent disposition toward their red-skinned brethren, for they enforced the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to Indians and were reasonably careful that nothing should be done to debauch these children of nature, but it is an undoubted fact that they not only neglected to sow the seeds of a higher civilization themselves, but were opposed to any others who might attempt to teach the Indian useful arts or do anything to render him less absolutely dependent upon the Hudson's Bay Company, the great autocratic power of the Columbia basin.

A civilizing force of a vastly higher character entered the Indian country, when the American missionary came, actuated by no other motive than the good of the red men, hoping for no other reward than a noble work well performed, an approving conscience and a final abundant entrance into a heavenly home. The honor of pioneership in missionary work belongs to Rev. Jason Lee, of the Methodist Episcopal church, who came with a party of assistants and teachers and settled in the Willamette valley in 1834. Two years later came Dr. Marcus Whitman and wife and Rev. H. H. Spalding and wife, the ladies being the first of their race and sex to venture across plain and mountain to the distant Pacific. Dr. Whitman established his mission at Waiilatpu, not far from where Walla Walla now is, while Spalding cast his lot with the Nez Perces. This devoted missionary was a native of Bath, New York, born in 1804. He graduated at Western Reserve College at the age of twenty-nine and later entered Lane Theological Seminary, the course in which he did not remain to complete. In 1836 he began his missionary labors among the Nez Perces and to his unremitting toil, and that of his efficient helpmate, for the temporal, intellectual and spiritual welfare of these Indians much credit is due for their marked superiority over surrounding tribes. Perhaps descriptions of these two people by W. H. Gray of the Whitman mission, who was associated with them in their trip across the plains, may not be uninteresting to the reader.

"The first impression of a stranger on seeing H. H. Spalding," says Gray, "is that he has before him an unusual countenance. He begins to examine and finds a man with sharp features, large, brown eyes, dark hair, high, projecting forehead, with many wrinkles, and a head nearly bald. He is of medium size, stoop-shouldered, with a voice that can assume a mild, sharp or boisterous key at the will of the owner; quite impulsive and bitter in denunciation of a real or supposed enemy; inclined in the early part of his missionary labors to accumulate property for the especial benefit of his family, though the practice was disapproved of and forbidden by the regulations of the American Board. In his professional character he was below mediocrity. As a writer or correspondent he was bold, and rather eloquent, giving overdrawn life sketches of passing events. His moral influence was injured by strong symptoms of passion when provoked or excited. In his labors for the Indians he was zealous and persevering, and in his instructions wholly practical. For instance to induce the natives to work and cultivate their lands, he had Mrs. Spalding paint a representation of Adam and Eve, as being driven from the Garden of Eden by an angel,—Adam with a hoe on his shoulder and Eve with a spinning wheel. He taught the natives that God commanded them to work as well as pray. Had he been allowed to continue his labors with the tribe, undisturbed by sectarian and anti-religious influences, he would have effected great good, and the tribe been now admitted as citizens of the United States. As a citizen and a neighbor he was kind and obliging; to his family he was kind, yet severe in his religious observances. He was unquestionably a sincere, though not always humble Christian. The loss of his wife and the exciting and savage massacre of his asociates produced their effects upon him. Charity will find a substantial excuse for most of his faults, while virtue and truth, civilization and religion will award him a place as a faithful, zealous and comparatively successful missionary.

"Mrs. Spalding was the daughter of a plain, substantial farmer, by the name of Hart, of Oneida county, New York. She was above the medium height, slender in form, with coarse features, dark brown hair, blue eyes, rather dark complexion, coarse voice, of a serious turn of mind, and quick in understanding languages. In fact she was remarkable in acquiring the Nez Perce language so as to understand and converse with the natives quite easily by the time they reached their station at Lapwai. She could paint indifferently in water colors, and had been taught while a child all the useful branches of domestic life; could spin, weave, and sew, etc., could prepare an excellent meal at short notice; was generally sociable, but not forward in conversation with or attentions to men. In this particular she was the opposite of Mrs. Whitman. With the native women Mrs. Spalding always appeared cheerful and easy and had their unbounded confidence and respect. She was remarkable for her firmness and decision of character in whatever she or her husband undertook. She never appeared to be alarmed or excited at any difficulty, dispute or alarm common to the Indian life around her. She was considered by the Indian men as a brave, fearless woman and was respected and esteemed by all. Though she was frequently left for days alone, her husband being absent on business, but a single insult was ever offered her. Understanding their language, her cool, quick perception of the design enabled her to give so complete and thorough a rebuff to the attempted insult that, to hide his disgrace, the Indian offering it fled from the tribe, not venturing to remain among them. In fact a majority of the tribe were in favor of hanging the Indian who offered the insult, but Mrs. Spalding requested that they should allow him to live, that he might repent of his evil designs and do better in the future. Mrs. Spalding is buried near the Callapooya, in the Willamette valley."

Of the reception given by the Nez Perces to Mr. and Mrs. Spalding when they first came among them, Mr. Gray says:

"It is due to those Indians to say that they labored freely and faithfully and showed the best of feeling toward Mr. and Mrs. Spalding, paying good attention to instructions given them, and appeared quite anxious to learn all they could of their teachers. It is also due to truth to state that Mr. Spalding paid them liberally for their services when compared with the amount paid them by the Hudson's Bay Company for the same services; say, for bringing a pine log ten feet long and one foot in diameter from the Clearwater river to the station, it usually took about twelve Indians; for this service Mr. Spalding paid them about six inches of trail-rope tobacco each. This was about four times as much as the Hudson's Bay Company paid. This fact soon created a feeling of unfriendliness toward Mr. Spalding. Dr. Whitman managed to get along with less Indian labor and was able, from his location, to procure stragglers or casual men to work for him for a time, to get supplies and clothing to help them on their way down to the Willamet settlement."

A full review of Mr. Spalding's labors, his successes, his trials and discouragements need not be attempted here. He was not long to work among the red men in peace for in accordance with the sectarian views of those days, the Catholic missionaries considered it their duty to counteract as far as lay in their power the heretical teachings of the Protestants. The task of instructing the Indians in the arts of civilization and the mysteries of Christianity was certainly difficult enough at best; with the opposition of other white men endeavoring to inculcate a belief that the teachings of the first missionaries were wholly false and certainly leading to ultimate damnation, it was practically impossible to perform. There can be no doubt but that the sectarian disputes between Protestants and Catholics nulified the influence of both, but especially the former, reduced greatly the respect of Indians for their teachers and for all religion, and helped sow the seeds which bore fruit in the Whitman massacre, and the consequent abandonment for a number of years of Mr. Spalding's mission.

But notwithstanding these overwhelming difficulties, Mr. Spalding and his noble wife accomplished much for the benefit of the Indians among whom they labored during the early years of their ministry. When Dr. Elijah White, sub-agent of Indian affairs, visited them, he found their little plantations "rude to be sure," as he wrote under date, April 1, 1843, "but successfully carried on so far as raising the necessaries of life are concerned." "It was most gratifying," said he, "to witness their fondness and care for their little herds, pigs, poultry, etc. We visited and prescribed for their sick, made a short call at each of the chief's lodges, spent a season in school, hearing them read, spell and sing; at the same time examined their printing and writing, and can hardly avoid here saying I was happily surprised and greatly interested at seeing such numbers so far advanced and so eagerly pursuing after knowledge. * * *."

During this visit Dr. White succeeded in persuading the Indians, in general council assembled, to adopt, during the final month of the year 1842, the following laws for their government:

LAWS OF THE NEZ PERCES.

Article I. Whoever wilfully takes life shall be hung.

Article II. Whoever burns a dwelling house shall be hung.

Article III. Whoever burns an outbuilding shall be imprisoned six months, receive fifty lashes and pay all damages.

Article IV. Whoever carelessly burns a house, or any property, shall pay damages.

Article V. If anyone enter a dwelling without permission of the occupant the chiefs shall punish as they think proper. Public rooms are excepted.

Article VI. If anyone steal he shall pay back twofold; and if it be the value of a beaver skin or less, he shall receive twenty-five lashes; and if the value is over a beaver skin, he shall pay back two fold, and receive fifty lashes.

Article VII. If anyone take a horse and ride it without permission, or take any article and use it without liberty, he shall pay for the use of it, and receive from twenty to fifty lashes, as the chief shall direct.

Article VIII. If anyone enter a field and injure the crops, or throw down the fence, so that cattle or horses go in and do damage, he shall pay all damages and receive twenty-five lashes for every offense.

Article IX. Those only may keep dogs who travel or live among the game; if a dog kill a lamb, calf or any domestic animal, the owner shall pay the damages and kill the dog.

Article X. If any Indian raises a gun or any other weapon against a white man, it shall be reported to the chiefs, and they shall punish him. If a white do the same to an Indian, it shall be reported to Dr. White, and he shall punish or redress it.

Article XI. If an Indian break these laws, he shall be punished by his chief; if a white man break them, he shall be reported to the agent, and punished at his instance.

These laws, as also certain books of the New Testament translated into Nez Perce by Mr. Spalding, were printed on a press donated to the mission by the mission of the American Board in the Sandwich Islands. It was the first press in the Oregon territory and in the hands of the missionaries proved a potent factor in the elevation of the Indian.

But an idea of the work of Mr. Spalding during the earliest years of his labors among the Nez Perces, and his impressions of the Indians is best conveyed by incorporating a portion of a letter on the subject written to Dr. Elijah White about the year 1843. It reads:

My Dear Brother.—The kind letter which our mission had the honor of receiving from yourself, making inquiries relative to its numbers, the character of the Indian tribes among whom its several stations are located, the country, etc., is now before me.

The questions referring to Indian character are very important, and to answer them demands a more extended knowledge of character and habits, from personal daily observation, than the short residence of six years can afford, and more time and attention than I can possibly command, amidst the numerous cares and labors of the station. I less regret this, as the latter will receive the attention of my better informed and worthy associates of the other stations.

Concerning many of the questions, I can only give my own half-formed opinions, from limited observations which have not extended far beyond the people of my immediate charge.

Our mission is under the patronage of the American Board, and was commanded in the fall of 1836 by Marcus Whitman, M. D., and myself, with our wives and Mr. Gray. Dr. Whitman was located at Wailatpu, among the Cayuse Indians, twenty-five miles east of Fort Wallawalla, a trading post of the Hudson's Bay Company, which stands nine miles below the junction of Lewis and Clark rivers, three hundred from the Pacific and about two hundred from Fort Vancouver. I was located at this place, on the Clearwater, or Koos-koos-ky river, twelve miles from its junction with the Lewis river, one hundred and twenty miles east of Wailatpu. Mr. Gray left the same winter, and returned to the States. In the fall of 1838 Mr. Gray returned to this country, accompanied by Mrs. Gray, Messrs. Walker, Eells and Smith, and their wives, and Mr. Rogers. The next season two new stations were commenced, one by Messrs. Walker and Eells, at Cimakain, near Spokan river, among the Spokan Indians, one hundred and thirty-five miles northwest of this station, and sixty-five miles south of Fort Colville, on the Columbia river, three hundred miles above Fort Wallawalla; the second by Mr. Smith, among the Nez Perces, sixty miles above this station. There are now connected with this mission the Rev. Messrs. Walker and Eells, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Eells, at Cimakain; myself and Mrs. Spalding at this station. Dr. Whitman is now on a visit to the States, and Mrs. Whitman on a visit to the Dalles, a station of our Methodist brethren. But two natives have as yet been admitted into the church. Some ten or twelve others give pleasing evidence of having been born again.

Concerning the schools and congregations on the Sabbath, I will speak only of this station. The congregation on the Sabbath varies at different seasons of the year, and must continue to do so until the people find a substitute in the fruits of the earth and herds for their roots, game and fish, which necessarily require much wandering. I am happy to say that this people are very generally turning their attention, with much apparent eagerness, to cultivating the soil, and raising hogs, cattle and sheep, and find a much more abundant and agreeable source of subsistence in the hoe than in their bows and sticks for digging roots.

For a few weeks in the fall, after the people return from their buffalo hunt, and then again in the spring, the congregation numbers from one to two thousand. Through the winter it numbers from two to eight hundred. From July 1st to the 1st of October, it varies from two to five hundred. The congregation, as also the school, increases every winter, as the quantity of provision raised in this vicinity is increased.

Preparatory to schools and a permanent congregation, my earliest attention, on arriving in this country, was turned toward schools, as promising the most permanent good to the nation, in connection with the written word of God and the preached Gospel. But to speak of schools then was like speaking of the church bell, when as yet the helve is not put in the first ax by which the timber is to be felled, or the first stone laid in the dam which is to collect the water from whence the lumber in the edifice in which the bell is to give forth its sounds. Suffice it to say, through the blessings of God we have had an increasingly large school, for two winters past, with comparatively favorable means of instruction.

But the steps by which we have been brought to the present elevation, if I may so speak, though we are yet exceedingly low, begin far, far back among the days of nothing, and little to do with.

Besides eating my own bread, won by the sweat of my brow, there were the wandering children of a necessarily wandering people to collect and bring permanently within the reach of the school. Over this department of labor hung the darkest cloud, as the Indian is noted for despising manual labor; but I would acknowledge, with humble gratitude, the interposition of that hand which holds the hearts of all men. The hoe soon brought hope, light and satisfaction, the fruits of which are yearly becoming much more than a substitute for their former precarious game and roots, and are much preferred by the people, who are coming in from the mountains and plains, and calling for hoes, plows and seeds much faster than they can be furnished, and collecting around the station in increasing numbers, to cultivate their little farms; so furnishing a permanent school and congregation on the Sabbath, from four to eight months, and, as the farms are enlarged, giving food and employment for the year. I trust the school and congregation will be permanent through the year. It was no small tax on my time to give the first lessons in agriculture. That the men of the nation (the first chiefs not excepted) rose up to labor when a few hoes and seeds were offered them, I can attribute to nothing but the unseen hand of the God of missions. That their habits are really changed is acknowledged by themselves. The men say, whereas, then once did not labor with their hands, now they do; and often tell me in jesting that I have converted them into a nation of women. They are a very industrious people, and, from very small beginnings, they now cultivate their lands with much skill, and to good advantage. Doubtless many more would cultivate, but for the want of means. Your kind donation of fifty hoes, in behalf of the government, will be most timely; and should you be able to send up the plows you kindly proposed they will, without doubt, be purchased immediately and put to the best use.

But to return to the school. It now numbers two hundred and twenty-five in daily attendance, half of which are adults. Nearly all the principal men and chiefs in this vicinity, with one chief from a neighboring tribe, are members of the school. A new impulse was given to the school by the warm interest yourself and Mr. McKay took in it while you were here. They are as industrious in school as they the on their farms. Their improvement is astonishing, considering their crowded condition, and only Mrs. Spalding, with her delicate constitution and her family cares, for their teacher.

About one hundred are printing their own books with a pen. This keeps up a deep interest, as they daily have new lessons to print, and what they print must be committed to memory as soon as possible.

A good number are now so far advanced in reading and printing as to render much assistance in teaching. Their books are taken home at night; and every lodge becomes a schoolroom.

Their lessons are scripture lessons; no others (except the laws) seem to interest them. I send you a specimen of the books they print in school. It was printed by ten select adults, yet it is a fair specimen of a great number in the school.

The laws which you so happily prepared, and which were unanimously adopted by the people, I have printed in the form of a small schoolbook. A great number of the school now read them fluently. I send you a few copies of the laws with no apologies for the imperfect manner in which they are executed. Without doubt, a school of nearly the same number could be collected at Kimiah, the station above this, vacated by Mr. Smith, the present residence of Ellis, the principal chief.

Number who cultivate.—Last season about one hundred and forty cultivated from one-fourth of an acre to four or five acres each. About half this number cultivate in the valley. One chief raised one hundred and seventy-six bushels of peas last season, one hundred of corn, and four hundred of potatoes. Another, one hundred and fifty acres of peas, one hundred and sixty of corn, a large quantity of potatoes, vegetables, etc. Ellis, I believe, raised more than either of the above-mentioned. Some forty other individuals raised from twenty to one hundred bushels of grain. Eight individuals are now furnished with plows. Thirty-two head of cattle are possessed by thirteen individuals; ten sheep by four; some forty hogs.

Arts and sciences.—Mrs. Spalding has instructed ten females in knitting, a majority of the female department in the schools in sewing, six in carding and spinning, and three in weaving. Should our worthy brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Littlejohn, join us soon, as is now expected, I trust, by the blessing of God, we shall see greater things than we have yet seen. From what I have seen in the field, the school, the spinning and weaving room, in the prayer-room, and Sabbath congregation, I am fully of the opinion that this people are susceptible of high moral and civil improvement.

Moral character of the people.—On this subject there is a great diversity of opinion. One writer styles them more a nation of saints than of savages; and if their refusal to move camp for game, at his suggestion, on a certain day, reminded him that the Sabbath extended as far west as the Rocky Mountains, he might well consider them such. Another styles them supremely selfish, which is nearer the truth; for, without doubt, they are the descendants of Adam. What I have above stated is evidently a part of the bright side of their character. But there is also a dark side, in which I have sometimes taken a part. I must, however, confess that when I attempt to name it, and hold it up as a marked exception to a nation in similar circumstances, without the restraint of wholesome laws, and strangers to the heaven-born fruits of enlightened and well-regulated society, I am not able to do it. Faults they have, and very great ones, yet few of them seemed disposed to break the Sabbath by traveling and other secular business. A very few indulge in something like profane swearing. Very few are superstitiously attached to their medicine men, who are, without doubt, sorcerers, and are supposed to be leagued with a supernatural being (Waikin), who shows himself sometimes in the gray bear, the wolf, the swan, goose, wind, clouds, etc.

Lying is very common; thieving comparatively rare; polygamy formerly common, but now rare; much gambling among the young men; quarreling and fighting quite rare; habit of taking back property after it is sold is a practice quite common, and very evil in its tendency. All these evils, I conceive, can be traced to the want of wholesome laws and well-regulated society. There are two traits in the character of this people I wish to notice. One I think I can account for; the other I cannot. It is often said the Indian is a noble-minded being, never forgetting a kindness. So far as my experience has gone with this people, the above is most emphatically true, but in quite a different sense from the idea there conveyed. It is true they never forget a kindness, but after make it the occasion to ask another; and if refused, return insults according to the favors received. My experience has taught me that, if I would keep the friendship of an Indian, and do him good, I must show him no more favor in the way of property than what he returns some kind of an equivalent for; most of our trials have arisen from this source. I am, however, happy to feel that there is a manifest improvement as the people become more instructed, and we become more acquainted with their habits. This offensive trait in the Indian character I believe in part should be charged to white men. It has been the universal practice of all white men to give tobacco, to name no other article, to Indians when they ask for it. Hence two very natural ideas; one is, that the white man is in debt to them; the other is, that in proportion as a white man is a good man he will discharge this debt by giving bountifully of his provisions and goods. This trait in Indian character is capable of being turned to the disadvantage of traders, travelers and missionaries, by prejudiced white men.

The last trait, which I cannot account for, is an apparent disregard for the rights of white men. Although their eagerness to receive instruction in school on the Sabbath and on the farm is without a parallel in my knowledge, still, should a reckless fellow from their own number, or even a stranger, make an attack on my life and property, I have no evidence to suppose but a vast majority of them would look on with indifference and see our dwelling burnt to the ground and our heads severed from our bodies. I can not reconcile this seeming want of gratitude with their many encouraging characteristics. But to conclude this subject, should our unprofitable lives, through a kind Providence, be spared a few years, by the blessings of the God of missions, we expect to see this people christianized to a great extent, civilized, and happy, with much of science and the word of God, and many of the comforts of life; but not without many days of hard labor, and sore trials, of disappointed hopes, and nameless perplexities.

The number of this people is variously estimated from two tousand to four thousand. I can not give a correct estimate.

At this station there is a dweling house, a school house, storehouse, flour and saw mills (all of a rough kind), fifteen acres of land under improvement, twenty-four head of cattle, thirty-six horses, sixty-seven sheep. Rev. Messrs. Walker and Eells, I hope, will report to Wailatpu; but should they fail, I will say, as near as I can recollect, about fifty acres of land are cultivated by some seventy individuals; a much greater number of cattle and hogs than among this people. Belonging to the station are thirty-four head of cattle, eleven horses, some forty hogs; one dwelling house of adobes (well finished), a blacksmith's shop, flour mill (lately destroyed by fire), and some forty acres of land cultivated.

Arable land.—The arable land in this upper country is confined almost entirely to the small streams, although further observation may prove that many of the extensive rolling praries are capable of producing wheat. They can become inhabited only by cultivating timber; but the rich growth of buffalo grass upon them will ever furnish an inexhaustible supply for innumerable herds of cattle and sheep. I know of no country in the world so well adopted to the herding system. Cattle, sheep and horses are invariably healthy, and produce rapidly; sheep usually twice a year. The herding system adopted, the country at first put under regulations adopted to the scarcity of habitable places (say that no settlers shall be allowed to take up over twenty acres of land on the streams), and the country without doubt will sustain a great population. I am happy to feel assured that the United States government has no other thoughts than to regard the rights and wants of the Indian tribes in this country.

And while the agency of Indian affairs in this country remains in the hands of the present agent, I have the fullest confidence to believe that the reasonable expectations in reference to the intercourse between whites and Indians will be fully realized by every philanthropist and every Christian. But as the Indian population is sparse, after they are abundantly supplied, there will be remaining country sufficient for an extensive white population.

The thought of removing these tribes that the country may come wholly in the possession of the whites, can never for a moment enter the mind of a friend of the red men, for two reasons, to name no other: First, there are but two countries to which they can be removed, the grave and the Blackfoot, between which there is no choice; second, the countless millions of salmon which swarm the Columbia and its tributaries, and furnish a very great proportion of the sustenance of the tribes who dwell upon these numerous waters, and a substitute for which can nowhere be found east or west of the Rocky mountains, but in herds or cultivating their own land. * * * *

Your humble servant,
H. H. Spalding

Dr. White,
Ag't for Indian Affairs West of the Rocky Mts.

While Mr Spalding wisely determined not to remain at his mission after the Whitman massacre of 1847, his influence continued to exert its power over the minds of the red men throughout all the stirring period which followed. During the Cayuse war not a Nez Perce gun was turned against the whites and at the council of Walla Walla in 1855, the United States commissioners noted that the tribesmen had not forgotten the religious instructions Spalding had imparted to them, but on Sundays held preaching services and engaged in the visible forms of worship.

Another force in strengthening the friendship between Americans and Nez Perces was the commanding influence and rare ability of Head Chief Halhaltlosot, known among the whites as Lawyer on account of his ready wit and repartee. "Wise, enlightened and magnanimous, the head chief, yet one of the poorest of his tribe, he stood head and shoulders above the other chiefs, whether in intellect, nobility of soul or influence." His force of character and innate ability enabled him to overcome poverty and lowliness of birth and to achieve, while yet in middle life, the first place among his people. He used his influence for the amelioration of the tribe, directing his initial efforts against the two chief vices then obtaining—gambling and polygamy. He has the distinction of having been the only western Indian possessed of sufficient statesmanship to discern that no resistance to the power of the whites could avail anything, and that the wise course for his race to pursue was to adopt the white man's mode of life and live in amity with him. This view of the case gave shape to his policy and he cultivated the friendship of his white brethern with unfailing assiduity. He and his people were shrewd enough to turn friendship to their own advantage in trade, but the policy of Lawyer was undoubtedly dictated by higher motives than mere temporary gain. He had at heart the highest good of his race and wisdom enough to see clearly the way to secure it, and he earned for himself a right to the everlasting gratitude of whites and Indians alike.

At the council of Walla Walla he not only wielded a tremendous influence in securing the adoption of the treaties proposed by Stevens and Palmer, but he placed the commissioners under obligations to him for the preservation of their lives and those of their party. "He disclosed," writes Hazard Stevens, "a conspiracy on the part of the Cayuses to suddenly rise up and massacre all the whites on the council ground,—that this measure, deliberated in nightly conferences for some time, had at length been determined upon in full council of the tribe the day before, which the Young Chief had requested for a holiday; they were now only awaiting the assent of the Yakimas and Walla Wallas to strike the blow; and that these latter had actually joined, or were on the point of joining, the Cayuses in a war of extermination against all the whites, for which the massacre of the governor (Stevens) and his party was to be the signal. They had conducted these plottings with the greatest secrecy, not trusting the Nez Perces; and the Lawyer, suspecting that all was not right, had discovered the plot by means of a spy with the greatest difficulty and only just in time to avert the catastrophe."

To frustrate these hostile designs the Lawyer pitched his lodge in the center of the white camp, thereby conveying to the other Indians the intelligence that the commissioners and party were under his protection. So numerous and powerful were the Nez Perces that even a combination of the other tribes dare not risk a collision with them, so the foul plot had to be abandoned. It is the opinion of some writers, from the circumstances attending the signing of the treaties by other Indians than the Nez Perces, and the war which followed so hard upon it, that they or some of them appended their names as a deliberate act of treachery, hoping to lull the whites into a feeling of security, then fall upon them totally unprepared for defense. But whether this be true or not, certain it is that the Nez Perces were acting in good faith, for they testified their sincerity by remaining true to their bargain and to their white friends during the storm of war which ensued.

When, in 1860 and subsequent years, the gold excitement drew thousands of miners into the Nez Perce country, the ancient friendliness was found so deep rooted as to stand the strain naturally put upon it. It must be admitted that no white community would quietly permit such an invasion. While it is true that the Indians were powerless to prevent permanently the appropriation of mining property, they could, had they been so disposed, have fallen upon the whites and massacred them in great numbers, and many other tribes would have done so. Even in the one instance where representatives of the Nez Perce tribe took arms against the whites, the majority remained steadfast in their friendship and while some of those obstensibly friendly may have rendered assistance to their red brethren in arms, many gave much help to the whites by warning them of approaching danger, carrying messages and the like.

Everything considered, no tribe of Indians deserves better treatment at the hands of the whites than the Nez Perces, and while it is claimed and no doubt with truth that they have been shamefully swindled by representatives of the government, it is likewise certain that not a little effort has been made for the amelioration of their conditions. They are fortunate in possessing the old Fort Lapwai Indian Training school, established by the government nearly two decades ago; the successor of a much older institution. As a result of its establishment and maintenance the Nez Perces are among the best educated Indians in the west. When Captain Pratt, superintendent of the Carlisle Indian school in Pennsylvania, the highest school of its kind in the United States, recently said that the Nez Perces who came to him were the brightest of any Indians with whom he had to deal, he paid a high compliment to the intellectual ability of this tribe and also to the efficiency of the reservation training school at Lapwai. With bright minds to instruct, plenty of equipment and highly capable corps of teachers, the school has been able to maintain a high standard of efficiency.

As its name implies, this institution is situated at old Fort Lapwai in Nez Perces county. The old fort has long since been abandoned, but its site is still reserved by the government and many of the old post buildings are still utilized by the school. The location is in the picturesque Lapwai valley, six miles from the mouth of the creek and Spalding the nearest railroad point. Here in this circular depression the land lies nearly level, furnishing an unexcelled building site. Sheltered from the bleak winds which occasionally sweep the higher region above and yet low enough to profit by the warmer currents of air which temper the climate of the Clearwater valley in winter, well watered by Lapwai creek and numerous springs, favored with fertile soil, surrounded by the hills and prairies so dear to the hearts of the race and so near to the scenes famous in their history, the spot is certainly ideal for the purposes of an Indian school; while the busy farmers at work in the neighboring hills and vales give the young Indians a constant object lesson in industry and its rewards.

Commencing in the old quarters abandoned by the soldiers in the latter 'seventies, one by one the Fort Lapwai Indian Training School has added buildings until at present it occupies fourteen besides the stables and smaller outbuildings. The four largest of these are a handsome, two-story brick structure used as a boys' dormitory, a large, two-story, frame dormitory for the girls, a spacious dining hall, kitchen and lodging house and a fine, modern frame schoolhouse. Then there are the superintendent's office, the doctor's office, the drug store, the laundry, the gymnasium and the industrial work room and lastly the quarters of the employes, most of whom reside in the old officers building. The newest of these structures was erected in 1896, though all have been remodeled, painted and arranged and this work of improvement and equipping is constantly going forward. All of these buildings are located on a fine, level campus of several acres, enclosed by a sightly picket fence. The grounds are well kept, the different buildings are arranged along regularly laid out streets bordering the campus proper and the whole presents an orderly appearance pleasing to the eye. North and west of the campus are the orchard and garden of the institution, covering several acres. In all there are between fifteen and twenty acres in campus, garden and orchard. Then there is a large farm attached to the establishment on which all of the vegetables, cereals and hay used at the school and agency are raised. It was not possible to obtain from those in charge an accurate estimate of the value of the property, but it must with all equipments have cost $50,000.

Accommodations are provided for eighty-five boys and sixty-five girls and at the present time the capacity of the school is taxed. The school is open to all Nez Perce Indians between the ages of five and eighteen years. Formerly attendance was optional, but at present a law is in force compelling all Indians of school age to attend school at least nine months in the year. Under the present regulations of the Lapwai school, a ten months' term is maintained. During the past winter diphtheria made its appearance among the pupils and as a result the attendance was considerably decreased for a few weeks.

While in school the boys and girls wear uniforms. The boys' suits are of a dark steel color, and the cadet pattern, trimmed with red stripes and brass buttons. The girls wear a gray uniform with black trimmings, or a blue uniform with red trimmings. The boys are divided into two military companies and have a drill each morning in their drill room and battalion drill occasionally.

The routine of school life is interesting. At six o'clock the rising bell rings. An hour later all, except those who are sick, must breakfast, the Indians in their hall and the officers and instructors in theirs. At 7:30 the pupils fall into line and details are made. The disciplinarian selects squads to take care of the stock, cut wood and carry it in, milk the cows, build fires, work in the garden and do other minor chores. The matron assigns a division of the girls to sweep, dust and to attend the living rooms, assist in the kitchen and dining room, etc. While one division is in school, another works under the supervision of the industrial departments; the boys under the farmer, carpenter or industrial teacher; the girls under the matron, cook, laundress, seamstress or baker. The literary department holds its sessions from 9 a. m. to 11:30 a. m., and from 1 p. m. to 4 p. m. The literary work is elementary, sixth grade work being the highest. Of course the work of all departments is so arranged that a thorough elementary school education and industrial training is given each pupil during the year. At 5:30 p. m. the supper bell rings and after the evening meal an hour must be devoted to study. The day is finally closed by the summons to retire, which comes at 9:30 o'clock. On Sunday a non-sectarian Sunday school is held, attended by all the pupils and whenever the school is favored by the visit of a clergyman, he is invited to preach to them. Once a week the steady routine of school life is laid aside for a social function —a concert, a drill, a lecture or an amateur play. The school possesses a creditable cornet band of sixteen pieces which plays on all important occasions and at the weekly entertainments. In fact everything which would contribute to the physical and mental betterment and upbuilding of these boys and girls has been done by the government at this school and the results show that the work has not been in vain.

The corps of instructors at the school includes the following, nearly all of whom have had previous experience in Indian work: Literary teachers, Alice B. Preuss, Mrs. Hallie M. Alley, Jennie Smith; industrial teacher, Fletcher Cox; farmer, Alvan Shinn; carpenter, T. C. Glenn; girls' matron, Emma Troutman; boys' matron, Laura Mahin; cook, Lizzie Pike; laundress, Clara L. Stuve; seamstress, Alice Simmons; disciplinarian, Corbett Lawyer (Indian); baker, Mrs. Mary Osborn; policeman, Frank Hoosiskopsis (Indian); interpreter, Edward Raboin (Indian).

The superintendent of the Indian school and also the Indian agent for the tribe is Earl T. MacArthur, who succeeded Agent T. C. Stranahan in July, 1902. At that time the two offices were combined and the agency removed from Spalding to Lapwai. Mr. MacArthur is an energetic young man, thoroughly equipped for his work. He is a native of Iowa, a graduate of Cornell University and since 1891 has been engaged in Indian work under the direction of the Interior department. Previous to his transfer to the Fort Lapwai school, he was in charge of the Lewiston agency in South Dakota.

The agency is situated at the school and occupies a commodious office by itself. Here Mr. MacArthur is assisted in the management of affairs by three clerks, J. S. Martin, A. J. Montgomery and J. N. Alley. The latter is also attached to the school and agency in the capacity of physician. About $50,000 a year are required to maintain the school and agency and fully $60,000 lease money passed through the agency last year, the office conducting all transactions of this nature between the Indians and whites. Aside from the leasing of lands there is very little else done by the agent nowadays as the lands have all been allotted and the red men given full citizenship..

Just a word about the later missions. In 1847 Rev. H. H. Spalding retired to the Willamette valley. He returned to Lapwai as superintendent of schools in 1864, which position he occupied two or three years, when the office was abolished. In the fall of 1871, he again took up his abode among the Nez Perces as a missionary, and he continued to reside at Spalding and Lapwai until his death in 1874.

His mantle fell upon the worthy shoulders of Miss Susan Law Mcbeth, who had come as missionary teacher in 1873 from the Choctaw mission in Indian Territory. She was a graduate of the University of Iowa and to her belonged the distinction of having been the first lady to serve as a delegate to the Christian Commission, at work among the soldiers of the Union army.

Miss Mcbeth taugh school a year after coming to the land of the Nez Perces, then succeeded to Mr. Spalding's Bible class at Kamiah, later taking up his entire missionary work over the whole reservation. She remained at Kamiah until 1877, when she fled to Lapwai to escape the hostiles. Two years later she returned to Kamiah. She remained until 1885, in which year she removed to Mount Idaho. There she died in 1893. She has been described as a woman of high mental attainments, untiring energy and fervid religious faith.

Her sister, Miss Kate C. Mcbeth, succeeded to the work and is still the representative among the Nez Perces of the American Board. She came in 1879 to assist her sister and taught the women while her sister labored for the spiritual and moral betterment of the men. She spent her time in Kamiah, Mount Idaho and Spalding until 1885, when she became a resident of Lapwai. At present she has charge of a commodious and well furnished mission house opposite the Indian school, and is instructing a large class of Bible students. She also makes occasional journeys over the reservation. Miss Mcbeth has compiled and is still endeavoring to perfect a dictionary of the Nez Perce language and her studies in this direction have made her perhaps the greatest living authority on the subject. She is also considered an authority on the history and traditions of the tribe. Her assistant in the work is Miss Mazie Crawford.

There is a Catholic mission at Slickpoo, on Mission creek, northwest of Lapwai. It is under the patronage of St. Joseph and is the center of several outlying missions. The fathers of the Society of Jesus conduct the work. A small school was in the course of construction at the time of the writer's visit to the reservation.

CHAPTER V.

DESCRIPTIVE.

In many respects Nez Perces differs widely in topography and productions from its larger neighbor on the south, the county to which it is the gateway and with which it is quite intimately associated. Yet it may be said with truth that the people of Nez Perces and Idaho counties are so closely bound together by the ties of commercial relationship as to form practically one community. This relationship, however, arises rather out of diversity of industries than similarity of pursuits. The presence of mineral wealth in Idaho county, the relatively small amount of agricultural land, the elevation of much of its surface, the ruggedness of its topography have determined the leading pursuits of its people, making them a mining and stock raising rather than an agricultural class. The same great law of nature has made agriculture the principal industry of Nez Perces county and the natural interdependence of these industries has bound the people together in a close commercial bond.

But Nez Perces county, though less wild and striking in its physical features than its neighbor on the south is not lacking in the ruggedness of aspect which forms the most striking characteristic of the great state of which it is a part. The writer well remembers the wild, grand scene that greets the eye of the traveler as he winds his way down the side of Craig's mountain into the sheltered town of Culdesac, a scene wonderful in its combination of beauty and strength, magnificence and sublimity. And there are many such scenes within the limits of Nez Perces county.

Yet the county differs from many other parts of Idaho in that very little of its surface is incapable of cultivation. Even the uplands of Nez Perces are especially suited to agriculture, while the sheltered valleys of river and creek furnish ideal homes for the fruit raiser and the market gardener. The result is that the county, though relatively small in area, is yet one of the leaders among its sister counties of the state in population and wealth production.

The Snake and Clearwater rivers unite their turbid and crystal waters in the northwestern part of the county. The valley of the former is narrow and that of the latter not very wide, yet in the Clearwater basin and on its bars are numerous beautiful and well kept orchards, vineyards and gardens, rendered overwhelmingly productive by the combined efforts of nature and art, nature in furnishing a rich, prolific soil and art in turning the waters of the river onto the land, that they may do their part in furnishing fruits and vegetables for the tables of man. The contour of the river bottom is such as to render very large orchards impossible, but so great is the productiveness of the land that an extensive tract to any one grower is not necessary. The writer remembers having read years ago of a man who testified on oath in a court of justice that his net profits from a single acre for a single year had exceeded seven hundred dollars. And indeed the man who could cultivate and irrigate a large tract in the thorough manner in which these orchards appear to be cultivated and irrigated to one who in springtime surveys from the wayside their luxuriousness and beauty, would need the assistance of a large number of a large number of employees.

Some ten miles above Lewiston, the Clearwater valley, which has been gradually narrowing as you ascend the stream, widens again to the southward, and into it flow the sparkling waters of Lapwai creek. On the north side of the river, the elevated plateau country of which Genesse is the principal town breaks abruptly to the stream, and with the lofty hills to the southward form a striking contrast to the peaceful and gently beautiful Lapwai valley, extending away toward the base of Craig's mountain, whose timbered summit projected against the sky beyond, forms your southern horizon. The ruggedness of the bluffs, the bold contour of the lofty hills and uplands deep furrowed with coules and ravines, dotted with farm buildings, stacks of hay and bands of grazing stock, the swift river, the turbulent, restless creek, and at their confluence the little village of Spalding, all unite to form a picture magnificent and fascinating, especially when summer's warmth has touched it with its own rich, beautiful hues. At the time of the writer's visit the work of the sunshine had not yet been fully accomplished, but it had already begun its wondrous resurrection in the Clearwater valley, while a few miles distant in either a southerly or a northerly direction, winter still held the country in its snowy embrace.

The thoughts of the beholder of retrospective habit will have a tendency to revert back to the time when, sixty-seven years ago, the Rev. H. H. Spalding began planting here at the mouth of the Lapwai creek, the vine and fig tree of civilization, the fruits of which are so plainly visible on every hand. He will not wonder that the pioneer missionary chose this spot as the scene of his labors, for the place has a charm for the red man as for the white and from time immemorial this had been one of the favorite abiding places of the Nez Perces. The missionary has made the spot hallowed by his unselfish efforts for the good of the red race.

The Lapwai basin, varying in width from a quarter to half a mile, extends in a southerly direction and about four miles from the mouth, the stream widens into a truly magnificent little valley, perhaps two miles long by a mile in width, elliptical in shape, the hills on the west rising from the level of the plain by much easier grades and presenting longer and more gentle inclines than do those in any other direction. About the center of this depression are the cluster of buildings which constitute the town of Lapwai, while at the extreme southwestern end, snug up against the base of the hills, are the present Indian agency and school occupying the site where once was the historic Fort Lapwai. On the railroad are the grain warehouses of the Vollmer-Clearwater Company and the Kettenbach Grain Company, giving a hint of the principal industry of the people.

A mile above Lapwai the Sweetwater, a creek larger than the Lapwai and really the main stream, empties into the latter. Here has been established a small trading point. Three miles farther up the valley Mission creek enters the Lapwai. This stream takes its name from the Catholic mission school at Slickpoo, established, it is said, in the early 'sixties by Father Cataldo and still maintained.

At Culdesac, the terminal town of the Northern Pacific's Lapwai branch, the traveler journeying southward soon begins his ascent of Craig's mountain. This is not really a mountain but a high plateau, many miles long and in places many miles wide on top, comparatively level when you once get up there. It was fomerly the sheep man's paradise, being elevated sufficiently to furnish excellent summer range, but the advance of civilization has injured it for this industry somewhat. The leading pursuit of its enterprising inhabitants at present is lumbering, and the traveler over the mountain will notice a saw-mill at least every few miles. However, on each side of the mountain are quite extensive glades or prairie arms extending into the timber, and these are closely settled by energetic farming communities. Not a few also are establishing homes for themselves where the timber once stood. There can be little doubt that the mountain will be all settled up as soon as the timber is removed, but so extensive are the forests and so dense in places that it will take a long time to fell them and convert their timber into boards. There are several towns and post-offices on the mountain for the convenience of and supported by the lumbermen or agriculturists or both.

Most of the maps show Craig's mountain as occupying comparatively small space and situated just north of the great bend of the Salmon and between that river and the Snake, but in reality it is an extensive plateau, bearing upon its sides or broad top several widely separated towns, principal among them Forest, Morrow, Westlake, Keuterville and Winchester. Near the top of this mountain and west of the reservation line is Waha lake, twenty-one or twenty-two miles southeast from Lewiston. It is described as a beautiful little sheet, elliptical in shape and a half mile long, surrounded on all sides by a pine forest. The old stage road passes around its eastern margin. It has long been and still is a favorite summer resort. At one time an attempt was made to stock it with fish, but the plan did not prove a success. There is a well appointed hotel on its banks, the Lake House, kept by Mr. Faunce, who also has an abundance of row and sail boats and such other equipments as will augment the convenience and comfort of recreation seekers. To reach it from Lewiston you take the old stage road which passes through Tammany hollow, Lewiston prairie and Waha prairie, all rich farming and stock raising sections, though the last named is more elevated and consequently colder than the other valleys. The soil of these prairie sections is very productive and harvests usually bountiful. Many of the farmers have excellent orchards. In Tammany hallow, on the old Dowd ranch, artesian water has been struck in several places, and many attempts will be made to find it elsewhere in the valley, that orchards and gardens may be irrigated.

But it is to the country to the eastward of that just described that we must look for the finest and most extensive agricultural region of Nez Perces. Extending practically the entire length of the county is the beautiful, rolling Nez Perces prairie, justly celebrated for its rich, black soil and its wonderful capacity for producing wheat, flax and other cereals. Until 1895 this prairie was in the hands of the Indians and its productive power was consequently undeveloped. Then, however, it was thrown open to settlement, by act of congress, which provided that homesteaders should be required not only to use their rights on the land but pay for it as well. Fortunately the provision that the land must be purchased was later repealed, but it is also fortunate that the proviso was there at first, as it resulted in keeping out of the country all but thrifty, energetic people who meant business.

It happened that two years before the opening of the reserve, an unusually wet harvest season caused many of the farmers of the Palouse country, in Washington, almost all of them indeed, to lose their crops. Much of the destroyed grain had already been harvested and some of it was threshed and lying in sacks in the field. The farmer, therefore, was obligated to pay harvesting and sometimes threshing bills, whereas the grain to which he must look for reimbursement was worthless. The next year the price of wheat dropped to fifteen cents a bushel. The result of the two bad years in succession was that not a few of these ranchmen were rendered homeless. The opening of the reservation in 1895 gave them the opportunity they were seeking of starting again in life, so securing a hundred and sixty acres apiece they began anew the struggle for a home and competency. They have brought to the cultivation of the rich virgin soil of Nez Perces prairie the experience gained on their Palouse farms and, avoiding the errors which caused them to fail in the past, they have made for themselves happy and comfortable homes. No better illustration can be found of what an industrious, thrifty and skillful people can accomplish when they have to start with a goodly portion of rich, fertile soil and enjoy favorable conditions otherwise.

In a recent interview in a Spokane paper, James Marker, of Nezperce City, said:

"Nez Perces prairie, Idaho, is in a most flourishing condition, and the farmers of that district are rapidly gaining wealth. The flax and hog industries are the mainstays of the district, although cattle raising is carried on extensively. The farmers' tramway that extends from the prairie to the railroad has five and a half months' work ahead in bringing down the flax for shipment. The yield in flax varies from nine to twenty-two bushels an acre, the average being about sixteen. I know of one man who, when he came into the country about six years ago, had nothing except four broken down cayuses, but who last fall sold fifteen thousand bushels of flax from his different ranches, for which he obtained ninety-eight cents a bushel. When I first arrived in the country I had only sufficient money to build a house costing four hundred and seventy-five dollars. I now have a standing offer of six thousand dollars for the farm.

"Most of our shipments are made from Kamiah, on the Clearwater Short Line, about sixty miles from Lewiston, Idaho. Nezperce City is twelve miles from the railroad. On one day last fall there were nine carloads of hogs shipped from the station, while the total shipments in this line for the past three months have been thirty car loads.

"I have just disposed of four car loads on the Sound. T here were three hundred and sixty-two head, weighing eighty-two thousand pounds, for which I received six dollars and sixty cents per hundred pounds."

Before discussing the productive capacity of Nez Perces county as a whole, it is well to give some statistics regarding its size, population, etc. In superficial area the county is one of the smallest in the state, only two being smaller, namely, Latah and Bear Lake. These have 1,100 and 1,080 square miles respectively, while Nez Perces has 1,610. Though rellatively so small, the last mentioned is, however, the most populous county of Idaho, being credited by the latest census with 13,748 persons, while Latah, its nearest competitor, has 13,451. It is claimed that Nez Perces leads in the number of farms, having 2,144, containing 400,510 acres, while Latah, the next in rank, has only 1,821 farms containing 353,700 acres. In the production of flax, Nez Perces county far outranks all others, yielding 91 per cent. of that arised in the entire state.

Official statistics of productions for the year 1902 are not available, but those furnished the Spokesman Review by its Lewiston correspondent at the close of that year are doubtless close enough approximations to furnish a clear idea of the producing power of the county. They divide the wheat shipments among the different stations as follows: Lewiston, 175,000 bushels; Waha and points on the river, 45,000; Lapwai, 150,000; Agatha, 75,000; Peck, 125,000; Greer, 40,000; Kamiah, 125,000; Stites, 50,000; Culdesac, 450,000; Sweetwater, 225,000; Basalt, 59,000; Lenore, 225,000; Orofino, 35,000; Nez Perces tramway, 550,000; Kooskia, 75,000. Idaho county is credited with the shipments from Kooskia and Stites, 125,000 bushels in all. Of the 2,404,000 bushels shipped from the stations named approximately 650,000 bushels were flax, which sold at average price of $1 a bushel; while 1,500,000 bushels were wheat, vauled at 60 cents a bushel, the remainder being oats and barley of the estimated value of $11,250. The same authority places the corn crop of the county at 10,000 bushels, worth $5,000. "Of beans, there were raised 250,000 pounds. which found ready sale at 3 cents a pound, or $7,500. Sales of hay by the farmers were about 10,000 tons, of the average value of $8 a ton or $80,000. This would indicate a total value of $1,653,250 for the grain and hay crop of the county."

From the railroad and commission men it was learned that the shipments of vegetables aggregated ten thousand packages, of the value of $15,000 approximately. Of the live stock industry it was not possible to obtain as accurate and definite data, the shipments of cattle, hogs, sheep and horses not being separated either as to variety or the county from which they came, but it was thought that the value of the stock exports from Idaho and Nez Perces counties would not vary much from $1,000,000, half of which might be credited justly to the latter county. Poultry and dairy products for the year were of the estimated value of $10,000.

"It is estimated," continues the correspondent, "that the wool crop of the county slightly exceeds 1,500,000 pounds, which, at an average selling price of 11 cents a pound, adds $165,000 to the total of the present year values.

"The industry, not so much of the present as of the immediate future in this county, is lumbering. There are now eighteen sawmills in the county, having an average capacity of 25,000 feet each, a day. It it estimated that these mills cut an aggregate of 2,000,000 feet, which has nearly all been sold to people within this county and which had an average value of $9 a thousand and an aggregate value of $324,000."

The receipts from fruit shipments are placed at $80,000. Recapitulating we have the value of different products as follows: grain and hay, $1,653,250; vegetables, $15,000; fruit, $80,000; live stock, $500,000; wool, $165,000; dairy products, $10,000; lumber $324,000; total, $2,747,250.

Naturally one studying the development and productive power of a county is impelled to inquire what are some of its still undeveloped resources that he may correctly estimate the possibilities of its future. Though Nez Perces county is one of the oldest settled in the state, it has many resources undeveloped. One of these is fruit raising. Should the time ever come when the county will be called upon to support a population many times more numerous than it now has, this industry will become one of the mainstays of the people, and as the arid lands of the section are redeemed by irrigation, the acreage devoted to fruit will be greatly increased. The advantages possessed by Nez Perces county as a fruit section were thus comprehensively set forth, some years ago, in the Lewiston Teller:

The conditions which the experiences of all countries has shown to be the most favorable for the perfect development and ripening of fruits are: freedom from extremes of low temperature and early and late frosts; necessity of adequate summer heat with abundance of sunshine and an atmosphere with a low percentage of humidity. These conditions exist in the Snake and Clearwater valleys in a degree equalled in no portion of the United States, with the exception of the interior valleys of California. A careful examination of the records of the signal office will show that during the growing season, from April to November, observations taken at Lewiston will compare favorably with those taken in the favored valleys of California, with the number of sunshiny days in Lewiston's favor.

These favoring climatic conditions find their fitting compiement in the peculiar adoption of our soil to the perfect development of fruit bearing tree or vine. This soil varying from light and sandy loam in the river bottoms to heavy, clayey, black loam on the table lands, all contains in a high degree the very elements that have to be supplied artificially in other countries, viz: the salts of soda and potash. These are the results of thousands of years of disintegration of the basalt formation underlying the whole country and form such a large component part of the soil that fertilization for fruit growing need not be a consideration for years to come.

While fruit growing is yet in its infancy, when the acreage and number of persons engaged in the business are considered, it has years ago ceased to be an experiment. A few orchards were planted near Lewiston during the early days in the settlement of the country, some thirty years ago, and yielded so abundantly every season since they arrived at bearing age that the supply was more than the small population of the country could then consume. The excess of production over consumption, with no transportation facilities to reach distant markets, prevented the planting of orchards on a more extensive scale. This condition of affairs has undergone a great change during the last few years.

The rapid increase of population in the surrounding country, causing an unlimited demand for fruit, and the building of the railroad, about to be finished, gives assurance of a possibility of supplying the demand. That this changed condition is appreciated by our land owners is evidenced by the fact that numerous orchards have been planted within a few years, in extent surpassing those in bearing now, and that many more are being planted this spring.

Besides producing apples, pears, cherries, plums, prunes, in such quantities and of such high quality as to astonish visitors when they first behold them, these valleys are eminently fitted for growing the tender fruits, such as peaches, almonds, nectarines and apricots. It is true that an occasional hard winter destroys this latter crop, but this occurs less frequently even than in those portions of the eastern and middle states, which have become justly celebrated for their ability to produce these crops.

But the one fruit which surpasses all others in excellence and seems to find here the very conditions essential to its best development, is the grape, nor is its cultivation restricted to the hardy varieties such as are grown on the Atlantic seaboard and in the Mississippi valley, but includes the very finest varieties of the European grape of the Vinis Viniflora family, whose successful growth in America has ever been believed to be restricted to California. As grown here this grape not only rivals the California product but in quality is even pronounced by connoisseurs as excelling it, and this has again been demonstrated by the verdict of the jury experts at the Portland Mechanics. Fair last fall (1890), who pronounced Clearwater valley grapes as of higher quality than the same variety grown in California, both being exhibited side by side. As yet only a limited number of varieties of the grapes have been planted extensively, and their success has induced the planting, in an experimental way, of nearly the whole list of the finer grapes grown in California and the chances are that some of them will show still better results in this climate.

The unexcelled combination of conditions favorable to fruit tree growth is, however, proven in the most forcible manner by the high quality present in seedling fruits originating here, there being a number of apple and pear seedlings growing now, bearing better fruit than many of the well known older varieties. The most remarkable case in point is the "Idaho Pear," originating on the outskirts of Lewiston from seed sown by Mrs. Mulkey some twenty years ago. Samples of the fruit have been sent to the leading authorities in the United States. They pronounced it an entirely distinct and new variety, worthy of a place among the very best pears for size and quality and ranking the best ever known for vigor and hardiness. A few gentlemen, engaged in fruit growing here, organized the Idaho Pear Company for the purpose of propagating and introducing this valuable new variety and by their efforts have succeeded in making it widely known all over the world and creating a demand for these trees grown here, not only from all parts of the Union, but from Europe and Australia as well. It is stated that this is the most valuable new fruit introduced in half a century, and being hardier than any variety of the same quality, it will greatly enlarge the territory where pear growing may be successfully engaged in. The introduction of this pear has, more than all other causes combined, called the attention of the horticultural world to the resources of our climate and the gentlemen of the Idaho Pear Company are entitled to all the credit for their enterprise.

This climate also offers unexcelled advantages for raising all varieties of berries, melons and vegetables.

The territory in Nez Perce county which can grow fruit successfully is now limited to the valleys of the great rivers but embraces the arable land of nearly the whole county; and, while the higher altitudes may not grow the tender fruits, they rival, if they do not surpass, the valleys in the production of the hardier kinds and especially the apple. This latter fruit as shown by specimens grown on young trees just coming into bearing at different points, notably the prairie lands on the Big Potlatch to the east of Lewiston and Waha, to the south both at an increased altitude of some 1,300 feet, possesses fine flavor combined with keeping qualities which are not attained in the hotter atmosphere of the valleys.

With the large belt of the country to the north of Lewiston, which, owing to the high altitude, can but raise the very hardiest of fruits but whose wheat product sustains a large population; with the Coeur d'Alene mines still further north; and the prosperous states of Montana and Dakota in the east, all non-producers of fruit and easy of access by rail to all those points; there is not another fruit raising country in existence possessing such an unlimited market for its product.

White Brothers, wholesale fruit shippers, estimate the value of Nez Perces' exported product at $43,000 for 1902, and certainly not over half the crop was shipped out through channels that preserve records, the remainder being either consumed at home or taken in wagons to a market. In variety and quantity the shipments were as follows; pears, 2,000 boxes; peaches, 9,000 boxes; apples, 10,000 boxes; strawberries, 1,000 crates; grapes, 4,000 crates; black berries, 2,000 crates; raspberries, 1,000 crates.

As to the number of head of cattle now in the county, the assessor's roll furnished the best basis, perhaps, of estimate. It should give the exact number at the time it was made but unfortunately for human weakness it falls far below the actual. However, the numbers of the different varieties upon which taxes were paid are as follows: cattle, common, 3,351 head; cattle, beef, 156; cows, milch, 2,964; horses, graded, 1,256; horses, stock, 1,256; colts, 590; mules, 40; sheep, 25,251; swine, 9,019. The valuation of all these animals aggregated $449,098. From the above figures it will be seen that stock raising is an important industry of the county yet, notwithstanding it is more thickly populated than most other parts of the state and devotes much attention to the various forms of extensive and intensive agriculture.

In estimating the future possibilities of Nez Perces county due weight should be given to the fact that it is located so as to enjoy a central position in that wonderful area known as the Lewiston or Clearwater country, embracing an extent of perhaps 15,000,000 acres, and including the northeastern corner of Oregon, Asotin county, Washington; Nez Perces, Latah and Idaho counties and a part of Shoshone county, Idaho. This vast region is drained by the Snake, Clearwater and Salmon rivers, with their tributaries. Should the Columbia be opened to the sea, as it some day will, this great empire must become many more times more populous than it now is, and the importance of the little county so near its center and holding a key position to so much of it must experience as great and as yet scarcely dreamed of augmentation. From the nature of the case much of the wealth of this tributary country must go to assist in the upbuilding of Nez Perces county's industries and the increase of its wealth.

The people whose lot is cast in this happily favored section are fully aware of the opportunities which are theirs, and manifest a deep interest in every movement which has for its object the development of any of their country's resources or those of neighboring sections. They are not, however, so wrapped up in industrial pursuits as to neglect the civilities and refinements of life. The education of the young receives due attention. Public schools have been established all over the county, even on the reservation so recently settled, and diligence is given to the improvement of the system. The county sends its share of students to the state normal school in its own county seat, to the state university at Moscow, just outside its own borders, and to other schools of higher learning and technical instruction east and west. Churches, fraternal organizations, and institutions for the betterment of mankind are widespread in their distribution, and everything which is at once the outcome and the promoter of refinement and intelligence finds here a welcome and a home. With a wealth of resources developed and a still greater wealth undeveloped within the county and in tributary territory, and a climate mild at all seasons, with a bright, intelligent class of people ambitious for the blessings of wealth and the promotion of culture, Nez Perces county certainly takes rank among the most favored sections of the northwest and those with the brightest, most hopeful outlook.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

NEZ PERCES COUNTY

JOHN P. VOLLMER was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, on January 25, 1847. Still he is an American citizen, since his father, Otto P. Vollmer, Jr., was a naturalized American citizen at the time of the son's birth. His father was a chemist of note and a man of fine literary attainments, having added to the knowledge gained by study and diversified reading, that of extensive travel and close observation. The grandfather of our subject, Otto Phillip Vollmer, was a surgeon of high standing and extensive practice in Baden, Germany. Being in sympathy with the revolutionary element of that realm in the middle of the last century, in consequence whereof he had to pay the penalty of the independent stand he took, by accepting voluntary exile, and came to America in 1849 accompanied by Hon. Carl Schurz, and other men of national reputation in Germany. The family followed the elder Vollmer in a very short period, but the father of our subject returned to Germany, after becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States, and was then united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Fix, his fiancee, a native of the old home place, Wurttemberg. In 1851, the father and mother set sail for America, bringing their young son. They settled in Indianapolis and there, in a private German school, young Vollmer received his elementary education. It was in 1861, that he entered the Northwestern Christian College of Indianapolis, where he received a thorough English education. About this time, Mr. Vollmer associated himself with the firm of Merrill & Company, now Bowen, Merrill & Company, a large book concern of Indianapolis, where he remained for several years. He also engaged in the manufacture of ink and was for a time connected with his father in business, in all of which places he made money and saved it. In his early teens, he enlisted to fight for the Union and he assisted to repel the rebel raider Morgan and his riders. In 1863, the mother died at the home in Indianapolis, leaving the youth at the age of sixteen without that sweetest of all earthly love, a mother's. It was a sad blow, but he stood bravely beneath it and continued his business. His business success, his graduation with high honors from the university, where he had made many warm friends, buoyed up his native courage, and desiring to try his fortunes in the undeveloped far west, where merit and ability win, he accordingly came, via New York and the isthmus, to the Pacific and in 1868, we find him in Walla Walla with a few thousand dollars in his pockets, saved from his own earnings, and a letter of recommendation from General Harrison, afterwards President of the United States. He was soon engaged with a company manufacturing high wines. His former thorough education and consequent knowledge of the new modes of distilling made him invaluable to the house and he was soon installed manager of the concern, although he was but twenty years of age. He continued in this until 1870, then left for Lewiston. Here he formed a partnership with Wallace Scott in the wholesale liquor and grocery business. Later he abandoned the liquor business, on account of conscientious scruples, although it had been profitable. Mr. Vollmer began private operations outside of the firm with a capital he had reserved. From the outset he was remarkably successful as he has since been in all of his large and varied business relations. Doubtles no man of the Inland Empire has ever had more diversified interests and more varied experience in business lines with an equal number of successes at the end of each new venture. Many superficial observers attribute it to "luck." But business men of experience know that it is due to consummate breadth of comprehension, keen discrimination and foresight, coupled with practical knowledge and a will that brooks no defeat.

To the original business established by John P. Vollmer and Company at Lewiston, have been added branch houses at Grangeville, Mt. Idaho, and Genesee, in Idaho, and Uniontown and Asotin in Washington. The Vollmer Clearwater Company, a creation of our subject, operates at eighteen different points, named as follows: Lewiston, Sweetwater, Bosalt, Lenore, Weippe, Stuart, Lapwai, Culdesac, Agatha, Peck, Kamiah, Stites, Genesee, Kendrick, Clyde, Spar, Nezperce and Asotin.

Among the earlier business movements of Mr.

Vollmer, was the organization by him of the First National Bank of Lewiston, the first house of its kind in northern Idaho. The National Bank of Genesee and the bank at Grangeville, followed in regular order. Mr. Vollmer pays taxes on over fifty sections of agricultural land, which requires about three hundred miles of fence to divide it into quarter sections. He is president of and owns the controlling interest in the Lewiston Water and Light Company. He is also president of the board of trustees for the State Normal School.

Mr. Vollmer has also been interested in and identified with several transportation companies. He was connected with the Walla Walla & Columbia River R. R. Company and in 1877, was made agent for the Oregon Steam Navigation Company. He then acted for Henry Villard in the deal by which the last named company was absorbed by the O. R. & N. Co., which latter company Mr. Vollmer represented until 1883, when he became financially interested in the Northern Pacific and was one of the leading promoters of that line which is now extended to Lewiston. Since that time, he has been the representative of that line for the state of Idaho.

In addition to all the above named enterprises, with which Mr. Vollmer has been connected for the improvement and betterment of the country, he was also the one to construct the first telegraph line in northern Idaho, in 1874. Four years later, he established the first Bell telephone exchange on the Pacific coast. He was also prominent in the organization of the Sweetwater Irrigation & Canal Company, with which he is still connected.

It is interesting to further note, as testimony to Mr. Vollmer's high standing in financial circles, that in "American Successful Men," of New York city, which contains a history of the most prominent citizens of America, he is given a prominent place, being the only banker mentioned in Idaho. Such is the brief outline of the financial history of this in no wise common or ordinary career.

In political matters, Mr. Vollmer is a stanch Republican, but has never been an aspirant for office, preferring to promote the political interests of his friends. In fact, he has repeatedly declined preferment at the hands of his friends even when the tempting offer of the highest political office in the state was the reward of his acceptance.

In his home life Mr. Vollmer has been as greatly blessed as he has in his masterful business career. His well appointed home is a model of family felicity and home attachments. This is largely due, as are many of the pleasant phases of his life, to the wisdom and painstaking care of Mrs. Vollmer, who has the happy faculty of making a home in the true sense of the word.

Mrs. Sallie E. Vollmer, nee Barber, a native of the state of Kentucky, is a true southern lady and a granddaughter of Judge Duvall. They were united in marriage at Walla Walla, September 27, 1870, and to them have been born seven children, five of whom are still living, namely; Ralston, now in charge of the bank at Genesee; Bessie, who was married September 4, 1901, to Arthur E. Clarke of the New York Life Insurance Company, and now residing in New York; Genevieve, who is attending school; Norman and Norma, twins, at school in Lewiston.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Vollmer is one of the very busiest of men, he is of a pronounced literary turn, as is also his wife; and their home is supplied with a first-class library and all the leading magazines and periodicals of the day, which they find time to read and enjoy. He is a thirty-second degree Mason.

Mr. Vollmer is an enterprising, public spirited citizen, and takes great interest in the affairs of the county and state and especially in the advancement of the community where he lives. He is at the front and promoting all enterprises that are for the general benefit. His career is marked by display of energy and profound ability and insight into matters that have to do with the business and social world. He is known as a stanch friend and has as few enemies, probably, as any man living, of his active, agressive temperament and extensive business interests.

GARRET H. FERRALL, M. D. Among the leading citizens of Nez Perces county the name of Dr. Ferrall is surely to be placed. In business ventures, he has been signally successful. As a professional man, he has manifested skill and talent that have given him the reward due to the true and eminent physician. As to his personal qualifications, Dr. Ferrall is a loyal friend, an affable and genial man, a true and faithful member of society and a patriotic and influential citizen.

G. H. Ferrall was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on November 11, 1844, being the son of Elihu and Mary A. (Hart) Ferrall. The father was born in Ohio, in 1814, was a pioneer of Columbiana county and also in Hinsdale county, Michigan, and is now living in Michigan. The mother was born in Ohio, in 1814, and is still living in Michigan. Her father was a pioneer of Columbiana county, Ohio, and was a soldier of the war of 1812. Our subject remained at home until nineteen years of age, gaining his education from the schools of his place. Then he was stirred by the spirit of patriotism and enlisted in Company G, Fourteenth Michigan, under General Sherman. He participated in the battles of Goldsborough, Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga, Atlanta and many other engagements. He transported seventeen hundred troops from New York to Morehead, South Carolina, and then rejoined his command under Sherman and was in the famous march to the sea. When the time came to lay down the arms of warfare, Mr. Ferrall returned to his home and went to the study of medicine in Cleveland, and in 1870 he graduated with distinction. Then he repaired to Fayette, Ohio, and there practiced for five years. Then a move was made to Ransom, Michigan, where he practiced for seven years. He followed his profession in Ithica, Michigan, for several years. Then he came to Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and practiced there and handled a ranch for ten years. Between the oversight of the farm property and his profession the Doctor was a very busy man and reaped the reward of his industry in that he gained a good financial success. Then he went to Walla Walla and engaged in the manufacturing business for a couple of years; in 1898 he took up the place where he now lives, two miles north from Winchester. He has a fine body of land and some excellent timber. The Doctor is one of the influential men of the county, is on its school board, has promoted the telephone system from Culdesac to Nezperce City, also the mail line from Culdesac to Dublin. He is justice of the peace and is looked up to by all as especially deserving.

On February 12, 1873, in Fayette, Ohio, Dr. Ferrall married Miss Orcelia, daughter of Truman L. and Harriett (Van Branken) Scofield, natives of New York. The father was born in 1821 and died in 1900. The mother was born in 1820 and died in 1875. Mrs. Ferrell was born in Williams county, Ohio, in 1845. Her parents were pioneers of that county and Fulton county, Ohio. She has one brother and one sister, Edwin and Ellen Sails. Dr. Ferrall has the following named brothers and sisters: Barzillai F., Elizabeth, Oliver P., Jennie E., John W., James E., Taylor S. and Lucy I. To Dr. Ferrall and his wife there have been born three children, Harriett E., wife of Charles R. Howard, a telegraph operator for the Western Union; Ellen M., wife of Homer King, in Coeur d'Alene; Lee E., in the fire department in Spokane. Dr. Ferrall is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and his wife affiliates with the Presbyterian church. Dr. Ferrall is a stanch Republican and active in this realm. Mrs. Ferrall was married first to Morris J. Dodd, who lived but fifteen months after his marriage. One son, Fred N., was born to this union. He is passenger conductor on the Spokane and Northern Railroad, which runs from Spokane to Rossland. Dr. Ferrall is a warm advocate of good schools and is doing much for the cause of education in his community.

SAMUEL PATTERSON. It is fitting that especial mention should be granted to this estimable gentleman, for he is one of the industrious workers who are building up the county and he is doing his share in a commendable manner. His family home is about two miles northeast from Slickpoo, where he owns a quarter section, which is devoted to all the various grains indigenous to this latitude. He has an orchard and also raises stock to consume his farm produce. He is an energetic man and operates a threshing machine in addition to the other employments of his land. Mr. Patterson is well liked and is an influential and respected member of the community.

Taking an account of the details of his earlier life, we note that he was born in Marion county, Oregon, on January 1, 1860, being the son of John and Sarah A. (Stout) Patterson. The father was a farmer, born in Pennsylvania and died in 1867. He came to California in 1847 and was an early pioneer of Oregon, taking a donation claim there. The mother died in 1865. Being thus left an orphan at a tender age, our subject was taken into the family of F. M. Thompson, where he received good treatment and remained until fourteen years old. He then went to work for himself and at twenty he went to farming in Wasco county. He took a pre-emption there and tilled it for twelve years. In 1890 he sold that property and removed to Latah county and farmed for six years. Then a move was made to the reservation and he took his present claim. Since that date he has bestowed his labors here continuously. He is being prospered and is one of the leading citizens of his section.

On July 4, 1880, he was married to Miss Henrietta, daughter of George W. and Martha A. (Threldkeld) Wayne. The father is a farmer and lives on the reservation. He was born in 1837 and the mother was born in Missouri, and died in 1862. Mrs. Patterson is an only child and was born in Calloway county, Missouri, in 1862. Mr. Patterson has one brother and one sister, Elizabeth Down, in Silverton, Oregon; Richard, also in Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Patterson there have been born eight children, named as follows: George W., Martha A., John, Ernest, Frank, Charles, Daniel B. and Minnie L. Mr. Patterson is not bound by partisan ties in political matters but votes for the man. He is a warm advocate of good schools and labors for their establishment. He is educating his children in the state normal at Lewiston.

PHILLIP S. SMITH. This pioneer and substantial stockman and farmer of Nez Perces county is deserving of mention in this history since he has labored here for the advancement of the interests of the county and has done a good work in development since residing here. He was born in Cedar county, Iowa, on February 17, 1838, being the son of George S. and Clarissa (Stockton) Smith. The father was a carpenter and millwright, born in Tennessee, in 1802. He went to California in 1849 and died there in 1852. He was a captain of the militia in Iowa. The mother was born in Indiana in 1812. Her father, William Stockton, was a pioneer of that country and an Indian trader, and she was raised among the Delaware Indians until she was ten. Our subject came to Oregon with his mother in 1853, settling in Linn county. She died the next year, leaving him an orphan. He went then to California and mined in Siskiyou county for three years. Next we see him in Oregon learning the saddler's trade in Santiam, Marion county. Four years later, he came to Washington and thence to Idaho. In 1862, he was in Pierce City mining and in Florence, Warren and other camps he delved for the treasures of earth for a time and then went to packing. In 1867 he secured a pack outfit for himself and operated it from Lewiston to Warren and adjacent camps until 1871. Then he sold the outfit and operated land, since which time he has largely devoted himself to agriculture and stock raising. In 1896 he took up a claim on the Nez Perces reservation.

He was in the country during the Indian war in 1877. In 1864 a band of renegade Indians went on the war-path and he was one of a company of citizens that formed to resist them. They were received as United States soldiers and served until the savages were repelled. He carried the mail from Lapwai to Magnolia for two years and from Lapwai to Slickpoo for three years, up to July, 1902.

In 1872 Mr. Smith married Susan, a Nez Perces woman, who was raised by Mrs. Craig, being a niece of that lady. To this marriage there have been born four children, William, in this county; an infant, deceased; Jackson, deceased; Lydia, wife of Paul Corbett, living in Kamiah. Mr. Smith is a Democrat but not partisan. He has brothers and sisters as follows: Mary A. Wood, Samuel, Nancy Crank and Rebecca Barton.

STEPHEN JACQUES. From the sunny land of France comes the enterprising and capable gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, and what was the misfortune of that land is the good fortune of this, for Mr. Jacques has been a first-class citizen of the United States for a number of years and has wrought for the advancement of Nez Perces county in various ways for a long time. His native spot is La Canourgue, near Bordeaux, in southern France, and the date of his birth, January 1, 1854. His parents were Stephen and Rose (Vieillevigne) Jacques. The father was born near La Canourgue in 1825 and died in 1885 there. The mother was born in the same vicinity and died in 1897. Our subject worked with his father, who was a wealthy man of his section, and there gained his education, finishing the same by a course in college. After the days of schooling were over, he went to farming for himself and did well. He had a fine piece of land and could have sold it for a large amount as it was well set to choice vines, but later an insect destroyed the vines, and Mr. Jacques became discouraged. He then determined to try his fortune in the United States and accordingly came hither, landing in New York, having left his family in France. He labored for a time and then came to Lewiston, where he worked for Louis Delsol. He went to Spokane in 1889, the year after the fire. He started a restaurant and did well. Four years were spent there and then Mr. Jacques came back to Lewiston, going thence to Camas prairie, near Grangeville. Returning to Lewiston, he remained there a few years to educate his children, and then came to Lapwai and started a general merchandise establishment. For three years he did well and then, the reservation opening, he located the land where he now lives, six miles east from South Lapwai. He moved his store to the land, erected all needed buildings and has continued in the mercantile business since that time. He handles stock in addition to the store and also does a general farming business. Mrs. Jacques made a visit to France and visited the native places.

On May 28, 1880, in France, Mr. Jacques married Miss Flavie, daughter of Francois Jarrousse. She was born in 1858. To them have been born the following children: Noeme, wife of Harry Walruth, in Pierce City; Maria, Emile, Eugene, at home. Mr. Jacques has four sisters in France and one brother in South Africa. He and his family are adherents of the Catholic church.

WILLIAM A. CALDWELL is one of the prominent men among the old pioneers of this country. He has been essentially a pioneer in many lines, having done all the arduous duties that fall to the lot of that worthy class and also has opened up many lines of industry in this section, and is to be credited with excellent ability and perseverance and keen foresight in these lines.

William A. Caldwell was born in Tompkins county, New York, on December 10, 1832, being the son of Gabrial and Maria (Anderson) Caldwell. The father was a farmer, born in Orange county, New York, and died in 1891. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and held the rank of lieutenant. The mother was born in Orange county, New York, and died several years since. William was educated and at the age of eighteen was ready to start in life for himself. He shipped to Panama and assisted to survey the Panama railroad. Seven months later he returned to New York and then came to Minnesota, entering the employ of a packet company. He went to St. Paul, where his brother was sheriff of the county, and there he remained for five years. He built a saw-mill and did well in the venture. Later he sold and engaged as wagon master for Colonel Noble to make a wagon road on the big bend of the Missouri. They made a trip to the Pacific coast country and visited Walla Walla, the Fraser river country, and the next spring after gold was discovered Mr. Caldwell went to Oro Fino. He mined at Oro Fino, Florence, Warren, Pierce City and all the camps of that section and also at Boise basin and then he returned to Lewiston. He took a government wood contract and then operated a pack train to Pierce City. He then bought the Cul De Sac stage station, now known as the Caldwell stage station, and erected a six-thousand dollar hotel, where he did business for twenty years. He was the first man to try wheat in the vicinity north of Lewiston. People laughed at him when he broke the first one hundred acres, but his wheat did well, and thus he opened a great source of wealth for the country. In 1883 Mr. Caldwell built a palatial home in Lewiston and later he acquired title to the Colonel Craig donation claim and also to the other half of the section, but he was obliged to carry it to the courts of last resort. Mr. Caldwell, in addition to his other activities, has always been a large operator in stock. He handled about ten thousand stock sheep and vast herds of cattle and horses.

On July 5, 1871, in Lewiston, Mr. Caldwell married Miss Maria, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (O'Neil) Reddy, natives of Ireland. The father came to Canada when a large boy and the mother came when young. Mrs. Caldwell was born in Ontario, in 1849, and remained there until twenty and was educated in the world famous schools of that province. Then she came with her parents to California and later to Idaho, where they died. She has two brothers and five sisters, Richard, Catherine Worden, Elizabeth White, Margaret Vennigerholz, Sarah Elliott, Jennie Parker and Owen. Mr. Caldwell has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, James, Isabelle, Nancy, all deceased, and Helen, Julia Mallory and Fanny Thorp. To Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell there have been born four children, William A., in Montana; Solomon S., in Nez Perces county; Frederick G. and Moses, at home. Mr. Caldwell is a member of the Masonic order. He is a Democrat in politics and active, as also are his boys. He owns a section of land where he now lives, four miles southeast from Lapwai, and raises wheat, barley, corn and handles stock to consume the products of the farm. Mr. Caldwell is a strong advocate of fine schools and is a supporter of the churches.

HENRY H. SCHILDMAN. There are few men in the entire state, if any, who have won as brilliant a success in the business world by reason of meritorious work and real ability as has the subject of this brief article. He is at the present time one of the proprietors of the large mercantile establishments in Lapwai, Kamiah, Nezperce and Forest, operated by Lester Coffin & Schildman. They have an extensive trade at all these establishments. He has put his whole life and spirit into the mercantile world and being admirably fitted with natural talent, he has made a success that would be a crowning effort to a full life in this important line and is still numbered with the young men of the county.

We will note the details of his career, as they will be interesting in the history of the county where he has wrought with such excellent wisdom. Henry H. was born in Warsaw, Illinois, on November 20, 1871, being the son of Henry and Josephine Schildman. The father was a farmer, born in Ohio, in 1838, and now lives in Warsaw. The mother was born in Warsaw, her parents having come as early pioneers to that country. They both died when she was an infant and she was reared by her grandparents, who were pioneers of Illinois. Our subject worked at home, attended school in Warsaw, and later attended college two years. He remained with his parents until the time of his majority. In 1895 he longed for the west and accordingly came to Spokane. Six months were spent there, after which he repaired to Lewiston, accepting a position in the mercantile establishment of Coffin Brothers, leading merchants of Lewiston. During his stay with them, which was two years, they had opened a store at Lapwai when the reservation was thrown open for settlement. Mr. Schildman was installed as manager and soon his real worth and ability led the proprietors to take him as a partner. He has picked up the Nez Perces language and does a large business with the Indians.

Mr. Schildman is a thirty-second degree Mason. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F. Politically, he is a Republican and active in good government, but will never have his name placed for office, as he is occupied with business. Mr. Schildman is a firm believer in broad education and thus is sure that the general morals of the people will be bettered, and he labors for good schools.

WILLIE E. KERN. This enterprising farmer resides twenty-one miles southeast from Lewiston and is one of the substantial stockmen and farmers of his section, having a nice place well improved and productive of good returns annually. W. E. Kern was born in Richardson county, Nebraska, in 1866, being the son of William C. and Roda R. (Cox) Kern. The father is a stockman and farmer, born in Indiana in 1810, and now lives in Oregon. He crossed the plains in 1845, 1852, and in 1866, and mined in California. He was county treasurer of Umatilla county, at Pendleton, for eight years and was sheriff in Iowa for two terms. The mother was born in Indiana in 1827, came west in 1878 and is still living. Willie E. was reared in Nebraska until thirteen years old and then came west with his parents in 1878, completing his education in Pendleton. At fifteen he started for himself and worked three years in Umatilla county at blacksmithing. Then he went to the sound and labored in the timber. Four years later he went to Butte, Montana, and opened a restaurant, where he did well for two and one-half years. He also spent some time in the Big Bend country in Washington in the stock business and in 1899 he came to his present place. January was the month and he has labored since with excellent success, being now one of the prosperous men of the county. He owns a half section, well improved.

On April 18, 1900, Mr. Kern married Miss Nancy, daughter of Dr. Richardson, of the Willamette valley, Oregon. He was a leading man of Eugene, and had a fine farm and property there. He and his wife are both deceased. Mrs. Kern has four brothers and three sisters, named below: Minerva, Paris, Sarah, Laura, Mitchell, Clinton and James. Mr. Kern is an active Republican and is much interested in good schools. His father was a veteran of the Civil war. Mr. Kern is a man of good qualities and sound principles and stands well in the community and deserves the confidence and esteem that he generously receives from his acquaintances.

FRANK BRONCHO. Seven miles northeast of Lapwai is the fine home of the subject of this article. He has an elegant residence costing three thousand dollars and an estate of five hundred and twenty acres. This is well improved with buildings and orchard, and is handled skillfully.

Frank Broncho was born in Fort Hall, Utah, in 1860, being the son of Thomas and Angeline Broncho. The father was born in Canada, of French extraction, and died in 1885. The mother was of the Nez Perces, born on the reservation. The father was in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Hall for many years. He met Angeline, who had been educated by Dr. Whitman, in Walla Walla, and there he married her. When Frank was a babe, his parents came to Walla Walla and farmed, and there our subject received his education. When he was seventeen, the family came to Asotin county, remaining three years, and then they went to the Nez Perces reservation, where they farmed and raised stock. At the time of the Nez Perces war the father moved his family to the fort at Lapwai but took no active part in the war. He carried the mails for years from Walla Walla to the fort. He was an old trapper and scout and served the United States in the latter capacity for many years. He was with Captain Stevens when he made the treaty with the Umatilla Indians. Our subject remained with his parents until the time of their death and then went to farming and raising stock for himself. At the time of the allotment of land on the reservation he received the estate where he now lives. He formerly owned land in Asotin county and did well there with stock.

In 1885 Mr. Broncho married Miss Marion, daughter of Nobe Henry, of American and Dutch descent. He is a farmer and stockman in Garden gulch on the reservation. To Mr. and Mrs. Broncho there have been born eight children, Edward, Angeline, Bessie, David, James, Anna, Clara and Ben. Mr. Broncho has three brothers, Thomas, Antonio, Edward, all in this county. Mr. Broncho has been a scout and interpreter for the government for many years. He was a body guard of Agent Monteith during the war. He is a man of intelligence and integrity and stands well with all who know him.

JAMES L. BOUNDS. About one-half mile from North Lapwai is the elegant home of the subject of this article. It is large and tasty and has land there which is handled to general farming. Mr. Bounds is one of the earliest pioneers in many sections of the west and he played a very prominent part in the early times when gold was discovered in California. He came from the fields there and through his report there were hundreds of men who resorted thither.

James L. was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on February 12, 1830, being the son of Obediah and Nancy (Lovelady) Bounds. The father was a farmer, born in Virginia in 1789 and died in 1844. He was a pioneer to Missouri in 1818 and settled in Lafayette county in 1820. He participated in the Black Hawk war, and the Osage Indian campaign. The mother of our subject was born in White county, Tennessee, and died in 1846. James received his education in his native place and remained with his mother until her death; then spent some time with his brother-in-law, but not agreeing with him, he ran away to join the army in the Mexican war. He went to Fort Leavenworth but changed his mind and came to Oregon City instead. He drove an ox team all the way and consumed six months in the trip. October 30, 1847, was the date of his landing there and as times were hard he labored at what he could get until 1848 and then heard of the gold find in California. With two lads who had accompanied him across the plains, he went thither on horseback, being the first party that went there across the mountains. They were at Clear creek in Shasta county, above Sacramento, on American river, and later at Placerville. He there met Dr McBride, the grandfather of the present governor of Washington. He accompanied the Doctor to Ford's bar on the middle fork of the American river and there made nine hundred dollars the first month. In the fall he went back to Oregon in company with O. C. Pratt, one of the early governors of Oregon. In the spring of 1849, with a large company who were induced by his reports to join the exodus, he returned to California. They fought the Indians and soon were in the mines where young Bounds made fourteen hundred dollars in five weeks. He bought and sold horses and did well; later he went to Feather river and bought claims and made thirty-three hundred dollars. Being taken sick, he went to Sacramento and was doctored. He then returned to Oregon and later went back to California. Again we find him in Oregon working on his donation claim, and in 1857 he went again to California and remained seven years. In 1863 he came to Walla Walla and went into stock business. He returned to California in 1882 for his health and remained until 1890. In 1895 he came to Idaho and here he has been since.

On December 8, 1853, Mr. Bounds married Miss Rachel, daughter of Thomas and Eliza Linville, and a native of Lafayette county, Missouri. She crossed the plains in 1853. Mr. Bounds has one sister living. Amanda Stark, in Missouri. Mrs. Bounds has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas, W. C., Humphrey, James B. and Eliza Hardesty. To Mr. and Mrs. Bounds there have been born seven children, as follows: Nancy King, in Nez Perces county; Homer, at Cape Nome; William, in Asotin, Washington; Jennie Sumpter; Anna Gilchrist, in California; Bertha Adron, in Nez Perces county; Sallie Harrison, in Seattle. Mr. Bounds was deputy sheriff in Siskiyou county, California, for many years. He is a Democrat in politics and active in the welfare of the county.

CLINTON T. STRANAHAN. At the present time Mr. Stranahan is holding the responsible position of superintendent of Indian schools and agent of the Nez Perces, with headquarters at Spalding, Idaho. In 1899 he received the appointment of agent at the hands of President McKinley, and in April, 1902, he was invested with the authority of superintendent of the schools, as those two offices had been merged under the civil service. Mr. Stranahan has been a very active and potent factor in the political realm of the state and has always heartily supported the Republican principles. For sixteen years, with one exception, he has been regularly chosen to represent his district at the state convention and his influence has always been for good men and right principles. He was deputy assessor of Nez Perces county under L. F. Herbert, was also deputy auditor and deputy sheriff and in 1889 he was appointed deputy United States marshal under Joseph Pinkham and served through the trying times of the strike in the Coeur d' Alenes. He also was deputy assessor in Nez Perces county for one term. In all this long service, Mr. Stranahan has manifested marked efficiency and his sterling faithfulness and integrity were qualities which ever commended him to the hearty esteem of his fellows.

It will be interesting to note a part of his career in detail, and first we see that he was born in Contra Costa county California, near San Francisco, on March 17, 1850, being the son of Ebenezer and Ellen (Terry) Stranahan. The father was born in Herkimer county, New York, in 1829, and died in 1873. He was of Irish extraction and was a pioneer to California in 1852 and held a prominent place in the state as a leading miner. The mother was born in New York and still lives in California. Clinton T. was educated in Oakland and when eighteen years of age started out for himself. Idaho was the objective point of his travels and he located a claim on American Ridge, having landed in Moscow in 1878. He gave his attention to farming for six years and then entered upon the public service as mentioned above. After his labors in the marshal's office were ended he took a farm adjoining Lewiston, on the Clearwater, and demonstrated that excellent fruit can be raised here. His fruit farm of forty acres is doubtless one of the very best in the northwest, having been brought to this excellence by his skill and careful oversight.

In 1884 Mr. Stranahan married Miss May L., daughter of Samuel L. Bostwick, deceased, a native of Iowa, and a pioneer to Montana, settling there in 1865. Mrs. Stranahan was born in Montana, being the first white girl born in Gallatin valley, now Bozeman. Mr. Stranahan has three brothers and two sisters, Farrand E., Willoughby F. and Cady R.; Cora Hosom and Esther. To Mr. and Mrs. Stranahan there have been born three children, Clyde, Glenthora and Everett. Clyde is attending the high school in Lewiston. Mr. Stranahan is a member of the W. of W. Mrs. Stranahan is a communicant of the Episcopalian church.

THOMAS D. KING. It is pleasant to see this gentleman, who operated in the vigorous labors of the pioneer in many places on this coast, now enjoying the land that he helped to develop with his sturdy labors and being one of the prominent and influential citizens.

Mr. King was born in Logan county, Ohio, in January, 1834, being the son of Thomas D. and Susan (Berry) King. The father was a hatter, born in Virginia in 1779, and died in Burlington, Iowa, in 1872. He was a pioneer in Ohio, Indiana and Iowa. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1789 and died in 1857. The family came to Indiana when Thomas D. was young and thence they removed to Iowa, where he was educated and grew to manhood. Arriving at majority's estate, he farmed for himself and in 1857 he went via Panama to California. From San Francisco, he went direct to Marysville and worked for his brother-in-law, Nelson Westcott. He and his brother William raised a crop of corn as an experiment and cleared nearly five thousand dollars from it. Some years later they bought a hotel in the mountains on Rabbit creek road and did well there. In 1862 he sold out and came to Idaho and joined the forces at Florence who were digging for gold. Later he went to Walla Walla and farmed for a year and then went to Oregon. Returning to Boise, he took mining claims and later he secured the contract to carry the mail from Walla Walla to Colville. Later he took another contract from Walla Walla to Lewiston, and here he did a general express and passenger traffic. Seven years were spent at this and then he went to California, settling in San Luis Obispo county, where he went into the stock and dairy business. Here he continued unutl 1897, then sold out his stock, of which he had a considerable, also sold his land, nine hundred and sixty acres, and came to Idaho and settled on his present place on the reservation. He is one mile east from Lapwai and has a good farm, and his sons, George and Ira, also have nice farms here.

On December 25, 1872, Mr. King married Miss Nancy, daughter of James L. and Rachel (Linville) Bownds, natives of Missouri. Mrs. King has the following named brothers and sisters: Homer, Willard, Jennie Sumpter, Anna Gilchrist, Birdie Adron, Sallie Harrison, and the following who are deceased. Eliza Hawcroft, Martha and Ruth, who both died at the same time with diphtheria, Abie, Manda. Mr. King has brothers and sisters as follows, William B., Felix, Samuel, John, George, Sallie, Harriett, Hannah, Jane, Ruth, Kate Louise, Julia Carroll and Mattie Morton, all deceased but the first one and the last two. To Mr. and Mrs. King have been born seven children, James, Minnie, Thomas, all deceased, George W., Ira F., Kate, deceased, Rachel. Mr. King is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and his wife belong to the Christian church. In political matters, Mr. King is a Republican and always active in that realm, but he has many times refused office himself. He was a member of the school board in California for twelve years. Mrs. King's uncles were in the Civil war. Mr. King is expecting to handle stock on his farm altogether and will increase his holdings in this line.

OLIVER JOHNSON is one of the industrious agriculturists of Nez Perces and his home place consists of one hundred and twenty acres of good soil, nine miles east of Lewiston. He does a general farming business and is prosperous and progressive.

Oliver was born in Dallas, Polk county, Oregon, on July 19, 1863, being the son of Newton C. and Louise A. (Byerly) Johnson. The father was a farmer, born in Missouri in 1839, and died in 1901. He was a pioneer to Oregon, crossing the plains with teams in 1846 and the train had a number of battles with the Indians. The mother of our subject was born in Iowa, on January 29, 1844. Oliver remained at home until of age, receiving a good education from the common schools. In 1881 the parents removed to Walla Walla, Washington. Our subject remained there for a few years and then returned to Oregon. While the father was near Walla Walla the Snake Indians broke out and caused trouble but he did not leave his farm. Oliver farmed in Oregon until 1894, then came to Whitman county, Washington, and tilled the soil for a year and removed to the Potlatch country, where he farmed for one year. Then he came to the vicinity of Lewiston and when the reservation opened up he took his present place, as mentioned above. Mr. Johnson has labored faithfully in the good work of developing the country and has so conducted himself that he has won the respect and esteem of all who know him.

On October 28, 1886, Mr. Johnson married Miss Abbie, daughter of Jack and Mary (Duncan) De Lashmutt. The father was a farmer and merchant, a native of Pennsylvania and died in 1883. The mother was born in Missouri and died in 1885. Mrs. Johnson was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on July 29, 1867. She had one sister, Jennie, now deceased. She has half brothers and sisters as follows: Isabelle, Sarah, Van Buren, Butler, Lindsay, Fillmore, Elsworth, Douglas, Josephine, Kate, Jennie, Mattie, Reuben, James and Samuel. Mr. Johnson has one sister, Addie McDaniel. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson two children have been born, Jessie M. and Effie. Mr. Johnson is a member of the M. W. A. In political matters, he is a Democrat but never aspires for office. Mr. Johnson takes a warm interest in bettering the schools and does intelligent labor in all the affairs of politics and local concern His uncle, Abraham Byerley, was in the Indian war.

HON. DENNIS W. C. DUNWELL is one of the venerable and highly respected citizens of the county, is one of the prominent men and is also numbered with the earliest pioneers. He has done a giant's part in developing the country, and while the wheel of fortune has several times badly turned him down, still after each backset, he showed the ability, the pluck, and the energy to rise and overcome the very things that brought disaster, and so obtained a good success out of his defeat.

He was born in Pleasant Valley, New York, on August 13, 1817, being the son of George and Orailia (Conklin) Dunwell. The father was a tailor, born in Massachusetts, in 1780, and died in 1836. The mother was born in Connecticut in 1782 and died in 1872. The parents went to Connecticut when our subject was an infant, settling in Salisbury. They remained there about twenty years. Then Dennis went to Michigan and sold stock and later taught school in New York, in Pennsylvania, and in Ohio. In 1850, he came to St. Paul, Minnesota, and there did contracting and building. He formed a company, known as the Dunwell, Harthorn & Coulter Company, which dealt in grain and handled stock and did exceedingly well. During the crash of 1857, the company went down, Mr. Dunwell losing as much as two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Mr. Dunwell then came to Walla Walla, in 1862, with a mule team and later he was in Boise and other mining towns. He packed from Lewiston to Pierce City and Florence. In 1867 he bought a ranch in the Sweetwater country. Through dishonesty of his partner, he was again stripped of his holdings, and his exepriences about this time were exceedingly discouraging. His family came to him when he was thus depleted in finances. He took a position as secretary of Agent O'Neal, at Lapwai, then was elected assessor of Shoshone county in 1871 and was soon on his feet again. He then bought a farm on five mile prairie, returned to Lewiston to school his children, held the mail route from Lewiston to Pierce City for four years and bought the old Greer ferry. In 1876-7, he was the representative of Shoshone county in the territorial legislature at Boise. In the spring of 1877, the Indians broke out, burned his property, including the ferry, house and goods and so forth, and again, Mr. Dunwell was called to meet misfortune. He finally gathered the remnants of what was left, sold it, and later bought a ranch five miles east from Lewiston, which is still known as the Dunwell ranch, which he has deeded to his daughter. He is making his home now with his son-in-law, Walter A. Smith. Mr. Dunwell was also in the Minnesota legislature and was sheriff of Ramsey county. He owned two hundred and fifty acres where the fifth ward of St. Paul now is. Mr. Dunwell was a prominent man in St. Paul as he has been in this country and he has always manifested worthy ability and discretion while his integrity has never been questioned.

In 1853, Mr. Dunwell married Miss Mary B., daughter of Patrick Brennan, a wealthy man of Detroit, Michigan, where the wedding occurred. Mrs. Dunwell was born in Canada, on May 12, 1831. Mr. Dunwell has one sister, Mrs. Sarah Shears, in Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Dunwell have two children, Dan, in Oro Fino; Mary W. Smith, at Lewiston. Our subject is a member of the Masons and has been for fifty-two years. He is the oldest member of the county and was granted an honorary membership in the St. Paul lodge without dues. He is also the oldest member of the Pioneer Association. Mr. Dunwell has a claim pending against the government for five thousand dollars for damages the Indians did in the war of 1877. He is a Democrat in political matters and has always manifested an intelligent interest in the affairs of government as well as in business.

CHARLES L. HAMILTON. Not only is the subject of this article well known as a thrifty and up-to-date farmer and orchardist but also in the industrial world, he has gained distinction, being a pioneer in the blacksmith business in at least three different locations in Latah county, and he is withal, a man of ability and substantiality, and possessed of integrity and uprightness, which have won for him the esteem of his fellows.

Mr. Hamilton was born in Macon county, Missouri, on September 2, 1857, being the son of Samuel C. and Sarah A. (Blackwell) Hamilton, the father being a fruit grower and blacksmith of his section. Our subject was educated in Missouri, and also learned from his father the art of blacksmithing, remaining there until he had arrived at the age of twenty. He then came west to Whitman county, Washington, crossing the plains with mule teams. He took a preemption in Whitman county and for nine years was numbered with the leading tillers of the soil there. It was in 1887 when he came to Latah county, and here he homesteaded the place where he now lives, three miles south from Kendrick. He has an eighty-acre farm embellished with comfortable improvements, and an orchard of five acres. He operated a blacksmith shop here and when Leland started, he opened a shop there where he beat the anvil to the time of honest industry until Kendrick was located, when he put up the first shop there as he had been first in both the other locations. He did a good business in Kendrick until recently, when he sold the entire property and devoted himself entirely to his farming and fruit growing interests. Mr. Hamilton is affiliated with the W. of W. Lodge No. 327, being council commander, which office he has held for five terms, he also belongs to the circle, No. 217. He is a director in the Methodist church at Leland and at the present time he is a member of the Democratic county central committee.

The marriage of Mr. Hamilton and Miss Addie, daughter of Jacob and Catherine A. Van Tine, early pioneers of Whitman county, was solemnized at Colfax, Whitman county, Washington, on January 14, 1879, and they became the parents of eight children, Leona, wife of B. P. Parks; the rest all being at home, Florence, Ellen Nora, Jessie, Dela, Carver, Ruth and Hazel.

BENJAMIN E. WILSON. The subject of this sketch was born in Barbour county, West Virginia, on July 18, 1853, being the son of David and Amanda (Carter) Wilson, natives of West Virginia and Virginia, respectively. The father was born in Barbour county in 1822, and his father was born there also. The mother of our subject was born in 1821 and died in 1886. In 1866 the family removed to Clay county, Indiana, where the father bought land and farmed. Benjamin here grew to manhood and received his education in the public schools. He took up farming for himself at the age of twenty and when he was thirty-two he went to Adair county, Missouri, and there tilled for five years. It was in 1890 that Mr. Wilson determined to try the west for himself and accordingly migrated to Tekoa, Washington, and there farmed until the reservation opened. His success was excellent and when the reservation was ready for settlers he came to the vicinity of Lapwai and secured a claim which he sold in 1901 and bought his present place, two miles west and two south from Melrose. He has a good orchard and is putting out more. Mr. Wilson has a nice bunch of stock and is breeding them up to fine specimens.

While in Missouri, in 1886, Mr. Wilson married Miss Dora B., daughter of Henry and Martha (Heuitt) Mustoe, natives of Virginia. They were pioneers in Missouri. Mrs. Wilson was born in Missouri, in 1863 and has two brothers and one sister, William, Albert and Loretta Page. Mr. Wilson has two brothers and one sister, Robert, James B., Hellen Riley. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Ethel and Blanch, both at home. Mr. Wilson is a Mason; has been school trustee and in politics is an active Democrat of the Jeffersonian type. He is a man of good qualities, has done a good work in this county and elsewhere, maintains a first class reputation, has the confidence of his fellows and is a genial, pleasant gentleman of intelligence and worth.

JASON M. HARRINGTON. Few, if any, have done more for the industrial advancement of the county during the time in which he has operated here, than the subject of this sketch. Mr. Harrington is a millman, owning and operating a fine saw-mill and manufacturing all kinds of lumber products. He is a man of fine ability and is possessed of worth and integrity.

J. M. Harrington was born in Lewis county, New York, on August 16, 1843, being the son of Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Hulburt) Harrington. The father was a lumberman, born in New York in 1823 and died in 1899. His father, Capt. John T. Harrington was a prominent lawyer and lumberman and a captain in the war of 1812. He was a partner in a law office with President Van Buren and married Kate Van Buren, a cousin of the president. He lived to be one hundred and one years of age and died in 1884. He was a pioneer in the Black river region in New York and there did an extensive lumber business. His son, the father of our subject, was also a successful operator there and a prominent lumberman of the state. The mother of our subject was born in Lewis county, New York. Her mother was a native of Pennsylvania and her father of Rhode Island. The subject of this sketch came with his parents to Wisconsin when he was eleven years of age and the home was there for twelve years. Then they removed to Scott county, Minnesota, where the father continued in the lumber business. Jason M. received a common school education and when the war broke out, he enlisted in the quartermaster's department under Captain Haskell and did duty until the close of the war. He was at Memphis, Little Rock, DuVall's bluff and other places, serving faithfully until the close of the conflict and then went home. He continued in business in Minnesota until the timber began to be scarce and then, in 1891, he came west, looking for a location. Finding the surroundings of Lewiston favorable, he secured a site and removed his mammoth establishment there. He did a fine business, but in 1897, the fire fiend destroyed his entire plant, entailing a loss of twenty-two thousand dollars besides ten thousand dollars worth of logs. Phoenix-like, however, Mr. Harrington would not brook defeat and at once built another mill. This plant is now being handled by his sons and they do a good business.

On August 5, 1868, Mr. Harrington married Miss Lavina, daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Cavanah) Sykes, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mrs. Harrington has the following brothers and sisters, George, Mary, David, Lewis, Ezra, Henry and Hattie. Mr. Harrington has the following named brothers and sisters, Vincent K., Curtis, Betty A., Martha Allen and John. To Mr. and Mrs. Harrington have been born children named as follows: Ellsworth; Lafayette, in Lewiston; Jennie Robnett, county superintendent; Minnie, teacher in the Lewiston public schools; Jeremiah and Nettie Knight, in Lewiston; Nellie, George, Jason M., Lewis and Gladys, at home. Mr. Harrington is a member of the A. O. U. W. He has always refused all nominations, but is a stanch Republican and takes an intelligent part in political matters and is a progressive and capable citizen.

WILLIAM BUOYE is one of the first settlers in that portion of Nez Perces county where he now resides, having come here in 1878, taking a homestead four miles west from where Leland is located to-day. Mr. Buoye built the first cabin in the big Potlatch prairie and was the second one taking land north of the Clearwater and east from the Potlatch.

Our subject was born in Dodge county, Wisconsin, near Fox lake, on March 7, 1848, being the son of Frank and Elizabeth (Cardwell) Buoye. The father was one of the early settlers in that vicinity and was occupied in tilling the soil. It was 1868 when the family came to Blue Earth county, Minnesota, making settlement near Garden City. There the parents died. Our subject remained until 1877, in which year he determined to try his fortunes in the west, and so came to Puget Sound, where he spent one year and then in 1878, came to the territory now embraced in Nez Perces county. He devoted himself to the culture of his homestead and it has been the family home since, with the exception of the years from 1883 to 1888, when he was in Lapwai working for the government as a carpenter. He now has one half section of fine farm land well improved, good buildings, choice orchard, and is one of the prominent men of his section.

The marriage of Mr. Buoye and Miss Esther, daughter of James and Rose (McDonald) Davis, was solemnized in Mankato, Minnesota, on February 14, 1883, and they have become the parents of three children, William M., eight years of age, and Edna D. and Everd D., twins. Mrs. Buoye is a native of Dodge county, Wisconsin, when she was taken while young by her parents to Blue Earth county, Minnesota. Her father died there, but her mother is still living. Mr. Buoye is one of the leading citizens of his vicinity and stands well, being a man of integrity and sound principles. In addition to general farming and fruit raising, he raises cattle, sheep and hogs.

DAVID THOMSON is an enterprising, energetic, and thrifty farmer, a public minded citizen, a man of integrity and uprightness, and it is fitting that a review of his career be placed in the history of Nez Perces county.

David Thomson was born in Ontario, Canada, on December 14, 1851, being the son of Joseph and Guira (Maria) Thomson. The father was born in Scotland in 1832 and came to Canada when a boy. The mother was born in Canada. Our subject received his education in the splendid and world famous schools in Ontario, and remained with his father until he had reached the age of nineteen. Then he came to the lumber regions of Michigan, where he operated for four years. It was 1874 when he left for Stillwater, in Minnesota, and lumbered until 1878, when he went to Montana and freighted for twelve years. In 1890, Mr. Thompson moved to Coulee City, Washington and freighted to Wenatchee and the Cascades for three years. Then he removed to Umatilla county and in 1893, came thence to Nez Perces county, where he farmed for two years and then on November 18, 1895, he took his present place, five miles north from Morrow. It is a good quarter section and is well handled. Mr. Thomson raises cattle and does general farming. He has two brothers and one sister, John, Elizabeth Bean, Thomas. He is a stanch Democrat, active and influential in local politics while he is always deeply interested in the national issues and intelligent in the questions of the day.

JAMES L. HOBART. Among the young and enterprising agriculturists of the reservation is to be classed the subject of this sketch and the industry, thrift, uprightness and good achievements of Mr. Hobert are evidence of his worth and integrity.

James L. Hobart was born in Buchanan county, Iowa, on May 20, 1870, being the son of Charles and Lavina (Lenington) Hobart. The father enlisted in the Ninth Iowa Infantry and served for over four years in the cause of his country. He was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg and participated in the march to the sea and many other great conflicts and arduous undertakings. He was honorably discharged and is now a member of the G. A. R. at Moscow, where he and his wife reside. When James was eight the family removed to northern Iowa and thence to Graham county, Kansas. In the fall of 1881, they all come to the vicinity of Moscow and there James remained on his father's farm until he was married.

That happy event took place on September 7, 1890, and the lady of his choice was Mrs. Elizabeth (Crumpacker) Decker, the daughter of Henry and Rachel (Frazier) Crumpacker. Her parents crossed the plains with ox teams in 1864 from Missouri to Boise; in 1865 they came to the Walla Walla valley, settling on Dry creek. They were among the first settlers there and when the reservation opened they came thither. Here Mrs. Crumpacker died in 1896 and the bereaved father is now making his home with the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Hobart's first husband only lived fourteen months after his marriage. One child was born to them, Faye Decker. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hobart, Winnie A., Beatrice, deceased, Doyle D., Naomi R. Mr. Hobart was here at the time of the rush in the fall of 1895 and was fortunate in securing a good place. He has it all fenced and under tribute of cultivation and is making one of the good and valuable farms of the country. He came with four horses, one cow and one wagon. All his holdings now have been gained since that time. Mr. Hobart is a member of the W. of W. and is in good standing in the community.

I. N. RATCLIFFE, the son of W. E. Ratcliffe, of whom special mention is made in this work, was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on July 4, 1870. The first eleven years of his life were spent in that place and then he went with his parents to southern California, where they remained two years. Returning to Douglas county, our subject spent but a short time then journeyed to Davenport, Lincoln county, Washington. With the exception of one year which was spent in Utah, Mr. Ratcliffe was for thirteen years a leading resident of Davenport. Again we see him in Oregon and at the time of the opening of the Nez Perces reservation he, accompanied by his brother, came hither and took a homestead where the town of Peck now stands. He gave his attention to improving the farm and was instrumental in starting the bright town of Peck. Since that time he has devoted himself to the real estate business also to handling a livery and feed stable. In political matters, Mr. Ratcliffe is a Jeffersonian Democrat and well posted in the questions of the day. He is a progressive man, of broad mind and public spirit and is a leading spirit in any movement for general advancement and building up the town and country adjacent.

J. C. PETERSON. The devotees of the newspaper fraternity have ever been a power in the development and progress of the country since the time when the first papers rolled from the early presses. Men of talent and enterprise have fought out the battles of thought and settled right the questions which have been agitated and been brought up in the progress which the same papers had fostered and made possible. As a representative of the fraternity, a man of ability and sound principles, the subject of this article, who is owner and editor of the Peck Press, a paper of vitality and merit, is justly represented in the history of northern Idaho and it is with pleasure that we grant him space here.

J. C. Peterson was born in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, on December 22, 1868, the son of Martin B. and Margaret A. (Bowers) Peterson, born in Ohio, in 1844 and 1846, respectively. The father came from Xenia. The mother is a daughter of a noted Dunkard minister, Martin Bowers. The parents both live in Latah county now. Our subject was well educated in his native country and in 1889, came with his parents to Washington and settled on Union flats, Whitman county. They farmed there one year and in 1890 they settled in the vicinity of Vollmer, Idaho, where he farmed for some time. In 1895, our subject married Miss Rosa M. Hatter, of Vollmer, after which he removed into the town of Vollmer and learned the printer's art. He engaged in the publication of the Vollmer News, succeeding C. S. Moody, and continued the sheet until 1898, when he sold out, his partner, John E. Hoffman, purchasing it. Then Mr. Peterson removed to Oro Fino, and there was connected with the Oro Fino Courier until November, 1900, when he bought the Peck Press and since that time Mr. Peterson has devoted himself to that paper. He has made the paper popular and it is a bright newsy sheet of good appearance and taste and is one of the lively and sound Republican papers of the northern part of the state.

Mr. Peterson has two brothers, Homar L. and Sam B., and six sisters, Laura Booth, Mary Kenny, Maggie Rundle, Lulu Minehead, Angre, Edith Brown, deceased.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peterson, Beatrice and Lois. Mr. Peterson takes an active part in political matters and is one of the solid Republicans who stand on their platform from principle. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. Mr. Peterson has a farm adjoining Peck in addition to his paper and other property. He is a man whose uprightness and integrity have made him popular and of excellent standing among all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

WILLIAM CUNNINGHAM. This venerable gentleman is one of the leading stockmen and farmers in the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, being at the present time not only doing a general farming business on his estate one half mile east of Kippen, but also breeding some excellent specimens of Percheron and Clyde horses.

William Cunningham was born in Bradford county, Pennsylvania in 1834, being the son of Jacob and Emily (Nichols) Cunningham. The father was born in New Jersey in 1821 and died in 1894. His people were pioneers in Pennsylvania and he was a soldier in the Civil war, being in Company I, Tenth Illinois, under Generals Halleck and Curtis. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania, in 1809 and died in 1899, aged ninety-one. The family removed to New York, and thence to Ohio and when William was eleven they went to Michigan. There he grew to manhood and received his education. When he was twenty-six, he went to Champaign county, Illinois, the family all going, and there he enlisted in Company I, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, in September, 1861, his father also enlisting at about the same date. Our subject served two years under General Halleck and was taken with measles which settled on his lungs and so dreadful was the effect of this disease that he was unable to speak above a whisper for three years. At the close of the war he returned to Illinois and remained on the farm until 1866, then went to Indiana and railroaded for a number of years and then came west to Portland and followed the same business for some time. He spent three years in the Yakima country in Washington, and then went to the reservation and secured his present place, which he has cultivated and improved in a becoming manner. March, 1896, was the date of his settlement here and he has always been known as one of the substantial and progressive men of the community.

In 1862, in Illinois, Mr. Cunningham married Miss Ann, daughter of Barnabas Howe, a farmer and pioneer in Indiana. Mrs. Cunningham was born in Indiana, in 1838 and has one brother, Ira, at Lapwai, Idaho. Mr. Cunningham has two sisters, Ellen Knapp and Ida Donaldson, both in Iowa. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Emma and William, deceased; Cora Smith, Pearl Parkin, and Esther Tipton, in Nez Perces county; Earl, at home. Mr. Cunningham is a member of the G. A. R., and is an active Republican. He is a man who has achieved success in his labors, has sustained an unsullied reputation, has always been a stanch and upright man and is now enjoying the golden days of his life in plenty.

HIRAM E. CHURCH. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to accord the representative and prominent farmer and stockman, whose name is at the head of this article, a review in the history of his county, since he is one of the most prosperous men of the county, being a heavy property owner and a skillful handler of stock, having one of the most productive farms in the county, while in his private walk he is a man who has won the esteem and confidence of all, being of sound principles, and faithful.

Mr. Church was born in Walworth county, Wisconsin, on October 6, 1847, being the son of Cyrus and Emeline (Russell) Church. The father was a prominent farmer of that county, and there the mother died in 1854, but the father married again and lived there until January 7, 1900, being at that time in his eighty-third year, and they both rest in the cemetery at the home place. The children of the family were six boys and two girls. Our subject was educated at the schools in his native place, and for twenty-two years remained with his father, then started in the battle of life for himself. He went to southwestern Missouri, purchased a farm and wrought there for a decade and then came west to Genesee. He purchased land where he now lives, three miles south of Genesee, having now about four hundred acres of fine, rich land. His brother, who is mentioned in this work, owns about the same amount adjoining and they operate this large amount of land in partnership, handling as high as twelve thousand bushels as one year's crop. Our subject has his farm well improved and good, substantial and commodious buildings erected, while also they together own a large herd of stock. Mr. Church has an orchard of twelve acres, and he raises abundant returns of fruits of all kinds. Mr. Church states that this is the most productive country that he has ever seen, and feels assured that one would have to search long and far before another as good section could be found. Mr. Church is a man of good ability, has made a fine success in his business affairs, has maintained an unsullied reputation, and is one of the wise, substantial, and leading citizens of Nez Perces county.

WILLIAM TAVIS. Perhaps the success that the subject of this sketch has achieved and wrought out here in the reservation country is equal to that of any resident. He came here with no means and located on a quarter three miles north from Nezperce and he now owns this all free from debt; has purchased another quarter of even finer land and has good improvements and buildings necessary to handle the entire amount in fine shape. Mr. Tavis has good stock and implements and is in excellent circumstances. This has been no chance luck, for he and his estimable wife have labored hard and long to accomplish this excellent result. Mrs. Tavis assisted her husband with the work of the farm, even driving the five horse team to the binder and some of the time carrying her three children with her on the machine. It is gratifying to see such arduous labor handled with wisdom and resulting in the good property holding that they are now blessed with.

William Tavis was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, on September 11, 1862, being the son of Isaac and Minerva (Potts) Tavis, who were natives of and were married in Macoupin county. In 1870, they all came to Jasper county, Missouri. The father served eleven months in the war and was honorably discharged at the close. They now live near Marshall, Spokane county, Washington. Our subject remained with his parents until 1887 then came to Spokane, on April 17, of that year. On December 24, 1889, he married Miss Mina, daughter of W. G. and Mary M. (Jessup) Addington, natives respectively of Indiana and Lee county, Iowa, in which county they were married. Then they removed to Cherokee county, Kansas, where Mrs. Tavis was born on May 19, 1871. The family then came, via San Francisco, to Dayton, Washington, in 1879, and in 1888 they went to Spokane county. Mr. Addington was four years in the Civil war. In 1891, Mr. Tavis went to Wilbur, Washington and in 1894 he came to the reservation and worked for a man who had Indian land leased. Thus he was here to select good land when the reservation opened, which he did, gaining his present home. Mr. Tavis had to go out to harvest for the purpose of gaining provisions and he started with abundant hardships. His first grist, being sixteen sacks, he hauled to Lewiston, the trip consuming eight days. Five children have been born to this couple, Roy E., Lora E., deceased, Goldie P., Tina M., Warren W.

SAMUEL LOCKRIDGE. As a representative farmer of the reservation country, a man of intelligence and worth and a loyal and patriotic citizen of our commonwealth, we chronicle the subject of this article.

Samuel Lockridge was born in Warren county, Iowa, on November 9, 1863, being the son of William and Elizabeth J. (Simmons) Lockridge. The father was born on February 6, 1834, in Augusta county, Virginia, and came with his parents when a small child to Indiana, where he grew to young manhood and was educated in the schools of that day. In 1853 he went to Iowa and there remained until 1893, living a time, however, in Oklahoma. He is a man of prominence and worth and has often times been chosen for offices of trust in the county and has ever discharged his duties with efficiency and faithfulness. His grandfather, William, was one of the patriots who fought for our independence and the fruits of those praiseworthy labors are ours to enjoy to this day. He used a flintlock rifle in the war under Morgan which an uncle in the family, Jacob Daggy, used in the war of 1812, and which is now a prized heirloom of the family.

William Lockridge was married in Iowa to Elizabeth Simmons, who was a native of Iowa and died in Oklahoma in 1895. Our subject was brought up in Iowa and there received his education. He remained with his father until of age and then farmed in Iowa some time longer. In 1893 he journeyed to Oklahoma and later bought a relinquishment to a preemption. This was his family home until 1899, the same being in Lincoln county, near Chandler, which he sold and took a trip back to Ohio, after which he came and bought his present place in 1900, which has been the home since. He does general farming, has a good place and devotes some attention to stock. Mr. Lockridge is a Democrat and is active in the campaigns.

On December 9, 1891, Mr. Lockridge married Miss Eliza C., daughter of Joseph S. and Cynthia (Ellenwood) Dilley. The father who was born June 11, 1828, in Virginia, was a pioneer in Washington county, Ohio, where he still lives. The mother was born March 9, 1826, in Virginia, where she was brought up and died in Ohio, on August 22, 1887. Mrs. Lockridge has the following named brothers and sisters: Joseph R., John W., Nahen S., Suzie M. Mr. Lockridge has six brothers and sisters: Leander J., Mrs. Mary Wheat, John W., Robert A., Sarah Follett, and Savannah C. Mr. and Mrs. Lockridge have two children, Mabel D. and Clara M.

DAVID B. CHURCH. One of the early pioneers of this section, and to-day one of the most substantial, energetic and progressive agriculturists of the county, the subject of this sketch is eminently fitted to be represented in the history of Nez Perces county, being a man of strong personal character, and withal of integrity, ability and executive force. The birthplace of Mr. Church is in Walworth county, Wisconsin, his birth occurring on February 25, 1852; his parents were Cyrus and Emeline (Russell) Church, natives respectively of Connecticut and Ohio. The father came to that section in 1836, being a pioneer and there farmed all his life, his death occurring while he was on a visit to Chicago in 1899. Our subject was educated in the schools of his native place and he remained with his father until he had arrived at the age of twenty-three years. In the year 1875, he came to California and one year later went thence to Salem, Oregon, and six months later came to this country. In June, 1877, he removed to the place adjoining the one where he now lives and the next year moved onto his present place, which is six and one half miles southwest from Genesee. He gained title to this land by the homestead right and has since that time given his time and attention to farming, stock-raising and raising fruits. He and his brother, Hiram E., are in partnership, owning about eight hundred acres of land, mostly rented and since the orchards have come to bearing they occupy the time and attention of the owners. The brother came here in 1884. Our subject has his land well improved, is a skillful farmer, and has taken the part of the intelligent and loyal citizen in the affairs of the country. He is highly esteemed and commands the respect of all.

ANDREW M. JOHNSON is a sawmill man and a machinist, dwelling about four miles southwest from Ilo, where he owns a fine quarter section of good pine timber land and operats a sawmill. He has a good plant and does a thriving business, being a man of practical qualities and able to adapt himself to any portion of the work of the mill.

Andrew M. Johnson was born in Dallas county, Texas, on May 29, 1869, being the son of Andrew and Elna (Martinson) Johnson, natives of Sweden. The father was born January 10, 1837, came to this country and did contracting on the Texas Pacific, was one of the pioneer settlers in the Big Bend country and died in October, 1896. In addition to our subject there were born to this couple the following named children: Nels T., born in Sweden, on April 2, 1867, being now a mining man; Mauritz C., born in Texas, on January 15, 1879; Amos E., born in Denton county, Texas, in 1881. Our subject started out for himself when seventeen, prospected and worked in the Okanogan country and two years later he went to Colfax and there farmed until the spring of 1896, when he came to the Nez Perces reservation and filed a homestead. He relinquished in 1899 and filed another homestead where he now lives. After he sold his first place, Mr. Johnson bought an interest in the Fletcher roller flour mills but sold that property six months later. Then he established his present sawmill plant and to the prosecution of this business he has devoted his time and energies since. Mr. Johnson is one of the substantial and capable men of this section and is numbered with the progressive and industrious citizens of the county.

On October 12, 1902, Mr. Johnson married Miss Lillie Wright, whose parents are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. The wedding occurred in Nez Perces county. In politics, Mr. Johnson is a Republican and is well posted on the questions of the day.

FELIX WARREN. The engineer is fast taking the place of the stage driver and the flying pony expressman, but occasionally we find one of the old timers, whose eye will flash with the same fire of adventure and uncurbed spirit as characterized the early men who drove the dangerous routes of the west in days of savage wars and wild scenes. Among the very best stage drivers that ever drew reins west of the Rockies and as a veritable leader of them all in the northwest, we mention the well known gentleman whose name stands at the head of this article. Felix Warren is one of the genuine old time stage men, who scorned the savages, weathered the fiercest storms and passed through the trying scenes and dangers incident to stage life of the west. He has never been beaten in a contest and has drawn reins with the best men the country could produce. Keen, brave, kind, and genial, he has commanded the respect, and won the esteem and confidence of all, while steadily from the pioneer days until the present he has followed his line of business and is now handling the stage from Lewiston to Cottonwood, where he has driven for sixteen years, twelve consecutively.

A detailed account of the career of Mr. Warren will be hailed with keen delight by all old timers and with pleasure we append the same. He was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, on July 15, 1852, being the son of Hugh and Esther (Sturgill) Warren. The father was born in North Carolina in 1821 and died in 1880. He was a pioneer of Missouri and a fifty-niner in California, where he remained until 1865, when he returned to the states and came with his family to Walla Walla and bought a farm engaging in stock raising until his death. He was captain of the train of one hundred and thirty-six wagons which he piloted over in safety. The mother of our subject was born in Virginia and died in 1884. Felix was twelve years of age when he came with his parents to this country and he remained with his father until eighteen and then went to packing to the Kootenai country, British Columbia. He did this on account of his health and as the outdoor exercise was bracing and improving him, he continued until he was twenty-three. Then he began staging from Almota to Colfax and in 1875 took up the business on his own account. He operated from Dayton to Walla Walla and about that time bought the entire holdings of the Northwestern Stage Company, which included many lines in this country, among which were those from Dayton to Colfax, thence to Sprague, Colfax to Lewiston, Lewiston to Spokane Falls, and others. These Mr. Warren operated for fifteen years and also from Dayton to Lewiston for six years. He had as partner, A. A. Newberry, well known in the northwest and they operated from Lewiston to Mt. Idaho. It is thus seen that Mr. Warren is the oldest and most extensive stage and mail operator in the entire country. He was special messenger for the government in the Bannock war and at one time he drove from Mt. Idaho to Lewiston in less than ten hours, hauling fourteen passengers, among whom were Sam Silverman (a noted mining man) and Spud Howard, a famous California driver. Mr. Warren drove six horses and had four relays in this trip. Bell Foster, a noted scout and an intimate friend of Mr. Warren, was killed at Cottonwood by the savages during the Nez Perces war.

On March 3, 1873, Mr. Warren married Miss Janetta Smails, at Walla Walla. She has three brothers, John, Harvey and Robert. She was born in Iowa in 1860. Mr. Warren has the following brothers and sisters, Solomon S., a miner at Nome; Joseph F., chief of police in Spokane for years, now in Nome; Robert S., in Nome; Mrs. H. W. Spalding, at Almota, whose husband was a son of the noted missionary Spalding; Inez Dawson, in Yakima, whose husband is a stockman. Mr. Warren is an active Democrat and has been honored by his party with a number of nominations for office. Mr. Warren was well acquainted with the noted Joe Meek. He is a member of the Pioneer Association and one of the best known and highly esteemed men of the entire northern part of the state.

JOHN NELLSEN. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant space in the history of northern Idaho to the young and enterprising agriculturist whose name is at the head of this article as he has done excellent work here in the development of the resources of the country, has wrought with a hand of industry in improving his homestead and has so conducted himself that he has won and retains the good will and esteem of all who know him.

John Nellsen was born in Calumet county, Wisconsin, on January 26, 1870, being the son of John and Elizabeth (Hammer) Nellsen, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. Our subject remained under the parental roof until he had attained the age of twenty and then went out to encounter the storms of life alone. He came to Walla Walla about that time and went to work hauling hay and straw. This was in the winter and during the summer he wrought in the harvest field. When the reservation opened he came to Craig mountain and took his present place of one hundred and twenty acres of fine pine timber land, which lies about four miles northwest from Morrow. Mr. Nellsen has some extra fine springs on his land and by his own efforts he has cleared sixteen acres. The first two years here, he and his brother worked out most of the time to get a start, but since then they have rented land and have done well, threshing this last year five thousand bushels of grain. They have their own machinery, horses, and are numbered with the prosperous men of this section. Much credit is due this worthy young man in his efforts to build up the country and make a good home; just such sturdy toilers as he are the ones who have made this country prosperous and the richest in the world.

ANTON HEITFELD. It is gratifying to us that we are enabled to chronicle the outline of the interesting career of the estimable gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, since he has done much for the building up of Nez Perces county, is one of its well-to-do and substantial citizens to-day and is a man of sterling qualities of worth and principle, always being allied on the side of right and wisdom. Mr. Heitfeld was born in St. Louis, Missouri, on February 24, 1864, being the son of Henry and Theresa (Winkelman) Heitfeld, natives of Germany, but immigrants to America in the fifties. They located in St. Louis and engaged in a shoe store, where the father continued until his death in 1868. In 1870, the mother with her children went to Kansas, where for thirteen years they farmed. In 1882, they removed to Nez Perces county where she died in 1892, being buried in the Catholic cemetery in Genesee. At Seneca, Kansas, our subject received his first schooling and always remained with his mother until the time of her death. He formed a partnership with his brother Henry and together they own one entire section of land, all under cultivation and producing as high as twelve thousand bushels of grain in one season. They have also an orchard of ten acres, about the largest and finest in the entire locality. Mr. Heitfeld is one of the most enterprising agriculturists of Nez Perces county, is a man of broad experience and exceptional talent, and has always been dominated by keen foresight, acute discrimination and good wisdom, which account for the brilliant success that he has had in the realm of agriculture and fruit raising.

The marriage of Mr. Heitfeld and Miss Frances A., daughter of Edward and Barbara (Henzel) Kempf, occurred in 1897, and they have been blessed with the advent of two children, Edward H. and Josephine J. Mr. Heitfeld is a member of the W. of W., Uniontown Camp, No. 207. He and his wife are devout members of the Roman Catholic church. It is of note that the subject of this sketch is a brother of Henry Heitfeld, his partner in the estate, who is also United States senator from the state of Idaho. Henry Heitfeld, now United States senator, was prominent in the political realm for his sagacity, sound principles, who in 1894 was nominated by the Peoples party, endorsed by the Democrats and elected to the position of state senator at Boise, by a handsome majority. In 1896, he was nominated again, and again promptly elected by an appreciative people and during that term he was proposed for the United States senate against F. Duboise, silver Republican, and Heitfeld was elected, and in the capacity of senator from the state of Idaho he is doing faithful and capable work in Washington, D. C. More specific mention of him will be made in another portion of the work.

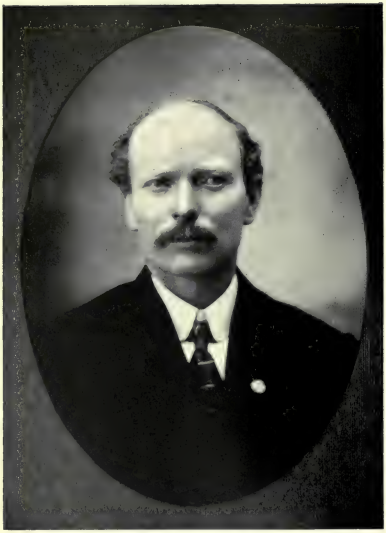
JAMES D. BOWMAN, a farmer and stockman of excellent standing and blessed with good success in his labors, and one of the builders of the reservation country where he has wisely bestowed his labors since it opened for settlement, was born in Salem, Oregon, on August 19, 1852, being a son of Joshua and Emmeline (Loveland) Bowman, natives respectively of Ohio and New York. The father was born in 1808 and died in 1877. He came to Salem in 1851, and then moved to Clackamas county, where he took a half section of land. Our subject was brought up and educated in Oregon City and remained there until he was twenty-one. At that time he came to eastern Oregon and engaged in the cattle business. He made several trips back and forth across the mountains, and in 1877 came to the Palouse country near Genesee. There he farmed and freighted until 1895, when he came to the opening reservation and took his present place, a little southeast from Dublin, where he does general farming and raises hogs and cattle.

On February 28, 1883, Mr. Bowman married Miss Nettie, daughter of John A. and Harriet (Mosier) Stanton. The father was born January 17, 1823, farmed in Missouri and came as a pioneer to Oregon in the early fifties. He settled to farming on a donation claim near Silverton, Oregon, and was prominent in political matters, holding the county offices frequently. Mrs. Bowman was born in Marion county, Oregon, on May 23, 1866, and has the following brothers and sisters: Isabella Murray, Josephine Thomas, Jennie, deceased, Frank, Jasper N., Benjamin, John, Willard, Amanda Woodcock, Blufford, Mary Allen, deceased. Mr. Bowman has brothers and sisters named as follows: Joseph, Charles, Mary Smith, Ann Markham, Margaret Jones. Seven children have been born to this household, Pearl, Clyde, Herman, Charles W., John E., Mamie E., Nellie M.

DAVID E. JOHN. About one mile north from Nezperce is the home place of the enterprising young man whose name appears above and he is to be classed as one of the most thrifty, industrious and wise agriculturists of this section, as everything about his premises testifies.

David E. John was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on May 16, 1875, being the son of David and Mary E. (Edgar) John, natives also of Greene county. When our subject was two years old, the family went to Washington county, where his mother died on January 17, 1894. The father, who is still living there, aged eighty-six, is a prominent and wealthy farmer of that section. The parents, as also our subject and his wife, are all members of the German Baptist Brethren. David E. attended school in his native place and on December 25, 1896, he married Miss Alice C., daughter of Silas and Nannie (Rodabaugh) Johnson. In March, 1897, they came to the reservation country with his father-in-law, the party consisting of thirteen. This was simply for a trip but when they arrived here the country was so favorabe and pleasing that Mr. John secured the relinquishment of the farm where he now resides and he at once went to improving. He has a good six-room house, large barn and outbuildings, with many other good improvements. Mr. John has fenced his entire farm with hog tight fencing and is intending to raise hogs extensively. He is blessed with a goodly holding of property and is one of the substantial men of the section. Two children have been born to them, Volley Clifford, born July 6, 1897, and died at the age of fifteen months; David Bernard, born August 8, 1902.

S. LESLIE THOMPSON, one of the old time business operators in Lewiston, where for fifteen years he was in one establishment, a genial and capable business man, is now one of the firm of Fair & Thompson, art dealers in Lewiston. Mr. Thompson is also city treasurer and is one of the substantial and highly esteemed men of the city.



S. Leslie Thompson was born in Proctorsville, Vermont, on October 1, 1863, being the son of Samuel L. and Alsada E. (Flint) Thompson. The father was born in New Braintree, Massachusetts, in 1843, enlisted in the Fourth Vermont Infantry, on September 17, 1861, and was discharged on May 1, 1862, on account of disability. Mr. Thompson came west and is now justice of the peace in Lewiston. The mother of our subject was born in Oakham, Massachusetts, and died in 1890. The father's people are Scotch and English and the mother's ancestors were Scotch. Our subject grew to young manhood in Massachusetts and there received his education. When twenty, he came to Lewiston, and in 1886 engaged with the firm of Vent & Butler, remaining in their drug store for fifteen years. This excellent service demonstrates the stability and good business qualities of Mr. Thompson and he has won a position in the business and social realm of Lewiston that is highly enviable. In 1901, Mr. Thompson formed a partnership with Mr. Fair and opened his present business, where he is having a thriving patronage and is being prospered. He handles all lines of art goods and artists' materials and supplies and is also doing a good trade in Indian curios and selected goods.

On November 16, 1892, Mr. Thompson married Ida Bunnell Walker, daughter of D. L. Bunnell, a well known hardware merchant of Lewiston. Mr. Bunnell was born in New York and died in 1888. He was a pioneer of Oregon. Mrs. Thompson was born in Oregon in 1863 and has one brother, Oscar C. Mr. Thompson has two brothers and two sisters, Moses W., William H., Hattie Mudge, Ella M. Snell, William H. is a member of the New Hampshire legislature. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, Waldo B., aged eight, and Edith, aged six. Mr. Thompson is fraternally allied with the K. P. and the W. W. He is a Republican and active in the campaigns.

J. SMITH MOUNCE, one of the heavy real estate owners in Nez Perces county, has shown himself to be one of the substantial and capable men of the entire county and is respected and esteemed by all. His estate of nine hundred and sixty acres lies four miles southeast of Lewiston, and is well improved and handled to the best advantage to bring fine returns to its proprietor. The nucleus of this fine domain was a pre-emption that Mr. Mounce took in 1886. He now devotes the large tracts to wheat, barley and other crops and raises fine Jersey cattle, having also operated a dairy for many years. He has made a praiseworthy success of his endeavors in the line of the business world and is deserving of credit not only in this particular field but also for the manly way in which he has conducted himself, and the integrity he has shown, always having the courage of his convictions and not being afraid to show his principles.

Reverting to the details of his life, we note that Mr. Mounce was born in Linn county, Iowa, on April 22, 1854, being the son of Isaac and Priscilla Mounce, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. The father was born on April 23, 1824, and was a stockman and farmer. His parents, Smith and Elizabeth Mounce, were early pioneers of Iowa. The mother of our subject was born on February 27, 1831, and died in April, 1899. J. Smith remained at home and received his education from the country schools; when he became of age took charge of the farm until he was twenty-five. Then he married and started for himself. Rented a farm for a time and in the fall of 1879, he came to Clark county, Washington, where he bought land and tilled it for two years or more, then sold it and worked in a shingle mill and then came to Nez Perces county. It was March, 1882, that he landed here and with his brother, Eben, he farmed for three years. He took up a preemption in the second year, which is a part of the home place now, as mentioned above. It was in 1886 that he removed to this place to remain and he has been here ever since.

On March 20, 1879, Mr. Mounce married Miss Mollie, daughter of George O., born on January 28, 1819, and Harriet (Wyckoff) Smith, born February 1, 1825, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively. Mrs. Mounce was born in Benton county, Iowa, in

J. SMITH MOUNCE.

MRS. J. SMITH MOUNCE.

1861 and has the following brothers and sisters, Samuel S. and Hugh M., Nancy, Ellen Harris, Lida Ward. Mr. Mounce has brothers and sisters as follows: Isora, Eben, Ida, Clara Goodnight, Lafayette, Harriett Ruddell, Edith Ruddell, Effie May and Eva Gay, twins, who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Mounce there have been born the following children: Guy C., Beatrice, Carl R., and Virna Mildred. The two older children are attending the state normal at Lewiston. Mr. Mounce is a member of the M. W. A. and the R. N. of A. Mrs. Mounce also belongs to the last named order. He and his estimable wife are members of the Christian church and they are devout supporters of the faith. In 1900 and 1902 Mr. Mounce was nominated for county commissioner by the Prohibition party. He is an advocate of good schools and always takes an active part in the advancement of the interests of his county. Mr. Mounce had three uncles on his mother's side and two on his father's who fought for the Union in the Civil war.

Mrs. Mounce's mother, who died on May 1, 1895, and her father, whose death occurred in 1897, came to Clark county, Washington, in 1879.

ROSS S. BABCOCK. This well known young business man has formed a partnership with George Horseman and they handle the Morrow hotel and bar, where they do a prosperous business and operate a house that furnishes good accommodations for the public.

Ross S. Babcock was born in Broadhead, Wisconsin, on September 27, 1876, being the son of George S. B. and Elmina (Mattock) Babcock. The father, a farmer and cooper, resides near Forest. He was born in Courtland county, New York, on August 20, 1834. He was a pioneer in Green county, Wisconsin, and his father, Reuben Babcock, a farmer in New York, was a captain and drill master in the war of 1812. Our subject's father was a soldier in the Civil war for four years and received an honorable discharge. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania; her parents were Daniel and Elizabeth (Hayes) Mattock, natives all of Pennsylvania. Our subject grew to the age of twelve in Wisconsin and then the father sold out and came to Walla Walla, whence he came by team to Nez Perces county and on April 7, 1889, settled on his present place near Forest. Ross S., was reared and attended the common schools here, after which he took a three years' course in the Adventist college of Walla Walla. In 1892, he came from the college and went to riding the range with stock. He also prospected and mined in the Deer creek camp and other places and still has properties here. Mr. Babcock also farmed and later formed the partnership mentioned above and is now operating the hotel and bar. He has two sisters and two brothers, George L., Charles R., Esther V. Olson, Florence Rice. Mr. Babcock is allied with the Republican party but is an independent thinker and selects the man rather than the party. He is a warm advocate of good schools and all public enterprises that are calculated to bring prosperity and advancement.

EDSON D. BRIGGS, the big hearted, sociable and popular county surveyor of Nez Perces county and city engineer of Lewiston, is kept constantly in office on account of his excellent work, his fine ability, his comprehensive and thorough knowledge and his efficiency and faithfulness in discharging any duty that is incumbent upon him. These combined qualities, together with his integrity, sound principles, and clean walk have made him one of the leading men of the county and on account of his extensive work in the northwest, he is well known and prominent over a large field.

Edson D. Briggs was born in Franklin, Vermont, on March 8, 1851, being the son of Erasmus D. and Paulina (Truex) Briggs. The father was born in Franklin, Vermont, in 1812 and died in 1882, being from an old and prominent Vermont family. The mother was born in lower Canada in 1828 and died in 1861. Our subject was educated in the Vermont University, paying especial attention to surveying and civil engineering. When twenty, his stirring spirit led him to the west and he was soon in government work in Washington. He surveyed all of Whitman, Asotin, and Adams counties, also much other lands. In 1882 he went to Garfield county and was promptly elected county surveyor on the Republican ticket, and he remained there in office until 1889. In that year he came to Lewiston and took a position on the government survey of the reservation, where he was engaged for four years. He also surveyed the battle grounds of the Nez Perces war on the Whitebird and other places. In 1898, he was nominated as county surveyor and was elected on the Republican ticket, although the ticket was turned down in many respects. At the close of that term, he was promptly elected and is still holding that important position as also that of city engineer.

On March 20, 1880, at Lewiston, Mr. Briggs married Mrs. Georgia Carter, widow of Lewis M. Carter, whose father Mr. Benton is a Methodist preacher. Mrs. Briggs was born in Indiana, as were her parents, and she has the following brothers and sisters, Helen Johnson, Mary Johnson, Joel H., Mrs. W. F. Kittenbaugh. Mr. Briggs has one brother and one sister, Sewall, Bertha Anderson. One child has been born to this union, Grace Maurice Briggs, who graduated from the state normal school in Lewiston, Idaho, in June, 1903. Mr. Briggs is a thirty-second degree Mason and the youngest ever made, it being done by special dispensation when he was twenty-two, while the required age is thirty-five. Mrs. Briggs is a member of the Methodist church.

Mr. Briggs had two uncles and cousins killed in the Civil war. His great-grandfather, Elias Tinexst, was born in 1772 and died one hundred and three years later. He read the declaration of independence on the fourth when he was one hundred years old. It was his desire to live to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of inpedendence but he died a little too soon, but being an aged and stanch patriot.

JAMES W. BANKS. A true exemplification of that thrift and industry that gives as its meed the gratifying success so prized by all, a man of energy and sound principles, a citizen of worth and patriotism, it is fitting to grant a review of the career of the esteemed gentleman whose name appears above.

James W. Banks was born in Kansas City, Missouri, on February 21, 1861, being the son of Absalom and Susan (Little) Banks. The father was born in North Carolina in 1826, farmed in Iowa and Missouri and settled in Nez Perces county in the fall of 1901. The mother was born in Henry county, Kentucky. Our subject was reared in Iowa and there received his education. His parents were his companions until he was twenty and then he began to step forth into the world for himself. He farmed in Iowa for a time and in 1895, removed to Missouri and farmed until October 26, 1901, when he settled on his present place about three miles southeast from Ilo. He has a quarter section of good land, has devoted himself to its improvement and takes great pride in having everything thrifty and in order.

On September 25, 1881, Mr. Banks married Miss Milley N., daughter of Warren and Evelyn (Boulds) Phillips, natives of Greene county, Kentucky, on February 14, 1823, and May 11, 1831, respectively. Mrs. Banks has the following brothers and sisters, Dabney A., Ermine Myres, James, Richard, Lou, Mary E. Mr. Banks has the following named brothers and sisters: George W., Andrew, Isabelle Egerton, Mary Simmons, Cora J. Miller. To Mr. and Mrs. Banks have been born eight children, Carrie Cox, Warren A., Myrtle E., deceased, Edith, Ethel, Albert, Lenore, Elias M. Mr. and Mrs. Banks are adherents of the Adventist church and he is a Democrat in political alliances.

MATHIAS BUECHLER. This well-to-do and representative farmer of Nez Perces county is also one of the stanch and unswerving supporters of our free institutions, having demonstrated on the field of blood his love for the land of freedom which he has chosen as his own. Mr. Buechler was born in Luxemburg, Germany, on January 2, 1832, being the son of Peter and Katherine (Stein) Buechler, also natives of Germany, where they repose in the cemetery in Luxemburg. Our subject was educated in his native village and at the age of fifteen years started in life for himself, working for the farmers of the vicinity. He afterwards learned the cooper trade and also became a wagon maker and pump maker. At the age of nineteen years, he was ready for the new world, and accordingly came hither, locating first in St. Louis, where he turned his hand to various occupations for a time and then learned the machinist trade and worked for two years in the shops, also ran an engine until 1884, in which year he came west to Nez Perces county and bought the quarter section where he now lives, five miles south from Genesee. He has given his attention to farming here for the intervening time, achieving good success. He has his farm well improved with fine house, barn, out buildings, orchard, etc.

The marriage of Mr. Buechler and Miss Gesine, daughter of Gearhard and Sophie (Hemi) Easan, was celebrated in 1863 and they have been blessed by the advent of the following children, Henry C., married to Minnie Quade, and living in St. Louis, Missouri; George H., married to Cora McNare and living in Denver, Colorado; August W., Robert H., Sophie, the last three being at home with the parents. Mrs. Buechler's parents were natives of North Germany and came to America, locating in St. Louis, where their death occurred. Mr. Buechler is a member of the order, known as the Sons of Herman, Lodge No. 15, in St. Louis. He and his family affiliate with the Lutheran church.

In September, 1861, Mr. Buechler enlisted in Company E, First Missouri Light Artillery, under Captain Charles Mann. His company was kept in Missouri until February, 1862, when he was sent to Fort Donelson, thence to Fort Henry and to Pittsburg Landing; at the battle of Shiloh he was severely wounded and was kept on the field for eleven days, being unconscious the entire time. When he could be moved, he was taken to St. Louis and there under a private surgeon, he recovered and again joined his company, but after one week was sent to the hospital and then received an honorable discharge September 18, 1862. His military career displays great courage and bravery on his part and is one of credit to him and his family.

BENJAMIN & JOHN DILL, who compose the firm of Dill Brothers, operating a prosperous and popular meat market in Lewiston, are well known and thorough business men and are among the leaders, being of excellent standing both in the social and business world.

They are both natives of Ireland, Benjamin being born in 1860. John came to this country with his father and Benjamin with his mother a year later, he being then eighteen. The parents are John and Anne (Forrest) Dill, also natives of Cork, Ireland. The father came to the United States in 1877, took a homestead in Asotin county, being one of the few first settlers who dared to face the Indians and settle. During the war of 1877, he remained on his ranch. A facetious scout put war paint and arrows on Mr. Dill's door in his absence, but he broke the arrows and showed his defiance. He died in 1884. The mother now dwells with her sons. As soon as Benjamin came here he at once went to work for the Clendening and Dubuc meat market, known as the old Boss market, and there he remained for twelve years, or until 1897. Then came a trip to Europe and upon his return he took the Klondyke fever seriously and the only cure seemed to be a trip to that section. He went, wrought in the mines faithfully and came away with fifty thousand dollars worth of fine experience but with no augmentation as to his finances. Returning to Lewiston, he bought his present place of business and settled down to it. His tact, his affability and his thorough knowledge of the business soon brought him a large patronage and he took in his brother, John, as partner. John Dill had been deputy postmaster for five years, being under both Democratic and Republican regimes. He was clerk of the court in Asotin county and is an active Republican. Benjamin is not so active in political matters but is always in favor of the best men and sound principles. They are both experienced business men, of excellent capabilities, are favored with a thriving patronage and stand among the most prosperous and leading business men of the city.

Benjamin Dill is a thirty-second degree Mason and has taken all the degrees in the I. O. O. F. They own property outside of their meat business.

The other children of the family are mentioned as follows, Mary Dubuc, in Lewiston; Maggie Dunn, in Portland; Sallie Campbell, Asotin, Washington; Bryan, in San Francisco; Daniel J., on the coast.

It is of note that Judge D. J. Murphy, who tried the famous Durant murder case, is a cousin of our subject's father. Now Judge Murphy is one of the prominent men of the Pacific coast.

JOSEPH L. MEEK, JR., the son of the historical character, Hon. Joseph Meek, whose life's history is mentioned in this volume, a farmer two miles west from Fletcher, a man of integrity and sound principles, and withal a patriotic and enterprising citizen, it is fitting that we should accord this gentleman representation in the volume of his county's history.

Joseph L. Meek was born four miles north from Hillsboro, Washington county, Oregon, on October 6, 1855. His father, Hon. Joseph L. Meek and his mother Virginia, are well known and will be specifically mentioned elsewhere. Our subject was brought up in his native place, gained a good country schooling and remained there until 1890. Then he removed to Glencoe and in 1895 came to the Nez Perces country. His family came on to the allotment in the spring of 1896 and this has been the home since that time.

On June 26, 1895, in Glencoe, Washington county, Oregon, Mr. Meeks married Miss Catherine, daughter of John F. and Rachel (Robison) Anderson. The father was born in Yorkshire, England, on December 23, 1850, came to New York when a child, and was raised in New York. Ten years were spent in Iowa, nine years in Nebraska and in 1891 he came to Oregon. Since 1898, he has lived in the vicinity of Fletcher. The mother of Mrs. Meek was born in Iowa, on September 21, 1850. Mrs. Meek has brothers and sisters, named as follows, Uriah, Joseph S., Norah J. Shinn, Clark W., deceased, Grover F., Clyde R., Arthur. Mr. Meek has a good house and outbuildings, a nice home orchard, farms two hundred and forty acres of land and is one of the well-to-do men of the country. He is affiliated with the W. W. and in political relations is a Republican.

To Mr. and Mrs. Meeks have been born the following children: Martin F., born September 17, 1897; Virginia M., born August 12, 1899, died January 1, 1901; Joseph L., born October 16, 1901.

SAMUEL M. CRAWFORD, a farmer and stock raiser, who lives three miles north from Morrow, is one of the substantial men of the section and came to the reservation at its opening, took a farm which he sold later and moved to his present place. He is an upright man, a good Democrat, as were his ancestors before him, and he is thoroughly grounded in the old Jeffersonian principles.

Samuel M. Crawford was born in Marion county, Oregon, on February 11, 1867. His parents, James and Lucetta (Lennon) Crawford, were born in Indiana, the father in 1840 and the mother in 1842. They were pioneers in Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley in 1863. The paternal grandfather was a Kentuckian and his wife was born in Indiana. The mother's parents were early pioneers in Iowa. When Samuel was five the family came to the vicinity of Dayton, Washington, and there he was educated and grew to manhood, laboring with his father on the farm. He remained there until 1893 and then went to Latah county and farmed for two years. Mr. Crawford raises diversified crops and handles a good many horses. He is a thrifty and skillful farmer and is being prospered.

On March 21, 1893, in Juliaetta, Latah county, Mr. Crawford married Jane, the daughter of James Thornton, a farmer at Elgin, Oregon. He was a pioneer of this northwestern country and packed to various camps. He also assisted to build old fort Lapwai, rafting the timbers down the river. Mrs. Crawford was born in the Willamette valley in 1867 and has three brothers and three sisters, Orie, Sude, Ida, Otes, William and Herbert. Mr. Crawford has the following named brothers and sisters: William, James, Abner, John, Anna, Sarah, Florence. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, James, Arthur, Charles, Samuel and Mabel.

SIMON NELLSEN. The pluck and spirit of our subject is shown in his arduous labor which in the face of misfortune he has continued and brought success out of failure and victory out of defeat. He is now one of the substantial and well-to-do farmers of his section and a man of good standing.

Simon Nellsen was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, on October 24, 1866, being the son of John and Elizabeth (Hammer) Nellsen. The father, who was born in Germany, June, 1808, was a pioneer in Wisconsin, and died on February 28, 1897. The mother of our subject was born in Austria and died September 11, 1882. The following named children were born to them. Nicholas, Joseph, Drina, died when she was young, Simon, Henry, John, Frances, Elizabeth. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and remained with his parents until twenty-two. Then he went to do for himself, and took up the business of baling hay. He followed it for nine years and did well, but finally a crash came and he lost all. He was not to be discouraged, however, and came west with the determination to dig out another fortune and at once set himself to the task. He started cutting cord wood near Walla Walla, then harvested, and at the opening of the reservation he came hither and secured a quarter section about four miles northwest from Morrow. He has twenty-five acres of meadow and one hundred and twenty fenced. In addition to this land, Mr. Nellsen and his brother John, who is in partnership with him, rent three hundred acres on Mason prairie which they farm to the cereals. He threshed about five thousand bushels of grain this year, including oats, barley, flax, timothy seed and so forth.

When Mr. Nellsen and his brother started here they had a capital of twenty-five cents cash and an unlimited amount of pluck and courage. The former has increased until they have a fine holding of land, farm stock and tools and are prosperous, but their courage is none the less abated, and could hardly be increased. They are men of good standing and vote for the man rather than the party.

WILLIAM H. ABEL. Among the enterprising men of the reservation country and one who has done a goodly part in its development, being also a man of stability and good talent, is mentioned above and with pleasure we grant him consideration in the history of northern Idaho. He was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on April 7, 1866, being the son of John A. and Sarah (Lucas) Abel, natives of Greene county. The father took his family to Wayne county, Iowa, in 1869, being one of the pioneers of that section. He descended from a prominent and old Dutch family. The mother died in Iowa, on May 9, 1897. Our subject was reared and educated in Iowa, remaining with his parents until seventeen. Then he farmed in South Dakota and reached the Sound country in 1892. He followed the restaurant business in Olympia two years and then came to Oakesdale, Washington, after which he visited California, and on August 8, 1896, took up his abode on his present place, two and one half miles east from Fletcher. Final proof was made on this land, on December 21, 1901. Mr. Abel owns eighty acres of fine land and raises horses. He also handles three hundred and eighty acres of Indian land, doing general farming. About five miles northwest from Fletcher, Mr. Abel is constructing a new sawmill on a quarter section of valuable yellow pine land. He is an enterprising and skillful man in business and stands well in the county. Mr. Abel has the following named brothers and sisters, John A., in Wayne county, Iowa; Mary E. Casad, whose husband is editor of the Hubble Standard and postmaster at Hubble, Nebraska; James T., in Wayne county; Eliza J. Ellis, in Ohio; Alford, McClellan, hardware merchant in Corydon, Iowa; Leonard A., sergeant in Company F, Fourteenth United States Infantry. He was in the battle of Manila and took part in the attack on Pekin at the time of its fall. Mr. Abel is a member of the W. W., Phiney Camp, No. 492. He is allied with the Democrats in politics. Mr. Abel is still listed with the jolly bachelors and is content with the retired life and modest joys of the celibatarian.

WILLIAM J. GREEN was born in Kansas, on March 22, 1871, being the son of William J. and Virginia (Powell) Green, natives of Georgia and Virginia, respectively, and now living near Cavendish. The father is of Scotch-Irish extraction and the mother is descended from Welsh-Scotch ancestors. Our subject was raised in Kansas until twenty and also received her education there. Then he came to Vollmer, whither his brother had preceded him by five years. In 1897 Mr. Green took up his present place, three and one-half miles west from Cavendish. The land is in dispute as to whether it is in the reservation or not and the matter will be settled next year. Mr. Green has a quarter section and raises cereals and flax. He also rents forty acres which is farmed to flax. He has a fine young orchard, raises stock and is now the owner of a number of head of cattle and horses. Mr. Green has four brothers, Frank, Joseph, Daniel, Edward, and three sisters, Elizabeth Harris, Alice Harris, Jennie Horton.

In the fall of 1892, Mr. Green married Miss Mattie F., daughter of Thomas B. and Huldah (Queener) Hill, natives of Georgia and Virginia, respectively. The father died in 1897 but the mother lives in Latah county. Mrs. Green has the following brothers and sisters, Frank, George, John, Senebar, Louisa Roberts, Hattie Smith, Della Ray and Nora. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Green, Catherine, Wilma, and Carman. Mr. Green is a member of the M. W. A., Le Baron Camp at Cavendish. In political matters he is a Democrat and one of the active men of this section.

CHARLES S. INGLE. A son of the west and a practical product of Nez Perces county, the young man whose name heads this article is one who has labored faithfully here in the work of development and is one of the substantial and enterprising farmers and fruit men of the vicinity of Genesee, his farm of eighty acres being located five miles south from that town, where also he rents between two and three hundred acres besides, which he farms to the cereals, raising also some stock. Charles S. was born in Ada county, Idaho, on June 23, 1876, being the son of William A. and Malinda (Voding) Ingle, natives respectively of Arkansas and Missouri. The parents came west and permanently located in Nez Perces county where they are living now, and here our subject received his early education in the district schools, later attending the Genesee schools and the Lewiston high school, where he graduated in 1897. After school days were over, Mr. Ingle went to farming, leasing a piece of land and in 1899 he leased two hundred and thirty-five acres, which he still works. In addition to his general farming, he raises some horses, cattle and hogs and last year he marketed eight hundred boxes of apples besides much plums, prunes, apricots, and cherries as well as small fruits.

In 1899 occurred the happy event of the marriage of Mr. Ingle and Miss Matilda, daughter of Jacob and Mattie (Toskey) Tonning, who lived in Genesee. Our subject has the following brothers and sisters: Maud L., married to J. F. Willows and living in Nez Perces county; Thomas E., Bonnie, Minnie and Iva. Mr. and Mrs. Ingle are members of the United Artisans and Mrs. Ingle is a member of the English Lutheran church. In politics, Mr. Ingle is a Democrat and always takes the interest that becomes an intelligent citizen in the affairs of government. He has been elected to the important office of justice of the peace for two terms and his faithful service gives general satisfaction. Mr. Ingle is a man of ability and vigor and is dominated with a high order of wisdom and honor and is well liked among his fellows.

CYRUS NORTON lives about four miles southwest from Morrow and has a good place which he secured by homestead right in 1893. He raises diversified crops and handles stock. He comes from one of the early colonial families and his great-grandfather was an officer in the Revolution, serving with the Green Mountain boys. They came from English ancestry and were men of patriotism and strength of character.

Cyrus Norton was born in Pike county, Illinois, on September 6, 1849, being the son of Thomas H. and Emaline (Davis) Norton. The father was born in Vermont, January 8, 1819, and died in November, 1901. The mother of our subject was born in Detroit county, Illinois, and died in 1897. In 1852 the parents came across the plains with ox teams, consuming six months in the trip. They settled in Marion county and our subject grew to manhood in that section. He had only a few months at school but so well did he improve the opportunity and odd moments afterward that he gained a good education. He remained at home most of the time until he was twenty-five and then worked for a time in the iron mines in Oswego, Oregon. After this he ranched in Marion county until 1883, then moved to Whitman county, Washington, and farmed until 1893, the year in which he came to his present place, which is well improved, has comfortable buildings and besides which Mr. Norton has an interest in the old homestead in Oregon.

On December 27, 1877, Mr. Norton married Miss Mary A., daughter of Christopher and Harriett (Farley) Strohm. The father was born in Switzerland and came to the United States when a child and was a soldier in the Mexican war. The mother was born in Missouri. Mrs. Norton was born in Missouri, on September 12, 1857, and was educated in the common schools. She has six brothers: David F., Peter P., Cornelius F., Christopher, William L., George T. Mr. Norton has the following named brothers and sisters: John, Lafayette W., William S., Samuel, Claude, Alice A., all in Marion county, Oregon. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Norton: Alphia A., Elsie D. Green, Cora B., Myrtle, and Hattie E. Mrs. Norton and her daughters are members of the Christian church. He has served as deputy county clerk in Marion county and also in other offices. Mr. Norton is a life-long Democrat of the Jeffersonian stripe. He is an active laborer for good schools and believes in the best that can be had. In 1870-71 he traveled extensively in eastern Oregon and in Idaho and was at Pendleton when it consisted of one store.

SCHUYLER J. ADAMS, a skillful and successful agriculturist and stockman, resides about two miles northeast from Morrow, where he is devoted to the enterprises mentioned and where he manifests those qualities of substantiality and worth which have always characterized him in all his ways.

Schuyler J. Adams was born in Oceana county, Michigan, on March 25, 1860, being the son of Simeon and Lanah (Schuyler) Adams. The father was born in Massachusetts in 1832 and died in 1885, February 14. He was a pioneer in Michigan and enlisted in the Twenty-second Michigan Cavalry and lost his arm in the battle of Gettysburg. The mother of our subject was born in Germany and came with her parents to Three Mile Bay, Jefferson county, New York. In 1871 our subject went with his parents to Rice county, Kansas, and six years later he returned to his old home in Michigan, where he remained until October 6, 1885. During this time he learned the trade of the engineer and at the date mentioned came to Portland, whence one year later he went to Montana with a train load of cattle. He returned to Walla Walla and farmed until 1894, in which year he went to Whitman county near Colfax and farmed until 1896, during which time he came to his present place, which has been the home since. He has one hundred and forty acres of fine land, well improved and tilled to general crops. Mr. Adams finds the country well adapted to oats, timothy and barley and feeds the products to his stock, having never hauled a load of grain to market. He has a good residence and perhaps as fine if not the finest barn on the reservation, it being a substantial structure forty by sixty and well finished. Mr. Adams operated the hotel in Morrow for a time and spends considerable time there for the benefit of the schools for the children.

On August 19, 1880, Mr. Adams married Miss Anna Whitby, who died in 1894, leaving one child, Hattie Maude. Mr. Adams contracted a second marriage, October 13, 1895, the lady becoming his wife being Jessie M. (Day) Turner. By a former marriage

Mrs. Adams has two children, Elizabeth Jane and Georgia. Mr. Adams has the following named brothers and sisters: Samantha Knight, Margaret Knight, John D., Samuel. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Adams are named as follows: William Day, Margaret Barstow, Joseph, George P., Anna, Josephine, Robert, John, Benjamin, Chester, Walter, Grace, Francis. Mr. Adams is a member of the I. O. O. F. in Morrow. He is constable of his precinct and in politics is a Republican. Mr. Adams is a warm advocate of good schools and has done all in his power for the betterment of educational facilities.

AMOS K. RICHARDSON. Near the town of Forest lives the stockman and agriculturist mentioned at the head of this article and he has achieved success in the business world and is considered one of the substantial men of the section.

Amos K. Richardson was born in Franklin county, Missouri, on March 24, 1839, being the son of Aaron and Nancy (Brown) Richardson, natives of Kentucky. The father was born in 1797 and died in 1884. He was a pioneer in Missouri, volunteered to go in the Mexican war but did not get to the front. He came to Oregon in 1846 and participated in the Rogue river war. The mother of our subject was born in 1799 and died in 1863. Our subject came to Oregon overland in an ox train with his parents and they experienced considerable trouble with the Indians enroute. After six months of hard traveling they landed in Yamhill county and later the father took land in Benton county, which is still in the family. Amos K. grew to manhood there and improved the scanty opportunity to gain an education. When twenty-two he began to work for himself and in 1879 he settled in the vicinity of Colfax and there farmed for fourteen years. In 1893 he came to Nez Perces county and took up land on Mission creek near the Catholic mission. In 1901 he came to his present place on the Salmon. He pays attention to raising stock and is skillful in this occupation.

In 1862 Mr. Richardson married Miss Julathia Cox, who died in 1876, leaving four children, George B., Robert B., Benjamin and Anna. In 1879 Mr. Richardson married a second time and the lady of his choice was Judith Vallandingham and the wedding occurred in Prineville, Oregon. Three children have been born to this union: Ollie, Clarence and Chauncey. Mr. Richardson has four brothers, Hiram, John C., Richard, Aaron. Politically Mr. Richardson is a Democrat and takes an interest in the questions of the day.

JOHN C. LARKEE. Everything about the premises of this leading farmer and fruit raiser indicates the prosperity and plenty that comes from industry and thrift bestowed with consummate intelligence and sagacity. There is no mistaking the surroundings, and the pleasant home, bright family and charming wife of our subject are but proper crowning to his integrity, untiring care and uprightness.

John C. Larkee was born in Outagamie county, Wisconsin, on February 6, 1865, being the son of Frederick and Anna (Anderson) Larkee, natives of Denmark. The father came to the United States in 1848, sailed on the lakes for two years and now lives with our subject. The mother was married in Wisconsin and is at the present time in Minnesota visiting with a son. Our subject was raised in Wisconsin until thirteen and gained a common schooling, then came with parents to Nebraska, where he wrought for nine years. In 1888 he came to Washington, traveled about and in 1890 went to the Baptist College in Colfax. In 1892 he came to Leland and was elected road overseer. On November 19, 1895, Mr. Larkee filed on his present place, five miles northeast from Lenore and since then he has bestowed his labors with wisdom here. He has four hundred fine bearing fruit trees and some of the finest pears and apples of the state are his to enjoy as the result of his skill. Mr. Larkee has a beautiful and commodious barn, one of the finest in the county and it is kept in an orderly manner. He owns doubtless the largest horse in the state, the mammoth animal standing eighteen and three-fourths hands. The mate to this animal is only about one inch shorter. Mr. Larkee's brothers and sisters are mentioned as follows: George, James, Steena Hall, Nettie Standard, Emma Ross, Esther Standard.

On January 14, 1892, at Kendrick, Mr. Larkee married Miss Ella I., daughter of Henry D. and Mary E. (Johnson) Peden, natives of Ohio. They now live near Leland. The father was born on January 12, 1838, and served three years in the Civil war in Company B, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was wounded seriously in the thigh in the battle of Missionary Ridge. They came to Whitman county in 1888. The mother was born on June 2, 1842, and is an invalid. Mrs. Larkee has six brothers and one sister, Dora, William M., John, Henry W., James, Frederick and Walter. Mr. Larkee is a member of the M. W. A., and they both are members of the Christian church. Six children are the fruit of this happy marriage, Dora, born November 17, 1892; Ralph, born February 10, 1894; Maude M., born March 2, 1896; Esther, born July 15, 1898; Mary, born February 21, 1900; Helen, born December 3, 1901.

CHARLES SCHWARTZ. A bright, popular, industrious, and prosperous agriculturist; a man of principle and integrity, and one who has the esteem and confidence of all, it is with pleasure that we grant to him consideration in the history of his county.

Charles Schwartz was born in St. Genevieve county, Missouri, on January 4, 1862, being the son of Peter and Clara (Pollitt) Schwartz, natives of Pennsylvania and Missouri, respectively. The paternal grandfather of our subject was born in Alsace-Lorraine and he brought his family to Missouri when Peter Schwartz was a small boy. The latter is still farming in Missouri. The mother of our subject was called to depart this life in August, 1874. Charles was reared in Missouri until twenty-one, gaining his education from the district schools during the winter months of his first fourteen years and then he wrought with his father until he was twenty-one. Then he spent one year in Montana, one year in Portland, and one year in the Grande Ronde valley. He then settled near Ritzville, Washington, and took a timber culture and preemption. Ten years later, in 1896, he came to the reservation and filed on his present farm of eighty acres, two miles northeast from Lenore. His brother, Anton, has a quarter section adjoining. Our subject had but little capital when he settled, the first year the cattle ate his small crop, which necessitated his working in the harvest fields to support the family. He did better the next year and he has labored on successfully until now he is one of the prosperous men of the section. This year he raised over one thousand bushels of onions, one hundred and twenty sacks of potatoes and other crops in proportion. He has good improvements and a fine young orchard is soon to begin bearing.

On October 1, 1890, Mr. Schwartz married Miss Laura, daughter of Egbert and Eliza (Cumrine) Hill, who was born in Iowa, on August 28, 1873. Her parents are living in Spokane retired. This wedding occurred in Harrington, Washington, and five children are the fruit, Charles, born February 25, 1892; Eugene, born September 22, 1893; Arden, born August 11, 1895; Ethel, born November 11, 1899; Mildred, born October 9, 1901. Mr. Schwartz is a stanch Democrat and an active, intelligent citizen in all matters pertaining to general progress.

GEORGE W. WAYNE. In addition to operating his farm successfully, Mr. Wayne is conducting a livery and feed business in Morrow, where he is doing well. He handles eighteen head of stock and has rigs in plenty while his careful treatment of customers, always watching for their welfare, has given him a good trade. He is also feeding cattle and has nineteen head at present.

George W. Wayne was born in Audrain county, Missouri, on March 1, 1837, being the son of Temple and Elizabeth (Gregg) Wayne. The father was born in Virginia in 1796 and died in 1864. He was of Welsh and English extraction. Mad Anthony Wayne of Revolutionary fame, was a first cousin of Temple Wayne. Mr. Wayne settled in Audrain county in 1827. The mother of our subject was born in South Carolina in 1798 and died in 1865. Her mother, Jane, was born in Ireland. Our subject was educated in his native place and worked on the farm with his father until he was twenty. Then he worked on adjacent farms and in 1855 the family went to Linn county, Kansas, and our subject was there during the John Brown raid. In 1857 he returned to Missouri and continued there until 1862, when he prepared an outfit and started across the plains. At Soda springs the Indians stole his stock and he was left with wife, one child, and only one horse. He hired cattle and came on west, but his wife died enroute. Mr. Wayne bore up bravely under these terrible afflictions and came on to Auburn, Oregon. His daughter grew up and married Sam Patterson of this county. From Auburn, Mr. Wayne went to the Grande Ronde valley and packed for eight years. Thence he went to Marion county, Oregon, and farmed for eighteen years. In 1886 he came to Latah county, settling near Genesee, where he farmed and raised stock for seven years, then teamed for three years and in 1896 came to the reservation country. He took his present farm and since then he farmed until recently he purchased the livery, coming to town to school the children.

Mr. Wayne was married first to Martha Threlkeld, who died in 1862, leaving one child. On June 4, 1876, in Oregon, Mr. Wayne married Miss Carrie S., daughter of James and Ann (Bowman) Miner, natives of Illinois. The mother is still living but the father is dead. Mrs. Wayne's maternal grandmother is still living, aged eighty-one. Mrs. Wayne was born in 1860 and has two sisters and two half brothers. Mr. Wayne has brothers and sisters as follows, Alfred, Franklin, Elizabeth, and Martha. Seven children have been born to this couple, Cordelia Hegle, James T., William W., George G., Vance Hazel, Maggie, deceased, and Birdie O. Mr. Wayne is an active Democrat. His farm is well improved and he has prospered in his labors.

CHARLES C. NEWHARD. Since Mr. Newhard is one of the sturdy men who assisted to open the reservation country, has labored, since settlement here, with wisdom and enterprise, it is fitting to grant a review of his career in this volume. The ranch home of the family is one mile west from Fletcher, but Mr. Newhard devotes considerable energy to railroading and is in Genesee much of the time.

On April 15, 1873, Mr. Newhard married Miss Jennie R., daughter of Hon. Joseph L. and Virginia Meek. He lived in Puyallup, Washington, for a number of years, then moved to Vancouver, then to Spence's Bridge, thence to Ashcroft, and later to the Okanogan country. In July, 1896, Mr. Newhard came to his present abode and has done general farming and stock raising since. Five children have been born to this union, Courtney W., born November 1, 1877, in Puyallup; Charles C., mentioned elsewhere in this volume; Tennie O., born July 3, 1881, in Tacoma; Francis V., born December 8, 1883, in Puyallup; William H., born September 14, 1886, at Spence's Bridge, British Columbia.

CHRIS MATHISON. From the land whence came the discoverers of the New World hails the subject of this article and June 1, 1864, was the date he was born. His parents, Mathis Hanson and Henricka Christopherson, were both natives of Norway also and the father followed railroad contracting. The mother died in 1895. Our subject grew to manhood, was educated and worked on the railroad in his native land. When twenty he decided to come to the United States and settled in Olmstead county, Minnesota. Four years were spent there and in that time his brother John had come from Norway and they decided to see the west and accordingly made their way to Seattle, Washington. Thence they traveled to Walla Walla and worked on the Palouse branch of the Northern Pacific. He came to Nez Perces county in 1888, and settled on his present place, about three miles southwest from Morrow. Here he has remained since, except he has spent considerable time in mining in the Elk country and other camps. In 1900 Mr. Mathison went to the Klondike region and six months later returned to his home. He and his brother have also spent considerable time in steamboating on the Snake and are well experienced in the various callings of the industrial world. They now own one quarter section, having sold one recently, and they devote this to general crops and raising stock. Mr. Mathison was raised a Lutheran and in politics is a Democrat.

JOSEPH L. CRAIG. The venerable and highly esteemed gentleman of whom we now speak was a farmer and stockraiser living one half mile south from Morrow, where he had a fine estate, well supplied with buildings and all necessary improvements and in addition to general farming he raised fine Shorthorn cattle and was a prosperous and leading citizen.

Joseph L. Craig was born in Virginia, on July 26, 1832, being the son of George and Mary D. (McMullin) Craig. The father was born in Virginia in 1795 and died in 1845. George Craig, grandfather of our subject, was also born in Virginia and married Kittie Kimberly. His father, the Rev. John Craig, was born in Donagan, county of Antrim, north Ireland, and was descended from Scotch ancestry. He was a graduate of the Edinburg University and came to the United States in 1734, settling in Delaware. He was sent to Ft. Stanton, Augusta county, Virginia, by the Presbytery of Delaware and there he ministered to his flock for twenty-five years. This was the first Presbyterian church of the Virginia settlement. He was a minister of note in his day and died in 1774. The mother of our subject was born in Virginia, in April, 1803, and died in 1836. Her father was of Scotch-Irish descent. Her mother, Jane Madison, was the daughter of William and Catherine Arbuckle and was a niece of Bishop John Madison, of Virginia, and of Governor George Madison, of Kentucky, and was a cousin of President Madison. William Arbuckle was born of Scotch parents in Virginia in 1752 and was a volunteer under General Lewis, founder of Lewisburg, Virginia, in his expedition against the Ohio Indians in 1774, participating in the battle of Point Pleasant at the mouth of the Great Kanawha river. Our subject went with his parents to Callaway county, Missouri, where he grew to manhood and was educated. When eighteen, in 1850, he went to California and gained a thousand dollars in the gold fields in one year. Returning home, he farmed and raised stock there until 1888, when he came west and settled on his present place on July 14, 1888. He continued here until his death, displaying thrift, industry and sagacity.

On April 9, 1856, in Callaway county, Missouri, Mr. Craig married Miss Mary E., daughter of Thomas G. and Rebecca B. (Snedicor) Jones. Mr. Jones was a farmer and merchant, born in Madison county, Kentucky, in 1795 and died in 1846, being of English and Welsh extraction. Mrs. Jones was born in Virginia in 1799 and died in 1835, being of Scotch-Irish extraction. Mrs. Craig was born in Callaway county, Missouri, on August 15, 1831, was liberally educated and taught for five years. She has eight brothers and sisters, but George W. Jones, of San Francisco, is the only one living. Mr. Craig has three brothers and sisters, all deceased. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Craig: Charles Henry, a physician in Webb City, Missouri; Jefferson E., deceased: Emma Julia MacKay, in Jefferson City, Missouri: Jennie Allen Miles, deceased; Stonewall Jackson, Idaho county; Mary Katherine Buckner, Jefferson City, Missouri; Albert B., a physician in Philadelphia; George E., principal of the public schools in Oakesdale, Washington; Annahalana R. Davis, of Nezperce; Joseph Franklin, principal of the public schools in Burlington, Washington. W. S. Davis, the husband of Mrs. A. Davis, died in the Philippine Islands recently. He was professor of English in an educational institution in the town of Moncada. Since his decease Mrs. Davis has returned to America. Mr. Craig joined the Masonic lodge in 1856. Mrs. Craig is a member of the Christian church and her husband is a member of the Methodist church, South. Mr. Craig had been a justice of the peace for three terms and was eminently satisfactory to his constituents. He was a stanch Democrat and had been committeeman for ten years. He died at his home March 27, 1903, and his remains were laid to rest in the I. O. O. F. cemetery, Morrow, Idaho.

JOHN W. BILLUPS. On November 22, 1895, John W. Billups filed on his present homestead and at once went to work. He possessed a four horse team and wagon, this being the sum of his earthly wealth. The second year he marketed nine hundred bushels of wheat as seed for his neighbors. The next year he marketed two thousand bushels of wheat and five hundred of flax at Spalding. He now has his homestead supplied with a beautiful residence, large and handsome barn, plenty of out buildings, a good holding of stock and handles two or three headers and steam thresher, besides having another quarter of land adjoining. In addition to this, Mr. Billups has rented Indian land and this year, he marketed twelve thousand bushels of flax. Such a record reads like a dream, it is so wonderfully successful, but when we see the man that has executed it, the keen and penetrating wisdom, the executive force, the tireless energy, it is all explained. Mr. Billups stands at the head in farming on the reservation and doubtless there is not another record to match this one in the county.

John W. Billups was born in Cabell county, West Virginia, on May 20, 1859, being the son of Richard A. and Hulda (Moore) Billups, natives of Virginia. The family was one of the earliest pioneers of Virginia and are an honorable and strong family. The grandfather of our subject was a soldier in the Revolution. The father of John W. is a minister in the Missionary Baptist church and is still preaching in Virginia, aged seventy-six.

On March 24, 1881, Mr. Billups married Miss Rhoda C., daughter of Alanson and Charlotte (Graham) Farmer, natives of Virginia. Mr. Billups' grandfather Graham fought in the war of 1812. In March, 1882, Mr. Billups went to Hancock county, Indiana, then to Hamilton county and in 1886 they went to Sumner county, Kansas, and there railroaded until 1889. Then he came to Moscow and later purchased a small farm there but in the panic he lost everything. When he heard of the reservation being opened, he came and selected his claim and the result is in evidence.

Mr. Billups is a member of the M. W. A. and the Yeomen, both at Nezperce. He and his wife are devout members of the Methodist church and are hearty supporters of the faith. Eight children have been born to this worthy couple, Mamie, wife of C. C. Mizer near Nezperce; Minnie D., born in Hamilton county, Indiana; Lulu E. born in Sumner county, Kansas; Hulda, Clea C., Letha Murle, all born in Latah county; James O. and Jesse Carl, born at the home place. Mr. Billups has always striven for substantial improvements, and is a warm supporter of progress and especially first class educational facilities.

On March 2, 1903, Mr. Billups sold at auction sale, implements and stock amounting to seven thousand dollars, rented his farm and is now enjoying the pleasures of a retired life.

WILLIAM F. JOHNSON, a man of excellent standing in the community and possessed of keen discrimination and business ability with integrity and honor of high degree, is the owner of one of the most valuable estates in Nez Perces county and which is handled with all the skill and energy to make it a first class twentieth century farm. This valuable estate consists of three hundred and twenty acres in section seventeen and four hundred and eighty acres in section sixteen, township thirty-three and range two, east, it being a little over one mile south of Nezperce. Mr. Johnson has a large band of hogs, plenty of other stock for the farm and is raising the cereals and other crops adapted to the climate. He has over twelve hundred fruit trees, all kinds of shrubbery and other useful plants and his farm is provided with an elegant nine-room house, a commodious barn and other improvements necessary.

William F. Johnson was born in Benton county, Iowa, on September 30, 1872, being the son of Stephen and Elizabeth (Hardinger) Johnson. He grew up on a farm, received a good education from the common schools and on December 25, 1895, in his native place, Mr. Johnson married Miss Hattie, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Tanner) Long, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Long were married in Ohio and came to Benton county, where Mrs. Johnson was born on July 8, 1871. Her parents both died in Iowa. Mr. Johnson received from his father a team and one thousand dollars when he became of age. He at once wisely invested his money in land and farmed there until the year 1900. In that spring he came to the reservation and searched out a place which he purchased and then sold his Iowa place for thirteen thousand dollars. In the fall of 1900, the entire family came out and here Mr. Johnson has resided since. He added the other four hundred and eighty acres by purchase later. The entire farm is under cultivation. Mrs. Johnson is a member of the German Baptist church and is devout in her adherence to the principles and the support of this organization. Three children, Galen L., Leland M., and Dwight E., have been born to bless this happy marriage and all of them are at home. Mr. Johnson is of exceptionally good standing in the community, is a man of intelligence and intrinsic worth and our county is to be congratulated that he came from the east and settled in our borders.

WILLIAM J. MERVYN. To accord to the leading and substantial citizens of Nez Perces county a representation in this volume of its history must necessarily include an epitome of the gentleman whose name heads this paragraph, since he is one of the leading stockmen and agriculturists of his vicinity, his farm being situated one and one-half miles southwest from Genesee, Idaho. William J. was born in county Cavan, north Ireland, on December 27, 1847, being the son of John J. and Anne (Griffith) Mervyn, natives of Ireland. The father was a merchant in the home county, and the parents remained there until their death, the mother pasing away in 1873, and the father going in 1880, their remains being buried in their native place. At eighteen years of age our subject retired from the schools and bade farewell to home and native land and sailed for Melbourne, Australia, reaching there in 1866, and for nine months engaged there in mining. After this he went to New Zealand and mined in the placer diggings for seven years, then in 1873 came to California, where he continued the same search in Plumas county for one year, then farmed in Humboldt for four years and in 1879 came to Idaho. He sought out a location and settled on a pre-emption where he now resides. He gave his attention to farming and stock raising and has been attended with abundant success, having now four hundred and thirty acres of excellent farm land. His place is well improved and handled with skill and thrift and the result is that large crops reward his industry.

The marriage of Mr. Mervyn and Miss Cora E. Lees, a native of Ohio, and daughter of Simeon E. and Anne Lees, was solemnized on April 26, 1884, and three children have come to gladden the home, Edith C., Elizabeth, and William. Mrs. Mervyn's father was a native of Virginia and the mother of Maryland, but they were farmers in Ohio and remained in that state until the time of their death, the father passing away in 1898, and the mother in 1887, both being buried in Holland, Ohio. Mr. Mervyn is a member of the Masons and of the K. of P. He affiliates with the Democratic party and takes the active interest demanded of every true citizen in the realm of politics and the affairs of the county and state, although he always declines personal preferment in the way of public office. He is a man of fine ability, faithful and upright in his walk, careful and sagacious in his business matters, and a patriotic and broad minded citizen.

JACOB BLUME. Mr. Blume is one of the leading men of Nez Perces county, being one of the heavy land owners and prominent farmers, having nearly one thousand acres of land where he lives, four miles southwest from Genesee, which is fitted up into one of the finest rural homes in the county, being embellished with an elegant residence, good barns and orchards and all improvements that add comfort and value to an estate. He markets annually about ten thousand bushels of grain and produces much stock and fruit. Mr. Blume was born in Hanover, Germany, on September 25, 1831, being the son of John F. W. and Mary (Platt) Blume, natives also of Germany, where they remained until the time of their death, being buried in the Kuhstedt cemetery, in Hanover province. Our subject was educated in the college of his native place and at the age of fourteen years he quit school and went to work for the farmers; eleven years he persevered in this arduous undertaking and then bought a piece of land for himself, which he tilled until 1882, when he sold all and came to America, locating first in Logan county, Illinois. He rented a farm there for six years and then determined to try the west and accordingly he came to Nez Perces county, Idaho, buying a farm one mile from Genesee, which, however, he sold about two years later. Then he bought three hundred and ten acres of land where he now lives, which was partly improved, and has also added land until his is a mammoth estate of nearly one thousand acres. In addition to the general farming and fruit raising he handles a great many horses and is one of the leading stockmen as well as farmers of the county.

In 1854, in Germany, occurred the marriage of Mr. Blume and Miss Anna, daughter of Henry and Mary (Meyer) Burfeind, natives also of Germany, where they remained until the day of their death, being buried in the cemetery at Hohenmoor. To Mr. and Mrs. Blume there have been born the following children: Henry, single, living in Jersey City, New Jersey; Mary, wife of Herman Moresheck and residing in this county; Frederick, married to Lizzie Oberfeild, and living in Jersey City, New Jersey; Margaret, wife of Claus Michiles and living in Logan county, Illinois; George, single and with parents. Our subject and his wife are members of the German Lutheran church and now as the golden years of his well spent life draw on apace, Mr. Blume is enjoying the fruits of his honest and arduous toil wherein he has also manifested great wisdom and has earned the rest and competence that are his to indulge.

CHARLES C. NEWHARD, Jr., is one of the younger men of stirring energy and push who are making the reservation country one of the best sections in the northwest. He was born in Puyallup, Washington, on November 24, 1879, being the son of Charles C. and Jennie (Meek) Newhard, who are mentioned in this work. He is a grandson of the noted Hon. J. L. Meek. Our subject was reared in the various places of the northwest where the family resided and gained a good education from the common schools. He studied longer in Genesee than in any other one place. He remained with his parents in their travels and labors until May, 1901, when he came to his allotment, which is eighty acres of choice land, about one mile west from Fletcher. Here he is devoting his labor and skill to tilling the soil, raising stock and making a comfortable home for his family. Mr. Newhard is a young man of promise and stands well among the people of the community and is doing good work in building up the county.

On November 14, 1901, Mr. Newhard married Miss Alice M., daughter of John and Lucy (McNamara) Howard. Mr. Howard was born in Iowa, in 1854, went to Nebraska where he followed the blacksmith trade and in 1899 came to Idaho and is still engaged at his trade. His wife was born in Illinois, in 1858, and her parents, Thomas and Catherine McNamara, were pioneers in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Newhard have one child, Kenneth Charles, born October 17, 1902. Mrs. Newhard has the following named brothers and sisters: May D. Charlotte, Frank, Frederic, Earl, Clara.

JAMES F. WILLOWS. One of our capable and enterprising farmers is named at the head of this article, and he is also one of the substantial and patriotic citizens of Nez Perces county, being a man of marked uprightness and unswerving integrity and strength of character. James F. was born in Canada, on March 24, 1868, being the son of Thomas and Ellen (Farris) Willows, natives respectively of England and Canada, and now residing in Alberta, where they devote themselves to farming and stock raising. When our subject was four years of age his parents removed to Saunders county, Nebraska, where he was educated, finishing his school days at the age of seventeen. In 1889 he came west to Gray's harbor, Washington, and two years were spent in that section, when he came to Nez Perces county, renting six hundred acres of land on the reservation. He also bought a quarter section three miles south from Genesee, but he made his home on the reservation where his large farm was until the time of his marriage, which occurred on November 29, 1899, when Maud Ingle became his bride. Her parents, William A. and Malinda (Voding) Ingle, came west in 1885 and now live in this county. To our subject and his estimable wife there has been born one child, Thomas W. Mr. Willows has two brothers, Harvey D., married to Annie Haley, living in Northwest Territory, and John R., married to Amy Yeoman and living in Alberta, and he also has one sister, Jennett M., married to C. M. Dodson and living in Alberta, Northwest Territory. In political matters, Mr. Willows allies himself with the Democratic party and always takes an active interest in the local matters. He is also a member of the K. of P. Lodge, No. 5, of Genesee, and of the I. O. O. F. Lodge No. 36, of the same town. His wife is an adherent of the Methodist church and they are among the leaders in the society of their community, being capable, and good people.

JOHN C. BERRY, a popular, intelligent and genial gentleman, is one of the leading agriculturists of the vicinity of Summit, owning an estate right at the postoffice. He has displayed excellent wisdom and industry in his labors and his worthy achievements and steady increase of goods are but the proper result of this endeavor.

John C. Berry was born in Sullivan county, Tennessee, on February 11, 1855, being the son of James O. and Martha (Crumley) Berry, natives of Tennessee. The father is now living with our subject. John C. was raised in Tennessee until twenty-two, being educated in the district schools. He then married and went to Texas, where he was engaged in ranching for seven years. The next journey was to Washington, where he did gardening near Walla Walla for about seven years. In 1889 Mr. Berry came to the Potlatch country and gardened for three years and then took his present place. He was on his land the opening day of the reservation and has given his undivided attention to cultivating it and the Indian land which he has leased since that time. Mr. Berry had four horses, one wagon and no cattle when he came, but is now one of the prosperous men of this vicinity. He lived in a tent the first year and had all the hardships of the pioneer to endure. He owns seventy-five hogs, has good improvements and a valuable and well tilled farm. Mr. Berry has the following brothers and sisters: William J., a Methodist preacher; Robert E., Elbert E., Fleming J., Murray, Martha E., widow of Robert Hall; Nannie C. Maynard, Jane Cash, Eliza Hall, Sophie Henry.

On August 16, 1876, Mr. Berry married Miss Sarah J., daughter of Thomas and Anna (King) Dyer, natives of Tennessee. The mother died in October, 1893, and the father lives with one daughter near Milton, Oregon. Mrs. Berry has two brothers and two sisters, John S., William A., Martha A. Taylor, Mary O. Bishop. Mr. and Mrs Berry have one adopted child. Mr. Berry is a member of the M. W. A., Lewiston Camp. They are both members of the Methodist church, South. In political matters, Mr. Berry is allied with the Democrats and is frequently in the county conventions. He is school director and is a stirring advocate of good roads.

FRANK S. DAGGETT. It is a pleasure to grant consideration to one so enterprising and skillful in business affairs as the subject of this sketch, who is one of the esteemed gentlemen and public-minded citizens of the county of Nez Perces.

Frank S. Daggett was born in Iowa, on December 2, 1867, being the son of David A. and Julia (Leppla) Daggett, natives of Wisconsin. From the father's side of the house the family comes from a prominent English house and many of the members are noted in educational, commercial and legal circles, while two have served in congress. The mother's ancestors were from Germany. The Daggetts were noted and prominent in Revolutionary times. Our subject was educated in the public schools and spent the first eight years of his life in Nebraska, the next six in Iowa and then went to South Dakota. Then he finished his education in the state normal school. When nineteen he came to Idaho and worked until twenty-one, when he married and returned to South Dakota and took up stock raising. His ability and attention to business gave him success and later he went to Illinois, where he bought a small farm near Hoopston, one hundred miles south from Chicago. In 1898 he came back to Idaho and purchased the relinquishment of his present place, three miles northeast from Lenore, for twelve hundred dollars. The first two years' crops sufficed to pay for the farm and some besides. Since then he has done equally well and is one of the prosperous men of this section. He has one of the best places in this vicinity and as it is only a short distance above the river is much freer from frost than those higher on the hill, the difference being about fifteen degrees. Mr. Daggett has one brother and two sisters, True G., traveling salesman for a large drug house in Sioux City, Iowa; Maude, wife of Mark D. Edgerton, a clothing merchant in Spearfish, South Dakota; Creta, single.

In August, 1889, Mr. Daggett married Miss Mary, daughter of Stephen R. and Martha (Shea) Southwick, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

Three children have been born to this happy union, Roma, Gladys and Frankie. Mr. Daggett is an intelligent Republican and a great advocate of good schools, being on the board. He is also a moving spirit in making good roads. He is well respected in the community and has excellent standing.

JOHN C. GRANZ is a well known and industrious farmer and thresher. He pays special attention to operating his threshing outfit and also is intending to devote considerable time to handling a mine on Swamp creek which he is opening. Mr. Granz stands well with the people and is highly spoken of by all.

John C. Granz was born in Germany on May 18, 1872, being the son of Frederick and Mary (Schwechler) Granz, natives of German. The father was in the Franco-Prussian war and served in the German army for five years. He died in 1879. The mother lives with our subject and is aged about sixty. Our subject came to the United States with his mother when he was eight and settlement was made in Pennsylvania, where he attended district school. Mrs. Granz married a second time, her husband on this occasion being Mr. Holway. He died when John C. was about fifteen. At the early age of ten, our subject left home and took up the battle of life. He worked for his board and clothes and when fifteen he came to the west. He landed finally near Juliaetta and there attended the Fairview school for two terms and then labored at different occupations until the reservation opened up, when he took his present place. He sold a portion of his land in the spring of 1902. He has at present thirty-three acres of land and handles this with his mining and threshing.

On June 10, 1900, Mr. Granz married Miss Ollie E., daughter of James O. and Hattie R. (Ramsy) Young, natives of Kansas. Mrs. Granz was born in Cherokee county, Kansas, on January 15, 1884, and has two brothers and two sisters, William, George, Minnie McNeeley, Elizabeth. Mr. and Mrs. Young live near Pullman, where the wedding of our subject occurred. Mr. Granz is a Republican and has served as election clerk.

GEORGE W. GILMORE. This industrious and prosperous farmer is one of the men whose labors have built this section of our county and made it one of the wealthy portions. He is a man of good standing, has displaved ability and good qualities in his labors and achievements.

George W. Gilmore was born in West Virginia, on February 22, 1856, being the son of William J. and Mary (Hansford) Gilmore, natives of Virginia. The father came from an old English Virginia family and he died in April, 1899, aged seventy-four. The mother was also a descendant of one of the old colonial families and died in April, 1895. Our subject was educated in the public schools and remained with his parents until twenty-one, and then went to work for wages, and about 1878 he purchased a small farm and to the development and improvement of that he gave his attention for a number of years. Then he became interested in lumbering on Cheap river, and this continued until 1892, when he came to Idaho and filed on his present place, two miles east from Lenore. He erected good buildings and since that time he has cultivated it himself. He raises the cereals and flax and has done well on his farm. He has about thirty-five head of stock and pays much attention to raising stock. Mr. Gilmore has the following brothers and sisters: Albert H., David W., Charles W., John W., Elizabeth Myers, all of West Virginia; Salome Graff, in Pennsylvania; Florence Auvil, in Alabama.

On January 21, 1877, at St. George, West Virginia, Mr. Gilmore married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob and Annie (Johnson) Myers. The father was born in Pennsylvania and now lives in West Virginia. He comes from an old Dutch family. The mother was born in Virginia of a pioneer family and is still living. Mrs. Gilmore was born on April 29, 1858, and she has three brothers and one sister, Nelson, John, Benjamin, Barbara Shoemaker. Three children have been born to our subject and his wife, Tacy, wife of Harvey A. Southwick, on Windy Ridge; Mary, wife of Charles H. Crumpacker, near Nezperce; Annie, wife of James Johnson, near Lenore. Mr. Gilmore is a Democrat and a good substantial citizen.

ANDREW BAKER. In addition to handling a farm, which is situated a mile or so east from Southwick, our subject has also paid considerable attention to running a steam threshing outfit and at the present time is also handling a fine little saw-mill on his place. It is a complete plant and has a capacity of eight thousand feet per day. Mr. Baker is utilizing it in manufacturing his own timber into lumber products, and has also bought recently some more timber land. He is one of the leading men of this vicinity, is an enterprising and energetic worker and manifests commendable wisdom in his labors.

A detailed account of his career will be interesting, and so we note that he was born in Indiana, on March 6, 1849, being the son of James and Mary (Davis) Baker, natives of Tennessee and Indiana, respectively. The father died in 1863. They were married in Indiana and the mother is now living in Missouri. Our subject was reared in Missouri and received his education from the district school. When twenty-six he went to California, where he continued for seven years in various employments. It was 1882, that he came to Idaho and filed on his present place. He has devoted himself to the labors mentioned above and has made a good success. Mr. Baker has three brothers, William and Perry, farmers in Missouri; John, in Idaho. He is a Republican and is intelligent on the issues of the day. He has been road supervisor and has evinced an interest in the improvement of the county roads that is more than theory and his labors in this line have resulted in much improvement in this important matter.

On January 6, 1874, Mr. Baker married Miss Josephine McCoy, in Caldwell county, Missouri. She is a native of Iowa and has three brothers and two sisters, Alfred, Benjamin, and Austin, farmers near by; Susan, widow of Frank Cuddy, in Clarkston, Washington; Julia, wife of John McIver, near Cavendish.

These children have been born to this couple, Albert, near Steele; George, employed in his father's mill and is also road overseer; Ory, wife of Charles Guernsey, at Russel; Benjamin, at home; Perry, with his brother Albert; Bertha, Mary, Lottie and William, all at home. Mrs. Baker is a member of the United Brethren church and is active in Sunday school work.

CHARLES HOFFMAN. This veteran on the battlefield of life has passed three-quarters of a century in the struggle allotted to man and in it all he has manifested great tenacity of purpose, good ability, and has achieved a fine success both from a financial standpoint and in the excellent standing in the community where he is highly respected and holds the good will of all.

His parents, Jacob and Sarah (Troxall) Hoffman, were natives of Pennsylvania, where our subject was also born; they are of German extraction and for many years back all have resided in that state. Charles was raised in Northumberland county and while his educational advantages were limited, he acquired a good training and fund of information by his persistent efforts in study. When twenty-four he went to blacksmithing in New York as foreman of a shop and wrought there until the close of the Mexican war. Then he went to Illinois and wrought at his trade and farmed until after the Civil war. Then a brief time was spent in Kansas and in 1879 he crossed the plains and settled on a pre-emption, which is now a part of his fine estate of over six hundred acres, five hundred of which are in a high state of cultivation. He has excellent buildings, handles considerable stock and does a large farming and stock business. Mr. Hoffman raises some fine draft horses. He has a well of fine water that was blasted out of the solid rock. Mr. Hoffman had six brothers and three sisters, but does not know the whereabouts of any of them. He was married when about twenty-seven to Sarah J. Dowd and three children were born to them, Sarah C., wife of Burton Lane, of Council, Idaho; Lucy, wife of A. Ebell, near Baker City, Oregon; Ross, a farmer at the mouth of Pine creek. Mr. Hoffman was called to mourn the death of his wife and on June 4, 1876, he married Miss Lucy Shay, at Chetopa, Kansas, who was the first white woman on the prairie. Her parents, Isaac A. and Margaret (Burkhardt) Shay, were natives of Illinois and Kentucky and of Irish and Dutch descent, respectively. They are both dead. Mrs. Hoffman was born in Leavenworth, Kansas, on July 31, 1859. She has three brothers, Benjamin, William, and Charles. Nine children have been born to this worthy couple, Jesse, the first white child born in the Big Potlatch, now a student in Milton College; Charles, Walter, Olive, Alice, Benjamin, Elsie, Esther, Mary, all at home. Mrs. Hoffman was occupied in teaching school before her marriage. She is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman are ardent supporters of educational facilities and believe firmly in thorough training for their children. They are counted among the leading people of this section and are always in the van for anything that will build up and enhance the interests of the community and be for the good of all.

WILLIAM T. WRIGHT. This pioneer and substantial citizen has been one of the well known men here for a long time and is deserving of credit for his labors and improvement. He is not only a tiller of the soil, but is a skillful and enthusiastic apiarist, having forty stands of bees. In addition to this, Mr. Wright carries a large stock of bee raising supplies for the accommodation of those in the surrounding country. It is interesting and profitable to notice with what skill and wisdom Mr. Wright has continued to put forth the advantages of this important industry and it has been and will be of untold benefit to this section, as the raising of bees is no doubt one of the profitable lines heretofore too little attended to, especially in the western sections. Much wealth will be distributed among the farmers thus and the luxury of the hive will be enjoyed by many where now it is almost unknown.

William T. Wright was born in Porter county, Indiana, on September 16, 1837, being the son of Joseph Y. and Tabitha (Evans) Wright, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia respectively. The father died in 1850, aged sixty. He was a wealthy farmer and had served as captain of heavy artillery in the war of 1812. The mother died in 1892, aged eighty, and is buried in Indiana. Our subject was reared in La Porte county, Indiana, until twenty-five, gained a good education in Valparaiso College and in 1864 went to California, where he remained until 1880. He taught school, operated a nursery and did various labors, and in 1880 he came to the Potlatch country. He took a government right on his present place and did well until 1893, when he went down with the crash, but he saved sixty acres of good soil which is tilled, and that, with his bee industry, makes a profitable business. Mr. Wright has the following brothers and sisters: Jonathan, Moses, Gideon, Harriet Stone, Sarah Stone, Carrie.

On July 2, 1868, in Cortland, California, Mr. Wright married Miss Emma, daughter of Charles U. and Margery (Crawford) Talmage. The mother died in Cortland and the father lives there now. Mrs. Wright was born in Joliet, Illinois, on December 19, 1845. She has one brother and five sisters, Samuel, Harriet Northup, Henrietta Porter, Mary, Lottie, Annie. Five children have been born to this couple, Myrtie, wife of James Kuykendall, a miner in Montana;

C. Herschel, a stockman in Northwest Territory, Canada; Dean, with H. Trimble, in Lewiston; Pauline, wife of E. Harrison, in Frasier, Idaho; Lillian, at home. Mr. Wright is a member of the I. O. O. F., Leland, No. 90, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. He is a stanch Democrat and has taken an active part in politics. He has been school trustee for many years and is now serving as justice of the peace, having been the same in California.

WILLIAM J. RILEY, deceased. It is fitting that we should incorporate in this volume a memorial of the esteemed patriot and substantial citizen, whose labors in the northwest have resulted in much development and building up. He was born in Carroll county, Missouri, on February 6, 1846, being the son of Ulysses J. and Mary (James) Riley. The father was born in Washington county, Virginia, in 1815, being a nephew of the Meek family. He was a pioneer in Missouri. Our subject was brought up in Missouri, was educated in the common schools and also in his youth perfected himself in the carpenter trade. During the time of dark fratricidal strife he was one of the brave ones who fought for the Union and the homes of the people, under Captain Hoover and took part in the border warfare. In 1875 he went to California, and two years later came to Oregon, settling in Hillsboro. There he wrought at his trade until 1895, when he brought his family to the reservation where they all received their allotments. Since that time all have been employed in the work of improvement and on June 16, 1902, the father and beloved husband was called to the world beyond.

On September 24, 1878, Mr. Riley married Miss Olive L. Meek, daughter of the Hon. J. L. and Virginia Meek. The fruit of this union is as follows, Stanley M., born October 3, 1879; Kate Francis, born August 9, 1885, and died February 7, 1895; Virginia Belle, born March 7, 1887. All were born in Glencoe, Oregon. Mr. Riley was a member of the G. A. R., and also of the I. O. O. F. He was allied with the Republican party and took an intelligent part in the issues of the day, being justice of the peace in Washington county, Oregon, in 1881. The family have allotments amounting to three hundred and twenty acres and handle cattle and hogs, while they carry on a general farming business.

WILLIAM A. WRIGHT. Prominent as one of the business men of the reservation country, successful in his endeavors, upright and faithful in his walk, a man of many friends and standing well, the subject of this article should be mentioned as one of the representative men of the county and with pleasure we accord him such.

William A. Wright was born in Morgan county, Ohio, on December 11, 1850, being the son of Charles S. and Deborah (Oliver) Wright. The father was born in the same county; his father came to that place in a two-wheeled cart from Pennsylvania and died in Oregon, aged ninety-three. Our subject's parents are living near him. His mother was born in Marietta, February 8, 1831. In 1853, the family went to Wisconsin, where our subject was reared and educated. When he was twenty-one the family came to Washington county, Oregon, and there the father bought land. In 1876, they all came to Columbia county, Washington, near Dayton; the father, this son and a brother took land, where they busied themselves with farming until 1887, when our subject sold out and went to Whitman county. In 1893 all was lost and he went to Idaho. Then came two years of renting Indian land and when the reservation opened Mr. Wright secured a good quarter which he improved and sold in 1901. Then he erected a fine flouring mill in Dublin, with an output capacity of sixty barrels per day, it being supplied with all the latest improvements and is one of the finest and most complete mills in the state. Mr. Wright is now giving his attention to the operation of this plant, meeting with good success and being favored with an ever increasing patronage. He has three brothers, Davis S., George W., and Amos A.

On November 17, 1872, Mr. Wright married Miss Ella, daughter of Solomon and Lucetta (Zachary) Emrick. Mr. and Mrs. Emrick came overland in 1843 with ox teams. The father was a native of Illinois and the mother of Kentucky. Mrs. Wright was born in Washington county, Oregon, on July 28, 1856, and received a common schooling. They have five children living, Charles W., a farmer and owner of the ferry at Agatha; Harry S., engineer in the mill at Dublin; Henrietta, deceased, wife of Robt. Hall; Earl, at home; Myrtle, wife of William Evans, Willola: Cora, wife of Oliver Anderson, on the reservation; May, an adopted child, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are members of the Christian church. Mr. Wright is an active and stanch Republican, being always a delegate and a potent influence in the campaigns. He is an advocate of good schools, general improvements, better roads and is a progressive and enterprising man.

GEORGE P. DALE AND CHARLES H. DALE are two of the well known citizens of the vicinity of Leland, having a ranch in company adjoining the town on the west. They have one hundred and twenty acres and utilize it mostly in raising wheat, but handle about ten acres to orchard. They are expecting to go more extensively to raising hogs, as it seems wise to feed as much of the grain as possible to stock.

Charles H.Dale was born inMcKeesport, Pennsylvania, on March 18, 1867, being the son of George P. and Jennie (Miller) Dale, natives of the same state. The mother died when our subject was two days old; he being an only child. He was raised by his grandmother until ten and then he went to live with his father, who married a second time. The father was a expert ship builder and served in government employ much of the time. He is now in this capacity in San Francisco. Charles gained his education from the public schools and when he was thirteen the family went to Arkansas and the father did ship work on the Mississippi river. He worked on the government steamers, where our subject served as waiter, later as second cook and finally as head cook. In 1885 they all came to Sprague, Washington, where the father took a ranch. They farmed and the father wrought in the railroad shops part of the time. In 1888 Charles H. went to Colton and ranched for some time. About 1892 the father went to Portland and took up ship building again and our subject freighted, rode the range and farmed and did various other work in the Coeur d' Alene country, at Dayton, Sprague, in the John Day country and finally came to Leland, where he and his father bought their present ranch.

On March 6, 1895, Mr. Dale married Miss Edith, daughter of Oxford B. and Adelia (Perkins) Owens. She was born in Pendleton in 1876 and the wedding occurred in Sprague. Mr. Owens crossed the plains with ox teams in 1849 to California and died in Pendleton in 1894. He was a prominent stock man there and had suffered great hardship in the Indian troubles. Mrs. Dale has one brother, George, in the U. S. army in the Philippines; and one sister, Lenore, wife of W. E. Lloyd, in Lewiston. Three children have been born to this marriage, George P., Bradford G., and William. Mr. Dale is a member of the K. P., Kendrick Lodge No. 23, and of the I. O. O. F., Juliaette, Lodge No. 45. Mrs. Dale is a member of the Methodist church. She was a graduate of the high school in Pendleton and was a compositor on the East Oregonian.

George P. Dale enlisted in the Civil war on January 5, 1863, being in Company G, First Regular Maryland Infantry, under Captain I. H. Stonebreaker. He was discharged July 2, 1865, having fought in the principal battles between those dates. He was at the second Bull Run and in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded several times, but never left the front although shot through the hand. He left the war broken in health and has been much incapacitated by his arduous labors and rigorous service.

HENRY A. MORGAN. In the person of the subject of this sketch we have one of Nez Perces county's active, enterprising, successful, and capable agriculturists, dairymen and stockmen. His abode is six miles south from Genesee, and there he has a farm of two hundred acres of well tilled soil, a fine home in every respect, with substantial out buildings of all kinds necessary to the successful operation of his estate; he handles many cattle, horses, and hogs. Mr. Morgan was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, on February 3, 1858, being the son of John C. and Ruth L. (Courser) Morgan, natives of Canada, who removed to North Dakota in 1880, where the father died in 1896, and the mother in the following year, being buried in the Arvilla cemetery in Grand Forks county. Henry A. was educated in his native place and also in New London, Minnesota, where the parents removed previous to going to North Dakota. He remained with his father until he had reached his twenty-first year and then went with him to North Dakota and there took a homestead, bought as much more and used half for pasture and half for production of the fruits of the field; there he toiled until thirteen years had elapsed, when he sold out and spent one year in the butcher business and then two years in machine selling. After that he worked for the Great Northern railroad for five years and then came west and located six miles south from Genesee, where we find him at the present time. He bought a quarter section and filed on forty more and has devoted his time and attention to general farming and raising stock. He has made his estate a fine rural abode, having added all improvements commensurate with its extent that taste and necessity demand and he is one of the leading men of the community. Fraternally, Mr. Morgan is affiliated with the M. W. A. and he and his wife are also members of the Methodist church.

The marriage of Mr. Morgan was to Miss Alice A., daughter of W. B. and Martha L. (Swift) Reed, natives of Kentucky and immigrants to Minnesota in 1867, where they still reside. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have been blessed with five children, Eli C., Arthur H., Edith M., Charles W., and Ruth. Mr. Morgan has demonstrated his ability and wisdom in the success that he has achieved and he fully deserves the prominent place he holds in the esteem and respect of his fellows.

ANDREW O. CHRISTENSON. This well-to-do and enterprising farmer of Nez Perces county is richly deserving of consideration in this volume of his county's history since he has labored faithfully and deservingly in this section for its improvement and upbuilding, maintaining meanwhile a good reputation and doing good work on his estate of three hundred and twenty acres, four miles southwest from Genesee, where he operates a first class farm in a commendable manner. He was born in Winnebago county, Wisconsin, in May, 1859, being the son of Andrew and Tona (Olson) Christenson, natives of Norway, but immigrants to Wisconsin in 1854, where the father engaged in farming and the mercantile pursuit. He wrought there until the time of his death, which occurred in 1884. The mother died in 1888 in Latah county, whither she had gone to live with her children. At the age of seventeen our subject came to the west, landing in Walla Walla in the centennial year. Two years were spent in lumbering and then he went to Nez Perces county and took a homestead and timber claim, one and one half miles distant from his present abode. He afterward sold the improvements on these places and returned to Walla Walla to lumber in the Cascade and Blue mountains. For five years he followed this stirring industry and then in 1884 bought back one of the places he sold; then, having married, he settled down on their present place, which was given to his wife by her father. Thus our subject is handling one half section of land and gains abundant returns of crops, while he also pays considerable attention to raising stock, being successful in both lines of industry.

On July 14, 1881, at Lewiston, Idaho, Mr. Christenson married Miss Johana, a native of Wisconsin and daughter of Benjamin and Johana Thompson, natives of Norway. To this happy marriage there have been born three children, Emma E., Clarence E., and Harvey G. Mr. Thompson came west with his family in 1878, his wife having died in Wisconsin in 1859, being buried in Winnebago county, and here he homesteaded the place where our subject now lives, and at the time of his death, which occurred on October 16, 1884, he gave the farm to Mrs. Christenson. His remains were buried in the Genesee cemetery; he was a good man and a patriotic citizen. Mr. Christenson is a member of the W. of W., Grenadier Lodge No. 249. He has served for fourteen years on the school board, also as road supervisor and is one of the substantial and prominent men of his section, being highly esteemed and manifesting those qualities of worth that characterize the true man and the loyal citizen.

WILLIAM R. GIBBS. While there are some excellent stockmen and agriculturists in Nez Perces county, it is fitting that the subject of this sketch be accorded position with the leaders, for he has manifested a stirring energy, wisdom and progressiveness in his career which has been fraught with abundant success, especially in this county.

William R. Gibbs was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, on February 24, 1861, being the son of Thomas L. and Adeline (Howell) Gibbs, natives of North Carolina. The father was born in 1832, being one of triplets. He and his two brothers were so near alike that people could not tell the difference. They are all carpenters and living in Wilkes county still. The mother of our subject was born in 1839 and still lives. Her parents were pioneers of North Carolina. Our subject was educated in his native place and remained there with his parents until he was twenty-two. At that age he went to the Pocahontas coal mines in Virginia and wrought for one year, when he returned home. Then the desire to see the west was the main thing that led him to Nez Perces county and in 1886, he engaged in the stock business here and two years later he took land. Since that time he has been one of the active factors in building up this country and he is to-day one of the heavy land owners in the vicinity. He has three farms, one all under cultivation and well improved with buildings, while another has one hundred acres under cultivation and the third is all fenced and used for pasture. Mr. Gibbs is investing more and more in land and stock. He also handled a mercantile business and a hotel and livery stable in Morrow, but recently sold them all and is now devoting himself to his stock and land. At present he is making his home in Morrow and is one of the leading citizens and a man who commands the respect of all. Mr. Gibbs is a member of the I. O. O. F. He is a stanch Democrat with energy and able to give a reason for his political faith. His party nominated him for sheriff of Nez Perces county but with the ticket he suffered defeat. Mr. Gibbs has the following brothers and sisters: Maggie Davis, who died in this county two years since; Nancy Walker, Sarah Gibbs, Ellen Davis, Martin, Thomas, all in North Carolina. Mr. Gibbs is one of the most active workers for good schools in the district and is always allied on the side of advancement and those measures which are for the general welfare.

HON. JOSEPH L. MEEK will live in the memory of the northwest as long as worthy descendants of noble pioneers are interested in the achievements of those intrepid men and women who gave to us this grand country. He was one of the most unique and daring characters in the entire northwest and his name is indissolubly linked with its history as his deeds and accomplishments are with its subjugation and civilization. Since it is utterly impossible for us in this capacity to give a complete history of a man of national reputation and so prominent as he, as it would take a whole volume to accomplish this interesting undertaking, we will give an epitome.

Joseph L. Meek was born in Virginia on February 9, 1810, and was a cousin of President Polk. He inherited the stirring spirit of the old Virginia chevaliers and in March, 1829, went to the Rockies and for eleven years was a hunter and trapper. Personally, he was a man above six feet in his stockings, well formed and active as a deer, while his spirit never knew fear. These qualities coupled with his love for adventure and the wilds of the west led him to take hold of his chosen life with a zest and keen relish and he was always known as one of the most daring of frontiersmen, skillful and sagacious, unconquered by fatigue or hardship and always ready for the most dangerous exploit or expedition. Being well endowed with natural talent and passing a life of constant adventure and thrilling escapes, his bright memory could give the exact accounts which Frances Fuller Victor wove into the entrancing volume, River of the West. Later in life, Mr. Meek delivered a very interesting and taking lecture, entitled "From the Wigwam to the Whitehouse;" being accounts of his various experiences. At one time he held a seat in the lower house at Washington and on August 14, 1848, was appointed by President Polk United States Marshal of Oregon, it being then organized. He returned to Oregon and filled the office with efficiency until 1853 and then he retired to private life. At the time of the Whitman massacre, Jo Meek was sent by the provincial legislature to Washington to announce the tidings and lay the matter before the president and also to gain such legislation as could be given for the benefit of the west. He accomplished the trip across the Rockies in the dead of winter and on to Washington in an incredibly short time, where he was a guest in the Whitehouse. His stay there is a matter of history and when the early days of autumn came, he bade farewell to the scenes of the nation's capital, accepted the commission from President Polk, and turned his face toward the weary trials of the west and bivouacked later where rolls the Oregon, in the land where he had achieved and was to achieve much for the advancement of the country and the making of a state.

Adapting himself to the cause he had taken up, Mr. Meek married a native woman, who was murdered by the Indians. He married a second time and later took as his wife a maiden of sixteen years, whom he named Virginia, in honor of his native state. She was born in the year 1820 on Clearwater river near the present site of Kamiah and was a full blood Nez Perce. To this couple were born the following issue, Courtney W., Olive L., wife of Wm. Riley, Jennie, wife of Chas. Newhard, Joseph L., Stephen A. D. They all have good allotments of land in Idaho and possess the spirit of their father.

On January 20, 1875, Mr. Meek was called to depart this life and his last hours were spent on the old donation claim in Washington county, Oregon. His wife died March 5, 1900, aged eighty; she had been a faithful companion in all his labors and achievements in Oregon.

JOHN LIVENGOOD is one of the pioneers of the reservation, having located on his present farm on November 18, 1895, the day the reservation was thrown open for settlement. He has devoted himself to farming and stockraising since that time and has had abundant success in it all.

John Livengood was born in Indiana, on March 19, 1854, the son of David and Elizabeth (Tilery) Livengood, of German descent and natives of Pennsylvania and Kentucky, respectively. Our subject was educated in the public schools in his native place and in 1874 he moved to Topeka, Kansas, where he farmed and raised stock for seventeen years. In 1890 he crossed the plains to Moscow, and there farmed. Soon, however, he was at Leland in the freighting business. This was the home of the family until the reservation opened and then he came to his present place about two miles northwest from Mohler and took a homestead. At this time Mr. Livengood had a race to secure his land but his skill and grit gave him success and he got the prize. Among other improvements, he has doubtless the best well on the reservation, it costing over five hundred dollars. The estate is one of great value and has been improved in excellent shape. He and his sons farm this with enough rented land to make nine hundred acres and last year their threshing bill alone, exclusive of all other expenses was thirteen hundred dollars, which indicates the mammoth business they are handling.

In Topeka, Kansas, on November 2, 1877, Mr. Livengood married Miss Emma A. Ferguson, a native of Cass county, Missouri, and to them have been born the following children: Arthur T., Walter W., Ella M., wife of Robert Read, at Prescott, Washington; Otto, Nora P., Urban, Ernest. The two eldest sons are married. Mr. Livengood is a Democrat in national politics but in other matters he always votes for the man.

ANDREW E. ROBBINS is one of the industrious and stirring men of Nez Perces county and by his skill in handling the resources of the country and by his thrift he has accumulated a good holding in this world's goods in the years in which he has domiciled here. He was born in Overton county, Tennessee, in 1863, being the son of Preston and Sinda (Rucart) Robbins, both of whon died when he was small. He was then placed with relatives and to use his expression, "I had to dig for a living" and continued in this strenuous line until grown to manhood. Being thus associated with others his education was neglected and he has had to secure training in later years. When eighteen years old he came out in the world for himself and commenced to work for wages. Then he teamed and later farmed for himself. After some time in these two occupations he came to Seattle and there teamed for some time. Next we see him in Prescott, Washington, where he farmed for four years, and then located a homestead in the Weippe country, which he relinquished back to the government later, and in 1898 he came to Leland and located one hundred and forty-four acres three miles south of this place. He devoted himself to improving and developing it and has a good place. He also handles considerable stock and in January, 1903, he came to Leland and bought the only hotel in the place and since that time he has been managing it. He made this last move for the purpose of giving his children schooling.

On November 13, 1879, Mr. Robbins married Miss Sarah, daughter of V. V. and Frankie (Ashburn) Vaughn. The wedding occurred in Overton county, Tennessee, and Mrs. Robbins is a native of the same state. Nine children have been born to this union, named as follows: Laura A., Minnie A., Emma L., Addie A., Echo H., Idaho V., Zelma F., Granville, deceased, and an infant son not named. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins are members of the Presbyterian church and are devout and exemplary people.

F. B. PRINE is one of the early pioneers in Oregon and his name is immovably printed in the history of the state and his works, as a courageous and hardy frontiersman, have accomplished much for the upbuilding and civilization of the state. He was born in Missouri, in 1841, the son of Frank and Elsie (Dealey) Prine. In 1853, he came overland to Oregon and settled in Linn county. There he received his education and remained until 1868, in which year he came where Prineville is now situated, settled, located the town and named it. He remained there until 1875 and then went to Silver City and mined, later sought the precious metal in Boise, after which he settled in Weston, Oregon, and opened a shop. Mr. Prine had previously became a skilled blacksmith and for twenty-five years he beat the anvil in Weston to the time of honest industry and skillful work, being one of the substantial and respected citizens. Then, it being 1902, he became animated with the spirit of migration and Lapwai was the fortunate town to receive his residence. He opened a shop and at once had a good business and since that time he has continued here giving his attention to his trade. In 1862, Mr. Prine had passed through this section and in 1865 he soldiered here for eleven months.

In 1867 occurred the marriage of Mr. Prine and Miss Eliza Sylvester, a native of England, and to them have been born two children, Frank D., the first white child born in Prineville; Cora Bell, now the wife of Clifford Tucker, at Weston. The son is married and lives in British Columbia. Mr. Prine is a man of good substantial qualities and has made a first class record and done a worthy labor in his various capacities on the frontier and in building up the country.

FRANK E. HARRIS. The excellent ability and industry of our subject coupled with integrity and geniality have lead him to give strict attention to a thriving business guided by a skillful hand, and have given him the excellent prestige which he enjoys at this time together with the good will and esteem of all.

Frank T. Harris was born in Highland, Wisconsin, on June 21, 1874, being the son of William and Catherine (Sleep) Harris, natives of England. They were married in Wisconsin and the mother died in Darlington, in that state, in June, 1884, aged twenty-nine. The father of our subject came to the United States with his father when he was a boy, settled in Wisconsin and there learned the shoemaker's trade. He now owns and operates a shoe store in Pullman, Washington. Our subject attended school in Wisconsin until eleven and then came to Genesee, where he studied some more. The father operated a drug store and Frank early learned the apothecary's art. In 1893 he went to Spokane and engaged with the Spokane Drug Company, a wholesale and retail concern. He served a proper time there and then spent one year in surveying. When the call came for troops in the Philippine struggle, he pressed to the front and enlisted in Company D, First Idaho Volunteers, under Captain Edward Smith of Moscow, and Colonel Figginson. Mr. Harris participated in the first battle of Manila and continued in the conflict until its surrender. He was in thirteen battles and skirmishes. On August 25, 1899, he returned and in the same year he bought the business which his father was conducting in Leland, he having come thither from Genesee. Our subject has two brothers and one sister, William, in North Dakota; Frederick, in Spokane; Cora, wife of H. Sampson, at Harrison, Idaho. He also has two half-brothers and two half-sisters, John, in North Yakima; Herbert, in Pullman; Beulah and Ethel, with their parents.

On April 30, 1901, Mr. Harris married Mabel, daughter of Mary (Johnson) Chapman. The father died in Dixie, Washington, in April, 1899. The mother is still living in Washington. Mrs. Harris was born in Iowa, on June 15, 1884, and her wedding occurred in Lewiston. She was educated in the graded and high school in Lewiston. Mr. Harris is a member of the I. O. O. F., Leland Lodge No. 90.

GEORGE A. CHAPMAN, a farmer and stockman, whose efforts of industry and thrift have been rewarded with a good property holding, lives one fourth of a mile west from Fletcher, and is one of the substantial and leading men of the section. He was born in Tama county, Iowa, on June 9, 1874, being the son of Thomas C. and Matilda J. (Hall) Chapman, whose efforts of industry and thrift have been parents were pioneers of that state and Iowa. The mother of our subject was born in 1848, in Pennsylvania, and her parents were pioneers in that state and Iowa, and her mother is living in Iowa aged over eighty. When George was ten the family came to Buffalo county, Nebraska, and there he completed his education. In 1893, he came with his parents to Troy, Latah county, and in April, 1896, took his present place as a homestead. This has been the home since that time and it is a well improved and valuable place, sixty acres being under cultivation, while he also farms eighty acres adjoining. He handles many hogs, having fine thoroughbred Poland China and Berkshire.

On July 11, 1900, Mr. Chapman married Miss Norah E., daughter of Richard C. and Mary E. (Tipton) Young. Mrs. Chapman was born in Dayton, Washington, on September 3, 1879, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Jonathan T., Frank, Edward R., Alexander, David H., John W., Charles C., James J., India Dove, Amelia E. Clark, Rosie B. Young, Maggie J. Davis. Mr. Chapman has seven brothers and sisters, Agnes S. Willoughby, William E., Roy T., Irene Nichols, Lola, Minnie Regan, Jessie. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, Ivan S., born April 7, 1901; Edna, born May 17, 1902. Mr. Chapman is a Republican and active in the campaigns. Fraternally he is affiliated with the W. W., Phiney Camp, No. 492, of Fletcher. Mr. Young was born in Rush county, Indiana, on June 11, 1831, and his wife was born in Ohio, October 28, 1834. Mr. Young's father, Alex Young, came came from his native land, Scotland, to Virginia, thence to Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, thence to Fleming county, Kentucky, where he married. He took part in the war of 1812 and received a forty acre tract of land in Washington county, Iowa, for his services. Thither the family came and Richard was reared and educated there. He enlisted in the Eighth Iowa Infantry on August 10, 1861, and was honorably discharged on June 11, 1864, having done excellent service. He was in Missouri under Fremont and McKenzie, participated in the conflict of Pittsburg Landing, was captured and languished at Macon, Georgia, for sixty days before he was exchanged and his company reorganized at St. Louis. He fought through the battles on the Mississippi, was at Champion Hill and Vicksburg. His company was after Johnson when he retreated. He was discharged at Davenport, Iowa, on account of sickness and continued to live in Iowa until 1869. Then came a move to Kansas, whence he came to Oregon, in June, 1877, following which he went to Columbia county, Washington, and finally to Whitman county. In June, 1897, he removed to Fletcher, where he now resides.

WILLIAM A. INGLE. Among the pioneers of this portion of Nez Perces county should be mentioned the estimable gentleman and thrifty farmer and stockman whose name is at the head of this article and who has labored for the development of the resources of the country in a becoming and wise manner for a good many years, having now the need of a good property which his industry and thrift have accumulated. Mr. Ingle was born in Benton county, Arkansas, on May 25, 1856, being the son of James T. and Nancy J. (Brantley) Ingle, natives of Tennessee. They emigrated to Arkansas and there, in 1900, the mother died and was buried in the Bloomfield cemetery, and the father still lives in Bloomfield. William A. received a common school education and remained with his father until the age of eighteen, when he married Miss Malinda P. Voding, and the same year, 1874, came with his bride to Walla Walla, where he remained for one year and then removed to southern Idaho, remaining one year, when he went back to Arkansas. That state was his home until 1883, when he again came west, purchasing eighty acres where he now lives, about three miles south from Genesee. He has added since one hundred and thirty acres by purchase. His estate is one of great fertility and is in a high state of cultivation, producing abundant crops. In addition to general farming and raising fruit, he handles a bunch of cattle, having about forty head and he sells a number every year. Mr. Ingle has fine and comfortable buildings and is a wise farmer, having everything cared for in good shape.

To Mr. and Mrs. Ingle there have been born the following children: Charles S., married to Tilda Tunning and living in this county; Maud L., wife of James Willows and living in this county; Thomas E., living in Genesee; Bonnie E., Minnie J. and Iva, the last three living at home and attending school. Mrs. Ingle's parents, Elga and Jane (Gleen) Voding, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively, moved to Arkansas where the father died and is interred in the Decatur cemetery. The mother is still living, her home being in Maple City, Kansas. Mr. Ingle is a member of the W. of W. and also of the Christian church, while his wife affiliates with the Methodist church. Mr. Ingle is one of the substantial men of the county and has demonstrated his ability and worth in his walk, both in business operations and in social life, as well as in manifestation of true Christian uprightness and candor.

ELECTUS M. FROST. A pioneer of various sections, a veteran of the terrible war of the Rebellion, a capable and public minded citizen, and now one of the well to do farmers in the vicinity of Melrose, the subject of this article is granted consideration in this volume by right.

Electus M. Frost was born in Bradford county, Pennsylvania, on June 22, 1841, being the son of John O. and Jane (Wilsie) Frost, natives of Connecticut, and died in 1857 and 1859, respectively. The father was born in 1808. Electus received his education in Pennsylvania and when sixteen his father died and he and his older brother were called upon to support the family. Two years later the mother died and our subject went to do for himself. He learned the shoemaker's trade and wrought at it until the breaking out of the war, when he laid all aside and enlisted in Company I, Sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under General Meade. He also served under General McClellan. He participated in the battles of Gainesville and some skirmishes and in 1862, he was discharged for disability. Returning home he wrought at his trade until 1879, having taken a journey to California in the meantime, the year of that excursion being 1872. In 1879 he bought a farm and tilled it until 1887, when he came west to Latah county and bought a farm of two hundred and eighty-five acres. He did general farming and raised horses, and did well. In 1893 he was pinched in the crash and sold one hundred and twenty-five acres of land. He made that his home until 1901, when he came to the reservation and secured a quarter where he now lives, one and one half miles south of Melrose. He also owns the quarter in Latah county.

In 1864 Mr. Frost married Miss Mary J., daughter of Joseph and Eliza A. (Bryan) Warren. The father was born in Sullivan county, Pennsylvania, in 1798, being the first male white child born there. His parents were pioneers there from England in 1796 and for one year they did not see a white woman. The mother of Mrs. Frost was born in Pennsylvania, in 1808, of English extraction. Mrs. Frost was born in Pennslvania, Sullivan county, in 1844 and in her younger years was a teacher in the schools. She had one sister and one brother, both being dead. Mr. Frost has one sister and three brothers. Mary Nichols, in South Carolina; Clayton, John O. and Henry. The brothers were all through the Civil war. To Mr. and Mrs. Frost there have been born six children: Frank, at Ithica, New York, conductor on a railroad; Cora Collins, in Latah county; John, deceased; Emma Fritz and Maud Thomas, in Nez Perces county;

Fred, at home. Mr. Frost is a member of the Masonic order and also of the G. A. R. Mrs. Frost is a devout member of the Methodist church. Mr. Frost is a Republican and is an active participant in all questions of government and of local interest.

GEORGE MUCKEN. The reservation country shows some of the finest tilled farms in the county and among this number we should mention that owned by the subject of this article, whose labor and skill have been well manifested here in his achievements.

George Mucken was born in Prussia, on the Rhine, on September 29, 1865, being the son of John P. and Susan Mucken, natives of the same country. Our subject was educated in the common schools, and at the age of twenty-one joined the regular army and served two years. In 1892 he started from Bremen to New York, leaving his parents and two brothers in the old country. He came on to Stearns county, Minnesota, and later to Whitman county, where he wrought for wages until the reservation opened. He was on hand and selected his present place, about three miles northwest from Nezperce and filed the nineteenth day of November, 1893. He had only five dollars in cash, but commenced the good work of improvement with a will and an empty pocket. He erected a small cabin and was soon at work for a salary, using the money to improve with until he got a start and then devoted himself entirely to the cultivation and handling of the estate. The result is that he has a good and valuable farm. In the fall of 1898, Mr. Mucken went back to Germany for a visit and had a very enjoyable time. He returned the following spring and went on with his farm improvements.

On April 18, 1900, Mr. Mucken married Miss Mary E. Seubert, a native of Bavaria, Germany, who came with her parents to the United States when she was thirteen. They settled in Illinois, later went to South Dakota and thence to the reservation in the spring of 1902. Mrs. Mucken had come three years previous to that. One child has been born to this union, Louisa S. Mr. Mucken and his wife are devout members of the Catholic church and are of excellent standing in the community.

JOSEPH W. STONEBURNER, M. D., is one of the popular and able physicians of Nez Perces county and because of his ability, integrity, and skill, he enjoys a fine practice, having his office and headquarters in Leland.

Joseph W. Stoneburner was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, on February 11, 1865, being the son of Israel and Catherine (Welty) Stoneburner, natives of Ohio. The paternal grandfather was a native of Virginia, married in Harper's Ferry to Susan Sowders, whose ancestors were distillers for generations. He was a Dunkard preacher. The father of our subject is living in Decatur, Indiana, aged eighty-eight, being a retired farmer. He had three brothers who were preachers in the Dunkard church, one of whom lived to be ninety-two years old. The mother of our subject died on November 28, 1870. Her father, Peter Welty, was of German descent and a native of Virginia. He was a captain in the Revolution and was at Valley Forge and crossed the Delaware on the memorable night of the attack on the Hessians. His son, Colonel Seth Welty, was a colonel in the Civil war and is now a prominent attorney in Logan, Ohio. Our subject attended district school until sixteen, then entered Valparaiso college, where he studied two years, after which he learned the art of steam engineering. During his labor in this calling he saved money enough to educate a brother and also to put himself through his professional course. For five years he read medicine and then entered the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, whence he graduated in three years. He practiced in Berne, Indiana, from July, 1892, to 1898, then came west to Leland and since that time has been doing a good practice here. Dr. Stoneburner has three brothers and two sisters, Jesse W., a preacher in the Dunkard church; Abraham, farmer; John B., a talented musician and handling a music store; Mary, wife of G. W. Woodward, a merchant; Allie, wife ot W. Kitson, all in Decatur. Dr. Stoneburner is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Kendrick No. 26; of the I. O. O. F., being noble grand of Leland, No. 90; of the K. P., being past chancellor of Berne Lodge, No. 96, in Indiana. He is a stanch Democrat and has been a delegate to the state and county conventions and this past year was the strongest opponent to Hunt. The Doctor is popular and well liked as his good standing and gratifying practice testify.

HON. WILLIAM L. THOMPSON is a man of decided popularity among the people of Nez Perces county and he deserves the same for he has been a laborer here for many years, has demonstrated himself to be possessed of keen business ability, has manifested upright principles and integrity and has shown forth in sterling worth in all his ways.

William L. Thompson was born in Wapello, Louisa county, Iowa, on July 18, 1857, being the son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Willis) Thompson, natives of Ohio. The father was born in 1820 and died in 1892. The mother was born in 1822 and is still living. Our subject was reared in his native place and labored on the farm and attended school, then earned money by teaching to gain an academic course at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and then earned more to put him through the scientific course in the Valparaiso school in Indiana. He followed teaching until he was twenty-seven and then set out on the journey to the great west. He finally landed in Nez Perces county and finding resources and surroundings congenial and to his liking he settled on a piece of land about three miles west from where Morrow now stands and set to the task of building a home, farming, and raising stock. He has been eminently successful in these worthy endeavors and has a fine well improved farm and considerable stock. The estate is a half section and a valuable piece of land. Mr. Thompson located the town site of Morrow in 1896, started a store and soon had a postoffice and since that time has continued as postmaster to the entire satisfaction of all. He has been active and influential in putting the educational affairs of the section in good shape both in this district and where his land is situated. Mr. Thompson sold his mercantile establishment in 1900, and since then has devoted himself to his stock and farms. He has twice been elected by the people to represent Nez Perces county in the state legislature, once in the time when Latah was set off, and once in 1894. He served his constituency to their entire satisfaction and demonstrated his ability in the halls of legislation as he had done in the quieter walks of life here.

On October 1, 1888, Mr. Thompson married Miss Estella, daughter of Hayden and Barbara Smith. The wedding occurred in Cottonwood. Mrs. Thompson was born in California on June 4, 1870, and has three brothers: W. S., J. H., and C. S., all in Nez Perces county. Mr. Thompson has the following named brothers and sisters: Mary Harkness, Nancy J. Armstrong, Laura E. Gimes, Martha L. DeGarmo, Olive C. Porter and Oliver, twins, J. F. Seven children were born to this worthy couple,Vieva, Voss, Volney, Vaguno, Vester, Verea and Vivian. Mr. Thompson was instrumental in establishing the Institute lodge of the I. O. O. F. in Morrow. His wife is a member of the Christian church and Mr. Thompson takes great interest in building up the church and helping in general progress.

JESSE P. WILLIAMS. About two miles southeast from Fairburn is to be found the home of the subject of this article. He secured his place, one hundred and sixty acres of fine timber land, under homestead right and although he has met with reverses in his labors since coming here he has gone forward with the work of improvement and will in time have one of the excellent farms of the section. He was born in Surry county, North Carolina, on February 9, 1868, being the son of Joel W. and Myrtle Lane, natives of the same county. The father was a school teacher, born in 1832 and married in 1861. The brothers and sisters of our subject are named as follows, Sarah J., wife of Frank Day and born August 5, 1864; Nannie Bush, born February 28, 1866; Mary E. McKee, born in April, 1870; Jonah, born August 12, 1874; William, born in September, 1876; Fannie, wife of Frank Randles, born in 1876, a twin of William. Our subject was left an orphan at the age of eleven, worked for strangers for a living and in the spring of 1890 came to Colfax and gained a start in working out. Then he came to Nez Perces county and settled on his present place, where he has labored since. Politically, he is a Republican.

On February 10, 1895, Mr. Williams married Miss Salina, daughter of William and Salina E. White, natives of Pennsylvania. The father served in the Rebellion. Two children have been born to this marriage, Anna G., born in Nez Perces county, November 17, 1900; William J., born July 4, 1902.

CHARLES E. MORRIS. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant space in this work to the well known and talented business man whose name initiates this paragraph for a review of his career. Mr. Morris is at present time the incumbent of the postoffice at Myrtle, where he is serving in an acceptable manner, while he also handles a general merchandise business. In this line, Mr. Morris is achieving a special success, having both the talent and the reliability to handle a successful business. He is bright in observing the class of goods needed, is quick to provide for the demands of the people, and withal is a man upon whom the people can rely, and who has won a generous patronage. This is enabling him to constantly increase his stock, which is very complete now, and thus is brought to the doors of the farmers a large assortment for them to select from, which supplies their wants cheaper than could be done by expensive trips to the city.

Charles E. Morris was born in Columbia county, Washington, on April 19, 1875, being the son of Mason and Elizabeth M. (Bramlett) Morris. He was raised in his native county and there gained his education in the graded schools. In 1886 the family came to Kendrick, and there Charles wrought with his father until of age, when he took land which he farmed until 1901, then came and bought land where he is now located. He erected a good store building and at once went into business. He has five brothers and two sisters.

On October 15, 1899, Mr. Morris married May E. Glasby, who was born in Kansas on May 16, 1883. One son, Herschel, born July 31, 1900, and a sturdy, bright boy, who promises to add laurels to the worthy labors of his ancestors, has come to bless this happy home. Mr. Morris stands exceptionally well with the people, is an affable and genial man, and a thorough business operator, being alive to the interests both of his customers as well as the extension of his trade.

THEODORE SCHLUETER is one of the younger men whose energy and skill have done a good portion in the excellent work of improving this country and building up its prosperous condition. He was born in Hanover, Germany, on May 18, 1867, being the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Genteman) Schlueter, natives of Hanover, and born October 17, 1837, and December 18,1842, respectively. The father visited the United States in 1898 and is still living in his native land. Our subject was educated and reared in his native land learning also the carpenter and cabinet maker's trades. When nineteen he came to the United States and lived in St. Louis until 1888. Then came a trip to Spokane, where he landed one week before the awful fire. He spent one year in Dakota, however, before he came to Spokane. He worked on the farm and at his trade in Spokane for a year and then went to Adams county, Washington. After two years there he went to the Blue mountains in 1891 where he remained cutting wood until 1892. He visited Uniontown, Whitman county, and in the fall of 1895, he was on the site of his present place, which adjoins Fletcher. Mr. Schlueter built the first house on the reservation, it being for Courtney Meek. In the spring of 1896, he came onto the homestead and since that time he has given himself to the work of improvement. He has a good farm, well improved and raises many thoroughbred Poland China and Berkshire hogs.

On June 7, 1900, Mr. Schlueter married Miss Cecilia J. Stollberg, daughter of Joseph and Caroline Stollberg, natives of Hanover. Mrs. Schlueter was born in Hanover, on October 6, 1874, and has the following named brothers and sisters, Alois, Edward, Joseph. Mr. Schlueter has five brothers and sisters, Frank, Henry, William, Otto, Caroline. Mr. and Mrs. Schlueter are members of the Catholic church and he is affiliated with the Catholic Foresters of America. He also belongs to the M. W. A., being secretary of the order. Mr. Schlueter is a Democrat and well posted in the matters of local import.

GEORGE GILLAND. It was in a very early day that Mr. Gilland found the "Way of the West" and since the first he has constantly remained, laboring actively and intelligently in various capacities. At the present time his home is about one mile west from Rosetta, while also he is much of the time residing in Rosetta.

George Gilland was born in Saint Catherines, Ontario, on January 4, 1830, being the son of Alexander and Alice Gilland, natives of Ireland where they were married and came to Canada shortly before our subject was born. This stanch Irish blood is one of the secrets of the sturdy qualities of our subject and of the strenuous life he has lived. His father originally spelled his name Gilliland. He died in December, 1873, aged sixty-five. He was a prominent and influential citizen in Michigan as also in other places where he resided. The mother of our subject lived with her husband three years in Canada and then they went to Brooklyn, where Mr. Gilland opened a paint factory, then operated a lumber yard, and afterwards they came to Michigan. Our subject was raised in Brooklyn until sixteen and then came with the balance of the family to Wayne county, Michigan, and settled near Detroit. Later they went to Shiawassee county and there the parents died. At the first draft of the war Mr. Gilland was taken, but his father hired a substitute for nine hundred dollars and George went free. In 1865 our subject came west and contracted ties and square timbers for the UnionPacific, remaining in this until 1868, when he made his way to Tacoma. He helped build the first sawmill there, the old Tacoma. Seattle was then a town of four hundred people. Mr. Gilland labored there and in various portions of Puget sound until 1891, excepting one year which was spent in mining in Alaska, in which trip, he was far above Klondike. In 1891 Mr. Gilland came to Moscow and two years later went to Southwick where he operated a mill for one year. Then he mined around Pierce for four years and in June, 1901, he bought his present place about one and one-half miles northwest from Ellensburg. He rents this farm, as also other property which he owns. Mr. Gilland is a heavy property owner on the Sound, having much improved property in Tacoma, Seattle and various other points, as well as considerable unimproved property. In addition he has a goodly holding in British Columbia. In all these years of toil and activity on the frontier, Mr. Gilland has never deserted the ranks of the bachelors and is still enjoying the quietude and retirement of the celibatarian. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., No. 2, at Steilacoom, Washington. In politics, Mr. Gilland is a stanch and intelligent Democrat and is able to handle the questions of the day with keen insight and discriminating judgment and is possessed of abundance of courage and ability to speak out his convictions. He is a potent factor at the conventions and is a man of extensive research and investigation, being a careful thinker and wide reader. Mr. Gilland has one brother and one sister, Edward, a wealthy and prominent farmer in Michigan; Alice, wife of Charles Darrows, a merchant in Traverse City, Michigan. Mr. Gilland has had many experiences in the frontiersman's life and if they were related would fill a volume. During the labors on the Union Pacific, he fought frequently with the Indians and once was wounded with an arrow. He has had many narrow escapes and experienced many thrilling episodes. He is a man of public spirit, is genial and affable and has hosts of warm friends. His large holdings give him ample time to travel and investigate the various lines which his desires may indicate; he has kept fully abreast of the times and is one of the substantial men of Nez Perces county, well known, highly respected and fully worthy of the unbounded confidence and esteem generously granted him by all.

WILLIAM E. STODDARD. The well known business man mentioned here is one of the promoters of enterprise and advancement in Nez Perces county in a telling manner, having been prominent in business, where he has demonstrated his ability and done a commendable work in building up the country. At present he is handling the grain warehouse for the Vollmer-Clearwater Company at Kamiah.

William E. Stoddard was born in Arlington, Van Buren county, Michigan, on June 28, 1869, being the son of Samuel and Harriet (Moden) Stoddard. The father was born in 1837, in Hartford, Connecticut. He was descended from John Stoddard, who was born in Wethersfield, Connecticut, in 1742, probably of English extraction and from that date to the present there is a full genealogical tree without a break. Our subject is thus descended from a noble ancestry and it may be said of him that he in no wise has allowed the banner to droop. The name was formerly Standard and the family dates back to William the Conqueror. Our subject's father died at Leland, on June 22, 1898. His mother was a native of England and came to the United States with her parents at the age of eight. Her parents died, the mother in January, 1900, and the father in February, 1898. William's mother lives in Benton Harbor, Michigan.

Our subject was educated in the public schools and finished his training in the Spokane Business College. When eighteen he came to Leland with his father, who took land where the present town stands. William remained on the farm until 1892, then visited in various places for a year when he returned and took charge of a grain warehouse with the Kendrick Grain Company. Following his course in the business college he managed the T. S. Cantril Mercantile Company for two and one half years, manifesting here excellent ability and gaining a gratifying success. He then operated a blacksmith shop for a time which was sold. Later, he ran on the Democratic ticket for assessor and although he was two hundred ahead of his ticket, he suffered defeat. He has always been in attendance on the county conventions and is a potent factor there. Mr. Stoddard is a member of the I. O. O. F., Leland No. 90; of the W. W., Leland Camp 327; also of the Women of Woodcraft. Circle 217. Mr. Stoddard served as justice of the peace for four years in Leland and was universally liked in this relation.

On September 1, 1898, Mr. Stoddard married Mary A., daughter of Samuel J. and Elizabeth (Harris) Richards, natives of England. The father was a miner and now is in the employ of J. P. Vollmer. The mother was married in Wisconsin and died in 1886, aged thirty-eight. Mrs. Stoddard was born in Mineral Point, Wisconsin, on January 13, 1880. She has one brother and one sister, Joseph F., a hardware merchant in Alberta; Annie L., wife of John H. Day, a shoe dealer in Mineral Point. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard, Rosetta E. and Elsworth S. Mrs. Stoddard was educated in Illinois. Mr. Stoddard owns the land over which the Kendrick tramway runs.

WILLIAM W. WRIGHT. After a long period of intelligent labor in developing and building up the various sections where he has resided, the gentleman whose name appears above is now living a quiet and retired life in Lookout, where he is also giving some attention to the duties of vegetable gardening and handles the business of a notary public.

William W. Wright was born in Marion county, Indiana, on May 6, 1839, being the son of Adam and Judith (Bollibaugh) Wright, natives of North Carolina, as also were their parents. The paternal grandfather of our subject served in the Revolution, died in Marion county aged one hundred and four in the year 1842. The father of William was a stanch Democrat, active in politics and served for sixteen years as probate judge of Marion county. He died on September 12, 1851, aged fifty-two years. The mother of our subject came from a prominent Dutch family and she died in November, 1850, aged fifty. William W. was raised in Indiana until thirteen and then came to Iowa with his brother-in-law, he being his guardian, both parents having died. This gentleman was Thomas Burns and when his ward came of age, a fair estate was delivered to him from the father's property. William remained with Mr. Burns until he was eighteen and then went to do for himself. When twenty-one he settled on the portion left him from his father's estate and later removed to Clarke county and bought land from the proceeds of the sale of the former property. Nineteen years he toiled in Clarke county and in 1882, he came to Idaho and took land near Kendrick. Seventeen years were spent there in its cultivation and he then came to Lookout, where he owns a small tract of timber land and considerable town property. Mr. Wright has one brother, Nathaniel T., with the Capital Mills Company, in San Francisco. Mr. Wright is a zealous and active Republican and has participated in the conventions, both county and state. For twenty years he did service on the school board and has also been a hard worker for good roads in the places where he has resided. Mr. Wright is a member of the Christian church and holds a life scholarship in the Bible department of the Oskaloosa College in Iowa. This was secured in 1863. He is a highly respected citizen, a man of ability and has won the esteem and approbation of the people who know him.

JAMES DENNIS. Since the early days of opening of the reservation, the subject of this sketch has toiled well here with display of wisdom and industry in the manipulation of the resources of the county and the result is that he now owns a fine farm one-half mile west from Mohler of one hundred and sixty acres and he operates eighty more.

James Dennis was born in Wyandotte county, Ohio, on August 10, 1849, being the son of Jonas I. and Sarah (Henry) Dennis, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father, who was a tanner, was born in 1814 and died in Wisconsin, on January 14, 1857. His parents were pioneers in Ohio, as he was in Wisconsin. The mother of our subject came from an old Dutch family and she died March 18, 1893. James was reared and educated in Wisconsin and when eighteen went to Marion county, Iowa. There and in Madison county he remained eleven years. In the spring of 1878, he went to Kansas and later returned to Cass county, Iowa. In 1882 he came to Cheney, Washington, with the Hoyt colony. They shipped wagons and horses to Silver Bow, Montana, and went thence over the old Mullan road to Washington. He labored at railroading near Sandpoint and in 1883 took a homestead near Oakesdale. In the spring of 1893 he sold out and bought property in Oakesdale. In 1897 Mr. Dennis leased school land where he now lives and on December 24, 1901, he purchased the same at auction. He has done excellent work in farming and enjoys the proper reward of thrift and industry.

On January 10, 1876, Mr. Dennis married Miss Ruhama R., daughter of Justus and Nancy E. (Cain) Wade. The father, a plasterer by trade, was born in 1839, and enlisted in an Iowa regiment and died from exposure in the war, in December, 1866. The mother was born on February 20, 1836, in Indiana, and now lives in Spokane. Mrs. Dennis was born in Lucas county, Iowa, on October 6, 1858, and has five brothers and sisters, George W., Justus E., Victoria Gertz, Cora Ingalls, Flora Willis. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Dennis are named as follows: John, Flora A. Baker, Mary E. McMillen, William, Margaret Long, Charles, Isaiah, Edward, Jennie, deceased, Ira. To Mr. and Mrs. Dennis one child, Nellie M. Giles, was born on May 25, 1877, who is now living in Mohler. Mr. and Mrs. Dennis are members of the Methodist church.

EDWARD J. NORTHCUTT is a veritable pioneer of the pioneers and has a history that is well worth chronicling in any volume that attempts to outline the history of Nez Perces county. He is really the father of Culdesac, which is one of his late ventures in life, his former career being spent on the frontier in all the leading western sections.

Edward J. Northcutt was born in Urbana, Ohio, on May 6, 1830, being the son of Willis and Sarah (Furman) Northcutt, farmers. The father was born in Ohio, his father being of Scotch extraction and a pioneer of that region. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio of English parentage, and their ancestors came from Kentucky and Virginia. Three children of the family are living, Charles W., a mechanic; Frances A., widow of Mr. Wheeler, residing in Tacoma; Emma M., wife of Bedford Jackson, a farmer on Cottonwood creek. Mr. Northcutt is now engaged in erecting a flour mill at Culdesac, which enterprise he is carrying on for a company, having collected twelve hundred dollars bonus for it. He is the owner of some fine residence property, also the livery barn operated by Mr. Watkins, besides other property. Mr. Northcutt helped to survey the town site and 1899 marks the date of his arrival on the spot. Mr. Northcutt has been a pioneer of the Pacific coast for over fifty-one years and always has been foremost in the good labor of developing the country and fostering industries for its upbuilding. He is now past seventy-one and is hale and hearty, being robust and ready for the activities of life. No sickness has come upon his to mar his life and he is free from all doctor bills. Mr. Northcutt in these fifty odd years has undergone deprivations and hardships that few could sustain, but he has never flinched and is now a leader in the line of progress. In 1851, Mr. Northcutt left Illinois and came with wagon train through to the coast. He crossed the Missouri where Omaha now stands and the first night out the Indians plundered the camp but because of the fierce resistance offered by the emigrants led by Mr. Northcutt they got but one steer. The next day Mr. Northcutt was chosen captain of the train, which he piloted through, having many trying experiences and some severe fighting with the Indians.

Mr. Northcutt has been married three times, and his first wife, whom he married in 1853, was the first single white woman in the Rogue river valley. He fought the Indians there and mined, and during that time drafted the first mining laws of the territory of Oregon. Much of his life has been spent in trapping and scouting and the mountain topography of the entire northwest is familiar to him. He helped to establish the post at Lapwai and was familiar with all the early history of this region.

Mr. Northcutt built the grade at Wawawai where the Palouse grain was hauled to the river before the railroads. On his farm near Pullman, Washington, Mr. Northcutt raised one hundred and one bushels of wheat on one acre, which went to the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. He is a man of sound judgement and great resources, has always labored for the good of the community where he has resided and to him is very much due for the upbuilding and progress of much of the entire northwest.

ARTHUR J. MILLS. Whatever enterprises are for the benefit of the people in general, whether good schools, good churches, or good government, they always find an ardent and intelligent champion in Mr. Mills. He is one of the progressive, reliable and capable men of the vicinity of Melrose, whose labors have assisted materially in opening the country and making a fertile land from a wilderness.

Arthur J. Mills was born in Guthrie county, Iowa, on October 20, 1867, being the son of Hadley and Margaret (Bowles) Mills, natives of Indiana. The father was born on March 16, 1844, and now lives in Lyon county, Kansas. He was a soldier in the Civil war in the Forty-sixth Iowa Regiment, under Colonel D. B. Henderson. His mother bought government land where Stuart now stands. She was born in 1845 and died in 1889. Arthur grew to the age of fifteen in Iowa, attending school and working with his father on the farm. In 1882 the family went to Kansas and settled in Jewell county and there our subject continued at school until he was twenty. At that age, he took up farming for himself. He worked one year in Cherokee county and then sold out and came to Latah county. In the spring of 1897 he came to the reservation country and since that time he has continued here in the good work of development and improvement. His farm of eighty acres lies about one mile southwest from Melrose and is one of the places that produces abundant crops of diversified grains, while also Mr. Mills raises cattle and hogs. On February 22, 1897, at Moscow, Latah county, Idaho, Mr. Mills married Cora A. McKinzie, daughter of Sterling N. and Rebecca (Ousterhouse) Bunce, and to them two children have been born, Margie E. and Edward S. Mr. Bunce is a farmer in Nez Perces county and he and his wife were born in Massachusetts. Mrs. Mills was born in Michigan in 1874 and she has the following brothers and sisters: Clara Buttrey, Grace Rancier, Mattie Buttrey Bernie. Mr. Mills has two brothers and two sisters, Emery H., Rhoda M. Dobbins, William C. and Edith Mills. Mr. Mills is a member of the I. O. O. F., and the W. W. at Melrose. He is a Democrat, but does not press for preferment in political matters. Mr. Mills is of excellent standing in the community and is a good, reliable and capable citizen.

Mr. and Mrs. Mills by former marriages have children as follows: Irma, Earl H. and Maude McKenzie.

WILLIAM TIMMONS. A progressive and successful farmer and stockman, living on a farm secured by the homestead right from the wilds of the reservation, the worthy subject of this article is to be numbered among the leading citizens of his community and to be accredited with much good labor wrought both for his private business enterprises and for the advancement of the county.

William Timmons was born in Marion, Linn county, Iowa, on January 10, 1844, being the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Mallett) Timmons. The father was born in Ohio, in 1811, and died in 1898, having been one of the earliest settlers in the territory of Iowa. The mother of our subject was born in Kentucky in 1821 and died in 1887. Her people were also natives of Kentucky and removed to Indiana on pack horses. This daughter was thirteen before she saw a wagon. Our subject grew to manhood in the vicinity of Colesburg, Iowa, and there received his education and assisted his father until he was twenty-one. He then bought a farm in Nodaway county, Missouri, and tilled it for two years. Next we see him in Floyd county, Iowa, and five years later, he went thence to Wayne county, Nebraska, with his two brothers, Henry and Stephen, and for three years tilled the soil there. He removed then to Grant, on the Columbia river in Oregon, thence to Adams county, Washington, then to Lincoln county. Six years later he went to Cornwall, Latah county, and when the reservation opened he settled on his present place, two miles southwest from Melrose. He has a good farm, raises cereals and flax, with hogs and cattle and is prosperous in his labors.

On March 28, 1869, Mr. Timmons married Miss Mary C., daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Ratibaugh) Anderson, the wedding occurring in Nodaway county, Missouri. Mr. Anderson was a farmer and carpenter: he and his wife were descended from the Dutch in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Timmons was born in Pennsylvania, in 1843, and has the following sisters: Kate Shaffer, Ann Overdorf, Susie Bishop. Mr. Timmons has the following brothers and sisters: Benjamin, Stephen, Jesse, Henry and Edward. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Timmons: Lizzie Clark, in Washington; Hattie Lowary, in Nez Perces county; Addie Hill, in Nez Perces county; Jacob, Thomas, Ruth, Robert, all at home. Mr. Timmons is a member of the I. O. O. F., at Melrose, while in political matters, he is an active and stanch Republican. He is treasurer of the school board and has ever been a zealous advocate for better education for the rising generations, and to that end better schools.

WILLIAM C. BUTLER. Our subject has not only been a pioneer in various sections of the west in doing agricultural work, but is at the present time operating the first meat market opened in Gifford, where he is doing a good business. Mr. Butler is well known in Nez Perces county and has a first class standing, is well respected by all and is a man of worth and integrity.

William C. Butler was born in Linn county, Oregon, on December 9, 1869, being the son of Jason R. and Mary (Fields) Butler. The parents, as also the two brothers and six sisters of our subject, are mentioned elsewhere in this work. William C. was raised and educated in Linn county and Benton county, Oregon, and when eighteen he came in company with his brother, T. M., to Grant county and there followed ranch work for two years. When twenty-one he came to the vicinity of Juliaetta and wrought on a farm until 1894, then rented with his brother one year on the reservation and also filed on a quarter section, which he cultivated for six years. This land was sold in the spring of 1902, and Mr. Butler bought a ranch near Juliaetta, which he is overseeing at the present time in connection with his labors in the meat market. Mr. Butler owns a residence and a good business establishment in Gifford and is one of the substantial men of that town. Mr. Butler is a Republican, and in school matters, as also in reference to roads, he has done much hard labor for betterment and upbuilding, being a man of enterprise and progressive ideas.

On July 22, 1894, Mr. Butler married Miss Prudie E. Richardson, who was born in Nez Perces county, on November 20, 1860. Four children have been born to this marriage, Mary S., Marion, deceased, John R. and Floyd A. Mrs. Butler has one sister and one brother, George W., residing near Juliaetta: Ida M., wife of Senator Louis Clark, who is mentioned in this work. Her parents are John A. and Susannah (Harrington) Richardson. The father was a pioneer in Oregon and participated in the early Indian wars, and now lives in Juliaetta.

THADDEUS T. MAYNARD. This well-to-do farmer and highly respected citizen is one whose labors have made Nez Perces county what she is today, one of the leading counties in the entire state. He took land three and one-half miles west from Melrose in 1897, it being wild, and since then he has transformed it into a fertile and valuable farm, very productive and tilled in a becoming manner.

Thaddeus T. Maynard was born in Yam Hill county, Oregon, on March 25, 1869, being the son of John W. and Mary (Merchant) Maynard. The father was born in Ohio, served in the Home Guards in Iowa, not being able to enlist in the regular army on account of his youth. His brother served four years in the Civil war. The mother of our subject was born in Yam Hill county and her parents were pioneers there. Mr. Merchant was given a large grant of about one thousand acres of land to induce other settlers. This was in 1842 and the Indians were in possession. The old homestead house is now standing where the neighbors gathered when the Indians attacked them. Thaddeus was raised in Yam Hill county until twelve, was educated in the public schools and then the family removed to Pullman, where he was educated in the college. He stayed with his father on the large stock farm until 1897, and then came to the reservation and took his present place. He has a good place, tills it well and is rewarded by good returns.

Mr. Maynard has one brother, Jay, and three sisters, Kittie, wife of W. E. Gage, warehouseman in Lind, Washington, and also owner of a large body of land; Lydia, wife of J. H. McDougall, railroad agent at Vollmer; Jennie, wife of R. D. Ryre, a harness-maker in Whitman county. Mr. Maynard is a member of the M. W. A., Melrose Camp. Politically, he is a Republican.

On July 5, 1892, Mr. Maynard married Maude, daughter of Cahill and Ruth (Dick) Richardson, natives of Indiana, now living in Melrose. Mrs. Maynard was born in Kokomo, Indiana, in 1867, and has two brothers and five sisters, Byron, a mechanic in Whitman county; Dick, at home; Pearl, wife of J. R. Standley, at Mohler; Winnie, wife of Joseph Leach, in Colton, Washington; Georgia, wife of Dick Denny, at Melrose; Mary and Zoe, single and at home. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Maynard, Mildred, Violet, Magell, Patty, Zell and Mona.

JOHN McKENNA, a man of stirring energy and possessed of those qualities which bring success in the business affairs of this life, is one of the substantial farmers and well-to-do stockmen of the vicinity of Fletcher. The gaining of his present farm home was attended with a display of determination and winning energy. On the night of November 17, at the still hours of midnight, he laid the four corners of his present farm, broke some land and then hied away to the land office to file.

John McKenna was born in Philadelphia, on January 14, 1860, being the son of John and Anna (McKenna) McKenna, natives of county Derry, Ireland. The father was born in 1832, came to America in 1857, settled in Pennsylvania, where he engaged in dairying until his death in 1887. The mother died in 1866. Our subject was reared by an uncle, James McKenna, in Wilmington, Delaware. He was educated there and when twenty, came to Portland, landing there in July, 1880. Thence he made his way to Waitsburg, Washington, where he freighted for five years then took a pre-emption. In 1886 he went on the Oregon side of the Snake above the Salmon and raised horses. In the fall of 1895 Mr. McKenna came to the reservation with Samuel Phiney, who founded Fletcher. He took his farm as mentioned and has devoted himself to raising diversified crops and stock. He has some fine Shorthorn Durhams and is prospered in his labors.

On May 8, 1894, Mr. McKenna married Miss Minnie, daughter of Richard and Jennie (Williamson) Fay, natives of Pennsylvania and born in 1842 and December 31, 1856, respectively. The father went from his native state to Missouri, thence to the Grande Ronde valley, Oregon, thence to Wallowa county and there he died on February 4, 1899. Mrs. McKenna was born August 23, 1874, in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Clara Hensley, Ida, Walter, all in Wallowa county. Mr. McKenna has four brothers and sisters, James, Rosa, Mary, Anna, all in Pennsylvania. To Mr. and Mrs. McKenna two children have been born, Anna, born July, 1896, Paul, born January 9, 1897. Mr. and Mrs. McKenna are members of the Catholic church and in politics he is a Democrat.

LATTIN L. POTTER is a man of intelligence and good capabilities and has devoted himself assiduously to the labor of improving his fine farm, about two miles southwest from Gifford, where he has brought about a good display of what wisdom and energy can do with the wild soil of this country.

Mr. Potter was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, on September 21, 1867, being the son of John G. and S. Emily (Scoville) Potter. The father was born in New York, came to Whitman county in 1877, and is now a retired farmer in Colfax. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, married in Wisconsin and is now living in Colfax. Lattin L. was reared in Wisconsin until he was ten years of age and then came to Colfax with his parents. He attended the graded schools of Colfax, then the Methodist college in Spokane, and after completing his education at eighteen, he commenced to teach school. Four years later he bought a farm in Whitman county, near Latah. Four years after this he went to Garfield on his father's homestead and in 1897, he came to the reservation and took his present claim. Part of this was broken, having been rented on the supposition that it was Indian land. He has raised the cereals and flax since and done much improvement and his is now a valuable estate. Mr. Potter has one brother and two sisters, William C., an elocutionist in Spokane; Jessie L.; Lillie, wife of Adrien W. Wisner, secretary and manager of the King County Abstract Company, in Seattle.

On December 16, 1894, Mr. Potter married Miss Hattie M., daughter of Edgar M. and Jennie B. (Wright) Giles, natives of Iowa. The father is a contractor and builder, at Garfield, Washington. Mrs.

Potter was born in Iowa, on December 3, 1873, and she has three brothers and one sister: Freeman, a farmer, George, a carpenter, William, a farmer, all at Garfield, Washington; Minnie, at home with her parents. Mr. Potter is a man upon whom prosperity has smiled, recognizing his labors and wisdom and he has gained the good will and approbation of all who know him.

SAMUEL K. MILLER. This industrious farmer is a man whose example of thrift and wisdom is worthy to be copied by any who would desire to follow the path of progression and success. He, in partnership with his brothers, Solomon and Burt, operates his farm, lying three and one-half miles west from Gifford.

Samuel K. Miller was born in Ray county, Missouri, on June15, 1870, being the son of Abraham and Sarah (Benedict) Miller. The father was born in Ohio and now lives near Albion, Washington, aged sixty-two. His parents, natives of Pennsylvania, were of Geman descent. He enlisted in the Union army in Virginia and served three years and nine months. He was under General Custer and other generals, participated in both battles of Bull Run and many others besides skirmishes. He came to the coast in 1890, from Kansas, accompanied by our subject, where they had lived for twelve years. The mother of Samuel K. was born in Lawrence county, Ohio, was married there and is now living at Albion, aged sixty-two. She has four brothers who served in the Civil war for three years each, George, Albert, Samuel and John. Samuel K., our subject, was raised in Missouri and Kansas, receiving a common schooling and in 1890 came to Whitman county with his father. He ranched for two years and then took a trip to California, where he worked on various ranches for two years and then returned to Washington. It was in 1898 that he came to his present place and filed. Since then in company with his brothers mentioned, he has devoted himself to general farming and raising stock. They have the farm well improved, and are fast bringing it under cultivation. A good orchard, fences, and buildings are among some of the improvements that their labors have provided. Mr. Miller has six brothers and one sister, Solomon and Burt, with our subject; Abraham and Jesse, with their parents; John E., in Alberta, Canada, mining; Robert, at Albion; Georgia, wife of Charles Reed, a mill engineer in Albion. Mr. Miller has never seen fit to allow himself to be lured from the quiet pleasures and comforts of a life of celibacy. He and his brothers are men of integrity, honor and capabilities and receive the esteem and respect of the entire commuiity.

FREDERIC S. ROGERS. Although the subject of this article has not so much acreage as some of the farmers in Nez Perces county, still he gains a satisfactory prosperity from his forty-acre farm and demonstrates the one thing that is wanting generally through the west, namely, the skill that enables one to produce great quantities of crops from a small acreage and to utilize them to the best advantage with stock. This science must in time come hither and it is pleasant to see one so skillful as Mr. Rogers. He was born in Penobscot county, Maine, on August 21, 1849, being the son of William G. and Lavinia (Weber) Rogers, natives of Maine and born on May 2, 1819, and in 1822, respectively. In 1850 the father came to Eaton county, Michigan; in 1854 he came to Waushara county, Wisconsin, where he remained on a large farm for thirty years. In 1885 he went to Lake county, South Dakota, and in 1892 to Portland, Oregon, where he now lives. The mother comes from a noted family in Maine and one of her brothers, Frank Weber, was a United States senator. Our subject was educated in Waushara county and at the age of twenty-three married and farmed until 1878. Then he came to Oregon, living in Hillsboro for a time and then went to Linn county and in 1880 moved thence to Goldendale, Washington. On account of ill health, he returned to Wisconsin and farmed two years. In 1883 he went to Lake county, South Dakota, then to Oregon and was all over that state and on June 7, 1897, Mr. Rogers located on his present place two miles northeast from Fletcher. He had met with great misfortune in the previous years and in less than five years after losing all he is again in fine circumstances and doing well.

On November 28, 1872, Mr. Rogers married Miss Eliza, daughter of George and Eliza Newton, who died on March 22, 1900. Mrs. Rogers was born January 26, 1852. Mr. Rogers has the following brothers and sisters, Helen Howe, Frank Roscoe, disappeared in 1897 and has never been heard from since; Charles, Lavinia Beauvist, Ada M., Fanny A. Richards, Emma Talbott, Britomart Knauer. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have been blessed by the advent of the following children: Edgar, E., born July 13, 1875; Frank E., born October 16, 1877; Allison, deceased; Cora M. Hall; Guy W., born September 10, 1882; Earl J., born August 12, 1884; Ethel B., born November 16, 1888; Milton D., born March 16, 1893. Mr. Rogers is a Republican in political matters and is an advocate of good schools, good roads, and in fact all progress and advancement.

LEVI C. EASTER. This industrious and up-to-date farmer is one of the substantial citizens of Nez Perces county and has showed by his labors and wisdom that he is a man upon whom one can rely and who is deserving of credit for the development that he has wrought.

Levi C. Easter was born in Holt county, Missouri, on April 30, 1871, being the son of William D. and Alice (Patterson) Easter. The father was born in Indiana, in 1846, served as a soldier in Company H, Thirty-third Indiana Infantry, under Sherman on the famous march to the sea. He settled on the reservation when it opened and is here still. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1854, and is living on the reservation. When Levi was eight the family went to Cloud county, Kansas, and the father operated the poor farm there for five years, then he continued general farming until 1888, when he made the trip to Portland. Later his family joined him and they labored at the wood business. In 1891 our subject went to Lewis county, Washington, and settled on land and farmed there until the reservation opened up and then they came to their present location, three miles south from Melrose. He has a good farm, raises general crops and stock and is prospered. While in Lewis county, they were surrounded by high water from the Cowlitz river and one eighty of land was taken away and all their property except one team was destroyed. Not less than two thousand dollars' worth of property was taken thus. Despite these adversities, Mr. Easter has labored on and managed with wisdom and is now one of the prosperous men of his section.

In 1893, while in Washington, Mr. Easter married Miss Clara, daughter of Alvin Brown, a farmer and school teacher, and a native of New York. Mrs. Easter was born in Iowa, in 1868, and has one brother and four sisters, Sadie Knapp, Blanch Romerman, Cora Lynch, Clarence and Ermie. Mr. Easter has one sister, Hattie Bledsoe, in Nez Perces county. Five children have been born to bless this happy union, Florence, Frances, Dewey, Curtis and Clarence. Mr. Easter is a member of the M. W. A., at Melrose. He is an active Republican and is faithful at the caucuses and conventions, where he labors for the general welfare by upholding sound principles. Mr. Easter is an ardent advocate of excellent educational facilities, and does all in his power for this good end.

THOMAS C. McINTYRE. This well known and capable business man has a general store and post-office at Myrtle, where he does a good business and also handles a sixty-acre farm.

Thomas C. McIntyre was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, on March 9, 1838, being the son of John and Jane (McMeine) McIntyre, natives of Kentucky. The father is of Scotch extraction and came to Indiana with his parents when small. The mother came also to that country when a child and she, too, is of Scotch ancestry. Our subject was reared until twelve in the old home place and then the family came to Iowa, where they remained for twenty-eight years. He farmed for a time when he became of age, and then for twenty-six years he handled a general merchandise establishment and a flouring-mill in company with his father and brothers. In 1875 he went to Nebraska, engaged in grist-milling for six years, then traded for farm land and tilled that for three years. Mr. McIntyre then took a pre-emption in northern Nebraska but let it go back to the government, and in 1891 came to Idaho. He lived three years in Vineland, and in 1898 came to his present place and purchased sixty acres. He built a store in company with his brother-in-law, G. L. Briggs, whose interest he purchased last year. Since its start the business has been pushed with a vigor and wisdom that have brought success and Mr. McIntyre is gaining a patronage and prestige that are truly enviable. Our subject has the following brothers and sisters: John, residing in Iowa; James, a teacher and preacher; Perry, at Lapwai; Robert, a railroad man, in Council Bluffs, Iowa; Ann, wife of George W. Wasson, a farmer in Iowa; Margaret, wife of John Stahl, a farmer in Iowa; Ellen, wife of Mr. Wyman, in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

On July 21, 1880, in Greley county, Nebraska, Mr. McIntyre married Elizabeth, daughter of William and Zillah (Swenk) Hayter. The father was a preacher in the United Brethren church and died on July 23, 1889. The mother lives in Blackfoot, Idaho. Mrs. McIntyre was born in Poweshiek county, Iowa, on March 4, 1858. She has two brothers and three sisters, John and Wallace, in Blackfoot, Idaho, farming; Mary, wife of Perry McIntyre; Susan, wife of Alonzo Lewis, in Idaho; Viola, wife of John S. Briggs, in Oregon. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre, Thomas and Gladys. Our subject and his wife are both members of the Methodist church, South. Politically, Mr. McIntyre is a Prohibitionist and is always allied on the side of sound principles and progress in the substantial interests of the country.

ALVA BOYER. Among the industrious and well prospered farmers of the reservation country, whose labors have made this wild region to blossom as the rose, we are constrained to mention the upright, genial, and substantial gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph.

Alva Boyer was born in Oregon, on July 22, 1867, being the son of Lloyd and Sarah (Pinkerton) Boyer, natives of Missouri, born January 15, 1840, and July 18, 1844, respectively. They were married September 27, 1860. The father crossed the plains in 1859 and died in 1870. The mother died in 1873. She had two brothers, Henry and William, large land owners near Athena, Oregon. Alva went to live with his uncle, William Pinkerton, after the death of his parents and remained in the vicinity of Athena until he was twenty-one, securing a good education from the district schools and a fine training in farming and stock raising.

He entered the employ of others until the year 1897, and then he came to the reservation and purchased the relinquishment of his present place, four miles west from Gifford. To the improvement and subjugation of this land he has devoted his time and energies since, with the gratifying result that he has a good farm which produces abundant crops of the cereals, flax and fruits and sustains considerable stock. Mr. Boyer has two brothers, Henry, living on a farm near Summit, Idaho; William, in Adams, Oregon; two sisters, Angie, wife of Eugene Richardson; Mary, wife of James Johnson, whose brother, Burr Johnson, is a large stockman of Pendleton.

On June 21, 1891, Mr. Boyer married Miss Cora, daughter of Elijah V. and Sarelia (Wheeler) Cunningham, natives of Missouri and Polk county, Oregon. The father crossed the plains in the 'sixties; he and his brothers served in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham now reside in Whitman county. Mrs. Boyer was born in Independence, Oregon, on July 9, 1871, and has two brothers and three sisters, Arthur, in the Buffalo Hump country; Macy, with his parents near Albion; Opal and Stella, single; Bertha, wife of Bert Rice, near Albion, Washington. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Boyer, Veta and Lloyd. Mr. Boyer is a Populist in politics.

ELRA L. SPIVY. An industrious and highly respected farmer and citizen, a man of integrity and worth of character, and who has manifested it in his commendable walk among his fellows, it is with pleasure that we accord representation to the subject of this article.

Elra L. Spivy was born in Adair county, Missouri, on March 15, 1865. Especial mention is made of his father elsewhere in this volume. When five months old, the parents crossed the plains and settled in Oregon, where Elra was educated and where he worked until eighteen, when he stepped forth for himself and removed to Whitman county, where he took land near Palouse and for five years devoted himself to its culture. Later he spent six years in the Big Bend raising horses and cattle, whence he came to the reservation when it opened. He owned then nineteen head of horses and with this capital he started in. His land is located three miles east from Myrtle and is well improved and he also raises some stock.

On August 7, 1900, Mr. Spivy married Miss Elsie, daughter of William V. and Mary (Kenoyer) Marlatt. She was born in Columbia county, Washington, on November 6, 1879, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas, a stockman in Oregon; Milton M., near Walla Walla; William, on the reservation: Edward D., also on the reservation; Nancy M., wife of William Catron, in the Grande Ronde, Oregon; Ella, wife of Jackson Hull, in Whitman county, Washington; Florence, wife of Frank Brown, manager of Jumbo mine, in the Buffalo Hump country.

JERRY WEBBER comes from a strong and prominent family and his record compares favorably with that of his worthy ancestors and will make very interesting additions to the volume of the county history.

Jerry Webber was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, on August 2, 1858, being the son of Jeremiah and Anna J. (Arbuckle) Webber. The father was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and has been a steamboat captain on the Mississippi all his life and still continues to run the river. The mother was born in East Liverpool, Ohio, in 1830, of Welsh ancestry and her father is aged ninety-eight and her mother ninety-seven. Our subject departed from the parental roof when he was ten years old and found employment as clerk in a grocery store. A year or so later, he went as pilot on the Wisconsin river, being also watchman. Then he went with the Hudson Bay Company as pilot on the Saskatchewan river for eight years. Then came the Reil Rebellion for services in which he owns a medal from the Canadian government. After this he went to the Nile for the English government to the relief of General Gordon under Woolesley. For his excellent service in this expedition, Mr. Webber bears a silver medal and a bronze cross from the Khedive of Egypt. These trophies of merit and excellent service should cause a pardonable pride and they speak great things of Mr. Webber's faithfulness, his ability, and his courage, having been given from governments in widely different sections. He served on a steamer for a time and then returned to St. Paul, where he took the position of mail carrier, about eight years, after which he builded bridges, then came to Buffalo Hump and mined. In 1898, Mr. Webber entered the Spanish war and soon rose from private to regimental quartermaster, serving in that capacity for nine months. 1899, he came to Idaho and took a claim on the Salmon river six miles south from Morrow. Mr. Webber has five sisters, Phoebe Henderson, Sarah Hines, Lavina Cassity, Deborah Ella, Ida May Upham. Mr. Webber is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Knights of Malta. Politically he is a Republican and takes up the campaigns with a zest. His paternal grandfather was in the war of 1812 and also the Mexican war and lived to be one hundred and one years old. He built the arsenal at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, in the 'forties. Mr. Webber had five uncles in the Civil war and three of them gave their lives for their country.

MASON MORRIS. This enterprising and progressive agriculturist and leading citizen of the vicinity of Summit, is a man of strong character, well respected by his neighbors, a keen business man, a promoter of good schools and a patriotic man, public spirited and intelligent.

Mason Morris was born in Daviess county, Missouri, on September 5, 1847, being the son of John and Edith (Johnson) Morris, natives of Kentucky, and born June 17, 1809 and 1811, respectively. The mother died in 1867 and the father died in April 1887. He was a prominent farmer and pioneer of Iowa and Ohio. Mason was taken to Texas when one old and there remained until nineteen. In 1867, he came with his sister's family to the vicinity of Waitsburg, Washington and then he worked at teaming and farming for a time and sold his railroad land and went to Dayton. There he operated a milk wagon for a time, then bought a farm and he sold and bought several times until 1884, when he removed to the vicinity of Kendrick and bought land. Here he resided until 1894, when he removed to the reservation and rented land. When it opened, he took his present place, three miles northwest from Summit. He had little capital but has done exceedingly well since then. He produced as high as twenty-seven bushels of flax to the acre this year. Mr. Morris had one brother, Robinson, deceased. He has four sisters dead and one, Mary E., wife of Washington B. Smith, living in Washington.

On December 14, 1871, Mr. Morris married Miss Elizabeth M., daughter of Sanford and Margaret M. (Buchanan) Bramlett. The wedding occurred at Mr. Bramlett's home. To this marriage there have been born the following children: Charles E., a merchant at Myrtle; Earnest F., Elmer F., Clarence N., John S., Robert M., Dora F., all at home; Ida C., wife of Noah Bechtel, near Summit. Mrs. Morris was born in Obion county, Tennessee, on December 21, 1848. Her father lives three miles northwest from Summit and is raising stock. Her mother died January 4, 1900. She has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas N., Vandelia, Louise J., Samuel, Laura L., John S., Martha F., Dora A. and Charles A. Mr. Morris is a man of progressive ideas and has put into execution good energy and wisdom in the care of his business enterprises.

MINOR SPIVY is one of the esteemed pioneers of the northwest, having assisted to open up a number of different sections since his first advent to the coast country in 1865. He was born in Giles county, Tennessee, on August 26, 1836, being the son of William and Lucy Spivy. The father was a native of Tennessee and died aged thirty-eight. His father was born in Ireland and his mother in Germany. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee and her parents were natives of North Carolina. She died six days after her husband's death. Both deaths resulted from exposure while traveling to Missouri. Our subject was raised by his uncle, John Wilks, in Randolph county, Missouri, and his education was gained from the district schools. At the age of fifteen he worked out and when twenty-eight he, with his wife and child, crossed the plains with ox teams. He settled in Lane county, later removing to Douglas county, where he did well raising hogs. In 1879, he settled near Palouse, on lieu land and there farmed until November, 1897, the month of his arrival and also the time of his departure. He filed on his present place, just southeast from Myrtle, and since that time has devoted himself to its cultivation and improvement. Mr. Spivy has one brother, William, residing in Fresno, California, who owned land in the city limits which he sold at two hundred and fifty dollars per acre and thus became wealthy. Mr. Spivy has one sister, Lucy, widow of Milton Bozarth.

On February 22, 1864, Mr. Spivy married Miss Ellen, daughter of Washington and Mary (Jones) Parker, natives of Missouri, but pioneers to Lane county, Oregon. Mrs. Spivy died, aged twenty, when they were crossing the plains and were twelve miles out from Boise. On October 24, 1865, Mr. Spivy married Miss Jemima McDonald, at Garfield, Washington. She was born in Kentucky in 1856, her parents being natives of Germany. By the first wife, one child was born, Elra, mention of whom is made in this work. The fruit of the second marriage is one son, William A., a specially bright and promising youth. Mr. Spivy served in the Confederate army under Price, participating in the battles of Lexington, Pea Ridge and others. He was finally discharged for the purpose of taking care of a very sick brother. Mr. Spivy is a Democrat and a highly respected citizen.

NOBLE HENRY. Daniel Boone has a counterpart in the subject of this article. A noted trapper, a skillful hunter, a doughty pioneer, a veritable leader of frontiersmen, it is eminently fitting to grant space in the history of Nez Perces county to Noble Henry. He was born in Indiana, on October 8, 1838, the son of Joseph and Ellen (Fisher) Henry. The father died on December 15, 1892, aged seventy-eight. He built the first house in the Grande Ronde valley, in 1860, and was a pioneer in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Montana, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. He was a native of Ohio and died on the reservation. The mother of our subject was also a native of Ohio and her parents were Pennsylvania Dutch. Noble acquired little schooling in Michigan, but has spent much time in careful research since, and is a well informed man. When nine, he settled with his father in Iowa, seventy-five miles from neighbors. Later they went to the various states mentioned above and in 1860, came to Grande Ronde valley and both took claims. Our subject held the land where Union now stands and sold his relinquishment for seventy dollars. In 1861, he commenced packing and in this line he was exceptionally skillful. He packed out of Lewiston for eighteen years, having a train of nearly one hundred animals, handling nineteen thousand pounds. Lewiston was a great shipping point in those days and Mr. Henry was one of the best known transporters of freight in the entire country. In the 'seventies he settled in Asotin county, Washington, and commenced to raise stock. There he remained until 1899, when he came to the reservation and settled on his allotment, the entire acreage of his family being nearly one thousand. Mr. Henry has the following brothers and sisters: Frank, in the Okanogan country, Washington; Joseph, in Stockton, California; Lorenzo, residing near Lapwai; Lorin G., in Umitilla county, Oregon; Marinda, wife of James Allen, on the John Day; Eliza, wife of Mr. Brintner, at Mason City, Iowa; Mary, wife of Mr. Black, in Iowa; Sarah, wife of Robert Sutton, in Okanogan county, Washington.

In 1868, Mr. Henry married Tanacama, a Nez Perces Indian woman. Her parents died when she was very young and she was raised by a sister. She is a sister of old chief Jonah, now living on the reservation, aged seventy-five. Mrs. Henry has one sister, Mealets, wife of J. Maxwell, who deserted her recently.

To Mr. and Mrs. Henry there have been born nine children: Mary A., wife of Frank Broncho; Louisa, wife of Edwin Broncho; Jane, wife of William Smith, all living on their allotments in the reservation; Joseph, aged twenty-two, who is master of the carpenter, shoemaker and baker trades; John, aged twenty, a blacksmith and engineer; Benjamin, aged seventeen, a shoemaker; Frank, aged fourteen, and Lorin aged nine, both attending the Indian school. The sons of Mr. Henry are all notable musicians and are members of the band. In fact, they have displayed great skill and talent in this line and it is to be hoped that they may seek training further to develope the latent ability.

PHILIP R. KIRBY. It is with especial pleasure that we are enabled to review the career of Mr. Kirby, both because he has done commendable work in developing the reservation country and also because he is one of the pioneers of the northwest and comes from one of the pioneer families.

Philip R. Kirby was born in Brown county, Minnesota, on September 8, 1866, being the son of Philip and Sarah M. (Back) Kirby. The father was born in Ohio on February 11, 1830, and his parents were born in Middletown, Connecticut, and for six or more generations back, the Kirbys were a stanch and prominent family there, having taken part in the arduous labors of opening the land for the early colonies. They also furnished many brave soldiers for the wars of the Revolution and of 1812, while also many noted officers came from this family in these and the Indian wars. The father of our subject came to Michigan when a small boy, and he has been on the frontier all his life. He now lives in Vineland, near Lewiston. The mother of our subject was born in Vermont and died on January 13, 1896, aged fifty-nine. Her demise occurred near Wilbur, Washington. She came from an old and prominent New England family. In 1872, our subject came with his father to the land where Spokane now stands. The father built the third log cabin on the site of that now flourishing city and was identified with the opening of the country and in building it up. He was well known about Spokane and his labors did very much to assist in starting the thriving city that is now the pride of the northwest. He took land on what is known as Moran prairie, hauled the first fruit trees from Colfax and planted the first orchard in the whole section, thus benefitting in an untold manner the whole country by introducing fruit growing. Philip R. drove the second milk wagon that ever started in Spokane, and he attended the first school taught in the village. Mr. Havermale, a well known Methodist preacher now living in Spokane, taught the school. Thus has Mr. Kirby and his father been connected with the inception of civilization's salutary institutions in the most notable sections of the northwest and he is today still in the chariot of progress and his labors in the reservation portion of Nez Perces county are worthy and skillful. When he was twentw-two, he went into partnership with his father and brother and they embarked in the stock business in what is known as the Big Bend country. There, also, they did much to open up the country. Twice, on account of hard winters, they were swept clean of all stock, but they stuck to the enterprise and finally made a success of it. In 1898, our subject removed to the reservation and bought a relinquishment, which he sold later and made a tour of northwestern Canada in quest of land, but finding nothing suitable, he returned to the reservation country and bought his present place, one and one-half miles northwest from Dublin. He has a good ranch and raises oats and timothy principally. Mr. Kirby has one brother, Eugene, a farmer near Ilo. He has five sisters, Isabel, wife of Thomas Newlan, a fruit raiser, five miles southeast from Spokane; Blanch, wife of William Hilby, a farmer eight miles southeast from Spokane; Sarah, wife of P. T. Lewis, a farmer at Ferdinand, Idaho county; Mary, wife of George Capps, a farmer near Reardan, Washington; Abigil, single and living near Spokane. Mr. Kirby has never seen fit to relinquish the pleasant retreat and quiet joys of the bachelor for the seas of matrimony.

By way of reminiscence we remark that his father was in the Civil war, serving in the eleventh Minnesota Volunteers, and also fought in the bloody Sioux Indian war.

JOHN THAIN. A prosperous farmer, an upright man, a loyal citizen and a good friend and neighbor, such is the subject of this article, who has done a goodly share in the development work on the reservation and is a man of sound principles and wisdom.

John Thain was born in Scotland, on November 16, 1865, being the son of James and Mary (Forbes) Thain, natives of Scotland. The father was a boat builder and died in 1869. The mother was born in 1828, and still lives in North Dakota. John grew up in his native land and there acquired his education. In 1882, he came to the United States and thence he went to Canada, Ontario, where he settled to farming for a time. Next we see him in Dickey county, North Dakota, where he took a timber culture and for six years he farmed. Then a sale was made of this property and he came to the Hoodoo mining section in Latah county, where he mined and also on the Clearwater, for four years, doing well in both places. In 1896, Mr. Thain came to the reservation, taking his place, immediately adjoining Melrose on the northeast, where he has bestowed his labors since.

On January 10, 1894, in Latah county, Mr. Thain married Miss Elsie, daughter of John and Belle (Taylor) Lorimer, natives of Scotland. The father was a veterinary surgeon. Mrs. Thain was born in Scotland and came to the United States in 1888. She has the following brothers and sisters: Charles, David, James, Isabella, Anna and Ellen. Mr. Thain has the following named brothers and sisters: Ana, Jane, James, William and Henry. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thain, Alice, Douglas, Mary and Raymond. Mr. Thain is a member of the M. W.

A., at Melrose. He has served considerably on the school board and is a strong advocate of good schools. He is a stanch Republican and active in the caucuses.

JOHN W. WHITE. Although in 1902, the subject of this article came to Gifford, still he has been almost all his life in the various portions of the west, adjacent to Nez Perces county, and his integrity, his energy, his patriotism and progressive spirit entitle him to be numbered with the leading citizens of Gifford. At the present time, Mr. White is engaged in handling a stock of papers and paints, occupying a portion of Clayton's hardware store. He is a practical house decorator and a man of excellent tastes and so leads in this line of enterprise.

John W. White was born in Oskaloosa, Iowa, on February 13, 1859, being the son of Alva and Rebecca (Burton) White. The father died when John was two years of age. The mother was a native of Kentucky and died in Yolo county, California, in 1887, aged sixty-five. Our subject was reared in Iowa until eighteen and then went to Sacramento county, California, whither the rest of the family had preceded him. He was two years in school and on the farm, then went to Tulare county, but returned to Sacramento. All told, he lived in California nineteen years. During this time, he learned the carpenter's trade. Then a move was made to Sprague, Washington, and two years were spent in laboring as a carpenter. Following this, Mr. White removed to Kendrick and there resided for twelve years and then came the settlement in Gifford, as stated above. Mr. White has some fine residence property in Gifford. He has one residence on the hill, where he has bought two acres of land, which is one of the most tasty and handsomely arranged and decorated of any residence in the town.

Mr. White has the following brothers and sisters, George W.; William L.; Byron B.; Annie C. Elesy; Mary J. Allard; Ida; Clement. Mr. White has never seen fit to leave the contentment and quiet pleasure of his bachelor life for a venture on the stage of connubiality. He is a man of sound principles, governed by discretion and wisdom and is entitled to and receives the confidence of all who know him.

E N Keeney to Imy follow.

ELIJAH N. KEENEY is one of the principal owners of the town site of Eugene, which postoffice is known as Gifford. He has always been public spirited and generous for the upbuilding of the town and surrounding country. He has donated lots to several worthy purposes and is always on the progressive side of things.

Elijah N. Keeney was born in Eugene, Oregon, on November 12, 1866, being the son of Jonathan and Margaret S. (Mitchell) Keeney. When our subject was ten, the father went to Colfax, Washington, and his sons joined him three years later. The mother died April 14, 1899. Elijah worked in the planing mill business in Colfax for eight years and in 1892, went to Valejo, California, where he labored for three years as an undertaker for Henry Connolly. In August, 1895, he returned to Colfax, and later came to the reservation, securing the claim where he now lives. He built a primitive log cabin and for a long time it was used for the meeting place of the settlers. He has improved his place in excellent shape and raises the cereals, handles stock and has some registered specimens. A portion of his land has been used for the town site of Eugene and many have purchased lots from him. Mr. Keeney has three brothers, Oliver M., George F., and John J., the last two living in the vicinity of Rosedale, Washington, and the former in Whitman county. He has one sister, Martha J., wife of Joseph Cherry of Rosedale, Washington.

On May 23, 1900, Mr. Keeney married Miss Eugenia, daughter of John and Catherine M. (Thiele) Allen, natives respectively of Arkansas and Missouri. They reside near Drain, Oregon, having crossed the plains in 1852. Mrs. Keeney's ancestors on her mother's side came from Germany and her paternal ancestors from Tennessee. She has four brothers and one sister, Robert L., Frederick A., Murry M., Creed H., all in Oregon. The sister, Mrs. Susie E. Hanson, lives near our subject. Mr. Keeney has a membership in the M. W. A., Melrose camp, 6216. He was clerk of Beeman Camp, M. W. A., 6885, at Eugene until it disbanded. In politics he is independent. To Mr. and Mrs. Keeney there has been born one child, Hester W. Mr. Keeney's grandparents crossed the plains with ox carts in 1852, the maternal grandfather being from Maine and the maternal grandmother from Connecticut. Mr. Keeney has served as school director and has always labored for the advancement of the cause of education as well as for the general progress and he has universally shown himself a man of mature judgment and keen wisdom, while his integrity and intrinsic worth is never questioned.

JOHN L. BLEWETT is a young man of intelligence and ability and has shown forth wisdom and enterprise in his labors in Nez Perces county, where he has a good estate three miles west from Gifford. This land was secured through homestead right and Mr. Blewett has devoted himself to improving it and making a first class farm in every respect.

John L. Blewett was born in Lafayette county, Wisconsin, on September 8, 1867, being the son of Richard and America (Lorton) Blewett. The father was born in England and came to the United States with his parents when a small boy and now is farming in Kansas. The mother of our subject was born in Iowa, and married on February 16, 1864, in Lafayette county, Wisconsin. John L. was raised in Wisconsin until seven, when the family went to Iowa. Ten years later, they journeyed to Kansas, and in these places he secured his education. When twenty-one, he came to Walla Walla and labored on a ranch for eighteen months, after which he went to Whitman county and worked on a steamer on the Snake river until 1896. In that year he came to the reservation and filed on his present claim. He brought twenty-five head of cattle with him and the first year he fenced his land and got a good start. He has since devoted himself to general farming and raising stock and is a prosperous citizen. His farm supports large numbers of hogs, some cattle and horses and is a well improved and valuable estate. Mr. Blewett has four brothers and three sisters, Daniel, Frank, Richard, Gilbert, with his parents; Drusilla Douty, Laura Towner, Nettie. Mr. Blewett is a member of Excelsior Lodge No. 2, K. of P., and also of the M. W. A., both in Lewiston. He is a Democrat in politics.

On June 16, 1901, Mr. Blewett married Miss Lily M., daughter of Lavega and Mahala (English) Peer, natives of Ohio. The father is deceased but the mother lives with her sons at Cottonwood. Mrs. Blewett was born in Illinois, on September 14, 1881 and has three brothers and one sister, Ernest, Sherman, Alexander, Hope, all near Culdesac. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Blewett, Neta B. This young couple are important additions to the social realm of their community and are bright, spirited, and excellent people who have many friends.

JAMES W. BOYD, a prominent and substantial agriculturist located three miles west from Nezperce on one of the choicest farms of this section, is the son of Robert and Sarah (Reed) Boyd. The father was born in Ireland and came to this country with his parents when he was four years of age. They located in Ohio and there he grew to manhood and married. Later he removed to Carroll county, Illinois, where the subject of this sketch was born on February 5, 1847. The mother of our subject died when he was an infant and then the father took him to Washington county, Iowa, where he grew to manhood and received a good education in the public and high schools. The father was a prominent and wealthy farmer of that county and James remained with him until his death. Previous to that death, however, James had engaged in coal mining. Then he went to Hastings, Nebraska, and began the manufacture of barbwire. Soon he returned to Iowa and on November 13, 1879, occurred the happy event of his marriage with Ruth McNay. They returned to Hastings and one child was born to them, Lena R., who is now attending a business college in Denver, Colorado, having also graduated from a literary college there. Mrs. Boyd died on December 7, 1880. Following her death, Mr. Boyd closed out his business and went to Helena, Montana, where he did dairying for a time, later returning to Gage county, Nebraska. He engaged in different occupations there and in 1889 Mr. Boyd came to Tacoma, thence to Centralia and later to Moscow, Idaho, where he followed prospecting for three years. But at the time of the opening of the fertile Nez Perces reservation, Mr. Boyd was ready to locate and so secured one of the most valuable claims in this favored section. He had much to endure to open up the land and make a good home single handed, but he has persevered and has now one of the excellent estates of the country. In addition to this property, Mr. Boyd has an interest in the Farmer's Grain Company which owns tramways and warehouses.

Mr. Boyd has been an extensive traveler and has seen much of the ways of man as well as exploring many of the interesting places of the United States. In 1876 he visited the Centennial at Philadelphia and at that time also visited most of the important cities of the east, not missing, of course, the great Niagara Falls. During 1870 he traveled in California and almost every portion of that state is familiar to him. We are also glad to add that Mr. Boyd is of exceptionally good standing in the community, being respected and esteemed by all who know him.

CHARLES W. GREEN is one of the leading business men of Nez Perces county and is at present located at Lenore where he operates a fine warehouse. He has warehouses on both sides of the river and they are connected by an aerial tramway and his facilities for handling and storing grain are among the best in this section of the country.

Charles W. Green was born in McLean county, Illinois, on June 26, 1867, being the son of Thomas S. and Nancy C. (Herdall) Green. The parents came to Idaho in the spring of 1901 and the father died August 18, of the same year, aged eighty-six. Our subject received a good education from the public schools and from Baker University, in Baldwin City, Kansas. The family had come to Kansas in 1880 and the father had purchased a farm of twelve hundred and eighty acres of land, the largest estate in that section. In addition to general farming the father was heavily interested in raising stock. Our subject remained with his parents until 1893, and then came west to look up a place for himself. He rented a farm for one year on Fix Ridge, in this county and then opened a store in Juliaetta, which he retired from one year later to take up mining in the Rogue river region. Since that time he has continued his ownership and interest in these promising mining properties. After three years of personal work in the mines he came to Kendrick and took up the grain business for one year and then made a move to Agatha for one year. Then Mr. Green came to Lenora, where he had erected various buildings and now is fully equipped to handle large quantities of all kinds of grain. He has a handsome and modern two-story residence which is presided over by his gracious and refined wife, who makes it a centre of real hospitality, being a lady of excellent qualities and many virtues.

Mr. Green married Miss Eva, daughter of John and Charlotte (Mason) Taylor, on September 20, 1897, and to them have been born two children, Edra

T., and Donavan, the former aged four years and the latter two years. Mrs. Green was born near Prescott in Walla Walla county, Washington, and her parents are now retired farmers. She has six brothers and three sisters, as follows: Richard, Ira, Ernest, Elmer, John, Roy, Iona, Etta, Ina. Etta is the wife of Charles Bellmer, a well known merchant of Orofino. Mr. Green has two brothers and six sisters, Joseph M., Thomas, Sarah Gasaway, Martha Helmick, Melissa Lukins, Alice Hanlen, Clara Shields, Nancy Flora Willis. Mr. Green is a Republican in politics and has frequently been a delegate to the state conventions, always taking a leading part for the advancement of the measures that are for the general welfare. But Mr. Green never lets politics or social affairs interfere with his business interests. He is a member of the K. of P. at Kendrick.

MANLEY I. SHARP is one of the thrifty and industrious stockmen and farmers who have made the reservation country of Nez Perces county one of the most progressive portions of the state of Idaho. His estate is five miles east from Peck and he devotes himself with assiduity to producing the fruits of the field and raising stock and dame fortune has been lavish in favors upon him.

Manley I. Sharp was born in Blue Earth county, Minnesota, on Jnly 7, 1862, being the son of Hector and Emily A. (Carpenter) Sharp, natives of Vermont and Maine respectively. The father was born in 1812 and died in 1869, being frozen to death while on a business trip from his home in Dakota to Minnesota. This sad death occurred on the place where now the town of Worthington, Minnesota, stands. He was a pioneer of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Dakota. He was in New Ulm at the time of the awful Sioux massacre. The mother of our subjeci was born in 1817 and died in 1886. It is of note that she was born in the northeastern and died in the northwestern states of this great nation and traveled all the distance between by team. When Manley was seven, the family went to Sioux Falls, Dakota, and when his father died an older brother took charge, but he, too, died in four years and the weight and responsibilities of business rested on our subject. He had acquired an education from the schools of the barracks in Dakota, and the family remained in Dakota until 1877, when they removed by team to Boise and settled, just in time to meet the Bannock Indian war. Mr. Sharp teamed for the government, hauling supplies and in 1878 came to the vicinity of Moscow, where he rented a farm. There and near Pullman, they continued to live until the opening of the reservation, when he came hither and took his present place, five miles east from Peck. Settlement was made here on March 26, 1896, and since that time Mr. Sharp has devoted energy and wisdom to bear in his efforts to build a fine home and make a valuable farm. He has succeeded well and is one of the leading men of the community. He has three sisters, all living in the Palouse country, Flora Stratton, Ellen Booth, and Minnie Longstreet. Mr. Sharp is an active Republican and has always taken the part of the responsible and intelligent citizen in this realm. He was a delegate to the state convention last year. He is an advocate of educational progress and labors for it. His ancestors fought in the Revolution and Mr. Sharp, himself, has been on the frontier since his birth, in fact, he was born on the frontier and has been a pioneer ever since. His uncle, W. W. Carpenter, served in the Civil war and was wounded. Mr. Sharp is a man whom all respect and who has done much for the general progress. Manley I. Sharp and Mrs. Logenia Shockley were united in marriage at the the home of the bride on Central Ridge in 1903.

WILLIAM A. SMITH, a leading farmer and stockman of the vicinity of Westlake, is one of the heavy real estate holders of our county and a substantial and good business man.

William A. Smith was born in Orange county, New York, on September 28, 1856. His parents, Amzie L. and Rachel (Gray) Smith, were born in New York, in 1824, and died in 1896 and 1898 respectively. The father was colonel of the Home Guards in his county. Our subject grew to manhood in New York and was there educated. When eighteen, he farmer for himself and in 1878 he journeyed to Illinois, where he engaged in farming and dairying in Kane county. He also shipped hay and stock. He continued there for a number of years, excepting 1882, when he traveled through the middle states. In 1888, Mr. Smith came to Seattle and engaged in logging. He sold out there in 1892 and came to Nez Perces county and took a portion of his present place. It is a fine estate of eight hundred acres and provided with fine barns, residence, outbuildings, and other improvements that make it a first class place. Mr. Smith has been engaged in raising fine blooded hogs but is now turning his whole attention to raising cattle. He came here with twelve dollars cash and a pack animal and a riding cayuse but is now one of the prosperous men of the county.

At Lewiston, on October 13, 1902, Mr. Smith married Miss Harriet Paddock. She was born in Illinois and taught school in Chicago for eighteen years. She came west for a visit last summer and the result was a meeting with Mr. Smith and their acquaintance ripened into a courtship which resulted in the happy marriage mentioned. Mr. Smith has the following brothers and sisters: Martha, deceased, George S., Orville A., Virginia, Peter and Jesse, twins, Mary, Doria and Charles. Politically Mr. Smith is liberal and an independent thinker, being unfettered by any party ties.

WILLIAM N. WHITSON. Among those who have made comfortable homes and gained valuable estates on the reservation, we are constrained to mention Mr. Whitson, who lives about one mile northeast from Fletcher, where he owns a quarter section of good land and also farms considerable more. He raises diversified crops, fine Poland China hogs, good thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle, and is a prosperous and substantial man.

William N. Whitson was born in Jefferson county, Iowa, on October 10, 1862, being the son of Samuel H. and Catherine (Bivens) Whitson. The father was born in Indiana in 1814, where his parents were pioneers. In 1847 he went to Jefferson county, Iowa, then a new country, took a homestead and remained tilling the soil until the time of his death in 1891. The mother was born March 6, 1828; her people were pioneers of the middle west. Our subject was reared and educated in Iowa. At the age of seventeen he came to southern Idaho, Malad valley, and drove stage at the time the railroad was building from Ogden to Butte. Later he assisted John Bitney, a prominent stockman, to drive a bunch of cattle over the Mullan trail to Pendleton, passing through where Spokane now is. A store, blacksmith shop and so forth constituted the town then and they camped with the cattle on the north side of the river, where a large portion of Spokane now stands. After the drive Mr. Whitson returned to Spokane and with a cousin visited the Big Bend country. Then he went to Dayton and freighted to Pomeroy for six years, also drove stage from Dayton to Lewiston. Later he went to Moscow and took a position with the Shields Company, beginning work in 1890 and continuing for six years. Then came two years of farming in Latah county, and in 1898, Mr. Whitson bought his present place and it has been the family home since that time.

On January 17, 1889, Mr. Whitson married Miss Nora, daughter of Amos H. and Mary (Gwynn) Phillips. The father was born in New York state, moved to South Dakota, was a pioneer to the Palouse country, where he now lives. Mrs. Whitson's mother was born in Londonderry, Ireland, came to New York, where she was married and now lives in the Palouse country. Mrs. Whitson was born September 20, 1869, in Union county, South Dakota, and has the following brothers and sisters: Elizabeth LaDow, Harry D., Jennie Ames. Mr. Whitson has six brothers and sisters: Suzanna Smith, Mary Fountain, Amelia, Laura Axlines, deceased, Joseph, Francis. Five children have come to bless the home of our subject and his faithful wife: Harold, born February 1, 1890; Leslie, born January 5, 1892; Rollo, born May 28, 1894; Fern, born June 6, 1896; Aloha, born August 14, 1898. Mr. Whitson is a member of the Royal Arcanum, Council No. 1451, of Moscow. He is allied with the Republicans in political questions and is a strong advocate of good schools and better roads and always labors for progress in general.

JACOB HAEBERLE. A sturdy son of the fatherland who is now one of the most substantial, intelligent, progressive and well-to-do citizens and agriculturists to be found in Nez Perces county is the subject of this article and an epitome of the salient points of his career will be interesting reading.

Jacob Haeberle was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, on December 19, 1858, being the son of John Jacob and Julia M. (Mueller) Haeberle, both natives of Goppingen, in Wurtemberg. The father was a farmer and butcher and was a sharpshooter from 1846 to 1852. The mother of our subject was born June 22, 1837, was married in 1856 and died January 15, 1885. Her father was a butcher. Jacob was raised in Goppingen, and there he was educated in the public schools, gaining also excellent training from a wise father, both in farming and butchering. When twenty-two he had a butcher shop for himself and did a good business, buying and selling stock. In 1885 he came to New York and soon returned and brought his family over, settlement being made in Indiana. In 1888 he migrated to Colfax, Whitman county, and there freighted. It was 1891 that Mr. Haeberle moved to Genesee, where he spent one year on a farm. The next year he rented a farm in Tammany hollow, near Lewiston, and in the spring of 1896 came to the reservation, took a quarter section and improved it in fine shape. On August 1, 1902, Mr. Haeberle sold this farm to an Iowa homeseeker, H. M. Flueharty, and bought where he now lives, three miles northeast from Gifford. He owns one hundred and thirty-four acres and rents seven hundred from the Indians. He raises flax and the cereals on this fine estate and is doing well. Mr. Haeberle has one brother, Otto, who is his partner in renting land.

In Goppingen on November 23, 1880, Mr. Haeberle married Miss Paulina, daughter of George and Katrina (Weidler) Kraft. Her father was a railroad watchman for twenty-eight years. Mrs. Haeberle was born in the vicinity of Goppingen and has two brothers, William, a preacher in the Christian church; Christian, a first class mechanic in Germany. Six children have been born to this happy household, Rose, wife of John Nestlen, a farmer near Rosetta; Mary, Charles, Kate, Otto, and Bertha. Mr. Haeberle is independent in politics and is always allied on the side of progression. He is a skillful operator in farming and a keen and far seeing business man, whose labors and wisdom have accumulated a fine holding for him.

PETER BOOK is a prominent citizen of Nez Perces county, being a thrifty and prosperous farmer, a skillful contractor and builder, and a man of reliability and talent, withal a fine neighbor and upright and genial.

Peter Book was born in Germany on December 25, 1852, being the son of Jacob and Bertha Book, both natives of the fatherland. Our subject was educated and reared in his native place and when the budding years of his majority arrived, he determined to try his fortune in the resourceful land of the free, and accordingly came hither. He spent a few years in New York city, following his trade, bricklaying, and perfecting himself in the builder's art. Then he came to Mandan, North Dakota, and there operated a hay farm with his brother for two years. His brother was killed by a neighbor in a dispute over some hay and then Mr. Book went to Medora, and there operated a brick yard for two years. Thence he repaired to Rapid City, South Dakota, and ran a brick yard and did building for a number of years and in the nineties he came to Lewiston, his family remaining at Red Wing, Minnesota, the old home of his wife. In 1898 they filed on their present place, two and one-half miles southwest from Lookout, and the family came on. He has improved the place in fine shape and is raising fine crops. In addition to this enterprise, Mr. Book is doing much building and contract work in the cities adjacent. Mr. Book has three brothers, one sister, and two half-sisters, all in Germany.

At Red Wing, Minnesota, on November 19, 1882, Mr. Book married Miss Minnie C., daughter of William and Louisa (Hempling) Ritchlag, natives of Germany, married in New York city, where they lived for a few years and then came to Red Wing, where the father is running a blacksmith shop. Mrs. Book was born in Red Wing, on March 13, 1858. She has two brothers and one sister, Fred, a saloon man in Red Wing; William, running a pottery there; Rose, single and living with her parents. Two children have been born to this happy family, Lucy, born September 20, 1883, at Mandan, North Dakota; Jacob P., born November 17, 1885, at Mandan. Both are with their parents.

JAMES SHAW. A man of stanch Republican principles, thrifty and industrious as a farmer, keen and careful in his business matters, possessed of integrity and uprightness and careful to meet all obligations in a prompt manner, the subject has displayed fitness to be classed as one of the benefactors of his county and as one of the leading citizens, having achieved a good success and maintained a first class standing among his fellows.

James Shaw was born in Wisconsin, on October 9, 1855, being the son of Jerry and Cynthia (Cartwright) Shaw, natives of New York. They were married in New York and came to Wisconsin and there farmed. In 1862 the family removed to Minnesota, where James grew up and was educated in the district schools, remaining at home until he was twenty. Then he went to the Black Hills, Dakota, and there prospected and mined for two years and then made his way to the Northern Pacific, where he labored for two years. In 1884 he came to Walla Walla. Here he labored on the ranches for two years more and then repaired to the Palouse county where he operated a meat shop in Colton until 1895. 1893-94 broke his business and he left that country with over six thousand dollars on his books. He came to the reservation upon its opening and located his present home place, about one mile south of Rosetta, where he settled. Mr. Shaw commenced the battle here without capital and he has made a truly commendable showing. He has now one hundred and ten acres of fine crops. Flax, seventy acres, and the cereals, vegetables and fruit the balance. Mr. Shaw has one brother, Milford, in Minnesota, and three sisters, Edwina, Emma, Ida.

On February 19, 1889, at Colton, Washington, Mr. Shaw married Miss Clara B. Harrington, a native of California. She has one brother and four sisters, Arthur, a farmer, Viola, single, Myrtle, wife of Mr. Holton, a railroad man; Ruth, wife of Charles Swain, Susan, wife of Riley Holden, all residing in the Grande Ronde valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw have three children, Frank, Ruth and Betta.

JOHN W. HOBSON. This substantial and successful agriculturist is living about one mile southeast from Gifford, where he has a good estate of one quarter section that he gained title to through the homestead right and from the wild and unbroken sod he has made it a fertile and valuable farm. He raises much grain, has thirty-five acres of timothy, three acres of orchard, which he is increasing to fifteen, and other crops in proportion.

John W. Hobson was born in Nevada county, Arkansas, on December 3, 1867, being the son of Nathaniel P. and Eliza (May) Hobson. The father was born in New York of parents who had come thither from England and Ireland. He was a farmer and blacksmith and migrated to Alabama, thence to Mississippi, thence to Arkansas and finally to Texas, where he lived fourteen years and then died aged fifty-six. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania, was married in Alabama and is now living in Texas. John W. was reared in Texas and educated in the district school. When eighteen, he went to Los Angeles, California, and thence to every portion of the state. He shipped on a whaler and sailed nine months in the Behring and Okhotsk seas, then was three years in California, and about 1890 he came to Idaho. He rented land near Moscow for four years and then came to the reservation and worked for H. Beeman. On November 20, two days after the reservation opened, Mr. Hobson filed on his present place. He has three brothers and two sisters, Robert N., Tillman Y., and Nathaniel E., all farmers and stockmen in Texas; Martha M., wife of R. J. Powell, who operates a grist mill and cotton gin in Texas; Sophia E., wife of Frank Swopes, a farmer in Texas. On May 21, 1896, Mr. Hobson married Miss Lillie A., daughter of James A. and Mary (Barnard) Wilcox, natives of Missouri. Mrs. Hobson was born in February, 1879, she has one brother and one sister, James, a farmer in Missouri; Mrs. Henry Rogers, in Melrose. Mr. and Mrs. Hobson are members of the Chrisitan church and he is a member of the M. W. A., Melrose Camp. He is a Democrat and a Prohibitionist in political matters. Three children have been born to gladden the home: Winnie M., Mary Ethel and Gracie Aranda.

IRA SMALL. Noting the details of our subject's personal history, we see that Ira Small was born in Ludlow, Maine, on October 28, 1848, being the son of Daniel and Louisa (Monroe) Small. The father was born in New Brunswick in 1812 and died in 1872. The mother of our subject was born in New Brunswick and died in 1874.

On June 10, 1884, Mr. Small married Miss Alice, daughter of P. B. and Alice E. (Abbott) Chamberland, natives of Vermont and Canada, respectively. Mrs. Small has two sisters, Felicia H., wife of Dr. A. T. Willis, in Walla Walla; Marietta, in Portland. Mr. Small has the following brothers and sisters: David W., in Alaska; Mary, deceased; Albert, in Lewiston; Lottie E. Sanborn, in Montana; Sarah Potter, in Montana; Inez Colby, in Lewiston. The following children have been born to this worthy couple: Mary, Roy, Ray, Fern, all at home.

WILLIAM MUSTOE. One mile south from the rustic village of Melrose lies the beautiful estate of William Mustoe. Acquired by the homestead right in the very latter part of the last century, Mr. Mustoe has shown exceptional skill and industry to have it so well improved as it is. He has a modern residence of nine rooms, a large barn, good outbuildings and other improvements to match and altogether it is one of the best places in the community.

William Mustoe was born in Scotland county, Missouri, on March 21, 1865, being the son of Henry and Martha (Heuett) Mustoe, natives of Virginia, and born in 1834 and 1836, respectively. They both live in Nez Perces county on a farm. The father was a pioneer to Missouri and a freighter of note there in those early times. The mother's father, Hiram Heuett, was a captain in the Civil war and died in the army. He was a prominent public man. Her mother is still living, over eighty years of age. In 1868 the family of our subject's father came to Adair county, Missouri, and there William grew up and was educated. When twenty-one he went for himself, clerked in a store, farmed and operated a creamery, but all the time, made his home on the farm. In February, 1893, he sold out in Missouri and came to Tekoa, Washington. One year there and he went to southern Idaho. One year after he was in Farmington, and later worked a year in the Bunker Hill & Sullivan at Wardner. It was in 1897 that Mr. Mustoe came to the reservation and took his present place. Since then he has devoted himself to its improvement and to raising stock and doing general farming.

On January 7, 1887, in Kirksville, Missouri, Mr. Mustoe married Miss Fannie, daughter of Robert H. and Jennie (Hill) Stephens. Mr. Stephens was born in Kentucky in 1817 and died in April, 1900, having been a pioneer in Missouri. Mrs. Stephens was born in Missouri, in 1837 and still lives in that state. Mrs. Mustoe was born in Randolph county, Missouri, on August 4, 1868, and has the following brothers and sisters: Richard, Thomas J. and Robert F., Emma Dodson, James G., William A., Charlie, deceased; Ida, deceased; Elenta Starr and Eva Patton. Mr. Mustoe has the following brothers and sisters: Loreta M. Page, Dora B. Wilson, Benjamin F., deceased; Sarah J., deceased; and Albert. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mustoe are named below, Aubry F., Nellie M., Ray A., and Robert H. Mr. Mustoe is a member of the M. W. A. at Melrose and he and his wife are devout members of the Methodist church. Mr. Mustoe was elected justice of the peace but he would not qualify, although he is always active in the political questions of the day and is an intelligent Democrat. In school matters, especially, Mr. Mustoe is an ardent laborer for betterment in all its lines and has served much on the board.

J. SHANNON HOGUE. A successful business career on the Nez Perces Indian reservation, and a mover in all lines of improvement, a leading farmer and stockman at the present time, entitle the subject of this sketch to a place in the annals of his county. Mr. Hogue was born in Macon county, Missouri, on August 6, 1851, being the son of John and Sarah A. (Culter) Hogue, natives of Pulaski county, Kentucky. The father was born in 1819 and was a successful farmer and stockman. He died in August, 1859, possessed of five hundred acres of fine soil in Macon county, Missouri. The mother was born on August 2, 1826, came with her parents to Missouri in 1838, married in 1844, and died in November, 1900. Our subject was reared and educated in Macon county and remained with his parents until he was twenty-six, being then married. When eighteen he received one hundred acres of land as an inheritance and added seventy-five acres more, which he farmed and also did a lumber business until his health broke down and he came to Moscow, on April 15, 1892. He took fire insurance and real estate until 1894 and then obtained from the government license to establish a trading post on the Nez Perces reservation and on June 22, 1894, he moved his family thither, settling on the north fork of the Clearwater. He opened a store and supply house for the Weippe country and the Pierce mining district, continuing in the same until 1898. When first there he traveled twenty-three miles to Southwick for mail but soon had the postoffice of Gilbert started with himself for postmaster. At the opening of the reservation he secured his present place, four miles south from Orofino and he is now handling a half section to general crops while also he raises Shorthorn cattle and Berkshire hogs. He is prosperous and a leading citizen of the community.

On April 10, 1876, Mr. Hogue married Miss Nanie A., daughter of Samuel C. and Sarah A. (Blackwell) Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton was born on January 7, 1820, in Wayne county, Kentucky and died April 11, 1890, having been a successful business man and prominent in politics. The mother was born June 15, 1825, married February 20, 1845, and died in Moscow, August 13, 1892. Mrs. Hogue was born in Macon county and has the following brothers and sisters: William J.,

James H., Sidney F., Charles L., Samuel C. R., deceased, Bessie Branscombe, Robert E., deceased. Mr. Hogue has two sisters, Susan E. Davis, Annie Parcells, and one brother, Harlen M. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hogue, Gilbert H., born February 23, 1877, and now a civil engineer in the service of the government; Wilbur W., deceased at the age of eighteen; John F., born August 23, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Hogue are members of the Christian church and are estimable people. He has been justice of the peace for a long time and was appointed probate judge by the state of Idaho for Clearwater county, which was formed on April 6, 1901, but which was declared illegal by the supreme court three months later.

JAMES R. SCOTT. A reliable and enterprising stockman and farmer, personally a man of integrity and worth of character, the subject of this article is one of those who deserve representation in this history and we accord him such with pleasure.

James R. Scott was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on March 11, 1873, being the son of Isaac and Mary A. (Shaffer) Scott. When James was six, the family removed to Sullivan county, Missouri, and farmed and raised stock. Four years later they went to the Rogue river country in Oregon and there followed the same occupation for six years. The next move was to the vicinity of Palouse, where they settled in Latah county. In these various places, our subject was educated in the public schools and learned well to meet the questions of life. For five years he was in the employ of Washington Wolheter, in Latah county, and owned a half interest in a second hand and new goods store in Palouse. In 1901 he came to the reservation portion of Nez Perces county and rented a section of land three miles east from Melrose. He is associated with his brother in this labor and together they are doing a fine work. They have paid considerable attention to raising stock, heretofore, but at this present writing they are devoting their energies mostly to producing the cereals and large crops of flax. Mr. Scott has the following named brothers and sisters: Joseph, Charles, John W., Maggie, Susie, Nora, Alonzo, Clyde, Maude, Ida and Jesse. Fraternally Mr. Scott is affiliated with the W. W. and the auxiliary circle of the same order, while in political matters he is liberal, reserving for his own decision the questions of the day, regardless of the tenets of different parties. He is a reliable young man of energy and push and his characteristic wisdom with this combination assures him unbounded success in his labors.

LEN L. BROWER lives about one mile east from Rosetta, where he has a farm and devotes his attention to its cultivation and improvement. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on June 27, 1858, being the son of Reuben L. and Olive (Stroud) Brower. The father was a native of Ohio, born in 1836 and died in 1887, at Harney, Oregon, while on his way to visit our subject. He was a soldier in the Civil war, serving eighteen months in the Twelfth Indiana Infantry. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1837, and died in Nebraska, on April 1, 1877, being shot by accident. She was married in Ohio, in 1857. Len L. was reared in Indiana, Michigan and Nebraska and for fifteen years was buckayro and has traveled in thirty-three states. Soon after his mother's death he came west, bringing his father, grandmother, and two sisters. The father settled on a claim on North Powder, but died before he proved up on it. Len L. worked at various callings, sometimes logging and hauling ore and spent eight years near Spokane, Cheney and Rockford. He has no brothers and three sisters, Sarah A., Ida L., wife of John Marrs, at Union, Oregon; Elnora, married and living at Portland.

On October 16, 1879, Mr. Brower married Miss Emma Marrs, at Lagrande, Oregon. She is the daughter of William H. and Martha (Vaughn) Marrs, natives of Tennessee. The father is dead and the mother lives in Harney valley, Oregon. Mrs. Brower has four brothers and four sisters, William, in Wyoming; John, in Oregon; Manvil A., in Harney county, Oregon; Dock, at Boise, Idaho; Laura; Mary, widow of Richard Nelson, in Montana; Ida, wife of Joseph Kessler, a miner in Harney county, Oregon; Callie, wife of Mr. Benson, in Harney county, Oregon. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brower, Reuben, George, Mary and Earl L., all at home. Mrs. Brower has a daughter by her former husband, Martha, and she is the wife of Matt Mortimore and living at Rosetta. Mr. and Mrs. Brower are members of the United Brethren church and in political matters, he is a Prohibitionist. They are upright people and are respected by all.

JOHN B. DAVIS. A thrifty and industrious farmer, a capable and keen business man, a patriotic citizen and a warm advocate of general improvement and progress, the subject of this article is eminently entitled to representation in the history of his county.

John B. Davis was born in Warren county, Indiana, on April 15, 1860. His parents, Dorse and Mary F. (Breuster) Davis, were natives respectively of Kentucky and Tennessee. The father was born in 1826 and in 1856 went to Arkansas, whence three years later to Indiana and there farmed until his death in 1867. The mother was born in 1830; her parents were pioneers in Indiana and her father operated a general merchandise store together with a farm. She had three brothers in the Civil war. Our subject was reared and grew to manhood in Indiana, remaining with his parents until he was fourteen. Like all the hardy and energetic pioneers, he traveled all over the middle west, and the northwestern country. Finally, in 1883, he settled down near Waitsburg and farmed until 1889. Then Mr. Davis sold out and bought a farm twelve miles northeast from Colfax. At the opening of the reservation he came hither and secured his present place, which adjoins Mohler. He was among the very first to locate and moved the family there the next summer. He owns a quarter section and farms two hundred and thirty acres. Mr. Davis follows the diversified plan of farming and also raises fine Poland China hogs. He built the hotel in Mohler, ran it for one year then rented and later sold it.

On October 28, 1885, Mr. Davis married Miss Mary C. Pollard, whose parents reside near Walla Walla. She was born on February 7, 1867, and has the following named brothers and sisters, Melissa A., Oliver, Etta, Minnie, Frank, Robert, Roy, four deceased, John B., Betty, Ella and Delia. Mr. Davis has four brothers and one sister, Jasper, deceased, Newton, Frank M., Phillip, Mary Summons. The children of the household are two, George A., born September 19, 1886; Floyd E., born January 3, 1895. Mr. Davis is a member of the W. W., the I. O. O. F. and Rebekahs. Politically he walks with the Republicans, although he is an independent thinker.

GEORGE W. STELLMON. A prominent and skillful farmer and stockman, a keen, practical, business man, a good financier, a public minded citizen, an upright man of integrity and good walk, these things with many others that we could mention entitle the subject of this article to representation in the volume of his county's history.

George W. Stellmon was born near Greenville, Greene county, Tennessee, on July 16, 1864, being the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Brooks) Stellmon, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. The father was born in 1835, and is now living in Arkansas. He has always been a prominent citizen. The mother died in 1880. Her father and grandfather were among the very first settlers in eastern Tennessee. Our subject was reared on a farm until 1878 in his native place and then the family went to Benton county, Arkansas, that being new then. He received his education in these places and when twenty, determined to try the west, was soon in Colfax. He worked on a farm for a year and then went to Pullman and later to Genesee. Later he rented land and also took up forty acres. He farmed here for five years and then went to the Potlatch country near Juliaetta and bought a ranch. This was the home for six years and in 1896 he came to his present place, one mile north and one mile east from Dublin. He took a quarter section of good land, later bought two hundred and forty acres more and is now one of the heavy land owners of the reservation. He leases his land and is moving his family to Clarkston, where they will remain until the children are educated. In addition to this mammoth estate, all of which is under cultivation, Mr. Stellmon has leased over ten thousand acres of state land in Douglas county and is stocking it as he purchases cattle for shipping. He does a good business in buying and selling cattle and intends to handle a large ranch. He has a commodious home and excellent improvements and his is one of the best estates in the county.

In Arkansas on April 15, 1883, Mr. Stellmon married Miss Della, daughter of John and Mary (Ingle) Brock. The father was killed by lightning when his daughter was young, but the mother is still living near Clarkston, Washington. Mrs. Stellmon was born in Benton county, Arkansas, in 1868, and has one brother and one sister, John, in Indian Territory; Anna Allard at Clarkston. Mr. Stellmon has the following brothers and sisters: Della Hughes, John, Charles, Andrew, Melvin, William, all in Nez Perces county but the last, who is in Arkansas. The following children have been born to this worthy couple: Pearl E., Annie L., Mary, Cora, Neva, Ralph, Grace, Roy, Eula, Lottie and Lucile. Mr. Stellmon is a Republican, and is always in the lead in any enterprise for the advancement of the community. He has been school director for some time.

JOEL D. MARTIN. We esteem it a privilege to recount the items in this worthy pioneer's interesting career, since he has been intimately connected with this country for many years, is well posted in reference to the early history, has labored here for many years to build up and develop, is a man above reproach, and withal is a prominent and worthy citizen.

Joel D. Martin was born in Yates county, New York, on May 9, 1823, being the son of Garrett and Laura (Clark) Martin. The father, born in New Jersey in 1802, is now dead. The mother was a native of Yates county, New York, and she too is deceased. Our subject remained in New York until 1847. He was educated in Penn Yan Academy. When the gold excitement broke out in California, the stirring spirit of Joel D. was ready for action and he at once bought a ticket from New York to San Francisco, via Panama. Aside from a little foray on Panama with the natives the trip was accomplished with no special incident and on June 20, 1850, he passed within the Golden Gate. At once he made his way to the mines on south Feather river and as they were poor, he did not do well, and joined a party who bought a whaling vessel and journeyed up the coast, giving their attention to hunting. In the following year he returned to mining on the middle Feather river and there success crowned his industry. At the end of 1852, he engaged for some years in other business and later returned to the Timbuctoo and worked for a time. In 1857, at an expense of three thousand dollars, he had made the trip to New York and had bought his family west. Strange are the vicissitudes of life, for in 1862, on July 5, Mr. Martin landed in Lewiston, "flat broke" to use his laconic phrase. He removed to Elk City and went to clerking for Lloyd Magruder for a remuneration of six dollars per day.

He invested in mining property and with a partner, David A. Butler, took out as high as eighteen hundred dollars per week. Those same mines are said to be among the very best in Elk City district now. At the end of four years he returned to Lewiston and took up the fruit business in which he did well. Two years later he went to farming and this has occupied him continuously since. He took a ranch in 1877, and now owns four hundred and forty acres nine miles southeast from Lewiston. During the Indian trouble of 1878, Mr. Martin attended to the construction of defences but after every precaution was taken, the Indians did not show themselves nor attack the town, doubtless deeming themselves safer away from these doughty pioneers prepared to fight.

It is of note that in 1863-64, when the awful Magruder murder was committed, Mr. Martin was in Elk City and was one of the party that found the remains, the next spring, of that unfortunate man, for whose death five men were hung later.

In New York, in 1846, Mr. Martin married Miss Caroline, daughter of Isaac and Sarah Stiles, natives of New York and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mrs. Martin was born and reared in New York, and died in 1885, in Nez Perces county. To this happy union, there were born three children: Mortimer S., living on Camas Prairie; Olive C., wife of W. P. Hunt in Lewiston; Helen A., wife of C. F. Leland and she died in 1901. Mr. Martin had six sisters and two brothers and all are dead but two named below, George W., on the old homestead in Yates county, New York; Melville M., in Wisconsin. Mr. Martin is a stanch Republican, was assessor for years in California and deputy for two years. He has been elected justice of the peace twice and appointed twice but would not qualify. Mrs. Martin had seven sisters and four brothers. Mr. Martin is a director in the Pioneer Association and is a man of good capabilities and stands exceptionally well in the county, being esteemed both for his good labors and his own worth.

MARTIN L. GOLDSMITH. It will surely create a feeling of pleasure and stir to admiration the ones who read the items of the career of M. L. Goldsmith, since there is manifested the sterling qualities of faithfulness to friends, determination which brings success in labors, and integrity and uprightness which shine forth in each turn of his walk.

Martin L. Goldsmith was born in Sussex, England, on May 29, 1854, being the son of George and Jane (Wenham) Goldsmith. He was educated in his native land, and at the age of thirteen was apprenticed to a plumber and painter. Not being pleased with this work, after six months, he was released from that and given a position with a gas fitter, where he served until he was seventeen, gaining a perfect mastery of his craft. When sixteen, he joined the English volunteers and served until February, 1872. On the fourteenth of that same month, he embarked for America, having earned sufficient money for his own way. He was one of a family of eight boys and eight girls and early learned to make his own way. On February 29, 1872, the youth landed in New York and after buying a ticket for himself and partner to Chicago, he had one dollar and eighty cents. This he divided with his partner and they spent fifteen cents before they got to Chicago. Arriving there he experienced the discomforts of a heavy snowstorm in a city ruined and piled with the debris of an awful fire. He met a new acquaintance and soon had a job in a blacksmith shop at nine dollars per week. The board for himself and partner was ten dollars per week and they steadily fell behind one dollar per week until the partner gained work. The good fortune of that partner was manifest in having such a warm friend to rely on as our subject. But this shows forth the qualities of which we spoke and this unqualified faithfulness is the one thing above all others that has wrought the brilliant success of Mr. Goldsmith. He worked on until July 7, and then went to gas fitting, which was a source of fine revenue until 1875. In September of that year, he came to Oregon, via San Francisco. He opened a blacksmith shop in Mohawk, Oregon, but was sick there from September, 1876, until the middle of 1877. In October of that year he came to the Palouse country with a team, landing amid a blinding snowstorm, on November 24, 1877. On December 19, 1877, he located a homestead and timber culture, five miles north from Lewiston. For twenty-five years, Mr. Goldsmith continued in patient and successful toil on this place and still owns a quarter section there. After an absence of twenty-eight years, he returned to London to visit his parents who still live there, and about that time he sold his land north of Lewiston, one section being disposed of then, for nineteen thousand dollars.

Since then, Mr. Goldsmith has gone into the general merchandise business, being located now at Spalding, where he is doing a fine business. He also has nearly one thousand sheep, fifty or more cattle and is a partner of Mr. Wann in the ferry business at Spalding. Thus it is seen that Mr. Goldsmith is very active in business, and in it all he has displayed keen discrimination, excellent executive force and an energy and continuity that have well merited his brilliant success.

On August 3, 1873, Mr. Goldsmith married Miss Margaret, daughter of John P. Hall, who came from England in 1872. Her energy and faithfulness, coupled with good business ability, have won for her the highest esteem of womanhood as well as assisting in the financial success of her husband. Her parents have four children, Alice W., born in Chicago, on July 23, 1875, and is now postmistress in Spalding; George, born in Oregon, on April 6, 1878, and who was killed in 1890, by a horse falling on him; John, born near Lewiston on June 17, 1881, married to Daisy Shaefer in 1900, and now in the sheep business; Jane, born near Lewiston on October 30, 1883, and now assisting her father in the store. Mr. Goldsmith is a Republican and active in all the campaigns and intelligent in the issues of the day. He is a Knight Templar Mason and also a member of the I. O. O. F., and the Pioneer society, while Mrs. Goldsmith is Past Grand of the Rebekahs, Union Lodge, No. 100. In addition to all his other property he has holdings in various other places and Mr. Goldsmith has the keen satisfaction of knowing that from the poor youth with less than a dollar in his pockets amid the snow of black Chicago, he has risen to his present commanding position of successful merchant, stockman and financier, through his own faithful efforts and commendable wisdom, having also maintained an unsullied reputation, and is today high in the esteem of all who know him, being a man of integrity, sound principles and intrinsic worth.

WILLIAM B. MARTIN. This well known, prosperous farmer and business man is deserving of a representation in the history of his county and with pleasure we accord him such.

William B. Martin was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on September 28, 1848, being the son of Annanias C. and Margaret (McCormick) Martin, natives of Pennsylvania. When William was two years old, the family came to Henry county, Iowa, locating near Mount Pleasant. In 1853, they went to Illinois and returned to Iowa in 1860. William was the second of a family of five children. A. M. Martin, living near Post Falls; Frank B., E. M., and Mrs. W. W. Levis are still living near McMinnville, Oregon. In 1862, they all came across the plains with oxteams, joining a large train at the Platte. The journey was made without incident out of the ordinary and they settled in the vicinity of McMinnville, where the father bought land and farmed. Our subject was educated in the public schools, completing in the high school. There on October 2, 1870, Mr. Martin married Miss Mary E., daughter of Jesse T. and Violet (Shipley) Mulkins, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio. They were married in Indiana and came to Des Moines county, Iowa, where Mrs. Martin was born on July 24, 1847. In 1864, they made the weary journey across the plains to Oregon, locating in Yam Hill county. In 1871, they came to Dayton, Washington, and in 1881, they removed to Spokane Prairie, where the father died in 1885. Mrs. Martin died in March, 1902. Our subject sold his farm in Oregon in 1877 and came to the vicinity of Dayton, Washington. In 1882, he settled near Lewiston, on a preemption, where he took to fruit raising and dairying. In October, 1896, Mr. Martin came to the reservation and located a homestead, where he now lives, four and one-half miles south from Nezperce. The family came to this place in the spring of 1897 and it has been the home since. The farm is well supplied with first class improvements, among which are a fine seven room house, a large barn, excellent outbuildings, orchards, fences and so forth. Mr. Martin operates a threshing machine and is also president of the Farmers Grain Company, limited, which has been incorporated under the laws of Idaho. They have warehouses at Kamiah and a wire tramway from the top of the hill to them; they also own other property. Mr. Martin is also a shareholder in the telephone line from Playfair to Nezperce. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin, Lester L., aged twenty-seven and the owner of a homestead joining his father's farm; Fred L., who also has a homestead adjoining, is twenty-two years old; Walter M., aged nineteen.

EDDY H. WATERS is a substantial farmer and stockman about seven miles north from Nesperce and although he has not been here so long as some he has a fine farm and handles three hundred and twenty acres to general crops and raises fine Berkshire and Poland China hogs and some cattle. Mr. Waters has had considerable experience in the ways of the far west and Alaska and is a man of broad views and progressive ideas. He was born in Scott county, Iowa, on May 21, 1862, being the son of William and Sarah J. (Goodrich) Waters. The father was born in Illinois in 1832, twelve miles east from St. Louis. His parents were pioneers in Illinois and his father, Israel Waters, volunteered from Maine for the war of 1812 and took part in the battle of New Orleans. While he still lived the whole family went to Scott county, Iowa. In 1849 William took a quarter section under the entry act and farmed it until 1874, when he came to Washington county, Oregon, and there died on October 7, 1895. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1836, the daughter of Abijah and Hannah Goodrich, pioneers in Iowa. Her father took land in Scott county, Iowa, in 1840, married in 1855, and lives now in Forest Grove, Oregon. Our subject was brought up in Forest Grove and educated in Tualatin Academy. At the age of twenty-one he worked in the lumber camps then farmed the home place until 1891. Following this he settled three miles north from Hillsboro for two years, then returned to the home farm until the Klondike fever broke out and he then crossed Chilkoot pass, descended the Yukon to Dawson, mined on American creek and Gold hill and in the spring of 1898 he returned by way of St. Michaels. In May, 1899, he drove overland to Nez Perces county, bought a relinquishment of his present place and filed and has labored successfully here since.

On October 7, 1891, Mr. Waters married Miss Margaret A., daughter of John M. and Julia A. (Sebring) Edwards. John M. Edwards was born in Bartholomew county, Indiana, on June 7, 1835, the son of Jacob and Albina B. Edwards, pioneers of Indiana, and descendants of the early colonists. The grandmother of John M. was a direct descendant of the well-known Morris family and her uncle, Robert Morris, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. John M. was brought up in Indiana, when twenty-one he left home and settled in Iowa and in 1855 went to Missouri. At the breaking out of the Civil war, he enlisted in February, 1861, in the Second Regular Cavalry and fought at the battle of Kirksville, repelling Marmaduke's raid. He was sergeant and secretary of his company and was discharged March 4, 1865. He is now a member of the G. A. R. Post No. 6, at Forest Grove, and has beenn chaplain for four years. Mrs. Waters' mother was born August 8, 1842, in Stark county, Ohio, was married in 1866 and now lives in Spokane. Mrs. Waters was born in Newton county, Missouri, on January 9, 1869, and has the following brothers and sisters, Mary Thompson, Joul J., Alvia J., Florence Bogart, Charles, Sylvia, Benjamin F., Julia Ann. Mrs. Waters was educated in the Salina Normal and has been a successful teacher for many years. Mr. Waters has one brother and two sisters, Frank E., Eva E. Wilkes, Ethel A. One child has been born to them, Wilfred W., born December 3, 1892. Mr. Waters is a member of the Order of Artisans and he and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically he is a Republican and a good substantial man.

PHILIP WYMAN. A typical westerner in every respect and a man of ability and honor, whose career has been packed with adventure and thrilling incident that would in itself make an interesting book, and who has wrought with energy, skill, and display of courage and fortitude, the well known gentleman mentioned above is well entitled to representation in any volume that purports to chronicle the history of Nez Perces county.

Philip Wyman was born in Germany, in 1837. His parents, Philip and Louise (Fisher) Wyman, were born in Germany in 1812 and 1817, respectively. The mother died in 1887. The father was a confectioner and came to St. Louis in 1845. Our subject was educated there and also during his minority learned the butcher trade. In 1861 he crossed the plains with a drove of horses numbering eight hundred, and remained in Virginia City, Nevada, for several years following his trade. Then he sold out and went to San Francisco, butchering there two years, after which he opened a butcher shop in Portland, remaining there seventeen years. His next venture was to drive a large herd of cattle, sheep, hogs and so forth to the mines in Nez Pecés and Shoshone counties where he did a fine business for several years. He went to the Salmon river and opened in stock raising in 1885, which he sold later. He has a farm two miles west from Morrow. Mr. Wyman is engaged in buying and selling ranches in different sections, and is also devoting his attention to buying and selling stock and is doing a prosperous business. He has one brother and one sister, Ludwig, Louise. Mr. Wyman is a Democrat from principle and is intelligent in the issues and questions of the day. By way of reminiscence we desire to mention that on one of his ranches there occurred the hottest battle of the Bannock war and he later found a sword and a couple of guns that are now on exhibition in one of the Lewiston banks. He was one of five in 1862 that pulled a boat from Portland clear up the Columbia, Snake and Salmon to Slate creek. They rowed it all the way except in rapids and in one case they had to tow it with an eighty rod rope. Nothing but Indians were to be found in the country and it was a hazardous undertaking. Two months were consumed in the trip. At one time, Mr. Wyman packed one hundred and fifty pounds for seventeen miles, receiving fifty cents per pound. He is intimately acquainted with all the early pioneers and is one of the well known men all through central Idaho. He has ever displayed a courage and endurance dominated with keen wisdom and foresight that have given him the meed of success and no man in the whole region mentioned stands better in the hearts of those who know him than does Mr. Wyman.

WILLIAM CROW was born in Pike county, Illinois, on February 4, 1861, being the son of Jesse and Eliza E. (Coley) Crow. The father was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, on February 15, 1822, and on January 18, 1899, a tree fell upon him accidentally, which caused his death. His grandparents came from Germany. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana, on February 4, 1834, and died July 5, 1901. Her father was a veteran of the war of 1812. William was reared in Illinois, spent a short time in Missouri, and in 1892 came to Milton, Oregon, where he rented land for a time and then came and took a claim on unsurveyed land. Not liking it, he removed to his present place, five miles north from Culdesac, where he took forty-five acres of very fertile land. He has devoted himself to its culture and improvement since and has a good place. Mr. Crow has the following brothers and sisters. Edgar P., in the east; Thomas J., a railroad man near Boice; Robert and John, near Cavendish; Annie, wife of Charles Horn, near Cavendish; Mary, wife of Gilbert Bentley, in Lincoln county, Washington; Minnie, wife of William Rafferty, near Cavendish; Lulu, widow of Charles Rice, near Reardon, Washington.

On June 25, 1885, in Pike county, Illinois, Mr. Crow married Miss Kate, daughter of John and Lizzie Batz, natives of Germany and immigrants to the United States in 1868. They settled in Pike county and that is still their home. Mrs. Crow was born in Germany on February 16, 1862, and has the following brothers and sisters, John, with his parents; Anna, wife of George Frank; Lizzie, wife of Jeff J. Petty, in Oklahoma. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crow, Harry E., John W., Bertran, Everett, Ethel, Robert and Oliver. Mr. Crow is independent in politics, reserving for himself the right to choose the man. He is a thrifty, industrious man and one of that number who form the strength and boast of any substantial community.

JOACKIAM L. DICKINSON. When the reservation was opened for the settlement of white people and for the improvements of civilization, the subject of this article was one of the first to avail himself of the privilege of taking a homestead and accordingly four and one half miles east from Melrose, we find him living now, the owner of a good farm, where he displays thrift and industry in raising both the fruits of the field and stock, and also in handling a fine threshing outfit in the harvest seasons of the year.

Joackiam L. Dickinson was born in Iowa, on January 3, 1868, being the son of Oren and Susan (Larson) Dickinson. The father was a soldier in the Civil war. The mother was born in Norway. Our subject grew to young manhood and received his education in Iowa, studying in the winters and assisting his father in the summers. When he was sixteen, the family settled in Whitman county, Washington, and gave their attention to farming and raising stock for six years when another move was made, this time transferring their residence to Latah county, Idaho. There they lived for about seven years, or until the opening of the reservation, when they came and took land, our subject securing a good quarter, as described above.

In 1887, Mr. Dickinson married Miss Etta B. Michaels, a step-daughter of Mrs. A. A. Anderson. Mrs. Dickinson was born in Kansas, in 1870, and has one brother, George W. Michaels. Mr. Dickinson has the following brothers and sisters, Rudolphus S., Joacquin, Dormie A. Key, May Yarbrough, Sophia Wright, Alfred and Chester. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson, Pearl, May, Alto, Loy, and Levi. Mr. Dickinson is a Republican and is on hand at the caucuses and conventions to voice his principles. He has been on the school board for the past twelve years and is a wheel horse in the labors of keeping up good schools and in the improvement of educational facilities in general, as he has opportunity. Mr. Dickinson is a man of integrity and enterprise, is a patriotic citizen and the recipient of the good will and esteem of all who know him.

OSCAR ADDINGTON. The subject of this article is a good representative of that class of men who have wrought on our frontiers with assiduity and wisdom and have made the abode of civilization to extend to the remotest bounds of the United States. At the present time Mr. Addington resides two and one-half miles northeast from Melrose on a farm which he secured by homestead right and which he has made from the wilds of the reservation.

Oscar Addington was born in Kansas, on July 13, 1874, being the son of Willis G. and Melissa M. (Jessup) Addington. The father was born in Iowa in 1837, served in the Civil war, for which he now draws a pension of $24.00 per month. He was a pioneer in Kansas and still lives. The mother was born in 1842 and still survives. When Oscar was a small child his parents came to Dayton, Washington, and there took land and farmed for nine years. There he was educated and assisted his father in the farm work. Later they all removed to the Big Bend country and farmed on the Columbia for nine years, then came to the reservation, where the father and our subject and his brother all took land and are dwelling on it at the present time.

On June 4, 1896, Mr. Addington married Miss Beva, daughter of W. W. and Mary Crockett, the wedding occurring in Sprague, Washington. The father is a native of Missouri and is now a stockman in Washington. Mrs. Addington was born in Missouri and has one brother and six sisters, Alice Gentry, Belle Gentry, Cora Buck, Besie Crockett, Oren, Dollie and Elsie. Mr. Addington has the following brothers and sisters, Alice Lewis, Emma Hammer, Mina Tavis, Ruth Denny and Berton. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Addington, Orville, Mabel, Percy. Mr. Addington is a member of the M. W. A., at Melrose and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Addington is a good farmer and in addition to the production of the fruits of the field, he raises cattle, horses, and hogs, being prosperous in his labors.

WILLIAM R. DIXON, assistant postmaster at Morrow, has been connected with Uncle Sam's mail department in one way or another for seventeen years and has always proved himself to be a trusted and capable man in these various capacities. He was born in Cedar county, Missouri, on September 10, 1850, being the son of William and Nancy (Privett) Dixon. The father was born in Indiana in 1832 and died in 1882. He was a soldier in the Civil war, being in Company C, Eighth Missouri Cavalry, under Colonel J. J. Gravley and Captain Conway. He was discharged for disability after a year's service and re-enlisted again as soon as he was able, it being just before the close of the war. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee in 1825 and is still living. Her parents were of Irish extraction. Our subject received his education and grew to manhood in Missouri. When of age he left the home circle and went to farming for himself. In 1872, he went to Ft. Scott, Kansas, and thence to Walla Walla, landing in the latter place on August 18, 1873. He worked on a farm for two years and then drove the stage from Dayton to Walla Walla for four years and then from Dayton to Lewiston for the same period, having good wages all the time. After this long service, he bought a farm near Pomeroy and went to farming. Three years later, he spent a few months in Lewiston and then, in 1887, took his present place, just outside the reservation. Since that time he has paid attention to the farm and has a fine place today, having everything in tip top order and thrift is in evidence at every point. Mr. Dixon has handled a road house for stages and also has raised considerable stock in addition to the other occupations mentioned.

On September 24, 1876, at Waitsburg, Washington, Mr. Dixon married Alice C. Rowan. Her father was a blacksmith. Her mother was born in Illinois, in 1826, and now lives in Waitsburg. Mrs. Dixon was born in Missouri, on October 2, 1854, and has one brother and two sisters, Lucretia Denny, Lauena McHargue, Joseph R. Cox. Mr. Dixon has two brothers, Andrew, on the Cottonwood, and Henry M., in Pomeroy, Washington. One child has been born to this union, Frankie Evans, living south of Lewiston on the Snake river. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon are devout members of the Christian church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. He was elected justice of the peace at the last election but refused to qualify. Mr. Dixon is a member of the school board and has always done much for the advancement of school interests. Mr. Dixon has a fine eleven room house and good barn and his place is a model. It is of interest as a reminiscence that in 1878, when he was on the stage from Dayton to Lewiston, he was held up and robbed by highwaymen.

MASON S. McCOY. A popular and up-to-date hotel man and now operating a first class house in Morrow, also having a good feed barn in connection, a man of uprightness and integrity, we, with pleasure, grant to Mr. McCoy space in the history of his county for a review of his life.

Mason S. McCoy was born in Walla Walla county, Washington, on February 15, 1872, being the son of James and Margaret (Leadbetter) McCoy, natives of Texas. The father was born in 1839, now lives in Prosser, Washington, and was one of the early pioneers of Washington, being through all the Indian wars. The mother was born in 1849, is living and came west with ox teams. Our subject grew to manhood in Dayton, and was there educated. He learned in his early life the trade of sawyer and when fifteen went to do for himself, working both at farming and in the mills. When nineteen he went to the Willamette valley, later returned to Washington, then to Portland, then again to Washington. In the fall of 1895 Mr. McCoy was at the mouth of Lolo creek, on Clearwater, hunting and trapping and from which he came to his present place. In 1896 he came to Idaho, and here he was married to Mary Hacker, daughter of Jacob and Mary Hacker, on June 3, 1896. Mrs. McCoy's parents were born in Germany and her father died in 1899. She was born in Germany, on May 25, 1874, and came to the United States when six with her parents. Mrs. McCoy was educated in Kansas City, Missouri. She has the following named brothers and sisters, Terese Ettlesburger, Louis, Lizzie Lamb. Mr. McCoy has the followig named brothers and sisters, Mary, William, George, Clara Balt, Maude Radley, John, Viola Swift, Rose McFarland, Guy. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McCoy, Eugene, Beatrice, Lela Fay. Mrs. McCoy is a Catholic. Mr. McCoy is allied with the Republicans in politics but reserves for his own decision the judgment of the different men and is an independent thinker. He has a farm in addition to his hotel and also is handling some stock.

DANIEL M. WING. Engaged in the occupation of handling a farm, the genial gentleman and capable business man of whom we now have the pleasure of speaking is working out a good success and is one of the influential and reliable men of good standing in his section of the county.

Daniel M. Wing was born in Vassalboro, Maine, on March 13, 1859, being the son of Henry C. and Julia A. (Pettingale) Wing, natives of Maine. The father was born in 1842 and died in 1894, was a man of popularity and held numerous county offices, as sheriff, assessor and so forth. The mother was born in 1838 and died in 1897. The whole family removed to Farmington, Dakota county, Minnesota, in 1861 and the father acted as station agent for a number of years. Then he opened a foundry business and later was in public office in the county for years. Daniel M. grew to manhood there and was educated in the public schools. He operated a boot and shoe store for his father and then superintended a farm for his father. In 1884, they all moved to Minneapolis and opened a grocery store. Later, we see our subject engaged in street railway business and then he was with the Northern Pacific Express Company. In 1891 he came to Butte, Montana, and for seven years he wrought in the concentrating mill of W. A. Clark. On March 22, 1899, Mr. Wing came to the reservation and took his present place near Peck. He devoted himself to its improvement, putting out orchard, erecting buildings, and so forth, while he also clerked in a store in Peck.

In August, 1885, Mr. Wing married Miss Nettie Lakin, the wedding occurring in Farmington, Minnesota, and to this happy marriage there have been born two children, Ruth, aged fifteen, and Freddie, aged five. Mrs. Wing was born in New York, in 1862. She finished her education in the state normal and then taught school for some time. She has two sisters and one brother, Frankie Berlin, Decker, and Carrie Pratt. Mr. Wing has one brother and one sister, Harry and Pearl Kinney. Mr. Wing is a member of the W. W. and Mrs. Wing of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Wing is active in political matters and reserves the right to vote for the man he chooses regardless of party tenets. He is an enthusiastic supporter of good schools and labors with wisdom for that end.

FRANK W. JULIAN. It is with pleasure that we incorporate in the volume of Nez Perces county history a resume of the career of the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, and who is one of the substantial and capable farmers of this section. He was born in Greene county, Missouri, on October 14, 1869, being the son of Isaac M. and Sarah J. (McSpadden) Julian. The father was born in Missouri, on October 25, 1840, was a soldier in the Civil war and fought the Indians with Ft. Leavenworth as headquarters. He was assessor in Garfield county, Washington, for two years. When our subject was twelve, he came with his parents from Missouri to Pomeroy, Washington, where the father took land and farmed. He also raised stock. Here our subject grew to manhood and when eighteen, went to Dayton, Washington, and there farmed for himself until 1896, when he came to the reservation and homesteaded eighty acres, near where he now lives. Later, Mr. Julian sold this property and bought his present home place about two miles northeast from Morrow. Mr. Julian has a good orchard, house, barn and other improvements on his quarter section and is making a fine place of the estate.

On March 29, 1891, at Dayton, Washington, Mr. Julian married Miss Blanche, daughter of Anthony and Rosetta (Robbins) Rockhill. The father was born in Ohio. He crossed the plains in 1864 with ox teams and stopped two years in Willamette valley, whence he came to Dayton, where he now lives, aged eighty-two. Mrs. Julian was born in Dayton, Washington, May 3, 1873, and has brothers and sisters as follows: Louise, Phoebe, Ellen, John, Rosetta, deceased, Anthony, deceased, Effie, Luella. Mr. Julian has three sisters and three brothers: Mary, Jennie, Fred, Lottie, Roxie, Nellie. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Julian, Floyd and Hazel. Mr. Julian is independent in politics and reserves for his own decision the questions and qualities of the men to vote for. He is a warm advocate of good schools and general progression.

LAFAYETTE KNOWLTON. The related occupations of dairying and farming occupy the subject of this article, and his family home is two and one-half miles southeast from Lewiston, where he has a farm, well improved and which he makes the headquarters of his dairy. He is a man of reliability and integrity, well spoken of by his neighbors and of untarnished reputation in the community.

Mr. Knowlton was born in Benton county, Oregon, on June 20, 1854, being the son of George and Susanna (McKee) Knowlton, the father is a farmer and harness maker, also a successful school teacher, born in Vermont, in 1826, and now living in Spokane. The parents of Mr. Knowlton were also Vermonters. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1830 and died in 1874. Lafayette was called to mourn the death of his mother when he was twelve years of age and then he lived with a neighbor for four years, after which his father married and he returned to his home. The father had crossed the plains in 1832 and in 1862 he was led to the Salmon river mines through the gold excitement. He packed a sack of flour into Florence clear from Lewiston and at Florence he was offered one hundred dollars for it. Our subject went to raising horses in Oregon when he became of age and remained there until 1885, when he came to the vicinity of Ritzville, Washington, and bought a section of land and continued in that industry. The great depression in the price of horses in the 'nineties and the panic at the same time caused a financial failure on the part of Mr. Knowlton and he lost about eight hundred head of horses. In 1897 he came to Lewiston and took up dairying. He took a claim in the county where his son now lives and he has continued in this line since.

On February 14, 1877, Mr. Knowlton married Miss Alice, daughter of Thomas and Louisa (Reddick) Kendall, natives of Ohio. Mrs. Knowlton was born in Bloomington, Illinois, in 1858, and she has one brother and one sister, Homer and Lena O'Hara, both in Oregon. Mr. Knowlton has the following named brothers and sisters: Frances M., in Spokane county, Washington; Emma Jackson, at Priest river, in this state; Mary Jamieson, in Spokane; James E., in Okanogan, Washington; and Grant, George and Susana, by his step-mother. To Mr. and Mrs. Knowlton there have been born six children: Dallas M., in Melrose, this county; James E., attending normal; Nellie G., Mabel M., Mary L., and Verna V. Mr. Knowlton is a member of the M. W. A., at Melrose and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Knowlton had a number of uncles in the Civil war. In political matters, he is an admirer of Roosevelt, but not partisan. He is a warm advocate of good schools and labors always for their betterment.

EMANUEL VADNEY, M. D., is one of the earliest pioneers to settle in the bright little town of Morrow, where he is now conducting a lucrative practice and also conducting a drug store, which is one of the thriving business establishments of the town.

Emanuel Vadney was born in Albany, New York, on October 5, 1858, being the son of Augustus and Elizabeth (Calderhovre) Vadney. The father was born in Paris, France, in 1822 and died in 1867. He came to the United States in 1839, was a graduate of the Homeopathic Institute in France, and was examining physician for the government during the Civil war. He was a professor in the Homeopathic Institute in Albany and a prominent physician. The mother of our subject was born in Albany county, New York, and died when Emanuel was an infant. Her father, George Vanderhovre, built and owned the Chicago hotel which was destroyed by the fire and afterwards rebuilt. He died in 1898. Our subject grew to young manhood in Albany and after completing a literary course took a thorough course in the Homeopathic Institute where his father was professor. Then he went to Chico, California, and later returned to Chicago and took a four-year course in the Independent Medical College of that city. Being thus excellently fortified for life's work, he came to Chico, then being twenty-six, and later removed to Milton. He practiced there and in Baker City for eight years and then removed to Boise, where he followed his profession for two years. In 1897 Dr. Vadney came to Morrow, and since that time has continued here with good success and also being held in high esteem among the people.

On May 16, 1884, in Milton, Oregon, Dr. Vadney married Miss Carrie C., daughter of Levi R. and Cecilia (Vanattin) Mock, natives of Albany county, New York. They are Holland Dutch extraction. Mrs. Vadney was born in Chico, California, in 1870, and has the following brothers and sisters: Jacob, John J., Fannie Kirkpatrick. Dr. Vadney has one brother and one sister, George E., Camilla V. Four children have been born to this union: George E., Augustus, Albert E., Bertha C., all at home. Dr.

Vadney is a member of the I. O. O. F. and has passed all the chairs. He is also a member of the M. W. A. He is a Republican and active in the campaigns. In addition to his business mentioned above, the Doctor owns real estate in various places and is prosperous. He is and has been for some time a member of the school board and has always shown himself an advocate of good schools. He contributed seventy dollars towards the new school house and is ever found a progressive and public minded citizen.

ROBERT E. L. HUCKABAY. 1897 marks the date when Mr. Huckabay bought the relinquishment to his present place and since that date he has been one of the progressive and leading farmers of his section. His farm consists of one hundred and sixty acres and lies about two miles north from Westlake. Mr. Huckabay was born in Lake county, California, on April 15, 1863, being the son of Berry and Sarah (Milton) Huckabay, natives of North Carolina and born on August 28, 1818, and September 26, 1818, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Oregon in 1850, then went to California and in 1873 came to the vicinity of Colfax, where he died in 1891. The mother died on April 4, 1892. Our subject was educated in California and Washington and grew to manhood in the latter place. He remained with his father until the latter's death and then took full charge of the home estate until 1897, the year of his advent to the reservation country. Since this year, he gave himself to the good work of improvement and has achieved good success in his labors.

On May 3, 1891, Mr. Huckabay married Miss Ida F. Burgess, who died on March 20, 1900. On November 4, 1901, Mr. Huckabay married Miss Barbara, daughter of John and Mary (Miller) Unzicker, who are mentioned in this volume. She has four brothers and six sisters. Mr. Huckabay has the following named brothers and sisters: Oliver, Amelia, Catherine, Adeline, Emeline. Five children were born to the first marriage of Mr. Huckabay, Ethel, deceased, Robert and Edward, twins, Victor, Schuyler, deceased. Mr. Huckabay is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in political matters is allied with the Democrats.

FRANK KELLER. A good and substantial man, a patriotic citizen, a thrifty and industrious farmer, and one whose labors have been wisely bestowed for the development of this country, it is fitting that the subject of this article be accorded consideration in the history of the county of Nez Perces.

Frank Keler was born in Tama county, Iowa, on October 3, 1866, being the son of Joseph and Sarah (Mericle) Keller, natives of Ohio. The father, born in 1844, was a pioneer to Iowa and now lives in Alabama, having wrought through life as a blacksmith. The mother's father, John Mericle, was a pioneer to Iowa. In 1881 the family removed to Cowley county, Kansas, where the father took land and there our subject grew to manhood and received the finishing part of his education in the common schools. When twenty-one he stepped from the parental roof and inaugurated independent action. He wrought at the stock business for four years and in 1891 sold out and came west to Elgin, Oregon. For a time he farmed there and then made another move, this time to the county of Latah, and settled in the vicinity of Palouse, where he farmed for six years. It was in 1898 that he came to the reservation and selected a homestead four and one-half miles east from Melrose. He has opened up a farm and has a good orchard and in addition to general farming Mr. Keller raises cattle. He is prosperous and handles his business affairs with wisdom.

In June, 1893, Mr. Keller married Miss Lona, daughter of Granville and Leona (White) Long, natives of Indiana, and the father a farmer. Mrs. Keller was born in Indiana, in 1874, and has three brothers, Cornelius, Schuyler and Clyde. Mr. Keller has the following brothers and sisters: Martin, Jacob, Manuel, Joseph, Emma Kimball, and Pearl Sanderson. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Keller, Esther and Clara. Mr. Keller is a member of the M. W. A., at Melrose. Mrs. Keller is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Keller is also a member of the school board and devotes time and attention to improving the school facilities. He is a Democrat, but not bound by party ties, so that he feels at liberty to vote for the man he desires.

GEORGE S. HALL is an intelligent, capable and leading citizen of the vicinity of Gifford. He has made a good success in the affairs of life, has won many friends and has maintained a reputation unsullied and clean.

George S. Hall was born in Polk county, Oregon, on December 30, 1859, being the son of Edward C. and Margaret (Leasure) Hall. The father was born in Bureau county, Illinois, and died September 27, 1901. His father was a Kentuckian and his mother a native of Illinois. They came to Oregon with ox teams in 1846, bringing the father of our subject with them. A donation claim of one section was taken in Polk county, and Mr. Hall, Reason B., being his given name, gained title for his services in the war of 1812 and the Black Hawk war. When Edward C. became of age, his father gave him eighty acres and he bought as much more and farmed for a number of years and then went to making wagons and blacksmithing. His wife was a native of Indiana, and now lives in Moscow, aged fifty-eight. Our subject was reared on a farm and educated in the district school and the Willamette University. Following this he worked on the farm, also spent two years running an engine in Portland. Then in 1890 he came to Moscow and for a time mined in the opal mines, but upon their giving out he bought a farm in 1893, west from Moscow, gaining title at a low figure on account of the depressed times. When the reservation opened he sold well and bought his present land, seven miles west from Gifford. He has good improvements, a fine orchard, raises flax and oats, and plenty of stock. Mr. Hall has four brothers, John E., a farmer near Moscow; Henry R., a miner at Murray; Charles C., a commercial traveler in Portland; Ralph L., farmer near our subject.

On January 30, 1895, Mr. Hall married Miss Lillian Husted, a native of Illinois, the wedding occurring in Moscow. Two children, William and Raymond, have been born to them. Mrs. Hall has two sisters, Emma; Kate, wife of J. H. Williams, at Kalispell, Montana. Mr. Hall is a member of the M. W. A., Paradise Camp, 563; also the I. O. O. F., at Moscow. He is a Republican and a bright man, active and interested in the questions of the day and always a champion for the betterment of the country.

EMERSON T. ROOT. Perhaps there will never be put on paper the exact descriptions of the trying times the early pioneers had in opening the western country for settlement. Although the reservation portion of our country was settled later in the progress of development, still the same trying times and hardships were to be encountered as in other sections and the worthy subject of this article had his portion in this noble work. Suffering, self-denial, and extremely arduous labors with deprivations, were the lot of him and his family, but it is with pleasure that we can record that at the present time he is one of the prosperous farmers and stockmen of the county; his estate lies one and one-half miles north from Melrose.

Emerson T. Root was born in Evansville, Wisconsin, on August 18, 1864, being the son of William L. and Almira (Silverthorn) Root. The father was a shoemaker, born in Ohio, in 1840, was a pioneer to Kansas and died in 1894. The mother was born in Pennsylvania in 1843 and still lives in St. Louis. In 1870, the family went to Whiterock, Kansas, and two years later to Saint Joseph, Missouri. There our subject was educated and learned the shoemaker's trade, working at it for five years. It then became evident that for the sake of his health it would be necessary to have outdoor labor and accordingly he went to teaming and afterward associated himself with a wholesale hardware house. In 1888 Mr. Root came west to Colfax and engaged in the sawmill business. Later he was agent for the Singer sewing machine. On April 14, 1896, Mr. Root landed on his present place and soon he had his family settled. Being practically without means, he was forced to go to the more settled country and work, thus leaving the family alone. He had to pack his provisions in on horseback and the first winter, he had the great misfortune to lose his horses and the only cow and calf they possessed, but despite these trying times Mr. Root labored on and he and his faithful wife are now enjoying the rewards of their industry in plenty and prosperity. He handles hogs, sheep, and does a general farming business.

On July 3, 1886, Mr. Root married Mrs. Melinda Lowe, daughter of James and Margaret A. (Broyles) Speer. Mr. Speer died in the Civil war fighting for his country. His wife was born in 1832 and now lives in Harrison county, Missouri. Mrs. Root was born in southern Missouri and has one brother, William R., now in that state. She was married first to George W. Lowe and by that marriage has one son, Benjamin F., and one daughter, Margaret A. Mr. Root has the following brothers and sisters, Oliver E., William L., Leroy, Charles F., Arthur P., and George F. Mr. and Mrs. Root are members of the Methodist church at Melrose and devout supporters of the faith they profess. Politically, Mr. Root is an independent Republican and is a progressive and enterprising citizen. His uncle, Emerson T. Root, gave his life for his country in the Civil war. Mr. Root was clerk of the school board and always strives for the betterment of educational facilities.

JOHN S. UNZICKER. This thrifty and well-to-do farmer is one of the venerable men who has settled in the reservation country. His estate of one-quarter section lies two and one-half miles north from Westlake and is well improved and provided with good, large residence and splendid outbuildings.

John S. Unzicker was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on May 21, 1829, being the son of John and Barbara (Unzicker) Unzicker. The father was born in Germany, came to the United States in 1829 and died the same year. The mother was born in Germany in 1808. Our subject was reared by his grandmother and commenced the battle of life for himself when he was ten years old. He was taken to Ohio when four and there educated. He learned the cooper trade but when he was nineteen he went to Lee county, Iowa, and farmed there and in Illinois. When twenty-seven Mr. Unzicker went to Hickory county, Missouri, broke the wild sod and settled to farming. At the breaking out of the war he returned to Davis county, Iowa, then to Lee county, and finally went to Clark county, Missouri, was also in Cass county. He was in McPherson county and then in Linn, and in 1886 he came to Whitman county, Washington. At the date of the opening of the reservation he came hither and settled on his present place. This was in the fall of 1895 and since then he has labored faithfully in farming and raising stock.

In Henry county, Iowa, on September 21, 1856, Mr. Unzicker married Miss Mary, daughter of John F. and Magdelene (King) Miller. The father was a miller and farmer, born in Germany in 1801, came to the United States when a young man on a contract to work out his passage money after he got here, which he did. He died in 1871. The mother was also born in Germany. Mrs. Unzicker was born in Ohio, in 1839, and has the following brothers and sisters, Gideon, John, Isaac, Samuel, Joseph, Charles, Lydia, Sarah, Barbara. Mr. Unzicker was an only child. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Unzicker, Lydia, Gideon, William, Lavina, Samuel, Barbara, Emma, Ella, Charles, Clara. Our subject and his wife are members of the Mennonite church. Mr. Unzicker is a member of the school board, is road overseer and has always been an advocate of good schools and progression generally.

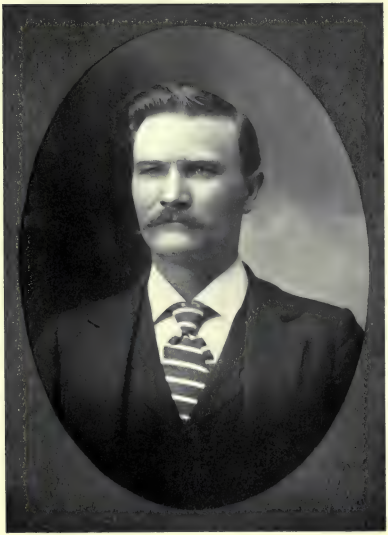
GEORGE A. SMITH is one of the leading stockmen of Nez Perces county, as well as a heavy real estate holder. He has a farm of nearly one section, seven miles east from Lewiston, where the family home is, and also rents eight hundred acres in addition to this. Mr. Smith runs his cattle in the mountains in the summers and feeds them at the ranch in the winters. He has made a good success in this line of work and is a man of ability and energy. He raises barley and wheat on the farm and does a general farming business. He has a fine residence, good barns, and the property is one of the excellent ones of this section.



It is interesting to note the details of a successful life like this, and accordingly we append them. Mr. Smith was born in Pike county, Illinois, on August 22, 1860, being the son of Hiram R. and Nancy (Alkire) Smith. The father was born in Pike county, Illinois, in 1829, and died in 1873. The mother was born in Illinois also and died in 1863. Our subject remained at home with his father, the mother dying when he was very young. He gained a good education and at the age of thirteen the family removed to Vernon county, Missouri, this being in the fall of 1872, and six months later the father died. He had bought a tract of land there, but the family returned to the Illinois home, which they still owned. He remained there until eighteen and then came west in the fall of 1878. He went first to the Willamette valley and thence to Lewiston, landing here on November 2, 1878. He worked at different things until 1880, then took a position with the N. P. R. R. as fireman, and later became engineer; then he operated an engine in a mill and in 1885 he began raising stock and farming. He took a homestead, which was the nucleus of his farm, and bought more land until he has as described above.

On November 14, 1886, in this county, Mr. Smith married Miss Alfreta, daughter of Robert and Eliza (Sewell) Ingham. The father was born in Holton, Maine, in 1837, and died in 1891. The mother was born in Miramichi, Canada, on August 30, 1842. Mrs. Smith was born in Holton, Maine, on October 10, 1870, and she has brothers and sisters as follows: John, Bernard, Robert L. and David. Mr. Smith has the following named brothers and sisters: Seldon, Robert, Hiram, Hilbert, Wesley Akers, Mrs. J. M. Edkins. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith there have been born five children, Laura, deceased; Arthur, also deceased; Ernest, Dora and Helen. Mr. Smith is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the W. W. In politics he is allied with the Republicans. He has been a member of the Lewiston school board for eight years and is a warm advocate of good schools, and his efforts have done much in this direction in building up. Mrs. Smith had two uncles in the war of the Rebellion, John Ingham, who died in the army, and Frank, who lost one leg. Mr. Smith is one of the enterprising, thrifty and sagacious citizens of our county and is the recipient of the esteem and confidence of his fellows. Mr. Smith is a stockholder and director of the Idaho Trust Company, Lewiston. He is a candidate for county commissioner on the Republican ticket from the first district.

HON. LOUIS CLARK. This capable and influential citizen of Nez Perces county is one of the powerful men whose talents have been turned to the provision of sound legislation for the state of Idaho, being at this time a member of the state senate from Nez Perces county. Mr. Clark is conceded to be the most powerful forensic orator on the floors of legislation in his state, and he has made a record that is highly appreciated not only by his constituents but also by all lovers of salutary and right laws.

Louis Clark was born in Hawkins county, Kentucky, on August 3, 1865, the son of William H. and Mary A. (Ray) Clark, whose ancestors had been residents of that section for four generations. Mr. Clark is the eldest of three children and his father died while he was an infant. From that time forward, Louis helped his mother in the battles of life. In 1874, they came across the plains to Boise, Idaho, and in 1882, our subject came to Beeman and later settled in Gifford. In this latter place he gives his attention to mercantile pursuits in Gifford and handling his estate two miles west from Gifford. Mr. Clark has made a brilliant success in farming and raising stock and is one of the most substantial men of the county. He was reared amid the trying scenes of life in various localities and received his education from the common schools. In 1890, he became greatly interested in politics and in 1892, he was elected constable of the Potlatch district. In 1896, he was elected justice of the peace in the Lapwai precinct. In 1898, he was nominated as state senator but was defeated. In 1900, he was nominated again and that time he carried the day. In both races, he went far ahead of his party and although the county of Nez Perces is Republican, he won, being on the Democratic ticket. It was soon discovered that Senator Clark was the right man in the right place and the senate accorded him responsible positions. He is chairman of the committee on agriculture and live stock, a member of the committee on rules, on highways, on bridges and ferries and he has been one of the most active and influential men of the senate. The success that Mr. Clark has won is entirely the achievement of a strong will, wisdom, integrity and untiring activity in the various channels of business life and in the realm of politics, while also in educational matters he has always been a power for good.

Senator Clark is a member of the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which organization is often confounded wrongly with the polygamous faction which Brigham Young established, but the two organizations are widely different and the church of our senator is stanchly opposed to the practices of the followers of Young.

On July 2, 1885, Louis Clark married Miss Ida M., daughter of J. A. and Susan (Herrington) Richardson, natives of Missouri. The nuptials occurred in Juliaetta, Latah county. Mrs. Clark was born in Pendleton, Oregon. She had one brother, Isaac, killed in the Philippine war. He belonged to Company B, Idaho Volunteers. Another brother, John, was killed in an accident, and one brother, George, is living at Juliaetta farming. Mr. Clark has four brothers and two sisters living. We wish to mention that in addition to the brilliant record that Senator Clark has made in legislation for his state, he has also demonstrated that he possesses excellent business and executive ability and is a good financier. He has large tracts of real estate, handles about two hundred head of beef cattle annually, and has done a lion's share in the development of the resources of Nez Perces county.

JOSEPH H. DAY, an enterprising and successful farmer and stockman, residing on his estate of two hundred and forty acres, four miles north from Morrow, has also achieved success in the work of the educator and is one of the substantial and influential men of this section.

Joseph H. Day was born in Washington county, Oregon, on October 5, 1864, being the son of George C. and Sarah J. (Painter) Day. The father, a farmer and stockman, was born in Ohio, crossed the plains in 1850 with ox teams and settled in Oregon City. He put the first boat on the river above the falls, then farmed and taught school and in the 'sixties was sent to the legislature. He was a strong and influential Republican and did much to mould affairs in early days. He was also active in the Indian troubles in the 'fifties. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri and crossed the plains in 1851, with her parents. Her grandfather, Robert Moore, crossed the plains in 1838 and started the town of Linn City across the Willamette from Oregon City, which was later washed away. W. C. Painter figured prominently in the Indian wars. Joseph C. Painter and two brothers were members of the Washington legislature. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place and was educated in the common schools and business college in Portland. Then he taught two years and removed to Kittitas county, Washington, where he taught four years, after which he went to Walla Walla, Whitman and other counties and worked with engineering corps for the Northern Pacific. In 1896, Mr. Day came to his present place and since that time has been engaged in farming and raising stock. He was nominated by the Democrats for county surveyor in 1898 but suffered the defeat of the party that year.

On October 7, 1888, in Ellensburg, Washington, Mr. Day married Miss Orlena, daughter of Casper B. and Elizabeth A. (Enochs) Fetters. The father was an artist as well as a farmer, and died in 1898. One of his wood engravings among others attracted considerable attention in the World's Fair in Chicago. The mother was born in Illinois and still lives in Ellensburg, Washington. Mrs. Day was born in Illinois in 1869, and has five brothers and two sisters, Carl B., Horatio, Freeman, Estella Elliott, Flora Dyer, Joseph, Ernest. Mr. Day has the following brothers and sisters, William R., Margaret Barstow, Jessie M. Adams, George P., Robert, Anna Andrews, Grace Schuster, Josephine Ford, John, Benjamin, Chester, Walter. Francis E. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Day, Jean, George C., John and Lydia M. Mr. Day is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Moscow, and the A. O. U. W. at Ilo.

ALFRED E. MILLER. This genial and affable gentleman, who with his faithful and pleasant wife have traveled on the journey of life for many years, and now as the golden years of their days are beginning to run apace, they have made themselves a home in the reservation country, which for natural advantages is equal to any which has been developed and improved in a becoming manner.

Alfred E. Miller was born in Spring Mills, Pennsylvania, on June 13, 1833, being the son of Jonas and Lydia (Ettinger) Miller, natives of Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, and born in 1801 and 1799 and died in 1876 and 1874, respectively. The father was a tailor but farmed some the latter part of his life. Alfred was educated and raised in his native place and when seventeen started for himself. He worked on the farm and one year later took up blacksmithing, which he followed for three years. Subsequent to that, we find him for eight years in a dry goods store and then he went to Colorado and mined three years. His next move was to Baker City, Oregon, and there he freighted and mined for fifteen years and came thence in 1877 to Dayton, Washington. That was the place of his toils on the farm until 1891, when he came to Genesee and bought land. Like the majority of the farmers in the gloomy year of 1893, he went to the wall financially and when the reservation opened he came hither and selected his place, three miles west from Gifford. He had but a few cents in cash, and the opening of a new place was very slow, but he has labored on and now has a good home, plenty of stock, does a general farming business and is prospering. Mr. Miller has one brother, Charles, a tailor in Pennsylvania, and four sisters, Catharine, deceased wife of Michael Keys; Ann, widow of Evan Evens, in Pennsylvania; Polly, widow of Lyons M. Hanna; Margaret, single, living in Pennsylvania. Mr. Miller is a member of the Lutheran church and his wife of the Baptist. He is a Republican and is active in the improvement of the country and the development of its resources.

On April 19, 1867, at Lagrande, Oregon, Mr. Miller married Julia Holbfield, widow of David Holbfield, and daughter of Theopholus and Elizabeth H. (Lechman) Shaw, natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Miller was born in Putnam county, Missouri, on June 26, 1838, and came to Oregon with her parents in 1865. She had nine brothers and sisters and all are dead but two, Sampson, in Okanogan county, Washington; Daniel, in Baker City, Oregon. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Charles, at home; Annie, wife of George M. White, near Culdesac; Jane, wife of Charles Bateman, on the reservation; Mary, wife of F. A. Schreffler, a farmer near Gifford. Mrs. Miller had one son by her former marriage, David, living near Clarkston, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are well respected people and are worthy of the esteem in which they are held. They have labored well to develop the western country and are deserving of the portion they have wrought out by their toils.

CHARLES W. EVERTS. To the old Empire state we travel to find the birth place of the subject of this article. Syracuse county was the spot and May 4, 1865, the date of this event. The parents, William H. and Mary A. (Miller) Everts, came to Ionia county, Michigan, and in 1880, to Dayton, Washington. The father went to South Dakota and there took a homestead, where in 1891, he died aged fifty-five. The mother, aged fifty-seven, is now living with a daughter in Southshore, South Dakota. Our subject commenced for himself at fifteen, having secured a common school education. After coming to Washington with the family, he spent considerable time around Walla Walla and also worked at Union, Union county, Oregon. He was jailer there for a time. In 1893 he went to Oakesdale, Washington, and there farmed and worked on the Northern Pacific until 1897, when he came to his present place, about five miles northeast from Nezperce and took eighty acres under the homestead act. He has proved up on this, and has an orchard of two hundred trees, a well cultivated farm and good improvements otherwise.

Mr. Everts has one sister, Mrs. Emma L. Potter, and one brother, Henry, residing in Southshore, South Dakota. The sister was born on January 21, 1875, in Ionia county, Michigan, and Henry was born in the same place, on March 29, 1877. Mr. Everts is a respected and public-minded citizen and has the good will of all. He is still one of the jolly bachelors of the section and seems quite content with the quiet joys and peacefulness of that state.

CHARLES C. SAUNDERS, a farmer and stockman, whose home is one mile west from Dublin, is to be numbered with the enterprising and substantial citizens and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant him consideration in the volume of his county history.

Charles C. Saunders was born in Monroe county, West Virginia, on September 24, 1860, being the son of Lewis W. and Julia (Harlen) Saunders, natives of West Virginia. The father was born on September 24, 1835. He served about four years in the Civil war, participating in the awful battle of Gettysburg, and also served under Grant. The mother of our subject was born in 1841 and died in 1885. The family went to Missouri when our subject was eleven and there as in his own home place he studied in the common schools. He remained with his father until he was twenty-one and then started in the battle of life on his own resources. When twenty-five he started out west and March 12, 1886, marks the date of his landing in Lewiston. He worked for a time and then journeyed to the Okanogan country, after which he came to Uniontown and harvested. About this time he had the misfortune to break his arm which necessitated his retirement from active life for a time. In November, 1888, we see him in Spokane, working for Meade & Company, wholesale butchers. Two years here and then he butchered in Uniontown after which he served fourteen months for the Great Northern in this capacity. Next, Mr. Saunders opened a meat market in Spokane, called the Union market and as partner he took F. L. Sampson. After four years in this business he sold out and went to buying and shipping stock. On June 1, 1898, he came to the reservation country and secured his present place. This was raw prairie and he has devoted himself to improving it and also continues to buy and ship stock. He raises fine grades of cattle and hogs. Mr. Saunders is a Democrat and interested in the campaigns. He has the following brothers and sisters, Jennie L., Mamie Hayes, Lewis A., Cass, Ross, Earl. Mr. Saunders is one of the jolly bachelors of the reservation country and is also one of the esteemed and substantial men of this section.

EDWARD L. WIGGIN is one of the leading commercial men of Lewiston, handling an establishment as tobacconist, wherein he has made a good success. He is a native of Dayton, Washington, being born of pioneer parents, Lott and Mary J. (Newell) Wiggin, on February 15, 1871. His father was a wheelwright, born in Portland, Maine, in 1823, and died in 1899, in Lewiston. He came up the first steamboat on the upper Snake and landed at Lewiston in 1861. He opened a trading store at the junction of the Snake and Clearwater and continued in the country until the time of his death. He was a prominent man in Lewiston and for many years was a member of the city council. Mrs. Wiggin is still living in Lewiston. Her father, Dr. Newell, was Indian agent at Lapwai from 1874 to 1875 and was one of the early pioneers of the country. He was a man of great influence and held in high esteem by both whites and Indians. When he retired from the agency, the Indians, as a manifestation of their appreciation, granted him a tract of land at the forks of the Snake and Clearwater rivers, which is still known as the Newell grant. He and his wife were content to pass their days in Lewiston and here also they sleep.

Our subject was educated in the common schools, and remained at home until of age. His parents came to Lewiston when he was four years old and he has remained here since and so is very familiar with both the city and surrounding country. When eighteen he went to work in the Teller office and three years later went into the Tribune office. He also handled stock on the range and made camp Joseph his headquarters for a time. In 1895 he started his present business and his ability and care of business has given him the meed of excellent success and he is one of the prosperous business men of Lewiston.

On November 30, 1899, Mr. Wiggin married Miss Augusta M., the youngest daughter of A. Benson, a well known pioneer. Mrs. Wiggin was born in Lewiston, where also her wedding occurred, and the date of her advent into life was 1877, during the hostilities of the Nez Perces war and she is distinctly an Idaho product. She has the following brother and sisters: Mrs. Clifford Riggs, Mrs. Walter Addison, Albert, a resident of this county. Mr. Wiggin has the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Joseph Molloy; John, a soldier in the Philippines and now in Lewiston; Charles A., also in Lewiston. Mr. Wiggin has a fine home in the city and one child, Albert Edward, eighteen months old. Mr. Wiggin is a member of the I. O. O. F. in Lewiston, and also of the W. of W. He is a Republican and active. He is also a member of the Pioneer Association. Mr. Wiggin is well and favorably known and has the regard and esteem of all.

LOUIS DELSOL. A list of Nez Perces county's orchardists and real estate holders would by no means be complete were there failure to mention the well known citizen whose name initiates this paragraph. Mr. Delsol is one of the pioneers of this country, has labored faithfully and intelligently for its upbuilding and advancement, has demonstrated the fruit culture to be a successful industry, being one of the first men who planted fruit here and also one of those whose efforts have continued with commendable progress and success, and now he stands one of the leaders in his line. Three miles east from Lewiston is his home place, which consists of three hundred and thirty-five acres of good soil. He does a general farming business and has some stock, but his attention is largely devoted to fruit, of which he has thirty-five acres. In 1872 Mr. Delsol planted the first grape vines in this country, sending to California for them. They have been a success and the two acres planted then are regularly bearing now and have been during the intervening time. He has a good house and all the outbuildings that are needed.

Louis Delson was born in France, on March 25, 1838, being the son of natives of that land. His parents died when he was small and he has but slight remembrance of them. In his native place, Louis received a good education and remained until he was twenty-one years old. Then he came to New York and thence, via Panama, to San Francisco, where an older brother had preceded him about two years. He arrived in the Golden state in 1860, and soon was in the mines hard at work for the hidden treasure and at this he wrought for a number of years and then came to Canyon City, Oregon, where he delved for gold for a time and then went to the Salmon river mines, remaining four years, until 1870. Then Mr. Delsol came to Lewiston and took his present land from the government. At the time of the Nez Perces war he was in San Francisco and learning of it he speedily came home and assisted to stand guard. A number of French miners on the Salmon came trooping into his place at this time and remained there several months or until hostilities ceased.

Mr. Delsol is interested in commercial pursuits in Lewiston and is constantly investing more. He is one of the genial and affable celibatarians of the county and is popular with all. He takes an active part in politics, being a Democrat, and has done duty in numerous conventions. In religious persuasion he is a Catholic, and fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason. Mr. Delsol has two brothers and one sister, Frank, Baptiste and August.

CHARLES B. WORTMAN. The subject of this review is one of the representative men of this reservation country and is now dwelling on a farm four miles west from Nezperce. Being among the first at the opening, he secured one of the choice pieces and since that date has given his undivided attention to its improvement and cultivation.

Charles B. Wortman was born in Daviess county, Missouri, on December 25, 1859, being the son of Milton L. and Catherine (Spencer) Wortman, natives of West Virginia and Ohio, respectively. The father enlisted in the Confederate army in June, 1861, and fought in Price's army all through the conflict, being in many battles and skirmishes and also at the surrender. He was sheriff of Daviess county when the war broke out and he was elected again after the war was over. On September 15, 1872, he died from the effects of bone erysipelas. The mother died on July 4, 1876. In 1873 our subject went to Douglas county, Colorado, but returned to Missouri, whence he again went to Colorado and remained riding the range until 1889, the year in which he came to Latah, Washington. He was here at the day of the opening of the reservation, November 18, 1895, but did not file until the twenty-ninth. His place is situated on the Nezperce and Lewiston wagon road and is well fenced and about all under cultivation. Mr. Wortman came here with but little property and is now a prosperous and substantial agriculturist.

On April 1, 1889, Mr. Wortman married Miss Nancy M., daughter of Hathaway and Nancy Masterson. They lived in Carroll county, Missouri, where Mrs. Wortman was born on August 25, 1864. The family went to Benton county, Arkansas. Mr. Masterson was born in Kentucky and commenced to teach at the age of eighteen and continued that with the work of the ministry in the Christian church until two years before his death in June, 1897, being then aged seventy-seven. His widow now lives on the reservation in her seventy-fifth year. Mrs. Wortman is a member of the Christian church.

THEOPHILUS F. ROSSE was born in the grand little republic of Switzerland, the date thereof being October 28, 1859. His parents, Joseph and Barbara (Berdat) Rosse, were of French extraction and their home was in France until Bonaparte changed the boundary of Switzerland. The father of our subject was born in Delemont, the old home place of this son, in 1804, and he died in 1873. He was a farmer and served as a cadet under Napoleon Boneparte in 1816. The mother of our subject was born in the same place in 1820 and died in 1863. Theophilus was reared on a farm and gained his education from the common schools. He learned the trade of making confections and fine pastry cooking. He was favored in his youth in being able to study in French and German and speaks those languages in connection with the English. When twenty-one he came to the United States and from New York he sailed to Argentine and back as cook. Next he cooked on a steamer on lake Michigan. Then we see him in Minnesota following the fine art in a summer hotel on lake Osakias. Consequent to this he cooked for a corps of Canadian Pacific engineers and thus traveled all over the country. He took land in Saskatchewan and held it until the breaking out of the Indian rebellion, when he joined the whites and received a wound in the thigh. This was in 1885 and soon after his discharge he came to Lane county, Oregon, where he settled to farming and stock raising. For fourteen years Mr. Rosse did well here and then the panic of 1893 struck the country and he was financially crippled with the others. Then he came to the reservation and leased Indian land, where he now is, three and one-half miles west from Ilo, since which time he has done well. He has re-leased the land for three years and is entering still more deeply into agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Rosse has the following named brothers and sisters: Joseph, a large wholesale merchant in France; Julia Frey, Josephine Fox, Bridget Bill, all in Switzerland; Mary Schaub, whose husband is a banker in Buenos Ayres, Argentine. Mr. Rosse is a Catholic and adheres to the Republican party. He is a man of principle and integrity and is of excellent standing in the community, being ever allied on the side of substantial upbuilding and progress.

ALBERT WILLIAMS is one of the prosperous farmers who have settled in the reservation country and have made it a very attractive and pleasant place to live, besides making it one of the most valuable sections of the state.

Albert Williams was born in Port Hope, Canada, in June, 1851, being the son of John and Fannie (Cobblde) Williams. The father was born in Canada and died in 1864, having been a farmer. The mother was a native of England and died in 1864. Our subject was thus early left an orphan and knew some of the hardships of this life in his childhood. He continued to farm the old home place until 1888, then he sold it and came to Jacksonville, Oregon, where he stayed but a short time. The next move was to Idaho, where Mr. Williams bought a farm, tilling the same until the reservation opened and then he took his present place, two miles southwest from Melrose. He made final proof of this place in 1901 and it is considered one of the very best farms in the vicinity. Mr. Williams has a fine orchard, a commodious barn and is about to erect a good residence. He had brothers and sisters, as follows: Elizabeth, deceased, Joseph, Benjamin, William, deceased, Frances, Harnett, Zurina Stephens and Simeon, in Canada. Mr. Wilhams is a member of the Methodist church and is a man of integrity and industry.

While in Canada, in 1884, Mr. Williams married Miss Sarah, daughter of Godfrey Robinson, a farmer. One child has been born to this union, Sarah B., now fourteen years old.

JEFFERSON DAVIS HENDREN. We wish to especially mention the subject of this sketch in the history of Nez Perces county, as he has been well known in the eastern part as a man of strong character and determination, and has led a remarkable career as an officer of justice, always accomplishing the dangerous and trying tasks in his service as deputy sheriff, even capturing noted criminals and handling them without irons, when others were killed in the attempt. Also in the seventeen years of his stay in these sections, Mr. Hendren has shown true qualities of integrity, uprightness and honor and his friends are numbered from every quarter.

Mr. Hendren was born in Arkansas, on July 29, 1861, being the son of William H. and Elizabeth W. (Bates) Hendren. The father was born in 1834, in Wilkes county, North Carolina, fought through the Civil war as captain under Price and experienced some thrilling times. The mother of our subject was born in Georgia in 1833 and her parents were also natives of that state. Mr. W. H. Hendren and his wife still live on the home place in Arkansas. Our subject was educated and reared in Arkansas, then followed stock business in Nebraska and Montana until twenty-three, at which time he visited home again and then came to Camas prairie, where he located and took up stock raising. Since then he has more or less devoted himself to this and is now handling a livery business in Kamiah, where he is successful. Mr. Hendren has the following brothers and sisters: John J., William I., James E., Evan L., Robert L., Napoleon P., Albert M., John T., Julia A. Bates, Frances P. Austin, Lizzie Vandevanter and Lottie. Mr. Hendren is a member of the I. O. O. F., Clearwater Lodge No. 68, at Mt. Idaho; of the Encampment, No. 18; and he and his wife belong to the Rebekahs.

On June 6, 1883, Mr. Hendren married Miss Martha J., daughter of William B. and Jane (Caughron) Austin, of Benton county, Arkansas, and on February 8, 1887, on Camas prairie, aged thirty-two, Mrs. Hendren was called from her home by death and left five children, Berna and Bertha, twin girls, George S., Mabel and Earl. In March, 1902, Mr. Hendren contracted a second marriage, Mrs. Mattie D. Montgomery then becoming his wife. Her parents are Joseph and Nancy J. McKinney, residents of Camas prairie. Mr. McKinney is an influential man and prominent in political matters, being a Democrat, and also in Oregon he was one of the leading men, being a heavy stock raiser and dealer. Mrs. Hendren was born in Linn county, Oregon, on October 24, 1870, and has two brothers and seven sisters, William and John, Annie, Clara Springer, Etta, Orpha Powell, Ollie Lieuellen, Rose Bush and Bertha Bryant. By her former husband Mrs. Henderson has two children, Francis R. and Ida M. Montgomery.

In the political field, Mr. Hendren is both popular and prominent, being at the county and state conventions at almost every sitting and a man of influence in these capacities as well as in his home position. Mr. Hendren was deputy sheriff for six years in Idaho county and county assessor there for one term, being deputy for four years in addition. Although the county was Republican, still he secured a majority of twenty-six at the time of his election. When deputy sheriff, Mr. Hendren captured the noted Oregon desperado who had killed two men in Oregon. He caught his man on the Salmon and took him forty-five miles without an iron.

CHARLES W. HEBERLY. Being here at the very day the reservation was opened, and owing to his excellent enterprise and keen judgment, Mr. Heberly secured one of the most valuable ranches in Nez Perces county, being located three miles west from Nezperce and on the main Lewiston road. His land all lies well, is very fertile and plentifully watered, while the valuable improvements which he has added from time to time since, by dint of hard labor and wise management, have doubly enhanced its value. The annual returns in crops make a fine dividend and Mr. Heberly is one of the prosperous and substantial men of the community.

Charles W. Heberly was born in Mineral county, West Virginia, on September 25, 1867, being the son of Charles G. and Margaret C. Heberly, natives of Germany and West Virginia, respectively. Mr. Heberly has one sister, Mrs. Caroline Hollen, who was born on February 25, 1866, and is now living in Maysville, Grant county, West Virginia. The father of our subject, who was living in Illinois at the time of the Civil war, enlisted in the Second Illinois Light Artillery, and served all through the war, being in many battles and skirmishes. He was wounded and also languished in one of the horrible prisons. Being honorably discharged, he returned to West Virginia and later went to Maryland, where he died in 1870 from the effects of a wound received in the war. Our subject remained at home with his mother, gaining his education from the common schools, until he was sixteen, when he started in life for himself. At this time he had no money and he commenced work for a salary. In 1887 he went to York county, Nebraska, and one year later came to Moscow. He was variously employed on a farm and the railroad and otherwise until the opening of the reservation, as stated above, and then he secured his present place, where he has wrought since. Mr. Heberly had but little financial means when he landed here and the goodly holding he now has is the result of his excellent labor and thrift. He also owns shares in the Farmers' Grain Company. Mr. Heberly's mother is living with his sister in Maysville, West Virginia, aged sixty-one. Our subject has never launched on the sea of matrimony but is still enjoying the seclusion of his bachelor home. He is respected and is of good standing.

FRANK CHANDLER. Three miles west from Nezperce lies the well tilled and valuable farm of the subject of this article. This land was taken as a homestead in 1897, being one hundred and twenty acres, and since that time Mr. Chandler has devoted himself in an industrious manner to its improvement and culture, having been favored with good success in these efforts.

Frank Chandler was born in Iowa, on April 22, 1867, being the son of Sireno and Laura (Tillotson) Chandler, natives of Maine and the province of Quebec, respectively. The former died at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, in 1900, aged sixty-four, and the latter in May, 1881, aged forty-five. Frank was reared on a farm and was a regular attendant at the district school until seventeen and then he started in life for himself. Three years were spent in various employment in Minnesota and thence he migrated to Coleridge, Nebraska, where he operated a dray line for eight years. From that locality Mr. Chandler came to his present place and his labors have been dispensed with wisdom in building the improvements and in cultivation of his farm. He raises wheat, oats, flax and barley, also a good orchard and pays considerable attention to raising stock. He has some well bred Berkshire hogs, a seven-eighths Shire stallion and other animals.

Mr. Chandler has the following named brothers and sisters: George, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota; Midas, in Minnesota; Clemma, wife of L. S. Nelson; Olive, wife of Ed Cooper; Gertrude, wife of Will Becker, all residing in Minnesota, and Carrie, wife of John Watkins, residing in Iowa. Mr. Chandler's father was in the Civil war for three years.

At Coleridge, Nebraska, on December 26, 1887, Mr. Chandler married Miss Hallie M., daughter of Henry L. and Elnora (Hakes) Beach. The parents were natives of Illinois and came as pioneers to Minnesota, Iowa, and finally to Nebraska. Mr. Chandler was born in Illinois, on January 30, 1868, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Virgil E., Roscoe W., Charles, all in Iowa; Vernie, with parents in Nebraska; Orpha, wife of W. H. Needham; Rose, wife of Bert S. Baker, at Palouse, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler have two children, Lee and Gertrude.

LOREN L. HAYNES. Among the younger men of Nez Perces county, there is none more popular nor of better standing than the energetic, stirring and capable gentleman whose name is at the head of this article.

Mr. Haynes was born in Adair county, Iowa, on July 14, 1873, being the son of Andrew and Clara (Polk) Haynes. The father was a farmer, born in Ross county, Ohio, in 1841. He lives in Iowa and is a man of much influence in his state, being an aggressive Democrat of ability. The mother was born in Indiana and died when Loren was four years of age. His maternal grandmother is still living, aged eighty-eight. Loren L. was educated in the common schools and then finished at the Capitol City Commercial College of Des Moines, Iowa, after which he took a course at the Iowa College of Law, graduating with honors; he came to Lewiston in 1894 and there engaged in the practice of law, associating himself in a partnership with Judge Jasper Rand, the oldest practitioner in the state. For three years Mr. Haynes did good work at the bar and then determined to retire from the practice of law, and accordingly removed to the farm where he now lives, three miles east from Lewiston. He owns four hundred acres of good land and he is one of the most enterprising fruit raisers of the county.

In January, 1897, Mr. Haynes married Miss Abbie, adopted daughter of Judge Rand. Mrs. Haynes is an only child and was born in Lewiston, in January, 1880. Mr. Haynes has one brother, Farris, who is a farmer and stock raiser in Iowa. To the happy home of Mr. Haynes there have come as the fruit of the marriage three children, Austin, Hester and Clara. Mr. Haynes is a member of the W. of W. and of the K. of P. He is a Democrat in politics and is influential and active in this realm. He has never sought personal preferment, but has done much for his party. He was a member of the National Democratic convention in 1896 and has attended a number of national conventions. Mr. Haynes had an uncle in both the Mexican and the Civil wars. Mr. Haynes is an advocate of good government, especially a devotee of good schools and he is always arrayed on the side of progress. Mr. Haynes has done well in handling his business affairs and has a good dividend paying orchard.

HENRY T. SUMMERS. A good, substantial man, a wise and industrious farmer, whose labors have brought abundant success to him, a patriotic citizen and a true and loyal friend, it is fitting that we should grant representation to Mr. Summers in the history of his county.

Henry T. Summers was born in Vernon county, Missouri, on February 1, 1847, being the son of Allen and Elizabeth (Wright) Summers, natives of Kentucky, dying in 1849 and 1859, respectively. The father was one of the first to settle in Vernon county and his son, Hardin, was the first white child born there. As the parents died when Henry was young, he was raised by his eldest brother, where he remained until twenty. His first labor for himself was to herd and drive cattle and feed them in the winter, and for five years he continued with one man, and then he bought a farm and settled to tilling it. In 1887 he came to Latah county, purchased land near Vollmer and there and in Whitman county he farmed until the opening of the reservation, when he was the second man to file in township thirty-five. His farm is two miles due south of Melrose, is fertile land and improved with a skillful and thrifty hand. Mr. Summers has a good house, barn and orchard and other improvements in proportion. He threshed thirty-five hundred bushels of grain from his ranch this year, in addition to the hay put up for all his stock. Mr. Summers also operates a threshing outfit and is a business man in every respect.

In Missouri, in 1868, Mr. Summers married Miss Phoebe C., daughter of Delilah Reed, and to them four children have been born, Delilah, wife of John W. Seet, in Whitman county; Lee, in this county; Florence Hill, in Kendrick; Charles, in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Summers was born in Indiana, on September 20, 1845, and has one sister, Manilla Arnold, in St. Louis; also she has two half sisters and five half brothers. Mr. Summers has the following named brothers and sisters: Moses, John, Julia Daniels; he has also six brothers and one sister dead. Mr. Summers is a Democrat and always takes the part of the intelligent citizen. He has been trustee of the school and is an advocate of the best of schools and is willing to pay the price of the same. He is an elder in the Christian church at Melrose and an active worker in the support of the faith, and he is respected and esteemed by all who know him.

CHARLES M. FRYE. It is with pleasure that we are privileged to recount the career of the intelligent and industrious young farmer and agriculturist named above. He was born in Illinois, on November 30, 1875, being the son of Abraham A. and Ruth (Brooks) Frye. The father was born in Pennsylvania and died in Nez Perces county in January, 1895. The mother was born in Kentucky and still lives in this county. Our subject came to Moscow with his parents in 1878 and there received his educational training. His father bought eighty acres on the present site of Moscow and started a livery and feed stable. He built the Star stable and also operated a hotel. He bought land around Moscow and in 1894 sold to Latah county the farm now used as the poor farm. Then he removed to the place where our subject now lives, four miles northeast from Lewiston, and that has been the family home since that time. After the father's death Charles took charge of the farm and now, in connection with his brother, he is farming the land and raising stock. They do a genaral farming business, raise all crops that do well in this section, handle cattle, hogs, sheep and horses, and are prosperous and well-to-do citizens of the county.

On December 21, 1898, Mr. Frye married Miss Nettie, daughter of John and Ida (Strong) Miller. The father, who was born in Pennsylvania, is a miller by trade and is now operating a mill at Dublin, Idaho. The mother was born in Illinois. Mrs. Frye was born in Lewiston, in 1879, and has two brothers and two sisters, Iva, Veva, Earl, Frank. Mr. Frye has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, William, Abram A., Walter, Bertha Bell and Pearl Gardner. To Mr. and Mrs. Frye two children have been born, Irene and Marion. Mr. Frye is an active and influential Republican and is ever on the side of progress, both in schools and government. He had one uncle, Mr. Brooks, in the Civil war.

THOMAS C. MOXLEY, who is now one of the leading men of Nez Perces county, has had a very active and stirring career, and he is deserving of a place in the history of his county. He was born in Wheelersburg, Scioto county, Ohio, on December 10, 1840, being the son of Thomas S. and Susanna (McConnell) Moxley. The father was a physician, born in Orange county, Vermont, in 1808, and died in November, 1880. He was a graduate of Woodstock Medical College, in Vermont, and his father was also a physician. The mother of our subject was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1810, and died in 1889. Her father, John McConnell, settled in Portsmouth in 1802, being one of the pioneers of that country. Thomas C. worked at home and attended the schools of his town until fifteen and then managed a farm that his parents purchased. On April 6, 1861, he left home and came, via Panama, to California, landing in San Francisco on May 5, 1861, and there learned of the outbreak of hostilities. He had seven dollars and fifty cents and at once went to work for Mr. Coffin, a prominent man in Oregon, whence our subject went. He was employed in taking supplies to the soldiers who were guarding the immigrants from the Indians. He assisted to build a wagon road from Umatilla county to the Grande Ronde valley, then went to Portland and was appointed assistant farmer at the Lapwai agency, under Agent Charles Hutchins, in 1862. He was retained until 1863, then went to Walla Walla to file on the townsite of Boise, but was a little too late. He then went to Lapwai and thence to the Flat Head agency as farmer for Mr. Hutchins, remaining until 1866. He then visited Helena and Fort Benton, embarking there for Ohio. Next we see him in Illinois, where he bought a farm near Xenia, and on March 1, 1867, he married Miss Mary Goult. To them were born three children, King, deceased, Myrtle (now Mrs. F. S. Curtiss) and Charles, married, September 19, 1902, to Miss Sadie Cochrane, of Livingston, Montana. He sold his farm and came to the Flat Head agency and acted as a farmer for McCormick. His wife became dissatisfied with this and they came with ox teams to Omaha, where he bought a farm. In 1872 he and his brother John came to Sidney, Cheyenne, Ogden, Helena, and thence across the mountains afoot to Lewiston. They arrived in July, 1873, and at once went to work with the corps of surveyors who were running the boundary line between Idaho and Washington. Later he worked as carpenter and cook for the Catholic mission, for Captain Williams. Here he learned of the death of his wife in Ohio, and returning to that country, he settled his affairs and on April 7, 1875, married Miss Mary C., daughter of Hiram and Zerilda (Thomas) Wilson, natives of New Jersey and Kentucky. The father was born in 1817 and died in 1899. Mrs. Moxley was born in Scioto county, Ohio, in 1849, and has the following brothers and sisters: Katherine Long, Angeline West, deceased, Martha West, John, Virginia, Charles, M. D., Sarah Dewey, Thornton, Sele, Elizabeth, Florence Rapp, deceased, and George. Mr. Moxley has the following named brothers and sisters: Marcellus K., a surgeon through the entire war, now deceased; Frances M., John Q., Jr., M. D.; Anna, deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Moxley there have been born eight children, Thomas, deceased, Virginia, at home, Robert, deceased, John Q., Florence, Jessie, Minnie, Thornton. After his second marriage Mr. Moxley came to Utah, bringing his wife, aged parents, two sisters and two children. Then he came to Lewiston and for two years wrought in the mines and came out, to use his trite expression, "busted." In 1877 he sold his possessions and went to market gardening, in which he did well. He bought a small tract of land, later he took a pre-emption, which he sold, and then he took up the homestead and tree culture claim where he now lives, three miles northeast from Lewiston, having a fine farm of one-half section. He raises much fruit and also handles stock. Mr. Moxley also owns town property in Lewiston. He is an active Republican. Mr. Moxley always strives for good government and schools and is a devotee of progress. He is a member of the Pioneer Association.

JAMES M. CHASTEEN. In a number of distinct lines of labor, the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph has won both success and distinction. In addition to handling a fine farm about three miles southeast from Russell, Mr. Chasteen operates a good threshing outfit, and then regularly on each Sunday he preaches, being a devout member of the Christian church.

James M. Chasteen was born in Bossier parish, Louisiana, on October 16, 1865, being the son of Thomas and Martha (McCulland) Chasteen. The father was a millwright, born in Knox county, Tennessee, in 1816, and died November 5, 1901. Our subject's grandfather, Rancy Chasteen, was one of the very first settlers in Knox county. The mother of our subject was born in South Carolina in 1839 and died on February 19, 1882. Her parents were born in Scotland and came to this county in their youth. Our subject was educated in the common schools and in the university at Fayetteville, Arkansas, in Washington county, in which state his parents had settled when he was fourteen. When twenty-one our subject engaged as engineer on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, having learned the art of driving an engine in his father's saw-mill. Four years later Mr. Chasteen came to Whitman county, Washington, settling near Garfield and following engineering until 1899, when he came to his present place. He purchased the home farm, which is a good estate, and to the cultivation and improvement of which Mr. Chasteen has devoted energy and skill.

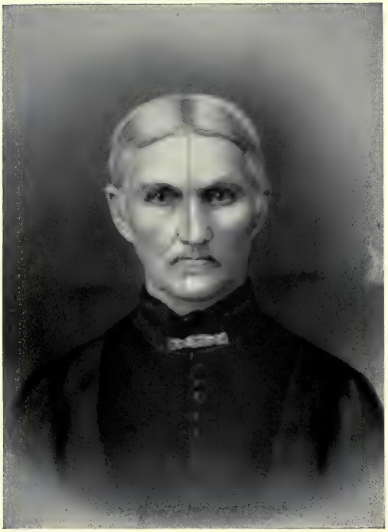
In 1897 Mr. Chasteen began preaching, his first pastorate being the Eden Valley congregation near Palouse. He has continued at this labor of spreading the gospel since that time, although he has also attended to business affairs. The Eden Valley congregation is the first one of Disciples in the Palouse country. In connection with ministering to this congregation, he preached at Pine City and after two years of steady pastorate labor he took up the work of the evangelist. It is also very pleasant in this connection to note the self-denial and devotedness of Mrs. Chasteen, who willingly superintends the farm and the business affairs while her husband is called to remote sections in evangelical work.

In Washington county, Arkansas, in 1886, Mr. Chasteen married Naomi Trowbridge, who died on August 28, 1896, leaving two children, Arthur and Ray. Mr. Chasteen married a second time, the date being November 6, 1899, and the lady, Sarah, daughter of Joseph and Emily Ringo. The nuptials occurred in Whitman county, where her parents now live, they being natives of Illinois. Mrs. Chasteen was born in the Willamette valley in 1875, and has two brothers and six sisters. Mr. Chasteen has five brothers, Edward, Thomas, John, Robert, Charles. To Mr. and Mrs. Chasteen there has been born one son, Roy. Mr. Chasteen was elected sheriff of Washington county, Arkansas, on the Prohibition ticket, but refused to qualify. He is a Prohibitionist in political matters and a zealous advocate of good schools. Mr. Chasteen is to be credited with much labor and effort put forth in this section of the country for the spiritual welfare of the people, he having been among the very first preachers to come to the reservation country. He is an upright man, respected by his neighbors and beloved by all those who know him best, and his faithful life is one of the best parts of his Christian testimony.

RICHARD WELLS. This venerable citizen of Nez Perces county is one of the deserving pioneers of the west and at least two states have profited by his worthy labors in development in the early days on the coast, while in the eastern part of our country he also did good work in two or more states.



Richard Wells was born in Harrison county, Ohio, on July 10, 1824, being the son of John and Nancy Wells. The father was a farmer, born in Virginia in 1810 and died in 1890. The mother was born in Ohio and died in 1847. Our subject remained at home until he was twenty-two and then came with his parents to Illinois. There he remained until 1864, paying attention to tilling the soil. Then he took teams and made the weary journey across the plains to Oregon. He bought land in Clackamas county and farmed it for five years and then he came to the vicinity of Walla Walla and there he farmed for ten years and did well. Then he decided to seek range for stock and accordingly came to Tammany Hollow and took land where he owns three hundred and sixty acres at the present time. He handles stock and has more or less since coming here and also does a general farming business, raising wheat and barley principally. His stock was horses mostly, and of late years he has retired more from active business to enjoy the competence which his industry has provided.

On June 10, 1848, in Pike county, Illinois, Mr. Wells married Miss Sallie M., daughter of Barnett and Cornelia (Kiser) Wilsey, natives of New York. Mrs. Wells was born in New York, in 1823, October 25, and she has the following named brothers, Jahes T., in Illinois; John J., in Missouri; William, in Kansas. Mr. Wells has two brothers, Benjamin, in Illinois; Albert, at Pittsfield, Illinois, and he was a participant in the Civil war, serving throughout the entire struggle. To Mr. and Mrs. Wells there have been born five children, Louise Wishard, at Peck; Sarah M.; Almira M.; Jane Knight, at Moscow; Butler, in Nez Perces county. Mr. and Mrs. Wells are members of the Methodist church. He is a Democrat and manifests an intelligent interest in the affairs of government. Mr. Wells has always labored for good schools and is a warm advocate of progress in all lines. He was here in the time of the Nez Perces war and remained at home on the ranch.

MILO H. ADAMS is a man of great experience in the business world and also on the frontier and is now one of the highly respected and capable farmers near Nezperce. He was born in Kempville, Canada, on March 9, 1834, being the son of James and Sarah (Barton) Adams. The grandfather of our subject was a relative of President John Adams and fought all through the Revolution, then moved to Canada, where the father of Milo was born. In 1840 our subject came with his father to Fort Madison, in Iowa, at that time a territory. Later, in 1842, they were where Des Moines now stands, it being then called Raccoon Forks. In 1854 Mr. Adams came with an ox team to California and mined for some time, then returned via Panama and New York. He moved to Wapello county and on September 23, 1858, Mr. Adams married Lucy Woodruff. He then moved to Shelby county, Iowa, where he was elected treasurer on the Republican ticket, although the county went Democratic. In 1860 he took a trip with his wife across the plains in an ox train to Denver. Returning to Shelby county, they remained there until 1870, when he went to Pottawattamie county. There he was elected the first mayor of Avoca and served four years. In 1872 Mr. Adams went to Texas and took a large tie contract on the Texas Pacific. In 1880, on account of failing health, he went to Fremont county, Idaho. Regaining his health, he removed to the coast and bought a drove of cattle for an Avoca firm. He drove them through to Avoca and returned to Portland with twenty men, coming via San Francisco. He bought four thousand cattle and drove them all to Avoca. In 1882 Mr. Adams removed his family to southern Idaho and was the county surveyor of Fremont county, Idaho, for two years. In the fall of 1895 Mr. Adams came to the reservation and secured one hundred acres where he now lives, about two miles west from Nezperces. He has a choice piece of land and it is well improved. Five children have been born to Mr. Adams and his worthy helpmate, Elpha, deceased; Lenna A., wife of R. C. Halliday, of the Grand Hotel, Spokane; Florence E., wife of W. T. Johnson, a farmer in Nez Perces county; Sarah E., deceased; Roy W., married to Grace Day, living on the reservation. Mr. Adams is a member of the A. F. & A. M. at Nezperce. He is a spirited and public-minded citizen and is enjoying the golden years of his life in his quiet western home.

ANDREW HUBER. While the subject of this article is now one of the substantial and prosperous farmers of the reservation country, living about one mile west from Nezperce, and is considered one of the most prosperous and progressive farmers of the section, still in military matters he doubtless has a record which places him clear in advance of any other portion of his life's work. Few men have the opportunity to recount personal experiences as has Mr. Huber. He enlisted in the regular army of Germany in 1864; in 1866 the war with Prussia broke out and he participated in the battles of Kissengen, Holzkirchansen and Wurzburg, besides several others and many skirmishes. When it is understood that the war continued but six months it will be seen that he was excessively active. Retiring from that, he went to work at the miller's trade, although still a soldier. In July, 1870, came the call, when the Franco-Russian war broke out. This conflict lasted one year and Mr. Huber fought in nineteen principal battles. In the battle of Weisenburg, his company numbered two hundred and forty, and all but twenty-six were wounded or killed. He received a bayonet wound in the neck, which kept him in the hospital six days, and thus he lost the opportunity of participating in one of the leading battles. Mr. Huber was under General Van Tann, one of the leading commanders of that war. Following this war, Mr. Huber again worked at his trade and in 1883 he came to the United States, shipping from Hamburg; after landing in New York he went to Washington to associate with a friend, where he learned English. Thence he went to German City, Michigan, and was married to Miss Carrie Luger, on October 5, 1884. She was born in Baden, Germany, and was left an orphan when an infant; during her youth she lived in Germany, Switzerland and France. In 1882 she came from Paris to New York city and there had the care of children for two years. In 1887 Mr. Huber came with his family to the vicinity of Moscow and followed farming, in which he was not very successful. On the noted November 18, 1895, he was on the ground and secured his valuable place, which in addition to its fertility possesses plenty of fine spring water. He has improved it in excellent shape and is one of the skilled tillers of the soil. He hauled his initial crops to Lewiston and the first years were hard ones. He and his wife belong to the Catholic church in Nezperce. Three children have been born to this household, Joanna, John William and Mary Magdalene. Mr. Huber was born in Bavaria, July 24, 1842, being the son of Michael and Mary Huber. He was educated in the public schools and was apprenticed to a miller when he was thirteen.

ELMER D. NICHOLS is one of the younger men of Nez Perces county, but is also one of the pioneers, having come here with his parents when he was but one year of age, thus spending his life largely within its precincts and always being one of the men whose labors have resulted in the upbuilding and advancement of Nez Perces county.

Elmer D. Nichols was born in Albany, Linn county, Oregon, on May 22, 1875, being the son of George and Amanda (Rosecrans) Nichols. The father was born in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, on October 12, 1850, and died in 1887. He farmed, then taught school for ten years and then practiced medicine and farmed until the time of his death. The mother was born in Wisconsin on April 29, 1852, and now lives in Latah county. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Nez Perces county, in that portion which is now Latah county, and also spent one year in Clairmont College, in California. At his father's death, being then twelve and the oldest of the family, he took charge of the farm, located on Thorn creek, Latah county, and operated it until he was twenty-four. At that age he bought a farm on the Clearwater river, near Lewiston, on which was the Central ferry. He did a general farming business and operated the ferry until July, 1902, when he sold out and retired to Lewiston, having property in that town.

On January 17, 1897, Mr. Nichols married Miss Ella A., daughter of Frank and Elizabeth Cole. The wedding occurred in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Nichols was born in Kossuth county, Iowa, on April 2, 1879, and came with her parents to Idaho in 1885. She has the following brothers and sisters: Jennie, wife of William Bower, at Avon, Latah county; Leonard, at Wardner, Idaho; Bertha, Matie, Roy, Edna and Lillie, all at Kendrick. Mr. Nichols has the following named brothers and sisters: Mark and Ray, in Latah county; Eveline, in Los Angeles, California; Warren, in Wardner; Leon and Milton, in Latah county. To Mr. and Mrs. Nichols have been born the following children: Elora, four years old; Delano, two years old. Mr. Nichols is a member of the W. of W. He is a Republican and takes an active interest in the affairs of state and county. Mr. Nichols is a warm advocate of good schools and in fact is always favoring advancement and progress.

ERLAN OLSON. We are glad to add an account of the life of this substantial gentleman, since his life has been an industrious and worthy one and he is now one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of the reservation country.

Erlan Olson was born in Dalsland, Sweden, on December 7, 1863, being the son of Olla and Anna Olson, also natives of the same place. Erlan was educated in his native place and in 1884 he crossed the North Sea to Hull, England, thence to Liverpool and so on to New York. Next we see him in Marquette county, Michigan, mining. Soon he went to Duluth, Minnesota, and later to Canada, where he worked on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. He returned later to St. Paul, and then made his way to Leadville, where he worked on a tunnel of the railroad, and then railroaded in the Coeur d'Alenes. Finally he settled down to farming near Rosalia, having also taken a trip to Portland. On November 18, 1895, Mr. Olson came to the reservation country and selected his present place. It lies one mile west from Nezperce, and as he was one of the very first, he succeeded in getting a good farm. Since that time Mr. Olson has given himself to the good work of improving and making valuable the estate and he has succeeded in an admirable manner, having now one of the most valuable places around.

On November 1, 1899, Mr. Olson married Miss Martha Fuller, a native of Kentucky. She came west with her parents in 1888, and they now live near Nezperce. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Olson, Wilber Erlan, born January 29, 1901. Mr. Olson is a member of the Maccabees, in Nezperce. He is a man of good standing and a well respected and intelligent citizen, whose labors have been always in the line of substantial improvement and upbuilding.

JAMES A. FRITZ. This successful farmer and stock raiser is one of the men who has labored faithfully to develop the resources of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county and has wrought wisely and well.

James A. Fritz was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, on July 13, 1866, being the son of Casper and Elizabeth (Breel) Fritz, natives of Germany, born in 1832 and 1834, respectively. The father was a butcher and stockman, served in the Civil war and died in 1885. The mother still lives in Wisconsin. James A. worked at home until eighteen, having gained his education from the public schools. Then he went to South Dakota and one year later returned home. When twenty he went to Minneapolis and railroaded. Soon he was in Ponca, Nebraska, and in January, 1887, Mr. Fritz came to Moscow, Idaho. He farmed for one year and then went to Santa Barbara, California, but returned to Moscow the next year and bought land. He tilled this until the fall of 1897, when he made his way to the reservation and located his present place, about one and one-half miles south from Melrose. He has a fine farm, raises oats, wheat and flax and has some excellent Berkshire hogs.

At Moscow, in the fall of 1891, Mr. Fritz married Miss Emma B., daughter of Electus M. and Mary J. (Warren) Frost, natives of Pennsylvania, the father from Rome, and the mother from Sullivan county. The father served in the Civil war and both are now living. Mrs. Fritz was born in Sullivan county, Pennsylvania, in 1876, and has three brothers and two sisters, Frank W., John O., deceased, Fred M., Cora, Maude. Mr. Fritz has the following brothers and sisters: Henry S., Peter, Charlie, Casper, August, Mary, Lizzie and Katie. All are in Wisconsin, except Casper, who is on the reservation, and Katie, who is deceased. Two children have been born to this happy union, Marie E. and Hazel B. Mr. Fritz is a member of the W. of W., at Melrose, and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. He is an active Republican and is always in his place in the caucuses and conventions.

Mr. Fritz is a man of excellent standing, has an untarnished reputation and is one of the substantial men of the county.

DOUGLAS V. DOWD. As a distinguished educator of Nez Perces county, as well as a landowner, the subject of this review is to be noted as one of the successful and leading men of the reservation portion of the county and one whose life is above reproach and whose standing is excellent among his fellows.

Douglas V. Dowd was born in Vinton county, Ohio, on July 24, 1852, being the son of John and Olive (Fuller) Dowd. The father was born in Ohio, in 1818, and died in 1895. His grandfather was one of the earliest pioneers to the territory of Ohio, having gone there in the eighteenth century. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, and died in 1856. Douglas V. was reared on the farm, educated in the district schools and the Ohio University at Athens, the first university established west of the Allegheny mountains, the date of its inception being 1804. At seventeen Mr. Dowd began his career as an educator, and from the inception he manifested those qualities and the worth that have made him so successful in life's pathway, being especially endowed by nature with the qualifications that are requisite for the first class educator. In 1878 Mr. Dowd went to Kansas, settling in Wabaunsee county, where he operated a Republican newspaper for five years, it being a journal of distinct merit. He taught school for a number of years. It was in 1895 that Mr. Dowd determined to try the west and accordingly selected Nez Perces county as the point. He taught for several years and in 1897 took up the ranch which has become his homestead. It lies about two miles southwest from Steele and the final proof was made in August, 1902. At the present writing Mr. Dowd is teaching in the Fletcher schools and, as is his characteristic methods, he is doing the best of work, being a conscientious instructor, and realizing that he is molding the minds of the ones who will soon take the responsibilities of our great government into their hands, either to carry it on to greater perfection or make sad failure where their ancestors have done gloriously.

In 1884, while in Kansas, Mr. Dowd married Miss Clara M., daughter of S. A. and Cornelia J. (Applegate) Gould, natives of New York, and the father a farmer and merchant. Mrs. Dowd was born in Seneca Falls, New York, in 1860. Mr. Dowd has the following brothers and sisters: Francis M., in Ohio; Homer N., at Thompsonville, Michigan; John W., in Toledo, Ohio; Milton B., in Victor, Montana; Ralph P., in Illinois; Mary Goff, in Zaleski, Ohio; Charlotte Timms, in Dundas, Ohio. Two children have been born to bless the happy marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Dowd, Augustus G. and Lillian C., both at home. Mr. Dowd is a Mason and a member of the I. O. O. F. order, and also belongs to the Phi Delta Theta, a college fraternity. He is a Republican and active in the realm of politics, and in 1902 was a delegate to Boise at the Republican state convention.

ALBERT ODERKIRK. Portions of Nez Perces county are among the most excellent fruit producing sections in the northwest, and the enterprising gentleman mentioned above has a fruit farm among the best in this favored region. He is located about two and one-half miles northeast from Lewiston, owns land that is well irrigated and produces under his skillful husbandry an abundance of fruit of the best kind and all varieties.

Mr. Oderkirk was born in Granby, New York, on December 8, 1858, being the son of Isaac and Caroline (Weatherwax) Oderkirk, natives of New York and now living in Canada. The father was born in 1832, and the mother in 1836. Our subject was taken by his parents to the province of Ontario, Canada, when young, and there he received his education in the excellent schools of that province, attending mostly at Tanworth. He made several trips to his old home and at the age of twenty-six he settled in North Dakota, taking land near Wheatland. He farmed and raised stock for seven years, then sold out and went to Park Rapids, in Minnesota, where he operated a hotel for six years and prospered. His next move was to come west, and the fertile region of Lewiston attracting him, he purchased his present good place. To the culture of fruit he has given himself with good success since that time.

On June 6, 1883, Mr. Oderkirk married Miss Annie, daughter of William and Jane (Stafford) Hawley, natives of Canada. Mrs. Oderkirk was born in Sheffield, Canada, September 2, 1860, and she has four brothers, George, Perry, John and Frank. Mr. Oderkirk has the following brothers and sisters: Venus, Eugene, Isaac, Stephen and Irvine. To Mr. and Mrs. Oderkirk there have been born the following named children, William M., Vera A., Isaac V., Jennie, Ray and Cora, all at home. Mr. Oberkirk is a member of the K. of P., and of the M. W. A. He had one uncle in the Civil war. Mr. Oderkirk is an advocate of good schools and churches and is now doing service on the school board of his district. He is a Democrat in politics, but is not partisan, and prefers to choose the best men and the sound principles regardless of party.

OSCAR PELTON. Among the successful and enterprising agriculturists and stockmen of the county of Nez Perces we should not fail to mention the name of the gentleman mentioned above, since he is one of the substantial men of the county, and is a real laborer in the realm of upbuilding and advancement.

Oscar Pelton was born in Somerset county, Maine, on July 14, 1844, being the son of Matthew B. and Caroline (Stevens) Pelton. The father was a farmer and lumberman in Maine, born in 1821, died in 1894, and served his country in the Civil war. The mother was born in Somerset county, Maine, in 1827, and still lives there. Our subject received his education in the common schools of his native place, remained at home engaged with his father until he was seventeen years of age, and then his young blood could not resist the call of Columbia to rally supporters for the defense of the flag and our government. He enlisted at the first call, in Company D, Thirtenth Maine Volunteers, and went with General Ben Butler to New Orleans, also served under Banks in the Red River campaign. He served three years and then received his honorable discharge and returned to his home. But he had forfeited his health in the struggle and has more or less suffered since from the troubles contracted in the war. At the age of twenty-three he removed to La Crosse, Wisconsin, remaining one year in the lumber business. He next bought land in Trempealeau county, the same state, and settled down to farming. After seven years he located in Wadena county, Minnesota, and took land and his parents followed him in 1876. He was one of the pioneers there and sixteen years were spent in tilling the soil in that county. Then he went to St. Cloud, and in 1895 came to Idaho for his health. He has been much benefited by the change and is now enjoying better health than for some time previous. He located two miles northeast from Lewiston and gave his attention to general farming and raising stock.

In August, 1867, Mr. Pelton married Miss Barbara, daughter of S. R. and Ann (Fox) Bates, natives of Ohio. Mrs. Pelton has two brothers, Timothy and Hanson, both in Wisconsin. Mr. Pelton has the following named brothers and sisters: Albert, in St. Cloud, Minnesota; Ernest, in North Dakota; Sarah Pelton, in Canada; Hiram and La Forest, in Alaska; U. S., in Colfax, Washington,

To Mr. and Mrs. Pelton there have been born the following children: Loreda and Minnie, in Missoula; Ernest, at home; Fred and Eugene, in Spokane; Lois, Gladys and Harry, at home. Mrs. Pelton is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Pelton is a Republican and takes an active part in political matters. It is of note that Joel Pelton, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a soldier in the Revolution and served under Washington in many campaigns, being present at the surrender of Cornwallis. He saw Lafayette and other great men of that day. After the war he took up land in Maine, where he raised his family and lived to the good old age of one hundred and six years.

EDWARD DANIELS. A very prosperous and successful farmer and stock raiser, having a fine estate two miles east from Chesley, our subject is deserving of being classed with the leading and influential men of this section, and as such we accord him space in the history of his county.

Edward Daniels was born in Devonshire, England, October 14, 1850, being the son of Edward and Mary (Eastman) Daniels, natives of England, and born in 1805 and 1814, and died in 1867 and 1878, respectively. Edward grew to young manhood in England and received most of his education there; however, he attended school some in Canada. In 1869 he came to London, Canada, and worked at railroading for a year, then went to St. Thomas and rented a farm on Lake Erie, where he continued for nine years. In February, 1889, Mr. Daniels came to Colton, Washington, and rented land, doing farming on a large scale. He was exceedingly prosperous and was making lots of money. The wet year of 1893 and the following panic stranded him, as it did everyone else, and in May, 1896, he sought out his present place on the reservation. He brought the family the following year and since that time has devoted himself to general farming and raising stock. He has fine cattle, horses and hogs, and is a thrifty farmer who is rewarded with annual dividends that are gratifying.

On March 21, 1878, Mr. Daniels married Miss Margaret Dores, and three children have crowned the happy event, James Edward, a Methodist minister at Colton; Olive Lenora, attending college at Salem, Oregon; Frank Raymond, in Manitoba. On October 7, 1890, Mrs. Daniels was called hence by death.

On March 21, 1900, Mr. Daniels married Miss Effie E., daughter of John and Julia A. (Chamberlain) Smylie. The father is a wagon maker and was born in Goddridge, Ontario, in 1840, and now lives in this county. His wife was born in New York, in 1843, and is still living. Mrs. Daniels was born in La Crosse, Wisconsin, in 1875. She attended the Lewiston Normal School and was a prominent teacher for five years. She has the following brothers and sisters: Mina B. Quillin; Bertha, deceased; Julia M. Lane; Jennie A. Sargent; Elizabeth, deceased; John H.; Josephine; and George E. Mr. Daniels has the following brothers and sisters: Mary A. Whitfield, Eliza Davis; Elizabeth, William, John and James, all deceased. One child, Elizabeth, has been born to this second marriage. Mr. Daniels is a member of the I. O. O. F. and he and his wife belong to the Methodist church. Mr. Daniels is an intelligent laborer for good schools and also for the improvement of roads. His farm is one of the finest, even of this excellent section, and the improvements are entirely commensurate with the natural fertility of the soil, and altogether the estate is a model. Mr. Daniels handles considerable stock and raises diversified crops. He has a half section of timber land in Oregon, in addition to his farm here. Mrs. Daniels' grandfather, Chamberlain, was a veteran of the Civil war and now has a good pension. Her great-grandfather, Barnes, was one of the first advocates of woman suffrage in New York.

THOMAS J. WIMPY. Although the subject of this sketch was located in a state where much of the sentiment was strongly in favor of the Rebellion, still when the critical time came for action he boldly and with a courage born of real conviction enlisted in Company F, Second Arkansas Cavalry, on the Union side, the date being 1863, and under General Sanborn fought the battles of right. He was in the conflicts of Booneville, Big Blue, Independence and many skirmishes, and assisted to run Price out of Missouri. He served in that state and in Arkansas mostly. He was honorably discharged in July, 1865, and is a member of the G. A. R. in Latah, Washington.

Thomas J. Wimpy was born in Union county, Georgia, on September 20, 1846, being the son of Aaron and Hannah Wimpy, natives of North Carolina. When our subject was six the family removed to Benton county, Arkansas, and there received a good common schooling. Then came the enlistment noted above, which speaks volumes for his loyalty, as he was but a lad of seventeen. After the war he resided a time in Missouri and then returned to Arkansas, where he was married, on June 27, 1866, to Mary A. Anderson. Her parents, Andrew B. and Adelia (Dickens) Anderson, were natives of Tennessee and Georgia, respectively, and were married in the former state. Then they removed to Lumpkin county, Georgia, where Mrs. Wimpy was born, on June 17, 1844. Her parents crossed the plains in 1877 to Latah, Washington, and there her father died in August, 1899, in his seventy-seventh year. Mr. Wimpy and his wife started across the plains in 1876 with teams, but at Cheyenne, as the Indians were hostile, they took train to Kelton, and then came to the vicinity of Latah. No settlers were there, except his brother, Major Wimpy, and one or two scattering ones. Our subject engaged in farming and did well until the panic, when he suffered financial loss, as did all others. In the fall of 1897 he came to his present location, about five miles northeast from Nezperce, and here his labor and wisdom have given him a goodly competence. He has comfortable and tasty improvements and has been one of the progressive and substantial citizens. Mr. Wimpy and his wife are devout members of the Christian church and their lives are exemplary and upright. Six children have been born to this household, Amanda J., wife of E. M. Nelson, of Nezperce; Sarah B., wife of W. M. Poteet, of Nezperce; Eva M., wife of Arthur Boswell, near Nezperce; Minnie E., Aaron A., James W. Mrs. Wimpy's mother is living with her, aged seventy-eight.

J. TELFORD ORBISON. No man is better known in Nezperce or more popular than the genial, whole-souled and capable gentleman whose name appears above. He is the pioneer merchant of the town, has labored with untiring interest for its welfare and upbilding steadily since its start, and is now one of the substantial and capable business men.

J. T. Orbison was born in Miami county, Ohio, on November 9, 1841, being the son of Alexander N. and Mary (Ayers) Orbison. The father was a farmer until 1841, then went to Fort Wayne, Indiana, then to an Indian trading village, where he entered the commission business. He built warehouses, operated a canal, building many boats, and also built twenty-five miles of plank roads four directions out of the village. About this time he secured the establishment of some of the business houses that were the means of making the city what it is today. He was exceedingly prosperous and amassed a splendid fortune. Owing to great generosity to friends, and some heavy losses, however, his estate was much smaller at the time of his death. But even then it was a handsome amount to each one of the family. About 1882 he sold his interests in Fort Wayne and went to Sturgis, Michigan. Although he was retired from active business there, he built an elevator with his youngest son and was known as a prominent and prosperous man until his death, in 1896. His parents were natives of Randolph county, Virginia, and of English descent. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, on September 28, 1818, her father being a physician and both of her parents natives of Orange, New Jersey.

Reverting again more particularly to our subject, we note that the foundation of his education was laid in the schools in Fort Wayne, and then he went to college in Oxford, Ohio. While in his sophomore year the war broke out nd he promptly laid aside the books for the musket, and enlisted in Company E, Fifty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. After his three months of service expired he took a place in the quartermaster's department and remained there until the close of the war. Then he went to Sturgis, Michigan, entered the grocery business and later railroaded on the Fort Wayne road. Next we see him in Frankfort, Kentucky, in the boot and shoe business, whence he went to Louisville in the commission business until 1879. Then, on account of his wife's health, he went again to Michigan, this time taking a station at Alma, on the Saginaw Valley & St. Louis railroad. Then he removed to Saginaw, Michigan, taking the position of cashier of the Michigan Central for five years. It was in 1891, when Mr. Orbison came to Coeur d'Alene and opened a gents' furnishing establishment. Two years later he removed to Moscow and one year after that he was in Denver, whence upon the opening of the reservation he came to Nezperce and opened a general merchandise establishment. He has continued in business steadily since and has always labored for good schools, good roads, and, in fact, all things that would build up the town.

Mr. Orbison married Miss Aubrey Van Dervanter, whose parents were natives of Louisville, where they died. The wedding occurred on October 8, 1878. Mr. Orbison has two brothers deceased and two sisters living, Millie, wife of William D. Van Devanter, a journalist in Chicago; Lucy B., wife of Ira Pendleton, a retired capitalist in Los Angeles. Mrs. Orbison has three brothers, Silas, in St. Louis; Charles and Robert, in Memphis, Tennessee. She has one sister, Mary, wife of George W. Cline, a leading capitalist in Louisville. Mr. Orbison is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 56, in Nezperce, being treasurer since its organization. He is also a Mason, holding his membership in the Knight Templar Commandery, No. 4, in Moscow. In political matters Mr. Orbison is a strong Republican, and is an intelligent and potent factor in that realm.

EZEKIEL LUCAS. A public minded, progressive, upright and exemplary man, a thrifty and prosperous farmer, a good neighbor and a loyal friend, we are pleased to grant to the subject of this article a representation in his county's history.

Ezekiel Lucas was born in Fremont county, Iowa, on April 21, 1861, being the son of John and Lucinda (Keeler) Lucas. The father was born in Ohio, in 1821, came as one of the earliest pioneers to Fremont county, Iowa, and now lives in Palouse. The mother was born in Indiana, in 1836, and died in 1899. Ezekiel was reared and educated in his native place and remained helping his father until twenty-three. Then he farmed for himself in Woodbury county, Iowa, and in 1884 came to Washington and settled in Palouse. He took up the lumber and saw milling business, but in 1887 he returned to the east and in time went to St. Louis and there learned the machinist trade. In 1898 he determined to see Klondike and got as far as Portland, when he was led to turn aside and wrought at his trade in Seattle. He was very successful in this line, and in 1901 he came to his present place, which he purchased. He has improved the farm in fine shape, has a neat and comfortable house, a good orchard and a splendid barn, with outbuildings and all necessary utensils for the labor of the estate.

In 1891 Mr. Lucas married Miss Clara, daughter of Henry and Josephine (Elkins) Peck, natives of Virginia. The wedding occurred in St. Louis. Mr. Peck was an architect and builder. Mrs. Lucas was born in the Cherokee Nation in 1859, at Fort Gibson, and has one sister, Minnie Wardinski, living in Chicago. Mr. Lucas has brothers and sisters as follows: Henry, Riley, Lee, Lizzie Brown, Clara Boatman, Ruth Smith and Samantha Perkins. To Mr. and Mrs. Lucas two children have come to gladden their home, Arthur and Lottie. Mr. Lucas is a Democrat and is of sufficient independence to vote for the man and not to be tied to party tenets regardless of his own opinion. He has always been an advocate of good schools and is doing much for the betterment of educational facilities, while also he labors hard for general improvement and advancement.

ARTHUR E. MISNER. Few men have the stability and perseverance to stem the tide of life in business enterprises when they have met total loss, but the subject of this article, a well known and highly respected farmer and stockman, two and one-half miles northwest from Melrose, has displayed this kind of courage and doubly so has he manifested tenacity of purpose and determination to achieve success, for twice, by outside circumstances, he has been a loser of his entire property. Such circumstances have but brought out the real metal of the man, and Mr. Misner is now one of the most substantial and capable men of our section.

Arthur E. Misner was born in Mount Morris, Illinois, on January 3, 1851, being the son of Christopher and Cordelia (Clark) Misner. The father was born in Indiana, in 1822, and died in 1889. He was a pioneer in Illinois, and was on the ground of Chicago before the town was thought of. He operated as a merchant and in 1879 settled near Spokane and took up the stock business. The mother was born in Ohio, in 1820, and is now living with our subject. Arthur E. left home at the early age of thirteen, and made his way, gaining a classical education in the Willamette University at Salem, Oregon, entirely by his own efforts. Following that excellent achievement, he taught for five years, but discovering that his health demanded more out-door exercise, he went to the Big Bend country in Washington and took up stock raising. When Spokane was starting, in 1880, Mr. Misner opened a livery stable there and took the contract of carrying the mail to Okanogan. He also drove the first four-horse team to the Salmon river mines, carrying a load of miners. Aside from Mr. Glover, our subject had the first livery stable in Spokane. He did well until the big fire in 1889, and then suffered the loss of everything. Then he prospected in the Okanogan country and soon we see him near Sprague farming four hundred acres, but the wet year of 1893 again swept him clean from his property. It was 1895 that Mr. Misner came to the reservation and took his present place. Here he has again made a good success, and is now well among the leaders of this section.

At Sprague, Washington, in 1893, Mr. Misner married Miss Mary, daughter of William and Anna Swannack, natives of England but immigrants to the United States from Australia. Mrs. Misner was also born in Australia, and she has two sisters and nine brothers. Mr. Swannack is a large farmer near Sprague. Mr. Misner has two brothers and two sisters: Willis, a blacksmith in Spokane; Henry, a merchant at Sprague; Mary Melcher, in Spokane county; Emma Bowerman, in Republic, Washington. The following children have been born to our subject and his estimable wife: Mildred, Helen, Dorothy, Ladru R. and William. Mr. and Mrs. Misner are members of the Methodist church, and in politics Mr. Misner is an active Republican and a stanch helper of his friends in the conventions. Mr. Misner is a member of the school board and evinces a zeal for good schools and has taught one term here. He has a fine farm, well improved, has just completed a tasty residence of seven rooms, and other improvements in proportion, while raising grain and stock occupy his attention. Mr. James Clark, the maternal grandfather of our subject, is one hundred years old, and is said to be the oldest Mason in America. He dwells in Quincy, Illinois.

FRED M. MANNING. This well known pioneer, and successful stockman is now a leading business man of Lewiston, having in company with his son-in-law, Nathan Branch, rented a laundry, where they are doing a good business.

He was born in Milford, Maine, on June 8, 1858, being the son of George A. and Susan E. (Wilber) Manning. The father is a real estate dealer in Lewiston, and was born in Maine in 1838. The mother was born in Boston in 1839. Our subject came to Idaho with his parents in 1869 and the father took a preemption at Central Ferry, which he still owns and is known all over as the Manning homestead. At the age of sixteen Fred M. started in the stock business for himself, which he has continued ever since. He keeps his stock wherever he finds the best range, in Kootenai county and other places. He was in company with George White on the start. At the breaking out of the Nez Perce war he went as scout for the government under General Gatley and Lieutenant Bowman. In the Bannock war of 1878 he was with General Howard when they chased the Indians all over the country. He was at the Malheur reservation when eighty surrendered and took the first gun from them. Mr. Manning considers Lieutenant Bowman one of the most able and faithful officers in the west at that time. Mr. Manning was in the heat of these struggles and did commendable and valiant service. He found the bodies of Monday, Grosgrove and Hailey, brother of Hon. John Hailey, whom the Indians had killed, and buried them, chiseling the name of each on a granite rock beneath which they were killed. He also found the bodies of Crook and the man with him, who were killed by the savages. Mr. Manning's father organized the California Hundred during the Civil war, went east with them as their major and fought in that war, they being the only ones that went east for that purpose.

In the spring of 1879, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Manning married Miss Anna E., daughter of James and Katherine McGrane, of Lewiston, and natives of Ireland. Mrs. Manning was born in Salem, Oregon, in 1859, and has the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. W. L. Boise, Frank, Thomas and James. Mr.

Manning has brothers as follows: James A. and Charles F. To Mr. and Mrs. Manning there have been born six children: Nellie, wife of Nathan Branch, of Lewiston; Frank, Clara, Fred, Hattie and James. Mr. Manning is a member of the W. of W. and the auxiliary. He has been deputy sheriff under Billy Martin, of Kootenai county, and deputy United States marshal under Fred Dubois, and is now marshal of Lewiston and deputy sheriff. Mr. Manning has a good home near the court house and is one of the leading and substantial men of the county. .

ULYSSIS S. CHAMBERS was born in Knox county, Indiana, on December 10, 1866. His parents were Samuel T. and Joannah (Bell) Chambers, natives of Indiana. The father, who was born in 1833 and served in the Twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry for four years, is specially mentioned in this work. Our subject came to Whitman county, Washington, with his parents, when five years old, and in 1880 they moved to Latah county, where the father now lives. Ulyssis gained his education in these places and wrought with his father until the time of his majority and was also engaged in the mines of the Hoodoo district and on Gold hill. In June, 1897, he filed on his present place, which had been smuggled, a fine farm three miles east from Chesley. Mr. Chambers has cultivated and improved the land in a first class manner, and has now one of the desirable places of the county.

In July, 1891, while in Latah county, Mr. Chambers married Miss Mary, daughter of Charlie and Lucretia (Herring) Bay, early pioneers of Oregon. They crossed the plains in the early 'sixties with team and wagon and settled in the Grande Ronde valley. Mrs. Chambers was born in Union county, Oregon, in 1873, and has four brothers and two sisters, William, Lizzie Haskett, Inez Roberts, Clyde and Wayne. Mr. Chambers has the following named brothers and sisters: Eudoras, Orpha Cochran, Corinne Bay and Joseph. Two children, Hazel and Ray, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chambers. Mr. Chambers is a member of the M. W. A., at Kippen. He has been a member of the school board since coming to this place, and is a tireless worker for the improvement of the schools, which worthy end is sure to be accomplished among the intelligent people of this section. Mr. Chambers is a stanch Republican and labors for the general welfare.

DAVID L. CHAPMAN. This successful and reliable citizen dwells about two miles east from Melrose, where he has carved from the wilds of the reservation a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which now produces annually excellent yields of fruit, flax, wheat and other crops.

David L. Chapman was born in Ogle county, Illinois, on October 25, 1862, being the son of George and Fannie (Harrington) Chapman. The father was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1829, came to the United States in his eighteenth year and died in 1894. The mother was born in Pennsylvania in 1831 and died in 1896. When David was four years of age the family came to Woodbury county, Iowa, where he was reared on a farm and received his education from the public schools. When twenty he started for himself, and the next year married. We see him in Dawson county, Montana, freighting, thence he went to North Dakota, later to Nebraska, and soon was in the machine shops at Newcastle, Wyoming, where he wrought for two years. The next journey brought them to Moscow, Idaho, and when the reservation opened Mr. Chapman came and homesteaded his present farm, since which time he has devoted himself industriously to its improvement and culture.

In 1883 Mr. Chapman married Miss Addie, daughter of Fred and Eliza Procunier, farmers in South Dakota. Mrs. Chapman was born in Ogle county, Illinois, in 1864, and has two brothers and one sister, Isaac, Rettie and William. Mr. Chapman has the following brothers and sisters: Levi; Rosella Kocher; Rachel Hawks, deceased; Henry; and Charles. The children born to our subject and his faithful wife are named as follows: Ethel, Charles, Earl, Mabel, Rachel and Clarence, all at home. Mr. Chapman is a good Republican and is active and influential in the caucuses and conventions. He believes in good schools, good roads and good morals, a very sound trinity of good things. It is of interest that three brothers of his mother, Lorenzo, Wade and John Harrington, and one brother of his father, David Chapman, were all faithful soldiers in the Civil war.

ISAAC SCOTT. An enterprising man whose labors have made the wilderness blossom as the rose, as his fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres two and a half miles east from Melrose, with its excellent orchard of eighteen acres, its well tilled and fertile fields and comfortable improvements, testifies, the subject of this article is entitled to a place with the builders of this county, being also a man of stanch qualifications.

Isaac Scott was born in Ohio on March 1, 1847, being the son of James L. and Catherine (Hendershot) Scott. The father was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1813, and died in 1892. He was a pioneer in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in 1817. The mother of our subject was born in Belmont county, Ohio, in 1817, and died in 1897. Isaac's paternal grandfather was lieutenant in the army in Ireland. Our subject grew up on the farm and gained his education from the district schools in his vicinity and he continued to labor with his father until 1879, when they went to Sullivan county, Missouri. In 1883 they crossed the plains to Jackson county, and there farmed for six years. Another move was made then to Whitman county, Washington, and settlement was effected in the vicinity of Palouse, where the home continued to be until 1895, when Mr. Scott came to the reservation and secured his present place as homestead. Misfortune has attended Mr. Scott in some of his efforts, and when he settled here he had very little property. He has by careful management and labor secured a first class holding and is high in praises of this excellent country.

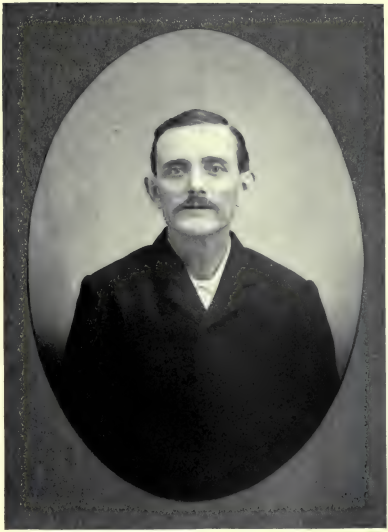
In Ohio, in 1870, Mr. Scott married Miss Mary A., daughter of Joseph and Susan Shaffer, pioneers of Ohio. Mrs. Scott was born in Ohio, has one brother, Joseph, in this county and five sisters. Mr. Scott has one sister, Mary Melissa Beatty, living in Sullivan county, Missouri. The following children have come to bless the household of our subject and his faithful wife: James R., Joseph E., Charles O., John W., Maggie J., Susie V., Nora, Louie, Clyde, Maude, Ida M. and Iense. Mr. Scott is not bound to the wheels of any party, but sustains an independence that enables him to select the right man and cast his vote accordingly. He is a most skillful farmer, following the diversified plan and also paying much attention to fruit culture and stock.



GEORGE W. BRAMMER is one of the commissioners of Nez Perces county, being nominated on the fusion ticket in 1900, and this the people endorsed at the polls; he has served with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituency. He has been nominated for re-election for commissioner on the Democratic ticket also.

Reverting to the details of his career, we note that Mr. Brammer was born in Hanover, Germany, on January 28, 1867, being the son of William and Sofie (Hiestermann) Brammer. The father was born in Hanover province, Germany, in 1839, came to the United States in 1893 and is now at Lookout, Nez Perces county. The mother was born in Hanover, in 1840. Our subject was educated in the common schools, learned the carpenter trade and then attended the architectural school for two terms. He followed his trade of building until 1892, when he came to the United States. He at once came to Cameron, Idaho, and when the reservation was opened he retired from the labor of his trade for a time and took land, where he now lives, at Melrose.

On April 5, 1890, Mr. Brammer married Miss Annie, daughter of Henry and Mary (Behrens) Riggers, natives of Germany, where the father farms. Mrs. Brammer was born in Germany in 1861 and has two brothers, Henry and William, also four sisters in Germany. Mr. Brammer has two brothers, William, who went to South Africa in 1883 and was in the war for the independence of the Boars. He was taken prisoner in 1900 by the British, who deported him to Germany, whence he came to the United States in 1901 and is now in Nez Perces county; Henry, also in this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Brammer there have been born five children, Anna, Bertha, Mary, William and Ernest, all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Brammer are members of the Lutheran church. Mr. Brammer is an advocat of good schools, churches, and of general progress, being always found in the vanguard. He owns two hundred and forty acres where his home is; he has made good success in general farming, raising hogs, cattle and horses. He is well esteemed and stands high among his fellows.

GEORGE T. HOLLIDAY. It certainly is a pleasure to be permitted to review the career of the gentleman to whom we are now introduced, and chronicle the sailent points thereof, since he is a man of energy, has accomplished excellent achievements, has set a worthy example all of his life as a student, an upbuilder, a progressive element in the communities where his lot has been cast, and as a Christian. "Strenuous," indeed, has been his life; it is no small matter of congratulation, that the sons of America are many of them, at least, given to studious lives, and it is surely right to say that in this line, Mr. Holliday is a real leader.

George T. Holliday was born in Pike county, Missouri, on May 15, 1858, being the son of William P. and Mildred (Nally) Holliday. The father was born in Pike county, Missouri, of an ancient and influential family from Virginia, is a physician and farmer, now living on the reservation. His mother's parents came from Kentucky and their parents from Scotland, but the Hollidays were English extraction. The mother of our subject is a native of Newton county, Missouri, and of Scotch extraction. She is now living on the reservation aged sixty-four and her husband is aged seventy-four. Gorge was raised in Missouri until seven, then he came with the family to Warren county, Illinois, and two years later to Texas, where he remained until he was thirty-one. In these various places, Mr. Holliday began his education in the common schools, but he has not yet completed it. How often we hear the young sprig say, "I have finished my education." Alas, that one can ever believe that he finished his education. It is not true of the typical man, that he ever finishes his education, he is simply passing from one form on to the other. Thus has Mr. Holliday gained the true idea, and his nights are always spent in hard study as regularly as he takes his sleep. Thus is gained real information, strength of mind and the wisdom that makes wise. For eleven years, Mr. Holliday handled stock for Hunter, Evens & Company, of Kansas City and for nine of those years, he was foreman. Then, on account of failing health from excessive strain and care, he resigned his position and came to the west, following his parents within a few months to the vicinity of Moscow. This was in 1889. Mr. Holliday had a decided turn of mind toward the geological and mineralogical world and he at once set about gratifying his desire for investigation in these worthy lines. He spent the summers in careful prospecting and the winters in hard study in the Denver school of mines, for two years and more or less since then he has kept up his labors along this line and the result is that he has gained a wonderful fund of knowledge and has at the same time located some valuable properties in mineral claims. In 1897, he filed on his present place, a little northwest from Chesley, where he has bestowed his labors since that time. He has a fine farm, raises the cereals and flax, with stock and orchards. In addition, Mr. Holliday handles a threshing outfit, owning a half interest. He also pays considerable attention to raising the small fruits and vegetables. He has the following brothers and sisters, James B., near Winchester, farming; William P. and Richard, partners in the livery business in Moscow; Martha, wife of Eli Richardson, a farmer and stage owner near Lookout; Annie, wife of Mr. Flannery, in Texas.

On January 17, 1892, at Moscow, Mr. Holliday married Miss Telitha, the daughter of John and Catharine (Kane) Miles, natives of Berry county, Missouri, where also Mrs. Holliday was born, in 1867. Mrs. Holliday is a graduate of the state normal school at Monmouth, Oregon, and she taught for four years in Roseburg, Oregon. She has three brothers and one sister; John, a cattleman in southern California; Charles, postmaster and storekeeper, in Webb, on the Sweetwater; Ira, a dealer in lumber near Portland; Rose, single and living with her parents near Roseburg, Oregon. Mr. Holliday is a member of the I. O. O. F., Ilo Lodge, No. 71, at Ilo, Idaho. He and his wife are devout members of the Christian church and are leaders in this work, while in politics, he is independent. Five children have been born to bless this household, Pearl Miles, Marion, Nellie and Veva.

FRANK DURETTE. Although the subject of this sketch has not been domiciled as long as some in Nez Perces county, still he is entitled to representation in the county history as he is one of the enterprising and substantial men of Melrose, a man of uprightness and ability and has a fine property of farm land adjoining town, which is well improved.

Frank Durette was born in the vicinity of Jersey City, New Jersey, on May 27, 1855, being the son of Anthony and Catherine (Wench) Durette. The father was a farmer, born in France, and died in 1862. The mother was born in Scotland in 1832, of Scotch-Irish extraction, and now lives in Michigan. Our subject was left at the early age of seven fatherless, and as little property was left for the support of the family he was forced to struggle for himself from earliest boyhood. He fought the battle well, and when sixteen we find him sailing on the lakes, continuing the same until he was twenty-one. Then he turned his attention to farming in Michigan in the summers and lumbering in the winters, until 1878. In that year Mr. Durette migrated to Burleigh county, Dakota, took land and made himself one of the leading farmers until 1901. Then he sold the property there and came west, settling in Nez Perces county, and purchasing land adjoining Melrose, where the family home is now.

On March 25, 1885, in Dakota, Mr. Durette married Miss Jennie, daughter of Leonard and Fannie (Foster) Lucas. Mr. Lucas was born in England, raised in Canada, and his wife was a native of Canada. Mrs. Durette was also born in Canada, the year being 1854, and has four brothers and three sisters. Mr. Durette has four sisters. To this worthy couple there has been born one daughter, Frances, who is at home. Mr. Durette is a member of the K. of P., while he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. Politically he is allied with the Republicans, and is an advocate of good schools and progression.

CASSIUS W. COLBY was born in Monroe county, New York, near Rochester, on January 7, 1850, being the son of Amos N. and Elvira (Willy) Colby. The father was born in New York in 1832 and still lives there. His father was born in Connecticut, married a native of that state and was colonel in the war of 1812. The mother of our subject was born in New York in 1835 and died in 1865. Her father, Sylvester Willy, was a captain in the war of 1812. Cassius W. was a graduate of the Rockport state normal at the age of twenty and then went to Ionia, Michigan, where he entered the office of E. Colby & Company, lumbermen, as bookkeeper. Later he gained a position as partner, the firm being formed of his father, his uncle and himself. They did a good business and in 1873, on account of the panic, dissolved. Our subject came to Walla Walla in 1878 and associated himself with the well known Dr. Blalock as superintendent of his various enterprises. Later the firm of Blalock, Son & Colby was formed, and there Mr. Colby wrought in the construction of their flume that brought all kinds of timber products from the mountains to Walla Walla. Three years after this they sold out and Mr. Colby took a trip to the Sandwich Islands. On his return he acted as salesman for Stinehouse, in Walla Walla, for three years. Then he superintended the Small Brothers' saw mill plant at Rathdrum for two years. In 1886 he went to Cataldo, in the Coeur d'Alene mining district, and started a mill. Later Mr. Albert Small was partner and they worked up a fine wholesale trade, continuing for seven years. Then the panic of 1893 struck the country, and, with many another good firm, they went under. Mr. Colby then spent one year in Florida, after which he formed a company to manufacture fruit boxes, the plant being established at Harrison. His brother, Delwin S., and Mr. Small were with him in this venture. Three years of success here and they sold out. Then Mr. Colby located in Lewiston, where we find him today. He is secretary and stockholder in the Gold Bug Columbia Mining Company. He is interested with M. A. Snyder & Company, lumbermen at Melrose, Idaho. And in addition to this, Mr. Colby handles the books for the Small & Emory Lumber Company, of Lewiston.

On January 5, 1880, Mr. Colby married Miss Inez E. Small, daughter of David Small, a saw mill man and merchant. He was born in New Brunswick, as also his wife, and he died in Montana. Mrs. Colby was born in Maine in 1851 and received a good academic education. She has the following sisters and brothers living: David Small, Albert, Ira, Lottie Sanborn and Sadie Potter. Mr. Colby has the following brothers and sisters: Delwin S., Virginia E., Lucy A. Wamboldt. To Mr. and Mrs. Colby there has been born one child, Ned W., ten years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Colby are members of the Baptist church, which they assisted to organize, and are active workers in it. He is a Republican and active in the realm of politics. He is an advocate of good schools and is always in the vanguard of advancement. Ex-Governor Colby, of Connecticut, is a relative of the family.

MELVIN S. STELLMON. Among the first class and prosperous agriculturists of the reservation country we will mention the subject of this article, whose estate of one-half section lies about six miles northeast from Nezperce and is one of the choice ones of that section. He has a goodly list of valuable improvements, as house, barn, outbuildings, orchard, fences, and so forth. The estate is supplied with plenty of spring water and half of it is under cultivation, while the balance is timber and grazing land.

Melvin S. Stellmon was born in Greene county, Tennessee, on May 30, 1876, being the son of Henry and Elizabeth Stellmon. When a child he went with the family to Washington county, Arkansas, and later to Benton county, where he remained with his father until the age of seventeen. At that time he went to Denton county, Texas, and a short time thereafter journeyed to Oklahoma, where he engaged in farming for two years. Thence he made his way to Wellington, Kansas, and returned to Benton county, in which place, on December 22, 1898, he married Miss Effie, daughter of John and Mary Horne. Mr. Horne was a native of Germany and came to the United States in an early day. Mrs. Stellmon was born in Benton county. Mr. Stellman came to Nez Perces county with his family in 1899 and secured a homestead near Mohler. He sold this place later and in 1902 bought the farm where he now lives and which was described above.

To Mr. and Mrs. Stellmon have been born two children, Clarice and Atha. Mr. Stellmon enjoys a first class standing among the people and has demonstrated himself to be a reliable, substantial, upright and accommodating neighbor and a true and stanch friend.

JOHN F. LEACHMAN is one of the prominent and substantial men of Nez Perces county, now living on his home place six miles southeast from Lewiston. He was born in Adams county, Illinois, on January 12, 1845, being the son of Samuel and Maria Leachman. The father was a farmer and merchant, born in Virgania, and died before the war. His father, Thomas Leachman, died aged ninety-three. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1819, and lived in Illinois. Our subject remained with his parents as a dutiful son until seventeen, attending school at the proper seasons, and then he enlisted in Company B, Seventy-eighth Illinois Infantry. He served under Grant at Missionary Ridge and under Sherman on the memorable march to the sea. He also participated in the battles of Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Bentonville, Atlanta, Jonesborough and numerous others. He was captured by Morgan's men and held a prisoner for seven months, learning by hard experience the miseries of a war prison. . He was exchanged at St. Louis and at the close of the war returned to Illinois and went to farming, at which he continued for fourteen years, when he came to Walla Walla and two years later to his present place. He took a homestead and has devoted his labors and abilities to improvement and advancement since that time.

On January 30, 1863, Mr. Leachman married Miss Josephine, daughter of Emory S. and Rhoda (Beatty) Whitcomb. The father was a weaver, born in Keene, New Hampshire, in 1819, and died in 1899. The mother was born in Kentucky, in 1824, and died in 1889. Both the Whitcombs and the Beattys were prominent in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Leachman was born in Adams county, Illinois, on May 10, 1844, and has brothers and sisters living as follows: William, Charles and Florence Nelson, all in this county. Mr. Leachman has the following named brothers and sister: Thomas, Elizabeth Grotz, Joseph Edward and Samuel S. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Leachman: Franklin, in this county; Edward A., at home; Nellie Perkins, in Wilbur, Washington; William, in this county; Nora, deceased; Lola M. Newman, in Lewiston; Benjamin, at home. Mr. Leachman is a stanch Republican and was nominated by his party for sheriff, but as the party went down in that year, 1900, he was defeated. He is a member of the G. A. R., and is one of the leading men of our county.

The Leachmans are related to General Washington, the great-great-grandfather, a Welchman, having been secretary under him during the Revolution. Mr. Leachman's mother is residing at present at Mayview, Washington.

ERNEST L. PARKER. Perhaps there is no man in the entire county of Nez Perces who is better and more favorably known than the genial, talented and faithful business man and true gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article. A review of his life is a real part of the history of this county and therefore we append an epitome with pleasure.

Ernest L. was born in Sigourney, Iowa, on November 29, 1864, being the son of John T. and Albina S. (McColley) Parker. The father was a millman and contractor and is now mayor of Sigourney. He was born in Ohio on February 2, 1832, was a captain of Company D, Thirteenth Iowa, and spent eight months in Libby prison. He was also sheriff of Keokuk county, Iowa, and county commissioner for a number of terms. His father was Samuel Parker, who married a Miss Barton of New England. This gentleman was born in Virginia in 1808 and died in 1900. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana on January 5, 1836. Her father, Charles McColley, was born in Virginia, was sheriff of Keokuk county, Iowa, and married Miss Buck, a native of Pennsylvania. Our subject was educated in the comomn schools, labored in the mill and remained at home until twenty-one, then went to Omaha and worked in a sash and door factory. Later he worked in Sioux City, Iowa, and then went to Spokane, Washington. His brother, James S., was operating a sash and door factory there and he labored with him for two years. Then he went to Moscow and worked for the M. J. Shields Company for eighteen months. He and his brother James then bought a mill and moved it to Denver, Idaho county, where they operated it for three years, and then our subject went to Nezperce, when the reservation was opened up, started a lumber yard and later put in a stock of furniture, and here we find him at the present time.

In 1896 the people called him to act as county commissioner, electing him on the Democratic ticket. At the expiration of that term he was nominated for sheriff, but went with his entire ticket to defeat. In 1900 he was again nominated for commissioner and elected, and is serving in that capacity now. He has been trustee of his home village for a number of terms. Mr. Parker is a man of high standing, is popular with the people, of good appearance, and a gentleman in every sense of the word. In 1900 he was called by the people to act as delegate to Boise to oppose the slicing of this county to add taxable property to Shoshone. Mr. Parker has the following brothers and sisters: James S., Charles M., Elvin M., Louisa A. Foley, Eva A., T. Barton, Fred F. and Ray. Mr. Parker is a member of the K. of P., of the W. of W., of the I. O. O. F., and is also a Son of the Veterans. Mr. Parker owns real estate in Nezperce and in Lewiston, besides other property. He is a firm believer in the advantages and resources of Nez Perces county, and is always laboring for its upbuilding and advancement.

JOHN T. SPRINGSTON. The valuable estate and pleasant home of our subject lies three and one-half miles southeast from Lenore. The land, one hundred and sixty acres, was acquired by homestead right in 1896, and since that time Mr. Springston has devoted his wisdom and labors to the improvement of it, and also to handling a threshing outfit, of which latter industry he is a skilled master, having operated in it for twenty-five successive years.

John T. Springston was born in Warren county, Illinois, on May 3, 1857, being the son of Samuel A. and Rebecca (Haynes) Springston, natives of Virginia and both born in 1834. The mother died in 1866, but the father still lives in Kansas, a veteran of the Civil war. John T. remained at home until nineteen, gaining in that time his education and good skill in labors on the farm. Then he married and settled down to farming for himself, which continued in that country until 1884. Then he came to the vicinity of Palouse, bought land and rented more and devoted himself to the agricultural art, in which he has been successful. He also gave attention to logging, and in 1893, when the Palouse Milling Company went to the wall, he was so incumbered by their failure that he lost almost everything also. In 1896 he saved enough out of the wreck to make his way to the reservation with a small saw mill, and since that time Mr. Springston has been closely identified with the substantial progress and development of this section, well earning the place of prestige and prominence that he enjoys.

While in Kansas, in 1876, Mr. Springston married Miss Rosa, daughter of George and Lillie (Smith) Duston. The father was a sea captain and a native of England, and is now deceased. The mother was a native of Ireland and is now living with our subject. Mrs. Springston was born in 1858, at Burlington, Iowa, and has one brother and two sisters,—Joseph, in Elgin, Oregon; Lillie, in Garnett, Kansas; Emma, in Omaha, Nebraska. Mr. Springston has two brothers and one sister,—Andrew, in Kansas; Frank, in Oregon; Lucinda, in Missouri. To Mr. and Mrs. Springston there have been born the following children: Grace Henderson, Harry, Maggie Henderson, Etta Tumalson and Cora Lota Allen, Horona, Howard, Kittie, Floyd and Loren. Mr. Springston is a Populist and active in the conventions, and he has devoted much time and energy to the labors on the school board for the betterment of the school facilities and is decidedly a man of progress and improvement.

CALEB W. RICHARDSON. It gives us pleasure to recount the career of the industrious and substantial gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, since he is a patriotic citizen, a good business man and an upright and reliable man in all his walk.

Caleb W. Richardson was born in Howard county, Indiana, on May 26, 1848, being the son of Caleb and Celia (Humphries) Richardson. The father was born in Virginia in 1799 and died in 1870. He was one of the earliest pioneers in Howard and Tipton counties, in Indiana, and served in the Blackhawk war. Farming was his occupation. The mother was born in South Carolina in 1802 and died in 1892. She made two trips across the plains after she was eighty-five. Caleb W. remained at home until he was twenty-three assisting his father, and during the winters attending school. Then he started for himself. Farming and sawmilling in his native place occupied him for some time, and in 1871 he went to Kansas. Two years there, and then a brief visit to Indiana, and our subject was then ready for the Pacific coast country. He settled in Linn county, Oregon, and farmed until 1876, when the inviting resources of Whitman county, Washington, attracted him, and in 1877 he took land, and tilling that, with buying and shipping grain, occupied him until 1896, but the hard times caused a financial loss to him, as well as to thousands of others, and in 1896, after coming to the reservation and purchasing the relinquishment of the man who held the land where Mr. Richardson now lives, adjoining Melrose on the west, he summed up his assets and found that he had twenty dollars in cash, and a year's provisions. Right faithfully Mr. Richardson went to work with his hands, and the result is that he is one of the well-to-do farmers of this section.

On December 24, 1868, Mr. Richardson married Miss Ruth, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Light) Dick, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively, but now deceased. Mrs. Richardson was born in Ohio, in 1848, and has three brothers and two sisters,—Morgan, Mahlon, J. Alonzo, Mary Dutton and Rebecca Barrett. Mr. Richardson has ten brothers and five sisters, and six of the brothers were soldiers in the Civil war. Our subject also served as a minute man to repel Morgan. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Richardson: Maude Maynard, in Melrose; L. Byron, at Colton, Washington; Pearl Standley, at Mohler; Winona Litch, in Colton, Washington; Georgia Denny, in Melrose; May, Dick and Zoe L., at home. Mr. Richardson is past grand in the I. O. O. F., and past chancellor in the K. of P. Mrs. Richardson and her daughters are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Richardson is one of the most active men and labors for the betterment of educational facilities, and when the Melrose school house was built he donated lumber and thirty-five days' work. He is also an active Republican, and in 1900 he ran for the state legislature and was only beaten by sixty-two votes. He is a popular and highly respected man, and is a genial and good neighbor.

LOUIS HADFORD is a fine example of those who came to this new and untried country with meager means and have by thrift, industry and wisdom in the bestowment of their labors come to be the prosperous farmers and stockmen now dwelling in the reservation country. He was without means when he settled on his present place, two and one-half miles southeast from Lookout, and now he owns two hundred and forty acres of fertile land, well improved, raises the cereals and flax, handles many head of cattle, horses, and sheep and is a well-to-do, substantial citizen.

Louis Hadford was born in Sweden, on February 20, 1865, being the son of Hedfors and Karin (Vesterlund) Hadford, natives of Sweden. The father was born in 1832 and still lives in Sweden. The mother was born in 1830 and died in 1885. Louis grew up in his native place and was trained in the common schools. As soon as he was able he went to work in the trying labor of loading ships in the harbor of Harnes. While following this arduous calling he conceived the idea of coming to America and securing a home for himself. Accordingly, in 1889, he made the trip across the water and land to Spokane, Washington, where his brothers, Gust, John and Peter, were located. He paid attention to farming for two or three years, buying land. But at the time of the panic, he abandoned his land and went to railroading. In the spring of 1896 he, with his brothers, John and Gust, came to the reservation and they all secured good claims. His is one of the excellent farms and is handled with becoming skill and thrift. He has operated a threshing machine in addition to his other labors, being a skilled hand in this capacity.

Mr. Hadford has three brothers and two sisters, Peter, in Washington, John and Gust, in this county; Christine and Caroline, in Sweden. Mr. Hadford is a Republican and takes an interest in good government, especially so in schools and the general improvement and development in this section. Mr. Hadford is still the possessor of the quiet joys of the celebatarian and is content in his seclusion.

ALVA T. McCARTY. This gentleman is to be numbered with the heavy real estate owners of the county and is considered one of the substantial and capable business men. He handles his affairs with becoming wisdom, is a man of stability and integrity and respected by all.

Alva T. McCarty was born in Wayne county, Iowa, on August 5, 1870, being the son of Isaac and Rebecca (Jordan) McCarty. The father was born in Wayne county, Iowa, in 1845, and served three years and more in the Civil war. His father, Dr. McCarty, was a pioneer to Wayne county and the first sheriff of the county. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana, in 1847, and died in 1878. Alva remained with his father until twelve and then started for the west to seek his fortune. He went to work in Whitman county and soon after went to riding the range, also engaged in the horse raising industry for himself. He continued thus until 1892, and then he farmed, but owing to the excessive rain of that year, well remembered all over, he lost his crops. From this venture he went to raising stock and in 1895 he came to the reservation and took his present farm, one mile east from Melrose. He gave much labor to opening the land and also to raising stock. In June, 1902, he sold his stock and devoted himself to farming more extensively. Mr. McCarty now owns nearly one section of land in different parts and is also the possessor of other property. All his farms bear the marks of thrift and industry, and he is prospered because of his skill.

On December 24, 1893, at Moscow, Idaho, Mr. McCarty married Louise, daughter of James and Mary (Flower) Nifong, natives of Illinois and born in 1832 and 1833, respectively, and now living in Whitman county. Mrs. McCarty was born in California, in 1873, and was there educated in the Uniontown University. She has the following brothers and sisters: Mary E., Octova, Lizzie A., Josephine, Henry, Albert, Edward, George and Milton. Mr. McCarty has two brothers and two sisters, George, deceased; Dora, Miles, Ina. The children born to our subject and his faithful wife are Ina J., deceased; Walter T., Harry L., and Blanche L., the last three at home. Mr. McCarty is a member of the W. W., and in the political arena is a Republican and a familiar and influential figure at the conventions. Mr. McCarty gives time and energy to the advocacy of good schools. We wish also to mention that his farm, with the home place, is beautified with a fine eight-room structure of modern design, and also has a commodious barn and outbuildings to match.

CHARLES DOWD. This enterprising young gentleman is a native of the occident, being born in Pierce City, on June 7, 1870. He is now one of the most substantial farmers and stockmen of Nez Perces county and resides on his fine estate of five hundred and sixty acres, which he owns in partnership with his brother Matthew. This land is located about eight miles southeast from Lewiston and is favored in that five artesian wells flow constantly there, making it very valuable. He raises large crops of wheat, barley and alfalfa. Mr. Dowd pays considerable attention to raising stock, cattle, horses and hogs. He has a large band of the equines and also some exceptionally fine hogs. The family home is a comfortable and tasty dwelling of generous proportions and the farm has plenty of outbuildings and barns and so forth. We note that the parents of our subject, Michael and Elizabeth Dowd, were natives of Ireland and their career is epitomized elsewhere in this volume. They came from Pierce City to their present home place in 1870, the father buying seven hundred and forty acres there. He died in 1873 and the mother carried things along until her demise, in 1898, and before her death she divided the property, which also included some town property, among the children. Charles was educated in the district schools, in the schools in Lewiston, in the college at Fort Colville and also in the college at Spokane, from which last institution he graduated in 1889. Then he returned to the farm and since that time he has given his time to farming and raising stock as mentioned above.

On September 20, 1899, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Dowd married Miss Beatrice M., daughter of Frederick E. and Minnie (Raul) Kling, natives of Germany and Mobile, Alabama, respectively. Mrs. Dowd has three brothers, Frederick, William and Roy, who is a half-brother. Mrs. Dowd was born in Lewiston, on July 20, 1880. Mr. Dowd has the following named brothers and sisters, Harry, Mary E. Erb, both in Lewiston, and Matthew, on the farm. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dowd, Aileen Marie. These worthy people are members of the Catholic church. Mr. Dowd is a strong advocate of good schools and always labors hard for their betterment. He is a Democrat in political matters and takes an active part.

MATTHEW DOWD. It is pleasant to contemplate that in these western sections where the pioneers labored so hard to gain a foothold that now there is rising up a worthy class who are pushing their achievements in such a manner that they are a crown to the foundations laid by their sturdy ancestors. Notable among this number of young men is the subject of this sketch who was born on the place where he now lives, on March 22, 1872, being the son of Michael and Elizabeth Dowd. The father was a native of Ireland, being born in 1824. He was a pioneer of California, where he wrought at his trade, that of machinist and blacksmith. The mother was also born in Ireland in 1840, and died in 1898. These worthy people came to California in 1860 and the father wrought at the forge, in the mines and in San Francisco for four years and then determined to try Idaho. He went into the Pierce City mines and there operated some mines that he gained title to and also labored at his trade, doing well in both lines. Five years of this labor and then he came to Nez Perces county and bought the land where our subject now lives, seven miles southeast from Lewiston. This was in 1870, and in 1873 he was called away by death. The mother was left with four small children and nobly did she take up the burdens, hiring help and overseeing the farm. Our subject received his education in Spokane and at Fort Colville, being well trained. At the age of nineteen he quit school, went into the stock business and farming with his brother Charles, and they have had good success in these lines, being men of care and industry, always dominated with wisdom.

On November 4, 1897, Mr. Dowd married Miss Mary, daughter of Patrick and Bridget Gaffney, natives of Ireland. The father was a mining man, born in 1837 and died in 1895. The mother still lives in Pierce City. Mrs. Dowd has four brothers, Frank, John, William and Robert, all in Pierce City. Mrs. Dowd was born in Pierce City on July 29, 1874. Mr. Dowd has the following brothers and sisters: Harry, Mary Erb, and Charles. Mr. Dowd is a member of the Catholic church, as also is his wife and they are devout supporters of their faith. He is a stanch Democrat and is always attending to political matters in their season. Mr. Dowd owns, with his brother Charles, five hundred and sixty acres of fine land and there are five artesian wells on the place. He raises cattle and horses and has large bands of them. The farm produces wheat, barley and alfalfa. He has a fine home and the estate is improved in a becoming manner. Mr. Dowd is an advocate of good schools and is a member of the Pioneers' Association.

E. CLAY CHAPMAN. The prosperous farmers and stockmen of the reservation country surely include the subject of this article. His estate lies just east from Melrose and is in fee, Indian land, but is operated by Mr. Chapman, who is making a good dividend producer from the property.

E. Clay Chapman was born in Wabash county, Indiana, on April 22, 1851, being the son of George W. and Catherine C. (Ritter) Chapman. The father was a cooper, born in Knox county, Ohio, in 1826. He was a pioneer in Iowa and now lives near Vollmer, Idaho. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1828 and is living near Vollmer. The family came to Illinois, settling in Princeton, when this son was two years old. On October 30, 1861, they landed in Poweshiek county, Iowa, and there our subject grew to manhood and secured his educational training. When twenty-one he started in life's battle for himself and farmed in Iowa until 1879. Then he went to Custer county, Nebraska, took land, farmed and raised stock until 1887. He was very successful in those labors and accumulated a goodly holding. He wished to see the west and so sold out, and in company with many neighbors came to Latah county, Idaho. Soon he was in Nez Perces county and took a preemption near Westlake, and went to raising stock and wheat. This property was sold in 1892 and on account of failing health of his wife, a trip was made to Alberta, Canada. This was an unfortunate venture and Mr. Chapman lost heavily. In May, 1893, he returned to Vollmer and gave his attention to farming and lumbering until 1898, when he came to his present location.

On October 11, 1872, Mr. Chapman married Miss Mary, daughter of Judge John B. and Mary C. (Bickle) Stitt. Judge Stitt was a native of Ohio, a pioneer in Kansas and died in 1879. Mrs. Stitt was a native of Virginia and is now deceased. Mrs. Chapman was born in Indiana, in 1852 and has four sisters, Hattie, Mattie, Anna, and Jennie, and one brother, Samuel, at Lamar, Missouri. Mr. Chapman has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas C., deceased; George W., deceased; John W., Albert B., Alice S. Jones, and Clara Schultz. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, Carl E., deceased; Clyde D., in Culdesac; Claude H., at home; Hattie V., wife of Richard Stinson, at Vollmer. Mrs. Chapman is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Chapman is a Republican in politics and is always active for the betterment of the country. In his farm labors Mr. Chapman confines himself largely to producing flax and he is a successful raiser of this important crop.

AARON J. RICHARDSON. The industrious mechanic, whose name initiates this pararaph, is one of the substantial laborers on the reservation who have made it one of the most thrifty spots in Idaho. He is operating a blacksmith shop in Melrose, in partnership with Mr. Coker, having taken up this industry in June, 1902. In addition, Mr. Richardson has a fine farm about two miles northwest from town where he is bestowing much thought and capital. It is a good piece of land taken from the wild, and is being made one of the valuable and highly improved estates of the county. It contains a good orchard, is improved in a becoming manner, and is now handled through hired help directed by Mr. Richardson in addition to his shop work.

Aaron J. Richardson was born in Benton county, Oregon, on January 28, 1864, being the son of Richard C. and Sarah E. Richardson. The father was born in Missouri in 1834, is now a resident of Nez Perces county. He is a pioneer in Oregon and took his part in the Indian wars. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri in 1840 and died in 1886. Aaron remained with his parents until twenty, then came to Pullman for himself and there wrought at blacksmithing, ranching, carpentering and so forth, until 1898, which was the date of his advent to the reservation country. He selected his present place and has taken hold with his hands and has done a commendable work in improvement and in building up.

Mr. Richardson is a member of the M. W. A., Melrose Camp No. 6216. He is a Democrat in politics but never strives for personal advancement in that realm. He has the following brothers and sisters: Zerilda A., at San Francisco; Thomas J., in this county; Victoria, in Benton county, Oregon; Sidney, in Idaho county; Laura, in Oregon; Tolbert, in Whitman county; Sarah, living near Salem, Oregon, Charles, Henry, Mary, Jesse, and Emery, all in Nez Perces county.

FRANK NELSON. This well known young man has gained for himself a good reputation on account of his uprightness and his careful walk while he has also gained a competence in worldly goods because of his thrift, industry and careful managing the resources placed in his hands in this rich country. Frank Nelson was born in Marion county, Iowa, on October 27, 1870, being the son of James R. and Mary C. (Ruddell) Nelson. The father was born in Adams county, Illinois, on October 30, 1840, was a pioneer to Lewiston, coming here in 1862, later returning to Illinois for a time, and is now one of the substantial citizens of this county. The mother was born in Adams county, Illinois, in 1841 and died November 18, 1897. Our subject came with his parents to Walla Walla when he was but seven years old and there he labored on his father's farm and attended school until they removed into Nez Perces county. The father came hither for range for his stock, in which business he made a good success. When twenty-one Frank started for himself and farming was his initial work. At the opening of the Nez Perces reservation, he refused to take land on account of the exorbitant price asked by the government, it being cheaper to buy land outright. He has continued farming and mining ever since he has been doing for himself and he has some fine properties on Snake and Clearwater, they being gold and silver bearing ledges. He also has stock on those ranges.

On October 15, 1891, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Nelson married Miss Florence, daughter of Emory and Rhoda Whitcomb. The father was a millwright, born in New Hampshire in 1821 and died in November, 1898. The mother was born in Illinois on May 27, 1824, and died on August 27, 1889. Mrs. Nelson was born in Adams county, Illinois, on September 18, 1867. She came to Idaho in 1887 and she has the following named brothers and sisters: Josephine Leachman, in this county; James W., also in this county: Charles E., in Lewiston. Mr. Nelson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P. in Lewiston. Mrs. Nelson is a member of the Methodist church. In political matters Mr. Nelson is allied with the Republican party and always displays a commendable activity in the affairs of state. He is a warm advocate of good schools and is always in the van for their betterment. Mr. Nelson had two uncles who fought for their country in the Civil war.

GEORGE L. RICHARDSON. This successful farmer and business man lives on an estate adjoining Melrose, where he is making a comfortable and valuable abode. He raises cattle, hogs, horses, and does a general farming business, while he is steadily adding the improvements needed to make his farm first class in every particular. In addition to the farm enterprise, Mr. Richardson is assistant postmaster in Melrose and is a salesman in the store of T. H. Thompson.

George L. Richardson was born in Benton county, Oregon, on October 15, 1868, his parents being Thomas and Nancy (Cooper) Richardson. The father was a farmer, born in Missouri in 1834, and died in 1898, in Washington. He was a pioneer in the west, camped on the ground where Pullman, Washington, now stands, when there was not a house there. He fought in the Indian wars, before the town of Walla Walla was established. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri in 1850 and still lives in Nez Perces county. George remained at home until twenty-three, receiving his education in Whitman county, whither the family had moved. Many were the nights that they hid for fear of the Indians and they had the hardships and trials of the pioneers to endure. In 1898 Mr. Richardson came to the Nez Perces reservation and took a homestead. Later he sold this and bought his present place on account of school facilities for his children.

On March 15, 1891, Mr. Richardson married Miss Ada, daughter of Miller and Lydia (Bliou) Curl, the nuptials occurring in eastern Oregon. Mr. Curl came to Oregon in pioneer days and this daughter was born in the Willamette valley in 1874. She has the following brothers and sisters: William, Frank, Walter and Anna. Mr. Richardson has two brothers, Claude and Ernest, both in this county. To our subject and his gracious wife there have been born three children, Merle, May, and Fay, aged nine, seven and five at the present writing. Mr. Richardson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and a charter member of the M. W. A., aiding to organize the latter. Republicanism is his belief in politics and he is a substantial and upright man, commanding the respect and winning the esteem of all who know him.

CHARLES BLIESNER. A man whose thrift and wisdom have granted the rewards due these excellent virtues, and who is at this time one of the substantial and representative citizens of the reservation country and has assisted materially to develop this favored region, it is becoming that he should receive especial mention in the volume that recites the history of northern Idaho.

Charles Bliesner was born in Prussia, Germany, on December 6, 1872, being the son of Christ and Rachel Bliesner, also natives of the same place. In 1882 the family came to the United States from Bremen, landing in Baltimore. Soon we see them in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, where they remained until 1885, when a western journey was made which brought them to Spokane county, Washington. There the parents remain at this time. They have the following children: Frederick, Christ and William, in Spokane county; August, Charles and Otto, in Nez Perces county; Gustav, also in Spokane county. In the spring of 1896 our subject made his way to the reservation country and located on his present place, about two miles north from Nezperce. This is one of the choicest pieces of land in this vicinity and Mr. Bliesner has improved it in a worthy manner. He came with but little finances, but now has a valuable farm, good buildings, stock, implements, and orchards, and is one of the leading farmers of this section. His house is one of five rooms, a barn eighteen by thirty and a granary sixteen by thirty-two. Mr. Bliesner had to haul his first three crops to Lewiston, Spalding and Culdesac, but notwithstanding the hardships and arduous labors to perform, he has held tenaciously to the one pursuit and success has crowned him.

On March 1, 1901, Mr. Bliesner married Miss Nettie, daugher of Mathias and Ellen Henderson, natives respectively of Ireland and Canada, and who came to Spokane county in 1890. The father died in 1899 and the mother is dwelling near by on the reservation. Mr. Bliesner is a man of excellent standing in the community, has maintained a first class reputation and is the recipient of the friendship of all who know him. He is a charter member of the M. W. A.

AUGUST LARSON. The grand old motto, "What is worth doing is worth doing well," has been exemplified in the career of the subject of this article and it is with pleasuree that we are privileged to put in the abiding chronicles of his county an epitome of the same, since also he has done much for the advancement of the county's interests and has conducted himself in a commendatory manner here.

August Larson was born in Sweden on June 30, 1861, being the son of August and Carolina (Blomchrist) Larson. The father was a native of Sweden, farmed there and is still living, although born in 1828. The mother was born in 1833 and is still living. August attended school and worked on the farm until 1879, when he bade farewell to home, severed family ties and came to America. Landing in New York, he went thence to Chicago and worked on the Douglas pike for a year and then went to Iowa, where he farmed for ten years. He did well and accumulated a good property and in 1890 he decided to come west. On May 31st of that year, he landed in Nez Perces county and took up a preemption in Tammany hollow. He improved and tilled it until 1899, then sold and bought his present place, twelve miles southeast from Lewiston. He has a good estate, well improved, a good band of cattle on Salmon creek, and other property. He has been prospered in his labors on account of his industry, his wise management and his keen foresight in business matters.

In 1885 Mr. Larson married Miss Walker, who was born in Scotland in 1865 and came to America when sixteen years of age. To them have been born six children: Albert, August, Fred, George, Bob and Grace. Mr. Larson has brothers and sisters named as follows: Axtel, Oscar, Amel, deceased, Emma, Alma, deceased. The living ones are in Sweden. Mr. Larson is affiliated with the Masonic order and with the M. W. A. He is road supervisor and has been for seven years. He has also been a member of the school board. In political matters, he is a Democrat and an influential factor in this realm. Mr. Larson is a warm advocate of good government, good schools, good roads, and good churches, and for all these worthy matters he labors faithfully.

ZEPHANIAH A. JOHNSON. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant in this history a review of the leading business man and prominent member of society whose name appears above, and who is proprietor of the largest flour mills in the county.

Mr. Johnson was born in Benton county, Iowa, on February 28, 1868, being the son of Stephen and Elizabeth (Hardinger) Johnson, natives respectively, of Greene county, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. The father was a farmer and carpenter and later was a faithful preacher in the German Baptist church. Our subject was educated in the native place and labored with his father until twenty-three. Then he bought a farm of two hundred and forty acres for himself and after cultivating it six years, came to the reservation. Two years after it opened he bought the improvements of a man, added materially in erecting greater and better improvements and then filed and sold it three years later as a relinquishment. He then erected a large flour mill in Nezperce, it being of seventy-five barrels capacity daily, and equipped with all the modern and up-to-date machinery known, and it is one of the finest plants in the northern part of the state. In June, 1901, Mr. Johnson completed a fine two-story residence on the hill overlooking the town, and he supplied the home with a three-story observatory tower, that makes the place doubly attractive. It is one of the finest places in the county and is made attractive and beautiful by the taste and tact of Mrs. Johnson, who presides with graciousness. In addition to the properties mentioned, Mr. Johnson has a fine quarter section of land one-half mile from the town, which he utilizes as headquarters for his industry of raising hogs, which he is building up in good shape, thus making a market at home, as he purchases many each year.

The marriage of Mr. Johnson and Miss Emma A., daughter of Jacob B. and Sallie (Arnold) Lehman, who are deceased, was solemnized on March 4, 1891. Mrs. Johnson is a native of Benton county, Iowa. To them have been born four children, Charles Clifford, Murrel, Ray and James W. Mr. Johnson has three brothers and three sisters, William F., George R., James M., Elma Jones, Olive Cox, Mary Jorgans. Mrs. Johnson has two brohers and four sisters, Jacob, George L., Rebecca Fletcher, Nannie Pike, Sadie, Lydia.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are members of the German Baptist church and are devout supporters of the faith, being also consistent in their representation of the denominational teachings in practical life. In October, 1902, Mr. Johnson suffered the loss of his fine home by fire.

OREN L. DICKINSON. In addition to handling a fine tract of land which Mr. Dickinson secured on the reservation by the homestead right, he has, since 1901, been operating a drug store at Melrose, where he is working up a good patronage. He is a man of good standing and has labored for the advancement of the interests of the country and is a progressive and patriotic citizen.

Oren L. Dickinson was born in Oswego, New York, on August 12, 1840, being the son of Rudolphus and Margaret K. (Coplin) Dickinson. The father was a merchant and died in 1893, while the mother was born in Michigan. Oren was raised by his grandfather Coplin, until ten, his father being in California, and then the father came home and took him to Davenport, Iowa, where he received his education. Oren remained with his father until he was eighteen and then started out in the world for himself. Three years were spent in traveling to various places and then he setled in Dixon, Scott county, Iowa, and took a mail contract. In September, 1863, he enlisted in Company B, Ninth Iowa, and served principally on scout detachments in Arkansas. After three years of faithful service, he was discharged at Davenport and now is the recipient of twelve dollars per month from the government. Following the war he engaged in mercantile pursuits with his brother Arthur for two years in Calamus, Iowa. In 1873 he took a homestead near Harrison, Arkansas, and two years later returned to Iowa and took up the tinner's business. It was in 1882 that he retired from that and migrated to Palouse, Washington, where he continued the tinner's work in connection with a preemption in Latah county. That was his home for fourteen years and then upon the opening of the reservation, he came hither and took his present place, which he is handling in partnership with his son.

In Scott county, on September 9, 1860, Mr. Dickinson married Miss Susan, daughter of John and Margaret (Anfinson) Larson, natives of Norway. Mrs. Dickinson was also born in Norway, on March 13, 1844, and came to the United States with her parents in 1856. She was well educated before coming to this country. The parents settled in Illinois and then came to Iowa. She has three brothers: Louis, Anfin, and John. Mr. Dickinson has one brother, Arthur, living in Missouri, and one half-brother, Frank Dickinson, in Vineland, Washington. To our worthy subject and his estimable wife there have been born the following named children: Rudolphus S., in Iowa; Joacquin, in Nez Perces county; Alfred, at home; Donacelia, wife of W. R. Skey; May V. Yarbrough; Sophia, wife of Jesse J. Wright; Melrose, Arthur F. and Chester O., both at home. Mrs. Dickinson is a faithful member of the Lutheran church. Mr. Dickinson is an adherent of the Republican party and takes a very active part in the campaigns. His grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution and this son is not a whit behind in patriotism.

ALOIS KACHELMEIR was born in the eastern part of Germany, on June 25, 1856, being the son of Joseph and Catherine Kachelmeir, both natives of Germany. The father, a musician, was justice of the peace in Germany for sixteen years. In 1857 they came to New York, and thence to New Ulm, Minnesota, where the father secured land and farmed. Our subject grew to manhood on the farm and was educated in both the German and English schools. On October 23, 1888, in Renville county, Minnesota, Mr. Kachelmeir married Miss Mary Gaurahy, whose parents were born in Ireland, but she was born in Renville county, on May 1, 1871. In 1893 Mr. Kachelmeir came to Spokane and farmed near Trent. Upon the opening of the reservation in the fall of 1895, he immediately came hither and selected his present farm about two miles northeast from Nezperce. It is one of the very choicest farms in this section of the country and has been handled in a very skillful manner by the owner. He has a good house, a choice orchard and all outbuildings and improvements necessary for carrying on the estate. Mr. Kachelmeir has shown himself to be an honest, industrious, and upright man, a worthy citizen and one whose labors have always been for substantial improvement and the building up of the country. His example in first class farming has been of great benefit as a fine practical object lesson to the new comers on the reservation and it has stirred the spirit of emulation in many and the general result has been of value to the country.

Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kachelmeir, Joseph, Alois, Cecelia, Mary, Bridget C., and Ralph. Mr. Kachelmeir and his estimable wife are members of the Catholic church, while he is a member of St. Joseph's Union of Renville county, Minnesota.

SILAS JOHNSON. A capable and upright man, whose life is consistent with his faith and who has won and retains the confidence and esteem of all who know him, it is quite within the province of this volume that our subject should be represented in the biographical portion thereof.

Silas Johnson was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on January 29, 1846, being the son of Zephania and Rachel (Ulery) Johnson. Our subject was educated and grew to manhood in his native place, and for fifty-two years he dwelt on the old home place, within three miles of where his father had been born in 1812. On July 8, 1875, at the native place, Mr. Johnson married Miss Nannie, daughter of John and Maria (Lockard) Rudabaugh, natives of Pennsylvania and residents of Westmoreland county, where Mrs. Johnson was born on May 13, 1854. Mr. Johnson followed farming and raising stock there until 1898, when he came on the long journey to Nezperce, landing here on March 31, 1898. He soon bought the relinquishment to his present place and settled down to make a home. The land was wild then, but he has it all cultivated now, well fenced and adorned with a fine eight-room house, large and substantial barn and all accessories needed on a well regulated farm. Mr. Johnson is one of the thrifty and prosperous farmers of the country and is of exceptionally good standing. He and his wife and their children are all members of the well known German Baptist church, with the exception of Howard, and are devout supporters of the faith. Six children have been born to this happy home, namely: Leslie, married to Gertrude Young; Alice, wife of David John; Melvin, married to Daisy Center; Ethel, wife of Peter Fike; Pearl and Howard, both at home. Mr. Johnson has always evinced the keenest interest in advancing the educational facilities of the land where he has dwelt, as also in the general progress and substantial development of the country.

SAMUEL W. MARSHALL. Located at what was once known as the Beeman stage ranch, about one mile north from Lookout, is this prosperous farmer, as well as teacher of vocal music, in which line he has been blessed with abundant success, being endowed by nature for the fine art, and the subject of this sketch is entitled to representation in the history of Nez Perces county.

Samuel W. Marshall was born in Newton county, Missouri, on April 2, 1854, being the son of Elias M. and Rebecca (Sutherland) Marshall. The father was a farmer and minister in the church of Christ. He was born in Illinois in 1831, and died on March 5, 1890. He was a pioneer in Newton and Jasper counties, Missouri, also in Bourbon county, Kansas. He was a scout in the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, enlisting in the fall of 1861 and participated in the battles of Prairie Grove and Cane Hill. Being discharged on account of sickness he soon joined the militia and assisted to chase Price out of the country. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana in 1838 and is now living in Joplin, Missouri; her father was one of the earliest pioneers of Newton county, Missouri. When Samuel was seven the family went to Fort Scott, Kansas, and there he was raised and educated. Returning to Newton county, he soon went into the mines in the vicinity of Joplin and then took up farming. He had received a technical training in music in the meantime and commenced to give instruction in vocal music. In 1888 he sold out and came to Moscow, where he rented land extensively until 1893, doing well until that "wet year." Losing heavily, he then went as foreman for the Farmers' Warehouse at Jewell. Four years later he took a position as weigher for the Tacoma Grain Company at Kendrick and after two years of service he came to Nez Perces county. He located on the Cottonwood for a time and in 1900 he came to his present place, which he intends to farm to fruit and grasses.

On December 25, 1876, in Joplin, Missouri, Mr. Marshall married Miss Mary M., daughter of Abram and Rebecca (Henry) Shira, of German extraction and born in Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively. Mrs. Marshall was born in Iowa, on October 26, 1856, and has two brothers and one sister, George M., Emma Blankinship, John H. Mr. Marshall has the following brothers and sisters: Elizabeth Wolf, Margaret L. Hooper, Cyrus A., Martha J. Garrison, Seth W., deceased, Edward E., Schuyler C., Ira S., deceased, Fredrick and Perry D. Eight children have been the fruit of this happy union: George A., in Moscow; James C., deceased; Hattie J. Keeney, in Rosedale, Washington; Ida R., deceased; Minnie A., a musician in Rosedale; Charles L., deceased; William O., Mary G. Mr. Marshall is a member of the W. of W. at Lookout. He is also a school trustee and labors faithfully for the improvement of the schools. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall are consistent members of the Church of Christ. Mr. Marshall was the last postmaster at Beeman.

LONZO McWILLIS. The reservation portion of Nez Perces county is the newest portion in the northern part of the state, its settlement dating from 1896. Among the later ones to settle on this desirable section of land is the subject of this sketch, who bought his present estate, about five miles northwest from Culdesac. Mr. McWillis is a substantial man of ability and is improving his place in fine shape and is counted one of the progressive and enterprising men of the county.

Lonzo McWillis was born in Port Oxford, Oregon, in 1869, being the son of William and Mary E. (Dougherty) McWillis. The father was born on the ocean while his parents were coming from Scotland, in 1836. He was raised in Louisville, Kentucky, and was a professional cook on the Ohio river steamboats. He died in 1887. The mother was born in Iowa in 1847 and in 1849 her father crossed the plains to Oregon, bringing the family in 1852, with ox teams. His name was Nathan Dougherty, he was born in Indiana and he married Lydia Rickard, a native of New York. Our subject remained at home with his parents until he had reached his majority, and then he migrated to eastern Oregon, taking up the sheep business in Grant, Cook, and Gilham counties. In 1899 he sold his possesions there and came to Nez Perces county, Idaho. As mentioned above, he bought his land instead of taking it as a homestead. Immediately Mr. McWillis went to work in improving the estate. He built a beautiful modern house and soon after moving in it burned to the ground. At the present time he is engaged in erecting a commodious barn and his estate is being improved accordingly in other lines.

Mr. McWillis is the originator of a new kind of flax which is lighter colored, earlier, produces more seed to the acre, and yields more oil to the pound than the ordinary flax. On five square rods of ground seventy-five pounds were raised and the test shows the white flax to yield at least sixteen one-hundredths of a pound more oil per bushel than the average variety.

On November 19, 1894, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. McWillis married Isabella, daughter of Jason R. and Mary C. Butler. Mrs. McWillis was born in Lynn county, Oregon, in June, 1871. She has three brothers and five sisters, while Mr. McWillis has two sisters and six brothers. Two children have been born to this happy marriage, Leonard M. and Mabel E. Politically Mr. McWillis is a Republican and takes the part of the interested and intelligent citizen. It is of interest that the father of our subject was in the Indian war of 1855-6, having enlisted at The Dalles.

FRANK W. HILTON. To the well known and industrious merchant whose name is above, we grant space in this history as he is one of the leading men of Leland, has made a commendable record and is a substantial and good citizen and an upright and capable man.

Frank W. Hilton was born in Muskegon, Michigan, on August 25, 1851, being the son of Richard and Rachel (Bailey) Hilton. In 1864 the family came to Inyo county, California, and there the father bought several hundred acres of land. The parents still live there. As soon as our subject had finished his education, he assisted his father in freighting from Los Angeles to Independence, the county seat of Inyo county. Also during this time he learned the wagon and blacksmith trade. When he was eighteen he went to Arizona and freighted. Two years later we find him in St. Clair county, operating a supply store on the Pescadero and Saratoga road, and then he erected a hotel on the summit of the range and conducted it for two years. Returning to Inyo county he started a little town in Round valley, which is now a thriving trading point. He then went to Pendleton, took land and after five years sold it. His next move was to Genesee, where he purchased a blacksmith shop. This was sold in 1893 and then Mr. Hilton came to Leland, taking up the same business with the added part of merchandising. In 1897 the store burned down and in 1901 the shop was destroyed by fire. The former was re-established and the latter has not been. Mr. Hilton is doing a good business and is popular with the trading people.

In 1871 Mr. Hilton married Miss Margaret, daughter of John and Eliza (Henson) Hartman, natives of Missouri, and of German and Swedish descent. Mr. Hartman is a prominent merchant in Saratoga. Mr. and Mrs. Hilton have eight children, Richard, a wealthy farmer and real estate owner at Pomeroy, Washington; Frank, with his parents; Allen, at home; Edna, wife of Lee Penell, a merchant at Lewiston; Erma, wife of William Hillman, near Dayton, Washington; Lettie, Pearl and Kate, at home. Mr. Hilton is a Republican, has attended conventions but never allows his name placed in nomination for office though often urged to do so. Mr. Hilton has three brothers, one sister, Joseph H., a leading farmer near Preston, Washington; Oscar, a large farmer in Inyo county, California; Charles, a farmer in the same county; Amelia, conducting the mercantile business of her husband, who recently died. Mr. Hilton's family is an old and prominent one in New York, Judge Hilton, one of the wealthy men of that state being one of the family. This latter succeeded to A. T. Stewart's business upon his death. Our subject is an amiable and upright man, has a fine standing among his fellows and has always manifested industry, assiduity and wisdom in his labors.

STEPHEN R. SOUTHWICK. As one of the early pioneers of this section of Nez Perces county, a man of energy and enterprise, whose labors have materially built up Nez Perces county, always dominated by integrity, wisdom and charity, the subject of this article is granted a representation in his county's history with pleasure, and we are assured his life's sketch will be interesting to many.

Stephen R. Southwick was born in Rensselaer county, New York, on February 12, 1838, being the son of John Wesley and Esther (Chapman) Southwick. The father was a farmer and carpenter. At the age of three our subject was called to mourn the death of his mother, after which he resided with his aunt, Roxana Chapman, until seventeen years old. During this time he was favored with a good public school education, and then three years were spent in Eureka College, in Woodford county, Illinois. Mr. Southwick then took up the work of the educator and followed it more or less until recently. He was eminently successful in this line and has a record that is worthy and good. In addition to this, Mr. Southwick acted as surveyor in a number of places. In Labette county, Kansas, he was chosen county surveyor for two terms. He also surveyed the towns of Chetopa and Oswego, both being thriving places now. It was 1882 that Mr. Southwick came to his present place, about one-half mile southwest from the village of Southwick. He took a quarter section and added forty acres more by purchase. He cultivates a small portion and the balance has fine timber. Mr. Southwick has had many experiences in various frontier lines. One night, hearing an outcry, he rose from his bed and opened the door and answered. The party in distress called again, and by this signalling from each other the stranger was guided to Mr. Southwick's door, and behold, it was a monstrous cougar. This ended that interview, as the door was shut. Again, Mr. Southwick's daughter was after the cows and a fond bear accompanied the young lady home, but the journey home was in the form of a race, and we understand that Miss Southwick made good time, to the disgust of bruin, who fell behind. Again, Mr. Southwick came suddenly face to face with a brown bearship, and so unaccustomed were each to the etiquette of this kind of tete-a-tete fellowship that they ignominiously fled in opposite directions, and we have not yet heard the bear's version of the episode, but Mr. Southwick is trustworthy and would not reflect any thing on the training of bruin.

In 1888 Mr. Southwick was appointed postmaster at Southwick, the office being named for him. Seven years and more he served faithfully to the satisfaction of the people. Mr. Southwick is a Republican and Populist. He has been chosen justice of the peace, but would not act. He is frequently selected for the conventions, both county and state.

On July 8, 1863, Mr. Southwick married Miss Martha, daughter of Aaron and Melinda (Dougherty) Shay, natives of Ohio and Shelby county, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Southwick there have been born eight children: Edwin, living in Canada; Harvey, five miles southwest from Southwick; LeRoy, near Southwick; Albert, at home; Mary, wife of Frank Daggett, living near Southwick; Mattie, wife of Frank Brown, living in San Jose, California; Emma and Myrtle, at home. Mr. Southwick has one sister in Missouri,—Mary, wife of Henry Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Southwick and their children are members of the Christian church and he is an elder in that organization.

It is of note that Mr. Southwick and Mr. L. R. Chapman by hard effort succeeded in getting the government mail route to Pierce City from Southwick, which shortened it forty miles and saved much expense. Mr. Southwick stands exceptionally well among those who know him and his faithful life as an educator and his worthy labors in pioneer work have given him an enviable prestige.

GEORGE W. PLITER. In this gentleman we have exemplified the true grit and stability that have outridden the adversities and hardships that accumulated in his path and have with every rising tide of trouble found a way to scale them all and bring excellent success to him in the end. He is one of the most prosperous farmers and real estate holders of this county, and is one of its leading and prominent business men.

George W. Pliter was born in Genesee county, New York, on March 22, 1853, being the son of Matthew Pliter. The father was a farmer and was born in Germany February 21, 1809. He came to this country when nine years of age. The mother died when our subject was an infant and he has no recollection of her. The family went to Michigan when George was five, where he was reared and gained his education. When fourteen he went to East Saginaw and began to learn the blacksmith trade. He continued at this trade until he was twenty-two. Then he bought and sold stock until 1878, making a good success. In 1878 he went to San Francisco, thence to Portland and later to Moscow. Next we see him at Lake Waha, where in company with John H. Wamath he operated a sawmill for four years. In the spring of 1883 he went to Seattle and the next year returned to Michigan. Later we see him in Pendleton and then raising sheep in the John Day country. It was in 1886 that he returned to Nez Perces county and again he started a saw mill near Waha lake. He continued this until 1895, when the mill and all the contiguous property burned and was a total loss. At this juncture, Mr. Pliter lost five hundred acres of wheat by the grasshoppers; the combined blow would have defeated an ordinary man. However, he went to work, bought and sold cattle and hogs, shipping train loads of them to Kansas City and Chicago. He did well and also at his farming and now he owns a section of land thirteen miles southeast from Lewiston, and sold four hundred acres besides, this spring. He has good improvements and stock in abundance.

In 1888 Mr. Pliter married Miss Mattie Parker, who died in 1894. In the fall of 1897 Mr. Pliter married Miss Agnes L. Reed, born in Clark county, Missouri, in 1864. Her parents are dead and also her eight brothers and sisters. Mr. Pliter has the following half brothers and sisters: Frank M., William, Catherine Gilbert, Lydia Stingle, Emma Buckey. Mrs. Pliter is a member of the Presbyterian church and is a graduate of Park College, Missouri. Mr. Pliter is one of the active Republicans of the county and has done exceptionally good work in this realm. He is a warm advocate of good schools and is a heavy tax payer, thus backing up his stand for better educational facilities with the means to do the work. Mr. Pliter operates a combined harvester, there being but one other in the county. He is an active, enterprising agriculturist and a keen and masterful business man and has done a great deal for the advancement of the interests of the county, both by individual labor and improving his property and in his creating a market in his stock buying and also in many other ways, being progressive and up-to-date. Mr. Pliter had one brother, John, in the Civil war.

WILLIAM L. RUDDELL. It now becomes our pleasant privilege to outline in brief the interesting career of the industrious and capable gentleman mentioned at the head of this article. It is quite becoming that he should be granted recognition in his county's history, since he has labored faithfully here for the betterment of the schools of the county, has always stood for good government, and in industrial life he has wrought with a firm hand and winning skill, while his moral conduct has been such as to win the approbation of all who know him.

William L. was born in Adams county, Illinois, on October 18, 1864, being the son of John D. and Urilla (Nichols) Ruddell, natives of Adams county, Illinois, where the mother still lives, the father dying in 1876. A more extended mention of these worthy people is made in another portion of this volume. William's grandfather, John M. Ruddell, was a leader in his county and the Democratic party, and was a member of the state legislature of Illinois. William's grandfather, Nichols, was one of the leading stockmen of Adams county and a good man. Mr. Ruddell died in Missouri when this son was nine years of age. William then went to live with his father's father and there remained until he was of age, receiving a good education. He and his brother George decided to come west, and on October 18, 1885, they landed in Lewiston; for ten years they labored together in various lines, both renting land and buying. Finally, in 1897, our subject purchased his present place of two hundred and forty acres, thirteen miles southeast from Lewiston, where he does a general farming business and raises some stock.

On October 12, 1888, Mr. Ruddell married Miss Hattie G., daughter of Isaac and Priscilla (Timmons) Mounce, natives of Indiana and Ohio. To this happy union there have been born four children, all at home and named as follows, Harry, Clair, Ethel, and Mearl. Mrs. Ruddell was born in Iowa on July 6, 1869. Mr. Ruddell is a member of M. W. A., at Lewiston. He and his wife are devout members of the Christian church. Mr. Ruddell is an active Democrat, believing in the stanch old Jeffersonian principles of democracy. He is especially active in the betterment of educational facilities and is now acting as clerk for his district. Mr. Ruddell had three uncles in the Civil war, and W. D. Ruddell was captain. Mrs. Ruddell had four uncles in the same conflict.

JOSEPH P. WOOD. The career of this stirring gentleman in an exceptionally complete manner exemplifies the hardships and labors of the pioneers, and also he has demonstrated what success can be achieved by care and industry.

Joseph P. Wood was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, on November 11, 1863, being the son of Joseph and Jane (Carey) Wood. The father was born in Knox county, Tennessee, on February 16, 1809, and died on August 3, 1878. He was a pioneer in Umatilla county in 1863, being one of the very first men to farm in that county. He crossed the plains with ox teams and remained on his homestead until his death. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and died in Oregon in 1899. Her parents were pioneers in Ash Grove, Iowa, and her father, Jonathan Carey, was a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, becoming such at the age of twenty. Joseph grew up and was educated in his native place. He remained with his mother until he was twenty and then married Anna

White, who died eighteen months later. Subsequent to this, Mr. Wood travelled over the northwestern states and spent one winter in the Yellowstone region. Then he came to Walla Walla, married and settled down to farming, buying land. He prospered until 1893, when everyone was broken financially or sadly shaken, and he suffered with the rest. He struggled on and operated a threshing machine and had to undergo much sickness, but at the time of the opening of the reservation he came to Nezperce straightway, and there located his family while he searched for a place. He selected his present abode, three and one-half miles southwest from Melrose, and filed. He brought his family thither with much difficulty, as there were no roads and he was obliged to sell his wagon to procure food. He lost a fine horse in hauling lumber, and for the first year or two it was a desperate struggle to keep back the wolf. However, Mr. Wood was possessed of determination and skill, and he continued and now has a fine place, well improved, owns two hundred and forty acres, raises cattle, horses, hogs and diversified crops.

In Walla Walla, in 1891, Mr. Wood married Miss Jennie, daughter of Daniel Priest, a soldier of the Civil war, a pioneer in Ohio and Michigan, being a native of Indiana, and is now dwelling in Lynn county, Kansas. Mrs. Priest was born in Indiana, had thirteen brothers and sisters. Mrs. Wood was born in Wayne county, Ohio, on June 2, 1861, and has twelve brothers and sisters, nine of whom whom are living. Mr. Wood has the following named brothers and sisters: Clarinda A. Beard, in Walla Walla; Mary E. Maxin, in Oakland, California; George, on the old place in the vicinity of Walla Walla; William, also on the old homestead. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wood, Roy and Edna. Mr. Wood and his wife are devout members of the Methodist church. He is a Democrat and takes part in some of the conventions, but is liberal in his principles. Mr. Wood has been a member of the school board from the first and is always striving for betterment in this line. He advocates better schools and is strongly in favor of raising the money for them.

JOSEPH RAINVILLE. Rainville & Brothers, including Fred, Antoine, Felix, three brothers, and Joseph Rainville, their father, are a firm of well-to-do farmers whose estate of over five hundred acres lies five miles north from Culdesac. This land is leased from the Indians and is a first class grain and stock farm, well handled and productive of abundant returns.

Joseph Rainville was born in the vicinity of Montreal, Canada, on April 2, 1839, being the son of Timothy and Flavio (Louize) Rainville, natives of Montreal. The mother was born in 1820 and died in 1893. The grandfather was a soldier under Napoleon and died in 1856. Joseph worked on the farm with his father until he was twenty-one and then started for himself, spending two years in the home vicinity. 1863 marks the date of his advent to the United States and California was the place selected for settlement. Six years Mr. Rainville devoted to farming and then he took up the carpenter trade in Plumas county. Later he wrought in San Francisco and also in San Jose and in 1879 came to Walla Walla. Mr. Rainville took up land and added by purchase until he possessed eight hundred acres of fine wheat land. In 1886 he went to the Umatilla reservation and remained there until 1894, when a trip was made to Butte, Montana. Soon he was in Alberta, then returned to Missoula and eighteen months later was again in Umatilla. In 1898, Mr. Rainville went to Boston, Massachusetts, where he remained for one and one half years. Then another move was made, Idaho being the objective point, and in 1900 he came to his present place spoken of above.

In 1861, Mr. Rainville married Miss Julia, daughter of Xavia Baulait, the wedding occurring in Canada. Mrs. Rainville has not seen her parents for thirty-six years. She has four brothers and six sisters. Mr. Rainville has three brothers and seven sisters. To Mr. and Mrs. Rainville, there have been born ten children, named as follows, Joseph, in Oregon; Henry, in Montana; Nelson, Peter, and Frank, all in Oregon; Fred, born in San Jose, in 1879, is now one of the firm; Antoine, born in Oregon in 1880, also one of the firm; Elizabeth, wife of Felix Hamel, in Montana; Rosa, wife of Nelson Boyer, in Nez Perces county; Felix, at home. Mr. Rainville and his family are adherents of the Catholic church and in political matters he is allied with the Republicans.

JOSEPH A. THOMPSON. Almost every state in the Union has her representation in the reservation country and this cosmopolitan population is one of the reasons why such progression and prosperity has been brought about here. From Illinois hails the subject of this sketch and in Mercer county, on January 21, 1862, he first saw the light. His parents were Ephraim and Elizabeth (Neeley) Thompson. In the fall of 1865 they all removed to Boone county, Iowa, and as the father was a farmer our subject early experienced the invigorating exercise of the agriculturist while his education was gained meantime from the adjacent public schools. In 1887, Mr. Thompson went to Oakland county, Michigan, and on Jauary 19, he married Miss Minnie E., daughter of Samuel and Mary (Truesdell) Martin, natives of Philadelphia and Oakland county, Michigan, respectively. She was born October 10, 1864. Mr. Martin served as a corporal three and one-half years in the Civil war, being in the Twenty-second Infantry and the Eighth Cavalry of Michigan. He is now a member of the G. A. R. in Detroit, while he and his wife are living a retired life in McComb county, Michigan. On March 6, 1897, Mr. Thompson landed in Juliaetta and on the tenth of the same month he arrived in Nezperce, having made the trip from Juliaetta in snow and rain and mud, with much hardship and attendant labor. He selected his present place, about two miles east from Nezperce and bought the relinquishment from another man. He has since that time been steadily pursuing the worthy path of improvement and in making a fine home. His first crop was twenty-eight bushels per acre but now he has as large yields as any in this section. The farm is supplied with all improvements necessary, a good residence, substantial barn and other outbuildings. Mr. Thompson handles some cattle and does diversified farming. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., while he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs, all in Nezperce. Mr. Thompson is also a member of the M. W. A., being a popular associate in these relations as he is also in general. He is a man of integrity and is of excellent standing among the people of the community.

THOMAS STEPHENSON. The career of this worthy gentleman, especially since he has been in Nez Perces county, shows conclusively what can be done here by taking hold with one's hands and operating with wisdom the resources of the country. Coming here in 1896, with an old wagon and team, ten dollars in cash and a couple of weeks' supply of flour, Mr. Stephenson has wrought with a master hand until now he has, located five miles southeast from Melrose, a beautiful and valuable farm, all tilled in excellent shape, a large and tasty residence, one of the finest orchards in the county, stock of all kinds and all the implements needed in carrying on the farm, being one of the most prosperous and substantial men of this section. Mr. Stephenson raises the cereals, flax and carries his farm on with skill. He is now erecting one of the finest barns of the community.

Thomas Stephenson was born in Cumberland, England, on January 29, 1852, being the son of Joseph and Mary A. (Hornsby) Stephenson, natives of Cumberland, and born in 1829 and 1833, respectively. They are still living in Nez Perces county. The family came to Canada when Thomas was two and one half years of age, settling in the county of Gray. There our subject received his education in the excellent schools of that country and he remained at home until he was twenty-six. At that time, Mr. Stephenson went to do for himself and rented a farm in the neighborhood. Later he took a homestead on the north shore of Lake Huron and for six years he dwelt there. Thence he went to Alberta and spent four years before he decided the country was too cold. Then, in 1896, he came to the Nez Perces country and has since wrought here as stated above, with gratifying results.

In Canada, on August 12, 1878, Mr. Stephenson married Miss Joanna, daughter of John and Frances (Cobbledeck) Williams, natives of England. Mrs. Stephenson was born in Canada, in 1855, and has five brothers and five sisters. Mr. Stephenson has the following brothers and sisters, Emma, Henry, Philas, John, Sarah, Mary, Fannie, and Phurness. The following named children have come to gladden and bless the home, Joseph, John, Frances, Emma, Thomas, Reuben. Frances is married to Mr. John Procunier, of this county. Politically, Mr. Stephenson is independent and reserves for his own choice the man rather than the tenets of the party. Mr. Stephenson has been a member of the school board and believes in good schools and is willing to pay his share towards sustaining such. Mr. Stephenson is well satisfied with this country and speaks very highly in its praise and in turn he is highly spoken of by all who know him.

HARRY D. KINSMAN. This well known and representative business man is now in charge of the Sweetwater warehouse one and one-half miles south from Lapwai. He is a man of stability and has the respect and confidence of all.

Harry D. Kinsman was born in Canada, on December 28, 1864, being the son of Ezekiel and Sophia (Forsyth) Kinsman. The father was born in New Hampshire, in 1809 and died in 1896. His ancestors were in the Revolutionary war and many relatives participated in the Civil war. The mother of our subject was born in Canada, in 1820, and is still living there. Harry was reared in Canada and at the age of fifteen went to Massachusetts. He enjoyed the privilege of a public school education and when twenty-four went to Central America and thence through Mexico to California. Afterwards, he came to Walla Walla and there did a warehouse business for twelve years. Next we see him in Lewiston in the same business for two years and then he assisted to erect the building where he is doing business at the present time. He does a good business for the owners, the property being the Kittenbach Company's warehouse.

On October 10, 1898, at Spokane, Washington, Mr. Kinsman married Miss Annie, daughter of James and Anna (Conway) Williamson, natives of Scotland and New York, respectively. The father was a fruit raiser in California. Mrs. Kinsman was born in Sacramento county, California, and has one sister, Julia, and one brother, James. Mr. Kinsman has the following brothers, Lamont, Robert, George and Frank. To our subject and his wife there has been born one daughter, Julia F. Mr. Kinsman is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Kinsman is a member of the Catholic church. Mr. Kinsman is justice of the peace in Lapwai and he is active in political matters, being a Republican.

GEORGE H. RUDDELL. Thirteen miles southeast from Lewiston is the estate of four hundred acres which is the home place of the subject of this article. It is a valuable farm and is handled with the enterprising skill and assiduity of Mr. Ruddell, which insures him annual dividends of handsome returns in crops and stock. He is an excellent man, a good citizen, an advocate of good government and schools and is popular and stands well.

George H. was born in Chariton county, Missouri, on May 26, 1866, being the son of John D. and Urilla M. (Nichols) Ruddell. The father was a farmer and a leading man in his county. He was county assessor, a Democrat and active for the welfare of the county. He was born in Illinois in 1834 and died in 1876. He had served in the Civil war, being four years under Grant. He enlisted in the Fiftieth Illinois as lieutenant and was promoted to a captaincy. The mother was born in Illinois in 1847, and lives there now. The parents came to Missouri in April, 1866, and George was born the next month. He attended school and worked at home until seventeen and then went to live with his grandparents, Nichols, in Ursa, Adams county, Illinois. Three years were spent there and then he came west. October 15, 1885, was the date when he landed in Lewiston and went to work on a farm for wages, remaining two years and then in company with his brother William rented a farm for three years more. They then bought land on Waha prairie and four years were spent in its culture when they sold out and rented again. He then bought his present place of four hundred acres.

On November 18, 1896, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Ruddell married Miss Edith A., daughter of Isaac and Precilla Mounce, natives respectively of Indiana and Ohio. The father is a pioneer of the state and a farmer. Mrs. Ruddell was born in Iowa in 1875 and has the following named brothers and sisters, Hattie Ruddell, Clara Goodnight, Eben. Smith and Lafayette. Mr. Ruddell has the following named brothers and sisters, James N., John D., William L., Harry L., Mattie A. Lamb. To Mr. and Mrs. Ruddell have been born two children, Lloyd H., five years old; Kennith D., four months of age, deceased. Mr. Ruddell is a member of the K. of P. and M. W. A. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church and are highly respected people and valuable members of society.

JOHN WISSINK, an exemplary and enterprising young farmer residing three miles east from Nezperce, is one of the substantial citizens of the reservation country and deserves to have a position in the history of his county. He was born in the province of Gelderland, Holland, on July 22, 1870, being the son of Bernard and Gerharda (Bongers) Wissink, natives of the same place. There he was educated in the common schools and in 1885 came with his parents on the steamer Weasland, of the Red Star line, to New York, whence they came direct to Lyon county, Minnesota, where the father bought a farm. Later they moved to several different places in the east. On October 17, 1898, Mr. Wissink married Miss Antoinette Van Wychen, whose parents were natives of Holland. She was born in Little Chute, Wisconsin. In 1900 Mr. Wissink came with his wife to Uniontown, Washington, whither his parents had preceded them. The following spring Mr. Wissink came to the reservation and bought the relinquishment of his present place, which is about one hundred acres of grazing land and the balance is excellent for grain and hay. The farm is provided with plenty of running water and is improved with buildings, orchard, fences and so forth. Mr. Wissink handles some stock and does a general farming business. He is thrifty and industrious and has the good will and respect of all who know him. Mr. Wissink and his wife are devout members of the Catholic church in Nezperce and he is always interested in the welfare and progress of the country.

THOMAS G. JOHNSTON. About twelve miles southeast from Lewiston is the fine wheat farm of the subject of this sketch. It consists of one hundred and sixty acres of fertile soil which annually produces fine dividends of golden grain. He has it well improved and has lived here since 1896, the date of his advent to Nez Perces county.

Thomas G. was born in Toronto, Canada, on April 25, 1847, being the son of James and Mary (Graham) Johnston. The father was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1811, and came to Canada in 1830. The mother was born in Enniskillen, Ireland, in 1809, and died December 8, 1868. In his native place our subject was educated and at the age of sixteen started for himself. He learned the blacksmith trade and until 1870 he steadily worked at it in Canada. Then he came to Chicago and thence to Benton Harbor, Michigan, where he wrought at the forge for ten years. The next move was to Grand Forks, North Dakota, where he took up land and went to farming, devoting a portion of his time also to his trade. In 1889, he left that country and located in Douglas county, Oregon. He bought a ranch there and was numbered with the thrifty agriculturists until 1896, the date of his coming to Nez Perces county. He selected the farm where he now lives, purchased it and there he has bestowed his labors since that time with gratifying success.

On November 27, 1872, in Benton Harbor, Michigan, Mr. Johnston married Miss Mary E. Robinson and two children have been the fruit of the union, Frances M., wife of Alexander Stevenson, in this county; William T., at home. Mrs. Johnston was born in Steuben county, New York, in 1845, to Cyrus and Sarah (Porter) Robinson, natives of New York. Her grandfather was killed in the Revolutionary war, and her half brother, S. O. Coddington, her brothers, William and John, and her brother-in-law, Perry Nicholson, were all in the Civil war. She had the following brothers, John, William, deceased, Robert and James. Mr. Johnston is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Johnston takes a proper interest in political matters and is allied with the Republican party.

WILLIAM A. EASTMAN is a man who has demonstrated to all who will see that where there is a will there is a way. He now lives five miles west from Nezperce, where he has a fine farm of one quarter section, well improved, owns considerable stock, does a general farming business and is prospered. In contrast to this it is interesting to note that when Mr. Eastman came to this reservation country, he had sixty cents in his pocket, which was his total cash capital, besides which he owed sixty dollars for a horse recently purchased. He threw up a rough log cabin for his family and covered it with sacks for a shelter, his family consisting of wife and one baby. Then he determined to see what could be done and the excellent showing mentioned above is the result of the labors of himself and his worthy wife.

William A. Eastman was born in Jones county, Iowa, on October 4, 1865, being the son of Daniel and Adelaide (Nottingham) Eastman, natives of Michigan and Illinois, respectively. The father was born in Kalamazoo, in 1840, enlisted in the Civil war but was discharged before service and died in 1868. The mother of our subject was born in 1844 and died on October 9, 1901. Our subject remained at home, assisting in the support of the family and attending school until thirteen. The family, the mother having married again, removed to Republic county, Kansas, and William started for himself there. He was in the implement business for two years in Hardy, Nebraska, and in the spring of 1895 he came west to Moscow and upon the opening of the reservation he selected his present place.

On May 7, 1893, at Republic, Kansas, Mr. Eastman married Miss Mabel, daughter of Oscar and Lelia (Hazelton) Ware, natives of Michigan. The father was a carpenter and a soldier in the Civil war. Mrs. Eastman was born in Michigan in 1872 and graduated from the Kansas normal school and for years devoted herself to teaching. She taught the first school in the district where they live now. She has one brother and six sisters, Walter, Alma McArthur, Minnie Bruce, Essie Fisher, Stella, Lora, Ruth. Mr. Eastman has one sister, Mary, deceased, and three half brothers, Walter, Eli and Arthur. Mr. and Mrs. Eastman have three children, Clarence, Elwyn and Verne H. Mr. Eastman is a member of the W. of W. and I. O. O. F., and he and his wife belong to the Christian church. In politics he is a Democrat and active for general progress. He is a member of the school board and the district is a prosperous one. Mr. Eastman has fine buildings and good improvements on his place. On October 4, 1902, Mr. Eastman purchased eighty acres adjoining the home farm on the north.

JOSEPH A. SCHULTZ. There are few men in the state of Idaho who have made so brilliant and at the same time so substantial a success as has the subject of this sketch, who at the preent time stands as one of the veritable leaders in Nez Perces county in the line of business. He has fully demonstrated his fitness for this position by his unbounded success, his wisdom, good financiering, executive force and keen foresight, all of which enable him to handle in a masterful way the general scope of his business as well as attend to all details.

Joseph A. Schultz was born in Effingham county, Illinois, on February 20, 1872, being the son of August and Mary (Quatman) Schultz. The father was born in Germany and is now sixty years of age, living in Effingham county, Illinois. The mother was born in Ohio, being aged fifty-six, and her parents were natives of Germany. Our subject was reared on a farm, partaking well of the vigorous exercise of that excellent place and receiving from the public schools the beginning of his education, which he finished in the St. Joseph College at Teutopolis, Illinois. Immediately upon leaving school, he took up the work of teaching in Shelby county, and in 1890 he came to Idaho county, Idaho, and taught in Cottonwood and Kewterville for a time and then removed to Uniontown, Washington. Here he embarked in the mercantile business, and for five years he was postmaster. In April, 1900, Mr. Schultz came to Nezperce and in February, 1901, entering into partnership with O. M. Collins, of Uniontown, he opened the Bank of Nezperce.

He started with a capital of ten thousand dollars. He is now organizing the Bank of Nezperce into the First National Bank of Nezperce with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars. The deposits of the institution now aggregate fifty thousand and through the excellent management which conserves the interests of the patrons, and deferential treatment of all, the bank has come to be one of the strongest monied institutions of the northern part of the state. Owing to the fact that Mr. Collins is one of the heaviest real estate holders in Whitman county and in Nez Perces county, and to the excellent financial ability displayed by Mr. Schultz, as well as his large property holdings outside of the bank, it stands on an exceptionally good footing and has the confidence of the monied men and associate banks, as well as of the entire country where it does business. Mr. Schultz has the largest general merchandise establishment in Nezperce. When we consider that Mr. Schultz had no capital when he started life, that he accumulated by his teaching the few hundred dollars that enabled him to embark in the commercial world, that unaided and entirely by his own efforts and wisdom, he has gained the prominent and leading position in the financial world that he now occupies, we then are able to discern the resourcefulness and ability of the man. Socially, he is a man of unsullied reputation, genial and affable and popular, while in the political world, he takes the part of an intelligent citizen, but never aspires for public preferment. He is a Democrat and has attended the conventions of the county and state. He was mayor of Uniontown and also has held the same position at the hands of his fellows in Nezperce.

On February 11, 1899, in Effingham county, Illinois, Mr. Schultz married Miss Mary G., daughter of Doctor Henry and Caroline (Waschford) Eversman, natives of Illinois, but their ancestors were natives of Germany. The ceremony making this happy couple husband and wife was performed by Father Lambert. To Mr. and Mrs. Schultz there have been born two children, Frederick J. and Henry J. Mrs. Schultz is a graduate of the Convent of Immaculate Conception, at Oldenburg, Indiana. She has one brother, Henry, and two sisters, Louisa, wife of William H.

JOSEPH A. SCHULTZ.

WILSON BOWLBY.

THOMAS M. MOCKLER.

MARTIN B. MALMOE.

Engbring, and Lizzie, all in Illinois. Mr. Schultz has five brothers, August, Frank H., John, Lawrence and Ben. Mr. and Mrs. Schultz are devout members of the Catholic church and they are valuable members of society, being secure in the esteem and good will of all who know them and they have hosts of friends.

WILSON BOWLBY. Among the pleasant and truly successful men in Nezperce, we should mention Mr. Bowlby, whose genial manner and good business ability and public spirit have placed in a prominent and popular position. He is the owner and operator of a fine drug store in Nezperce and is a leader in his line.

Wilson Bowlby was born in Oregon, on the July 7, 1867, being the son of Theodore F. and Sophia A. (Adams) Bowlby. The father was a native of Indiana and crossed the plains with ox teams with his father, a physician seeking his health in the west. The family settled near Forest Grove and took land and the doctor opened a drug store in the town. Our subject was reared on the farms adjoining this town, gained his schooling there and learned the drug business from his grandfather. His grandfather was speaker of the territorial senate for seven years and a prominent man there. The mother of Wilson was a native of Ohio, crossed the plains with her parents in an early day and was married to Mr. Bowlby in Vancouver, Washington. In addition to the college course in the university at Forest Grove, Wilson studied denistry for three years and later bought the drug store of his grandfather. This was in 1887 and that was the arena of his labors until August, 1896, when he came to the reservation, bought a relinquishment, and then practiced denistry in Nezperce for two years. The farm is near town and is still the family home. Then Mr. Bowlby bought the drug business of Eitzen & Towell, the pioneer drug store of the town, and building a commodious structure for the business, Mr. Bowlby has continued it since with ever increasing patronage.

Mr. Bowlby is popularly affiliated in fraternal circles, being a member of the I. O. O. F., Morning Star, No. 56. of the K. of P., in Forest Grove; of the W. W., in Nezperce, while he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. Politically, Mr. Bowlby is a staunch Republican and is always interested in any movements that are for the benefit of the county or town.

On May 4, 1891, Mr. Bowlby married Miss Bertha E., daughter of Rev. J. W. and Sarah H. (Richie) Spangler, the wedding ceremony occurring in Hillsboro, Oregon. Mrs. Bowlby came to Oregon in 1882 with her parents. The father is a Methodist preacher located in Latah, Washington, while his wife was state organizer for the W. C. T. U. of Oregon. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowlby, namely, Helen M., Ethel M. and Bert W. Mr. Bowlby has five brothers and three sisters, Charles H., at Hillsboro, Oregon; Theodore A., in Tilamook creamery; Randolph, Fred and George, all on dairy ranches and in partnership with Charles, and their mother resides with them; Emma M., wife of William Pitman, in Hillsboro, Oregon; Lois and Stella, living with their mother. Mrs. Bowlby has two brothers, James W., superintendent of Bradstreets agency in Seattle; Walter W., at Latah, Washington.

THOMAS M. MOCKLER. This gentleman is the senior member of the well known and leading firm of hardware merchants that bears his name and owning to his keen business ability and energy, he has won a success that is exceedingly gratifying, while his property holdings in various parts of the country amount to vast estates of great value.

Thomas M. Mockler was born in Nova Scotia on March 23, 1867, being the son of Richard and Katherine (Brophy) Mockler. His father was a native of Ireland and came to Nova Scotia with his parents when four years old. He died in that country on February 9, 1888, aged sixty-four. The mother of our subject was born in New Brunswick; her parents were natives of Ireland, later came from New Brunswick to Nova Scotia and live there now. Thomas M. was raised in that country and received his educational discipline in the district schools. In 1882, he went to Sutter county, California, and spent four years with his uncle on a farm. Then a move was made to Lincoln county and a homestead taken by Mr. Mockler. He settled to steady business with a will and the result was, that inside of three years he had purchased and paid for three and one-fourth sections of land adjoining his homestead, of which he has sold all but one section. He was a dealer in stock and his excellent judgment and business tact won for him this mammoth domain. At the opening of the reservation, Mr. Mockler came hither and purchased about three-fourths of a section of land in various places in this county and now he handles it to the cereals. In August, 1896, Mr. Mockler embarked in the hardware business and took as partner his cousin, John H. Mockler and since that time they have operated the largest establishment of the kind on the reservation. Since starting, they have not handled less than eleven car loads of farm goods each year exclusive of cutting machinery. They have an establishment stocked in a most complete manner and by strict adherence to business principles and fair dealing with deferential treatment of patrons, the firm has gained a trade that extends for many miles in every direction.

Mr. Mockler has brothers and sisters named as follows: John, in Nova Scotia; James, at Stillwater, Minnesota; William, in Alaska; Frank, handling a coal and ice business in South Omaha, Nebraska; Annie, wife of John Doe, in Omaha; Mary, wife of Horace Thissell, in Clinton, Massachusetts; Sarah, wife of Herman Morris; Kate, single, living in Nova Scotia; Ida, wife of Edward Chissel, in Omaha; Emma, single, also living in Nova Scotia. Mr. Mockler has never left the ranks of the bachelors for the trying seas of matrimony. He is a man of integrity, ability and public spirit and is always forward in any movement that will advance the interests of the town or build up the county. Mr. Mockler has won many friends and his manifested wisdom, stability, and strong personality have called forth the admiration and respect of all.

MARTIN B. MALMOE. To men who have labored to open the country and who have continued in the noble work of improvement and building it up the reward of prosperity and affluence is due, which is now being felt in the reservation country and as a leader in the lines mentioned we are to place the subject of this sketch.

Martin B. Malmoe was born in central Norway, on February 10, 1860, being the son of Michael and Anna Malmoe, natives of the same place. The family came from Trondhjen to Quebec, when Martin was six years old, being five weeks on the ship. Thence they went to Montreal, Chicago and finally to Red Wing, Minnesota. Our subject was the oldest of six children and grew up on a farm, acquiring his education from the public schools. In 1885, he came to Cheney, Washington, and took up farming. In the spring of 1895, he came to Latah and on November 18, of the same year, he located his present place about three miles northeast from Nesperce. Being one of the very first, he secured a choice piece of land and the improvements since have been equal to the fertility of the soil. He hauled his first lumber from the mountains twenty-five miles away. Mud and snow and rain were to be contended with and all the hardships of the pioneer beset him around. Of his first crop, he took twenty sacks to Lewiston to mill but got there with only nine and nine days were consumed in the trip, although the distance was but fifty-five miles. Mr. Malmoe's house stands by the famous Lolo trail and he erected the first lumber house in the locality. In 1901, Mr. Malmoe bought one hundred and sixty acres more and the entire estate is in a high state of cultivation. He has labored with great wisdom and thrift and the result is the gratifying prosperity that is evident on every hand.

On November 29, 1894, Mr. Malmoe married Miss Daisy B., daughter of Marion M. and Elizabeth Nobles, who crossed the plains with ox teams in an early day to Mendocino county, California, where they now reside. Mrs. Malmoe was taken by her uncle, A. H. Noble, seven months after birth, which occurred on September 5, 1877. She was one of twelve children and came to Latah with her uncle in 1883. Mr. Noble now lives on the reservation. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Malmoe, Jesse A., Orin A., Hazel I., Roy E. and Daisy B. Mr. Malmoe went fifteen miles to get a machine to thresh his first crop and he still has a few sacks of this wheat, which is hard No. 1. He raises some fine Percheron horses, having a first class stallion and some breeding mares. Mr. Malmoe is a member of the Masonic order and of the M. W. A. in Nezperce and he stands well in the community, being a man of integrity and worth.

ISAAC S. BILLOW lives one mile north and three and one-half miles east from Nezperce upon a farm which he took from the wild country and has made one of the choice places of this community. He was born in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, on October 24, 1845, being the son of Martin and Elizabeth (Kahney) Billow, natives of Perry county, Pennsylvania. When Isaac was five years old, the family came to Illinois and later settled in La Salle county. There he grew to manhood and received a common schooling. In the spring of 1864 he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He belonged to the rear guards and spent most of his time in Kentucky and on the Mississippi and participated in numerous skirmishes. After six months of this service he was honorably discharged and returned to La Salle county. On February 20, 1867, Mr. Billow married Miss Sylvia A., daughter of William D. and Margaret (Worsley) McDonald, natives of New York and Kentucky, respectively. They came to La Salle county, where Mrs. Billow was born on January 28, 1847. Her grandfather, Dr. Malcolm McDonald, was a prominent surgeon in the war of 1812. In 1870 Mr. Billow and his wife came to Carroll county, Missouri, and took up farming and stock-raising until 1890, at which time they came west to Palouse, Washington. They farmed in Latah county, near Moscow, until 1896, and then came to their present home, about three miles northeast from Nezperce. The farm is a good one, all fenced and cultivated. A seven-room modern structure adorns the property, good barns and outbuildings are in evidence and the estate presents testimony of being one of the well kept and valuable ones of the county. When Mr. Billow came here he had two cows, four horses and a wagon. Now he is numbered with the most prosperous. Mrs. Billow is a devout member of the Christian church. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Billow: Martha E., wife of George Reinhardt, of Nezperce; Addie W., wife of Hiram Thornburg, of Moscow; William F., near Kamiah; Maud R., wife of Mark Harding, near Nezperce; Charles H., Iona S. and Gladys V., all at home.

THOMAS SULLIVAN. This genial and affable gentleman was postmaster at Slickpoo, a postoffice which received its establishment through his efforts and was named for an Indian family near its location. Mr. Sullivan did a general merchandise business in connection with handling his farm, which is a homestead that he secured from the government and which he has improved in becoming shape since his settlement.

Thomas Sullivan was born in Queenstown, Ireland, on August 11, 1843, being the son of David and Nancy Sullivan, natives of Ireland. The family came to New York when our subject was four years of age, and the father went to sea after locating them and was never heard from since. He is supposed to have been lost at sea. The mother died in 1859. After the loss of the father, Thomas went to live with L. F. Corwin, in New Jersey, and he labored on the farm there and attended school until he was sixteen. Then he went to New York and on April 17, 1861, he enlisted in the Third United States Regular Infantry and served three years. After that he enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-sixth New York Volunteer Infantry and continued in active duty until the close of the war. He was in the Army of the Potomac and served in the Peninsular campaign. At the battle of Gettysburg, he was taken prisoner and kept three months at Belle Island when he was paroled, pending exchange. After the war he was in New York and then went to Illinois. In 1871, he went to Texas and in 1873 returned to New York. In 1888, he came to Moscow and opened a restaurant, doing business there until February, 1894, when a move was made to Lewiston. It was in 1897 that Mr. Sulivan came to his present location, took a homestead and went to tilling the soil. He opened a mercantile establishment, got the post-office established and has done well since that time.

In 1873, at New York, Mr. Sullivan married Miss Annie Quaine, a native of Ireland, who came to this country with her parents in 1859. She has two sisters living. Mr. Sullivan has one sister, Mrs. Ellen Mannle, whose husband was an old soldier. It has been the lot of Mr. and Mrs. Sulivan to mourn the death of all three of their children. In political matters, Mr. Sullivan is a Democrat and active in representing the principles of his party. He and his wife are adherents of the Catholic church. Mr. Sullivan is a member of the G. A. R. and is a good citizen, an upright and highly respected man.

FERDINAND B. PREISINGER. The parents of the subject of this review, Anton and Mary Preisinger, were born in Bavaria, Germany, and came to the United States in 1858. They located in Nicholas county, Minnesota, being among the very first settlers there. In that place on October 6, 1877, Mr. Ferdinand B. Preisinger was born. He grew up in his native place and wrought with his father on the farm. His education was gained from the common schools and finished in the Albany high school. While there he served as apprentice to a carpenter and thoroughly learned the trade. In 1897 he came to Spokane, where he worked at his trade a short time and then came to the reservation country, locating his present place the same year. His land lies about four and one-half miles east from Nezperce and is one of the finest fruit and vegetable farms in the county. Half of the land is fitted for grazing and the balance is the finest soil for fruit and vegetables. Mr. Preisinger has some stock and is improving his place in a becoming manner. He is a member of the Catholic church and also of the Catholic order of Foresters. He is an exemplarly young man, has a first class standing and the good will of all. He is still enjoying the quiet of the celibatarian and seems loath to leave the ranks of the substantial order of bachelors.

THOMAS C. GLASS. This esteemed gentleman is one of the pioneers of Nez Perces county, having lived here since 1879, and during that time has assiduously devoted himself to the raising of stock and general farming at his place, twenty miles southeast from Lewiston.

Thomas C. Glass was born in Gardner, Illinois, on November 3, 1860, being the son of Andrew J. and Lucretia (Williams) Glass, both natives of Ohio. The father was born in 1830 and died in 1898, while the mother died in 1861. While our subject was an infant his mother died, and he was taken by an aunt, Ruth Stinson, to be raised. They resided in Furnessville, Indiana. Six years after this they removed to Michigan and at the age of nineteen the young man determined to try his fortunes in the west, and accordingly came to Nez Perces county, where his father was living. He remained with him for a few years and then in 1882 bought the place that the father resided on and the elder Mr. Glass purchased another farm. Since that time our subject has continued to reside in this place and has also improved and tilled it in a becoming manner. He pays considerable attention to raising stock, having good horses and some fine Hereford cattle. His residence is a good seven-room house, and other buildings proportionate to the use of the estate are in evidence.

On February 25, 1885, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Glass married Miss Mattie Leiberg, and to them two children have been born, Corwin, aged fourteen, and Ralph C., aged seven. Mrs. Glass was born in Iowa in 1861; she has two brothers and one sister, Silas Johnson, Griffith Johnson and Minnie Pangborn. Mr. Glass has the following brothers and sisters: Elizabeth Day, Julia Stevenson and John R. Glass. Mr. Glass is a member of the M. W. A. in Lewiston. He is a Republican, but is not bound to the party, being inclined to be governed by principles and men than by tenets. Mr. Glass is a good man and well respected by all who know him.

GEORGE PAHL. A sturdy son of the Fatherland who has chosen the free institutions of America for his dwelling and who has manifested patriotism and loyalty to the government in a becoming manner, and who is now one of the highly respected and prosperous residents of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, it is quite in compliance with the province of the volume of history to grant him a representation therein.

George Pahl was born in Rendsburg, province of Holstein, Germany, on March 10, 1870, being the son of John and Abel Pahl, also natives of Germany. George attended school from six until fifteen, acquiring a good education. In 1893 he came by steamer to New York, thence direct to Spokane, where he labored on a farm until the spring of 1899, when he came to his present location, about two miles east from Nezperce, here he purchased the relinquishment to his farm. It is one of the choice places in this community and has been well improved by our subject. He is a skillful farmer and is being rewarded for his labors in abundant crops. Mr. Pahl is a member of the W. W., at Nezperce and is also a member of the Lutheran church. He is a progressive and enterprising man of excellent standing and as yet has chosen to remain in the quiet security of the bachelor.

JOHN G. WRIGHT is a veritable leader of pioneers, a man of broad and varied experiences in all lines of the frontiersman, fitted for the stirring career which he has made by excellent physical powers, keen perception, good executive force, and an energetic and indomitable spirit. The best encomium that can be paid to such a man is but to recite the leading items of his experience and achievements, which we will hasten to do.

John G. Wright was born in Livingston county, New York, on February 22, 1834, being the son of John and Jane (Armstrong) Wright, natives of New York. The father was born July 8, 1799, was a pioneer to Boone county, Illinois, in 1836, and died there in 1881, aged eighty-two years. His father, Joseph Wright, was also a pioneer in Illinois. The mother of our subject was born in 1800, and her father, Thomas Armstrong, was one of the earliest pioneers in his section of New York. Our subject came to Illinois with his parents when he was an infant and in Boone county he received his schooling in the winters and labored with his father until seventeen and then went into the battle of life for himself. He assisted to lay out the town site of La Crosse, Wisconsin, and then went to steamboating. He was soon drawing a salary of five hundred dollars per month as captain and pilot, the highest salary paid to any operator on the river. He did those labors for seven years and then went west to Minnesota and Dakota. He was in the cruel Sioux Indian war and in Cottonwood, Brown, and Murray counties, he saw the awful carnage of two-thirds of the settlers being killed by the savages. Mr. Wright was on General Sibley's staff. After that war, Mr. Wright went to Austin, Minnesota, and followed merchandising until 1870, when he removed to Petaluma, California, where he sold jewelry, manufactured hair goods and dealt in fancy goods. Two years later, he was in Napa City, manufacturing pumps. Thence he went to Los Angeles, and there operated a hotel for seven years, and still owns the property. Then he visited Walla Walla, Lewiston, Dayton and Spokane, and in 1881, he was in Seattle. Then we see him in British Columbia at the western terminal of the railroad and in the sawmill business, where he made a good success. He also dealt in real estate and later removed to Pendleton, whence he went to southern California, thence to Rossland, British Columbia, and then to Alaska, with his sons, and there did a thriving business in an eating house. In 1898, Mr. Wright came from Alaska to Idaho and at last settled in Culdesac. He owns an addition to the town site of Orofino. Mr. Wright took a homestead where Culdesac now stands. He saw the advisability of platting the land for a town site and did so. He has labored since that time for the progress and up-building of the town of Culdesac rather than for personal profit and has done a commendable work here. Mr. Wright is now handling a general merchandise establishment and operating a real estate office. He has donated liberally to all institutions, as industries, churches and so forth, calculated to assist the town. Mr. Wright is a public minded and generous man and is universally esteemed and admired by all.

In Wisconsin, in 1852, Mr. Wright was married. He raised three sons, George, in Seattle; Charles, in Los Angeles; Chauncey, in Alaska. Mr. Wright is a Mason, and Chauncey is a member if the Chapter in Seattle. He is an active Republican. There is very much credit due Mr. Wright not only for the worthy labors done by him in the upbuilding and fostering of Culdesac, but also in the achievement accomplished in other places and the sound principles always put forth by him and his untarnished reputation, being a man of broad views and ever in the lead for the advancement of the country and especially the locality of his residence.

LEE LUCAS. In the subject of this article we have a supporter of good schools, good morals, and a laborer for good roads and progress in all lines, and to just such men we owe the marked development and progress of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, which has really been one of the finest examples of transformation from nature's wilds to the abode of civilization in the northwest.

Lee Lucas was born in Fremont county Iowa, on April 22, 1868, being the son of John L. and Lucinda (Keeler) Lucas. The father was born in Green county, Ohio, on April 22, 1819, and is still living in Palouse. He was one of the very first settlers in Fremont county. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana in 1842 and died in 1897, and her parents were also pioneers in Fremont county. Lee grew to the age of fourteen and received his education in the public schools in his native place. Then the father sold out and in 1883, landed in Spokane, and then went to the vicinity of Steptoe Butte and farmed for one year. Then he bought land near Palouse and there he remains. At the age of twenty-three, our subject took up the occupation of his father, rented a farm in the neighborhood and labored there until the opening of the reservation; in April, 1896, he came hither and settled on his present place, about five miles southeast from Melrose. He has followed the diversified plan in handling his farm and has shown excellent results of his labor and skill. Mr. Lucas is highly respected on account of his excellent standing, his integrity, his wisdom and substantiality.

In Whitman county, on November 13, 1892, Mr. Lucas married Miss Sallie K., daughter of W. K. and Susan Lewis, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Lucas has two brothers and four sisters, Volney, John, Minnie, Susie, Jinnett and Nettie. Mr. Lucas has the following brothers and sisters, Henry, Riley, Ezekiel, Elizabeth, Clara, Ruth, Samantha. Four children have come to gladden the household, Ethel, Gay, Phelis and Irene. Mr. Lucas is a member of the W. W. and of the M. W. A., both at Melrose. He and his wife are consistent members of the Church of Christ at Melrose and are liberal in their support of the same. Mr. Lucas is road supervisor and in politics is a stern Republican, always ardent in the support of the principles set forth by that party.

WILLIAM P. GARNER is one of the substantial men whose labors have aided materially in improving the reservation portion of the county of Nez Perces. He is a man of good ability and excellent standing among his neighbors and has achieved a commendable success.

William P. Garner was born in Andrew county, Missouri, on November 21, 1848, being the son of Neri and Rachel (Matticks) Garner, natives of Tennessee and Virginia, respectively. The father was born in 1815 and died in 1884. He was a pioneer in Andrew county, Missouri, settling on the old Platt purchase. The mother was born in 1810 and died in 1879. In 1861 the family removed to Doniphan county, Kansas, where the father went to farming and raising stock on an extensive scale. William was educated there and grew up on the farm, working with his father until he was twenty-seven years of age. The last years he was in partnership with his father. When twenty-seven, he went west to do for himself and continued in that section until 1885, in which year he sold out and came by team to Camas prairie, Idaho, settling west from Hailey. He secured a pre-emption and tilled it until 1889, and then removed to Josephine county, Oregon, which place was the scene of his labors in the agricultural realm until 1895. Then he returned to Idaho county, whence he came in 1897 to his present place three miles northeast from Melrose, which he secured as a homestead. His son, David, took a claim adjoining and they have devoted themselves to improvement and advancement in general farming and raising stock since that time.

In Missouri, on February 4, 1874, Mr. Garner married Miss Mary M., daughter of David and Isabella (Turner) Harness, natives of Virginia and now both dead. Mrs. Garner was born in Buchanan county, Missouri, in 1850, and has three brothers, James A., William T. and David H. Mr. Garner has two sisters, Martha A. Gentry and Nancy C. Harness. To our worthy subject and his estimable wife there have been born five children, David V., in Nez Perces county; Mary I. Leeper, in Nez Perces county; Rachel N. Maxwell, in Idaho county; Leda M. Pell, also in Idaho county; Neri, at home. Mr. Garner has a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, and does a general farming business, having orchard and hogs, cattle and so forth, while his improvements are fine. He is an advocate of good schools and labors for general progress. It is of note that Mr. Garner's mother was the first white woman that settled in Holt county, Missouri.

CALVIN BOYER. This well known gentleman is one of the leading stockmen of Nez Perces county. He has a broad estate of eight hundred acres, twenty-four miles southeast from Lewiston, and handles over two thousand head of sheep and some cattle. He has good improvements, is enterprising in his labors, stands well with his fellows, and is an upright and capable man of integrity and worth.

Calvin Boyer was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, on November 11, 1858, being the son of Martin and Hannah (Keekler) Boyer. The father was a shoemaker, born in 1830, in Adams county also, served in the Civil war and now is passing the riper years of his life in retirement in Lewiston. The mother was born in Pennsylvania in 1835 and is now living in Lewiston. Her mother lived to the great age of ninety years. When fourteen years of age, Calvin went with his parents to Van Buren county, Iowa, and four years later the family went to Ellsworth county, Kansas, and there tilled the soil for three years. Another move was made, this time to Scotland county, Missouri, and there our subject went to work for himself in 1879. In 1884 he removed thence to Ellsworth county again, and in 1887 he came to Idaho. He selected land on Waha prairie in Red Bird flat and there began operations in general farming and stock raising which have culminated so successfully.

On December 21, 1893, Mr. Boyer married Miss Naomi, daughter of Perry and Ann (Teel) Steen. The father is a sheep man in Asotin county, Washington, and was born in Indiana, while the mother was born in Illinois. Mrs. Boyer was born in Walla Walla county, Washington, on January 8, 1871, and she has three brothers and sisters, R. R., Etta, May. Mr. Boyer has the following named brothers and sister, Martin, James, both in this county, Mary M. Dowd. To Mr. and Mrs. Boyer there have been born three children, Laurine Pearl, Richard M., Mildred M. In political matters Mr. Boyer is a Republican and he votes the ticket straight, having ever labored for the principles of his party.

JOHN F. STELLMON. The family residence of Mr. Stellmon, about one mile northeast from Nezperce, is one of the happy and prosperous homes of the reservation country. His broad acres of well tilled land, which produce abundant harvests, have little appearance of the wilderness of the reservation when he came to this place to seek a home. His wisely bestowed industry has transformed the face of nature until it is one of the pleasant and valuable estates of the county.

John F. Stellmon was born in Greene county, Tennessee, on March 21, 1867, being the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Brooks) Stellmon, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. The mother died in Arkansas but the father still lives on the home place there. When John was twelve, his parents took him to Benton county, Arkansas, and there he grew to manhood and finished his education. On February 2, 1891, Mr. Stellmon married Miss Ellen, daughter of Stephen and Mary (White) Graham, natives of Washington county, Arkasas. In 1893 Mr. Stellmon migrated to Latah county, Idaho, and farmed one year near Genesee. In 1894 he came to the reservation near Lapwai and leased land, where he toiled until 1896, when he came to his present place and commenced the labors of making a home, which have culminated so successfully. He has a good house, barn, outbuildings, orchards, and so forth, while he raises abundant crops of the cereals and flax, also handling some stock. Mr. Stellmon had a very scanty allotment of worldly goods when he came to this place but he is now one of the prosperous men of the reservation country. Two children have been born to this worthy couple, Mamie E. and Normal B. Mrs. Stellmon's mother died in Arkansas and her father is now living near Nezperce. Mr. and Mrs. Stellmon had to endure many hardships in common with the other early settlers in this country and they have always manifested a wealth of courage and strength of character that have enabled them to outride the severest storm of adversity and have given them the sure confidence of the people and the good will of all.

JULIUS ELDOR CURTIS was born in Warren county, Pennsylvania, on September 26, 1847, being the son of James and Alzina (Hill) Curtis, natives of the same place. The grandfather of our subject, David Curtis, was a captain in the war of 1812. In 1853, the parents came to Mitchell county, Iowa, with teams and settled while the Indians were thick and treacherous. At the time of the Pikes Peak excitement, Mr. Curtis sold his farm, moved his family to the village of Mitchell Center and went with his oldest son for that mecca. The train turned aside to California and he went with it and mined for two years in Placerville, with indifferent success. Then he returned to Iowa and his son remained, going into the stock business and is now one of the wealthiest stockmen of his section, Modesto, California, his largest interests being at Reedley, Fresno county. Our subject received little opportunity to gain an education, but steady application and personal studiousness gave him a good training. In 1869 the parents went to California, via train, and Julius and his younger brother went via New York and the Isthmus, being twenty-one days on the journey. He was afflicted with typhoid fever during the trip. Having learned the harness trade, he wrought at it in California but as his health was poor there and he failed to recuperate it in the hot baths, he came in 1879 to Douglas county, Oregon, and in 1882 came on to Spokane county, Washington. His trouble was rheumatism and by bathing in the waters of Medical lake in this last mentioned county, he was fully cured. Then he wrought at his trade in Cheney with Mr. Walters and later bought a farm and did dairying. He then moved to Colfax and gardened. In the fall of 1899, he came to the reservation and took a homestead five miles north from Russell. This has been improved and is producing abundant fruits and vegetables for his business in Nezperce. Mr. Curtis operates what is known as the Equity fruit store. He sells fruits, vegetables and dairy products, having a fine cold storage plant which enables him to handle his products all seasons of the year. This was opened in July, 1902. Mr. Curtis has a vegetable wagon and runs a barn for the stage, while the express office is in his building. He has built up a good trade and is prosperous and well esteemed by all.

On October 26, 1869, Mr. Curtis married Miss Sarah L., daughter of Alvin and Climena (Washburn) Skinner. The father was a merchant in Maine and died in 1855. The mother came to California in 1869, where she now lives. Mrs. Curtis was born in Corinth, Maine, on October 25, 1850. Eight children have been born to them, Gertrude L., wife of Charles F. Munz, in Maysville, Missouri; Fred M., a farmer in the Big Bend country; Charles C., studying for the ministry in Divinity College in Eugene, Oregon; Mary A., saleslady in Spokane department store; Nellie E., wife of Walter Collison, a school teacher in Garfield, Washington; Grace, died in California; Floyd, died at Cheney; Guy E., at home. Mr. Curtis and his wife and all their children are members of the Christian church. He has always taken an active part in the progress of the country where he has lived and especially has he wrought for the advancement of educational facilities. His children have all been well educated and are all prosperous in the walks of life, which reflects great credit on Mr. and Mrs. Curtis.

ANDREW C. JOHNSON. From the land of Denmark came the subject of this article and since his arrival here he has thoroughly espoused the cause of the patriotic American citizen and is one of the valuable additions to Nez Perces county, being a substantial and thrifty farmer located five miles southeast from Melrose.

Andrew C. Johnson was born on March 23, 1847, and his parents were Christ and Mary (Hanson) Johnson, natives of Denmark, and born in 1818 and 1819, and died in 1894 and 1895, respectively. The father was a soldier in Denmark in 1849-1850. Our subject went to work for himself at the early age of sixteen and wrought in Copenhagen and other points until he was twenty-five, when he determined to see the world and accordingly embarked for Greenland, where he worked in the crockery mines for eighteen months and then came to the United States, landing in Philadelphia, whence he came to Omaha, and then to Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he wrought on the Union Pacific. He fired for three years and then went to San Francisco and shipped on the Pekin as fireman and sailed to China and other places. In 1876 he settled in San Jose and farmed for nine years. Then came a journey to Portland where six years were spent in the service of the O. R. & N., inspecting ties and so forth. Then Mr. Johnson settled near Palouse and farmed for ten years. In the spring of 1896 he came to the reservation and selected his present place, and to the cultivation and improvement of this Mr. Johnson has devoted himself with wisdom and energy. He does a general farming business and also raises stock.

At Walla Walla, in 1884, Mr. Johnson married Miss Margaret, daughter of Anders and Sine Mikkelsen, natives of Denmark, but immigrants to the United States in 1890. Mrs. Johnson was born in Denmark. Mr. Johnson has the following brothers and sisters, Henry and Nels, in the United States; Ann, Christina, Mary, all in Denmark. Five children have been born to this household, Julia, Mary, Christina, Albert, Mabel. Mr. Johnson and his wife are faithful members of the Lutheran church. He is a Republican and is active in the support of those principles, while also he is a staunch supporter of good schools and general advancement.

JAMES LAMBERT. This heavy real-estate holder and prominent man of Nez Perces county lives twenty miles southeast from Lewiston upon his fine estate of seventeen hundred acres of land. This is laid under tribute to produce annually excellent crops of barley and wheat and Mr. Lambert also gives attention to handling stock, although at the present time he has sold many of his herds. He has just now finished a beautiful residence of nine rooms, with all modern improvements and of tasty architectural design. He has all the improvements, as barns, out buildings, corrals, fences, machinery and equipment needed on his large domain and Mr. Lambert is considered one of the most substantial men of the county.

James Lambert was born in Washington county, New York, on April 5, 1848, being the son of Peter Lambert, who was born of Scotch-Irish ancestors, in Ireland, in 1832, and died in 1894. Mr. Lambert lost his mother by death when young, and has but little remembrance of her. He was educated in the common schools and when seventeen stepped forth to encounter the battles of life alone. He went to Chatauqua county, in his state, and worked on a dairy farm until 1878. Then he sold out and came to San Francisco. Thence he went to Oregon, later to Walla Walla and finally came to Lewiston. He purchased a portion of his present estate from the owner and took some from the government. He at once commenced stock raising, handling cattle principally, and to this he devoted such skillful effort that he won the finest success.

On March 29, 1872, Mr. Lambert married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of David Rauch, in Chautauqua county, New York, and to them one son, John J. Lambert, was born. Mrs. Lambert died in 1890.

In 1894, Mr. Lambert married Mary, daughter of Andrew and Esther (Marshall) Sherburn. The father was born in Portland, Maine, in 1830, and the mother was born in Perry county, Indiana, in 1843. Mrs. Lambert was born in Wisconsin, in 1871. Mr. Lambert has one brother, John, who lives in Fredonia, New York, and is judge of the supreme court of that state. Mr. Lambert is an advocate of good schools and has done much for the advancement of the cause of education in this county. He is a Democrat, but is not bound by party lines to bias his judgment in voting for the men whom he believes to be the best and for those principles that are salutary. Mr. Lambert is a man of excellent standing, has gained a success that demonstrates his ability better than words can do, has ever maintained a high sense of his stewardship and is today one of the prominent men of his county.

ORVILLE G. THORNTON. A westerner by birth and so entitled to the legacy of snap, energy, push and progression that imbue the residents of this frontier land, our subject has come no whit behind in manifesting his ability to keep abreast of the times and secure for himself a place both in the financial world and in the confidence and esteem of his fellows.

Orville G. Thornton was born in the vicinity of Salem, Oregon, in 1867, being the son of William E. and Susanna (Chinoweth) Thornton, natives of Missouri and born in 1842 and 1840, respectively. The father is a Baptist minister, also handles stock and came across the plains to Oregon in 1855. The mother crossed the plains in 1853. When Orville was two years old, he was taken with the balance of the family to California, where they remained two years, when a return trip was taken and settlement made near Roseburg, Oregon. Here our subject was educated and the father raised stock and farmed. When eighteen, Orville G. went to do for himself and rode the range for a time and then settled down to the dray business in Palouse, Washington. Then he farmed in Latah county until 1897, the date when he settled on his present place, about two miles northeast from Melrose. He has added to his original quarter eighty acres by purchase and also owns a quarter of land near Lewiston.

In 1896, Mr. Thornton married Miss Josie, daughter of James and Mary Nifond, who reside west of Moscow on a farm. The wedding occurred in Latah county. Mrs. Thornton was born in 1862 and has five brothers and five sisters. Mr. Thornton has the following named brothers and sisters, Samuel G., Ella Ladro, Sarah M. Wiley, Ollie A., Murray and Bertha. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thornton, Anna Pearl and James L. Mr. Thornton is a member of the school board and is active in his efforts to have good schools. He is a Republican and intelligent in the issues of the day. He has sold his homestead and bought land one mile and a half northwest from Melrose. He also sold his farm near Lewiston and bought property in Melrose.

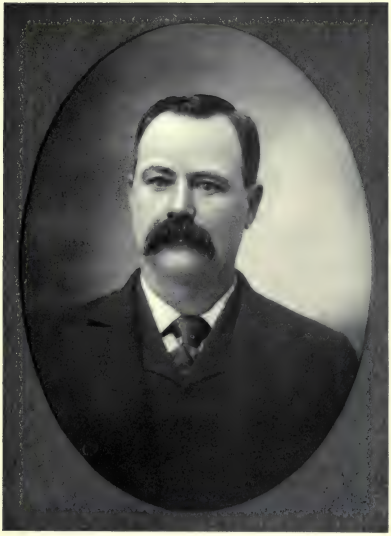
ROBERT L. INGHRAM, deceased. The esteemed pioneer is gratefully remembered in Nez Perces county for he was a good man and manisfested enterprise and wisdom in his walk during his life. He did much to build up Nez Perces county, as he did also for other portions of the west; his death was a loss to all, and sincere mourning among a large circle attended the sad event.

Robert L. Inghram was born in Holton, Maine, on December 16, 1838, being the son of Robert and Martha (Stuart) Inghram. The father was born in England and the mother in Ludlow, Maine, and died in 1892. Robert L. remained at home and assisted his brothers to care for his mother after the father's death, which occurred when this son was young. Upon the breaking out of the war, the older brothers, John and Frank, enlisted, the former giving his life and the latter one limb for his country. Our subject worked on the farm, the mother keeping the children all together, and attended school; when he became of age, he came west and was in Nez Perces county in 1872. He assisted to build Dr. Baker's railroad to Walla Walla, it being the first line into that city, running from Wallula to Walla Walla. After two years he went east and in 1876 came to California; the following year he was in Lewiston, coming thither in the employ of the government. He also lumbered some on the Clearwater and in 1878, he went east sold out and brought his family to Walla Walla in 1880. He took charge of Baker & Company's flume works and in 1882, came to Lewiston. He took up the land where the family now lives, and then went to work on the Northern Pacific. The family held the homestead while he labored; later he came to the farm and then took a pre-emption and also bought land until he left an estate of four hundred and eighty acres. He prospered in his labors but in 1891, he was suddenly taken with La Grippe and although rugged and had never been sick, he succumbed to the disease on April 26, and went hence to the scenes of another world. He had the following brothers and sisters, Amos, deceased; John, died in the army; Frank, Charlie, Mary, Joseph and Samuel.

On July 2, 1862, Mr. Inghram married Miss Eliza, daughter of John and Jane (Stevens) Small. The father was a farmer, born in Miramichi, Canada, and came to the United States when young. The mother was born in Canada, also, but her father was born in England and married in Scotland. Mrs. Ingram's paternal grandfather Small was born in New York and married a Miss Mitchell. Mrs. Ingram was born in Miramichi, Canada, on August 30, 1842, and her brothers and sisters are named as follows, Mary Stuart, Myra Smith, Nancy, Alfreta, all deceased; Lydia Smith, Anna Cochran; George Small and Ellis. To our worthy subject and his estimable wife there were born the following named children, John, Bernard, deceased, Robert, Alfreta and David. Mr. Inghram was a member of the K. of P. He was a Republican and an active worker for the advancement of good principles and while he worked faithfully for his friends, he never accepted preferment for himself. At his death, he left a good property for his wife and children and they have now a good place and a nice band of cattle.



JOHN F. INGHRAM. It is quite in accord with his life and meritorious actions, when we mention that Mr. Ingham is a public spirited man, an advocate of good schools and government and has done his share in producing these worthy ends, while his ability and industry have given him the meed of recompense in a good holding of a fine farm and plenty of stock and other property.

John F. was born in Aroostook county, Maine, on July 1, 1863, being the son of Robert and Eliza (Small) Inghram. The father was a lumberman, born in Ludlow, Maine, on December 16, 1838, and died in Lewiston, Nez Perce county, on April 26, 1891. The mother was born in the same place in 1843 and is still living in this county. Our subject worked at home and attended school, remaining with the family until of age. His father had taken several trips to the Pacific coast and finally in 1880, he brought his family to Walla Walla and two years later thence to Lewiston. He was foreman of a flume company in Walla Walla, and in this country he took land and engaged in farming and raising stock until the time of his death. He had achieved a good success and died beloved by all who knew him. Our subject began doing for himself when he reached his majority. He bought a farm in 1887, and two years later sold it and removed to Lewiston, taking up the dairy business, making a success in this venture. He again bought a farm and later sold it. Upon his father's death, he managed the business of the estate. During this time he purchased his present farm, which his father had contracted for. It is situated nine miles southeast from Lewiston, and consists of three hundred and twenty acres of grain land. He raises wheat and barley, handles stock, raises hogs and breeds fine draft animals. He has some excellent specimens of registered draft horses and is a skillful hand with this stock. He then removed to Mrs. English's farm and lived there three years, settling the business left by her husband on his death. From there he moved to his present place and has made it his home since that time.

On May 15, 1886, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Inghram maried Miss Orpha L., daughter of Josiah and Ruth A. (Bony) English. The father was a farmer and a prominent man in the county, being county assessor and active in political matters. The mother is a native of New York. Mrs. Ingham was born in Illinois, in 1868 and on April 10, 1899, she was called from her happy home and family by death. She left the following children, Ira Reed, Lelia, May,

ROBERT L. INGHRAM.

JOHN F. INGHRAM.

Clarence and Orpha Gertrude. Mr. Ingham has the following named brothers and sisters: Robert, residing near Lewiston, this state; Elphreta, wife of A. Smith, in this county; David B., in the implement business in Lewiston. Mr. Ingham is a member of the W. of W., at Lewiston. He is a Republican in political matters and always active in the support of good men, although he never solicits its personal preferment.

HENRY K. FOUNTAIN. About ten miles southeast from Lewiston one finds the fine estate of the subject of this sketch. It contains six hundred acres of good land, a portion of which was taken by homestead and preemption rights by Mr. Fountain in 1878, and since that time it has been his home. He has a fine dairy of Jersey cows and sells many hundred pounds of butter annually. He raises alfalfa and also wheat and hay, and is one of the skillful agriculturists and dairymen of the county, being industrious, thrifty, wise in management and thorough in execution.

Reverting to the early history of Mr. Fountain, we note that he is a native of the occident, having been born in Linn county, Oregon, on April 26, 1857, being the son of Matthew and Sarah (Hicks) Fountain, natives of Missouri. The father came to Oregon with his family in 1857, being one of the first settlers in Linn county. He was a representative from Jackson county in the state legislature at the time of his death. The mother was born in 1825 and is still living near Athena, Oregon. Henry K. worked on the farm and attended school until he was twenty-one and then set out in life for himself. He came to Idaho and went to farming and raising stock and in 1878, as mentioned above, he settled on his present place. This he has made a comfortable, valuable and attractive estate.

On January 1, 1884, Mr. Fountain married Miss Sarah E., daughter of John and Catherine Denny, natives of county Cork, Ireland, and Indiana, respectively, and born in 1822 and 1838. Mrs. Fountain was born in Lagrande, Oregon, on October 28, 1868, and was educated in the common school. To Mr. and Mrs. Fountain there have been born six children: William M., Volny L., Mabel M., Helen M., Hattie E. and Minnie M. Mr. Fountain has seven brothers and five sisters. Mrs. Fountain has the following of her father's family living in Lewiston: William, Mary V., and Mrs. John Ponting. Mr. Fountain is a member of the I. O. O. F. and also of the W. of W., while his wife belongs to the Christian church.

LOUIE J. HERRES is one of the younger business men of Peck, being now proprietor of a first-class drug store there and well known for his enterprise, integrity, and commendable business qualities of worth and wisdom.

Louie J. Herres was born in Westphalia, Clinton county, Michigan, on May 3, 1877, being the son of Dr. Simon and Emily (Amen) Herres. His father was born in Phillipsburg, Canada, graduated from Ann Arbor and was a practicing physician of note, being a leading contributor to many medical journals. He died in 1885. The mother of our subject was born in Brooklyn, New York, and died in 1880. Our subject being thus bereft of his parents when he was young was taken to raise by his grandfather, at St. Agatha, Canada. He received the beginning of his education there and remained with his grandparents until twelve years of age. He then went to Detroit, Michigan, and entered the employ of J. P. Rheinfrank, a leading druggist of that place. For two years he steadily followed the business and then went home on account of sickness. Soon, however, we find him working for F. H. McCallum, a druggist in New Hamburg, Canada. Later he was with the King Street Drug Company, of Toronto, and then a move was made to Moscow, where he entered the employ of T. G. Reece, then worked for R. Hodgins. After the consolidation of these firms he worked for the company until the opening of the reservation, and in July, 1896, he secured a quarter section of land adjoining the town of Peck. This was a new field and he devoted his energies for a time to the opening up of the ranch and its cultivation. On May 10, 1901, Mr. Herres embarked on the commercial sea for himself and opened the drug store in Peck, where he is now doing a good business with a constantly increasing patronage.

On October 17, 1900, Mr. Herres married Miss Lulu, daughter of Thomas and May (Hall) Kirby, the nuptials occurring at Lewiston. Mr. Kirby is postmaster, real estate dealer and notary public in Peck, and was born in Canada in 1850, while his wife was born in Toronto, Canada. Mrs. Herres is a native of Howard, Kansas, born in 1873. She has one brother, Rollie C., a furniture dealer in Peck. Mr. Herres has one sister, Clara Groom, in London, Canada. In political matters, our subject is a Democrat and is always a leader for better educational facilities and general progress. He is a vice-grand of Peck Lodge No. 97, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Herres is a self-made man in every particular, and as Mark Twain remarks, "He did not stop until the job was well done." He is one of the progressive and substantial young men of the county and is highly respected.

PHILIP JOHNSON. Among the beautiful and valuable estates in the vicinity of Peck, must be mentioned that of the subject of this article, which lies one and one-half miles south from the town. This home place was acquired by Mr. Johnson by homestead right in 1897, and the excellent improvements that have enhanced the natural beauty and value of the farm have all been placed there by his labors. In addition to these, Mr. Johnson has a fine orchard and his place manifests the excellent skill, thrift and industry of the proprietor. Mr. Johnson is a man of sound principles and a patriotic and substantial citizen of influence and good standing. His birth occurred in Illinois, on May 7, 1864, his parents being Joseph and Susan (Heederıck) Johnson, natives of North Carolina. The father was born in 1814 and died in 1894, having been a farmer all his life and was a pioneer to Benton county, Oregon. The mother died in 1882. When Philip was but seven years of age, the family made the weary journey across the plains with ox teams to Benton county, Oregon, where the father took a homestead and became one of the builders of that county. Our subject worked with his father on the farm, studied in the public schools and was one of the home circle until he was seventeen, when he began life for himself. He came to eastern Oregon later and settled near Pendleton. He was in that country in the time of the terrible Snake and Bannock Indian war. It was his lot to be on picket and other duty and he was present when Egan and Big Horn, the leaders of the savages, were executed. Mr. Johnson also lived on John Day creek and on Camas prairie and was always devoting his attention to farming and raising stock. At the opening of the reservation he came, and in 1897 secured the land which was described above. Owing to the far reaching and grand view to be had from his place, the farm has been appropriately named the "Fair View Farm." Mr. Johnson handles stock and does a general farming business. He has plenty of natural spring water on the farm and it is one of the most valuable places in this vicinity.

On December 24, 1881, Mr. Johnson married Miss Mary, daughter of William and Harriette (Bellings) Groom, natives of Missouri. The wedding occurred in Oregon and to this worthy couple there have been born the following children: Ernest E., Arthur N., Nora E., and William R. Mrs. Johnson was born in Willamette valley on November 24, 1865, and has three brothers and two sisters, John, Bird S., Lizzie Froxwell, Hattie Reeves and Fred, all in Oregon except Bird S., who is on the reservation. Mr. Johnson's brothers and sisters are all dead. His brother David was in the Civil war. In political matters, Mr. Johnson holds with the Republicans and is also a laborer for good schools.

JOHN HADFORD. Two and one-half miles southeast from Lookout dwells the subject of this sketch on a farm which he took from the wilderness of the reservation in 1896 and which he has made one of the valuable and fertile places in this section. It is improved with good residence, substantial barn and out buildings and orchard, and all implements necessary for its successful cultivation and to make it return handsome dividends annually.

John Hadford was born in the central part of Sweden on April 17, 1867, being the son of Lars and Catherine Hadford, natives of the same place. The father still lives there, having been born in 1832. But the mother, who was born in 1839, has passed to the world beyond. Our subject grew up on a farm and attended the common schools. In 1887 he came to New York, via Lubeck, Hamburg and Bremen. He was soon in McPherson county, Kansas, and there worked on a farm with his brother Gust. In 1890 they came to Spokane and took up railroading on the Great Northern. He was in the states of Washington and Idaho until 1896, when he came to the reservation and took the land as stated above. With his brothers, Louis and Gust, he had farmed near Spokane but when the panic came he went to the wall with the rest. When Mr. Hadford came to the reservation on account of this panic he had but little financial wealth but was possessed of great courage and determination, which have given him, with his thrift and industry, a fine holding and he is numbered with the prosperous men of his county.

On May 30, 1896, Mr. Hadford married Miss Bertie C., daughter of Hans and Catherine Hedin, natives of Sweden. In 1881 they came to Kansas from the old country and in 1886 journeyed on to Spokane county, Washington. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hadford, Melvin and Arnold, deceased; Archibald and Ethel E. Mr. Hadford's brothers are residents of the reservation and with him they operate a threshing machine, being skillful and energetic men in this line.

CHARLES A. MENGES. As Daniel Boone knew the country of Kentucky and followed the life of the typical pioneer, so has the subject of this article known the northern Rockies and has taken delight in the arduous and trying ways of the mountain hunter, trapper and miner, following this vigorous and alluring life for many years. Mr. Menges is an expert in his line and one of the best artists with the rifle and rope in this part of the country, while he is a man of integrity and sound principles.

Charles A. Menges was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on August 21, 1861, being the son of Charles and Harriet (Montgomery) Menges. His father was born in Germany, on April 15, 1825, and came to America in 1849. He was a soldier in the German army, a prominent Odd Fellow in Iowa, and a leading citizen of Des Moines and heavy property owner there, while he occupied the position of chief of police of Des Moines for many years. The mother of our subject was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1836, and died in 1868. She was of German descent. Our subject left the parental roof at the early age of fifteen and made his way to Colorado, where he operated a steam engine in a saw mill near Manitou, with his brother-in-law, C. M. Elrick for three years. Then he made a move to the vicinity of Missoula, Montana, and prospected there and in the Coeur d'Alene country for ten years. During this time and afterward, Mr. Menges was engaged in trapping and hunting also, and was very successful. He also caught game, as mountain lions, cougars, bears, mountain sheep, and so forth, for zoological gardens, and his skill was so great that he had plenty of orders to fill. At the present time, Mr. Menges has a contract for furnishing the Lewis & Clark exposition at Portland with animals. In 1890 Mr. Menges settled to ranching and guiding hunting parties from the east. At the opening of the reservation, he took up land, cultivating the same until July 1, 1902, when he purchased the hotel at Peck and is now devoting his attention to it. He is a first-class and popular host and his patronage is increasing rapidly.

In 1890 Mr. Menges married Miss Elsie A., daughter of Bert Stark and Agnes (Kelley) Mayne. Her father was born in New Hampshire in 1860, being a grandson of General Stark of Revolutionary fame. The Stark family is well known all over New Hampshire. The mother of Mrs. Menges was also born in New Hampshire, being of Irish descent. Mrs. Menges was born in the same state in 1878 and has one half-sister and one half-brother, Pearl Cluff and Nora Cluff. Mr. Menges has one sister, Irena Hoffman, at Lake City, Colorado. To Mr. and Mrs. Menges there have been born four children, Margaret H., Charles M., John H. and Frank R. Our subject is a member of the M. W. A. He established the Stark postoffice in Montana and was postmaster there for years. In political matters, Mr. Menges is a member of the Republican party and is active in the conventions. In 1902 he was elected justice of the peace for Peck precinct. He is always found laboring for good schools, public improvements, and is a man of integrity.

JAMES MARKER was born in Noble county, Indiana, on April 19, 1846, being the son of Jonas and Elizabeth (McClintock) Marker, natives of Somerset county, Pennsylvania. They came to Noble county, being the second family to settle there. The father was the first justice of the peace, the first county commissioner, and the first overseer of the poor in that county. Michael McClintock, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran in the Revolution. In 1850, the the father of our subject died and he remained with his mother until her death, in 1861. His education was obtained from the district school over two miles distant. On October 3, 1864, Mr. Marker enlisted in Company F, Thirtieth Indiana Infantry, under General Thomas. He fought in many places and in the battle of Nashville was in the thickest of the fray and the bullets pattered like hail. His clothes were pierced but he was not wounded. On September 9, 1865, he was honorably discharged, having served faithfully and endured all the hardships incident to a soldier's life. Returning to Noble county, Mr. Marker learned the carpenter trade and there on September 15, 1869, he married Miss Jennie Fulk, a native of Noble county. To them were born five children, James F., deceased; John W., Benjamin O., Charles C., Lucy C., deceased; the three living ones are in Whitley county, Indiana. Mrs. Marker died in Whitley county in 1882. In 1885, Mr. Marker came to Chicago and wrought at his trade there and in Stoney Island in the Nickel Plate car shops. Thence he went to Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, and other places, and in 1888 he came from Denver to Latah. On June 16, 1889, Mr. Marker married Miss Laura, daughter of John and Ellen (Firkins) Dean, natives of Knox county, Illinois. Mrs. Marker was born in Knox county, Illinois, on October 27, 1867. She came across the plains with her parents in a large train in 1872 and distinctly remembers the large herds of buffalo. On one occasion her father was kicked by a horse and lay unconscious for one week, and the mother had all the trying hardships of attending to the duties of travel with the team. They settled in the Grande Ronde valley, then went to Polk county, and in 1878 started to Spokane county, Washington, and encountered many Indian braves on the war path. Mr. Dean settled in Latah and has since lived there. Immediately following his marriage Mr. Marker took a contract of erecting the barns and outbuildings of the county poor farm at Spangle and then returned to Latah, where he built several of the best buildings in the vicinity, and on the eighteenth of November, 1895, he located on the northeast fourth of section twelve, township thirty-three and range one, east, where his home is now. He filed on the fourth day after locating and moved his family on in May, 1896. An inventory shows he had four horses, two cows, a wagon and ten dollars. Seven times he mired down in getting to his claim and four times he did the same hauling four dollars and seventy-five cents worth of lumber to build his first house. Mr. Marker had a rough experience in getting started but he recently proved up and it appears that he had nearly three thousand dollars worth of improvements on the place. He has a fine farm, and this year sold a thousand dollars worth of grain off from eighty-two acres. He has excellent buildings, first class orchard and all improvements needed. Mr. Marker is a member of the A. F. & A. M. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church and are leading people of the community. Seven children have been born to them, Mable Pearl, born February 19, 1890; Wilbur Percy, born November 23, 1891; Lloyd Bernard, born January 14, 1894; Grace Eva, born July 16, 1895; Minnie Ellen, born March 23, 1897; Dewey Beauford, born April 11, 1900, and Spurgeon, born October 19, 1901, and died March 30, 1903. Mr. Marker is an active laborer for general and substantial progress in all lines.

ARTHUR S. STACY. No business man of Lewiston has had better and brighter success for the time he has operated in Lewiston than has the subject of this review. Mr. Stacy is at present manager, director and stockholder of the Lewiston Mercantile Company, one of the strongest institutions of its kind in the state of Idaho. It is practically a creation of Mr. Stacy and issued its first catalogue on June 20, 1889, since which time it has increased from three hundred thousand dollars worth of trade the first year, to five hundred and fifty thousand in 1901. This is due to the business acumen and foresight of its able manager, together with his capable corps of assistants, whom he has gathered around him. The company is widening and broadening and is recognized as one of the large and substantial establishments of the northwest.

Reverting to the personal history of our subject, we note that he was born in San Francisco, on November 18, 1864, being the son of George W. and Emily A. (Granger) Stacy. The father was a merchant, born in Massachusetts, and died in Minnesota in 1869. The mother was born in Illinois and now lives in Minneapolis. The parents removed to New York, when Arthur was an infant, then to Monticello, Minnesota. This was the scene of the early education and training of our subject and at the age of fourteen he entered the general mercantile establishment of T. G. Nealy & Son. He did business behind those counters for twelve years straight, then was offered a partnership interest in the concern. He did not accept however, believing that better things were before him. He sought the west, and finally decided to try Lewiston. Entering the store of Vollmer & Company as bookkeeper, in four years he was manager of the house. In 1899 he severed his connection with this house and organized the concern above described, which is now no longer an experiment, but an established business of very gratifying proportions.

Mr. Stacy married Miss Alice Harwick, in Minnesota, on June 7, 1893. Her parents, A. H. and E. J. Harwick live at Monticello, Minnesota. The father was a native of Michigan and early settled in Minnesota. Mrs. Stacy was born in Paw Paw, Michigan, and there was educated in the high school. She has one brother, Elmer J., with the Lewiston Mercantile Company. Mrs. Stacy is vey proficient on the piano and has been a successful instructor in music for some time. Mr. Stacy has two brothers and one sister, Francis N., George E. and Emma A. To Mr. and Mrs. Stacy there have been born two children, Elmer G., five years of age, and Marjorie, two years old. Mr. Stacy is a member of the Masons, having taken thirty-two degrees. He is allied with the Republicans in politics and manifests both zeal and active interest in this realm. Mrs. Stacy is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Stacy owns real estate in addition to his business interests. It is of note that his ancestors were among the early immigrants to America who settled in Virginia.

JACOB SCHAEFER. Germany has furnished to the United States many of her best citizens, and not a few have found their way to this western country, being a progressive and vigorous race. One worthy member of this pioneer band is named above and is deserving of consideration in the county where he has wrought with such assiduity and display of ability and thrift.

Our subject was born in Germany on November 27, 1867, being the son of John and Magdelena (Postel) Schaefer. The father farmed in Germany, being born in 1843, and now lives in Philadelphia. The mother was born in the Fatherland in 1850. Jacob was educated in the native country and wrought with his father in farm work and in the manufacture of wine until seventeen, and then learned the butcher trade. That occupied him until 1887, when he decided to come to America. Landing in New York, he made his way to Carroll county, Missouri, worked there for ten months and then went to St. Louis, where he operated at his trade. Fourteen months later he was in Portland, Oregon, working at his trade, and five months later he opened in business for himself. He continued in business there until 1896, being very successful, but finally lost it all through complication and litigation with an unworthy partner. He then went to Quigley, Montana, and there worked for wages and in the fall of 1896 came to Lewiston and started anew, with a larger stock of experience. He has been successful here from the start and is now doing a good business, both in butchering and buying and selling cattle. He handles large quantities of stock. In addition to this business, Mr. Schaefer has twenty acres of irrigated land in vineland, which he is setting to grapes and he intends to start a winery in the near future, being assured that the conditions for the successful raising of grapes are as favorable in this place as on the Rhine in Germany.

On January 15, 1891, Mr. Schaefer married Miss Katie, daughter of John and Mary Young, natives of Germany, the father now deceased and the mother living in Vancouver, Washington. The wedding occurred in Vancouver, Washington, and two children have been the fruit of the union, John and Lonis. Mrs. Schaefer was born in Germany in 1872 and has the following brothers, Phillip, Andrew, Peter. Mr. Schaefer has brothers and sisters named below, Lonis, John, Elizabeth, Barbara, the first in Germany holding a good position as civil engineer for the government, while the others are at home. Mr. Schaefer is a member of the M. W. A. His people, as well as himself, were in the German army for a term.

A. C. GAYLORD. A representative business man of Peck, being now engaged in the hardware business, a real pioneer in different regions where he has shown that dauntless spirit which ever characterizes the true frontiersman, a man of integrity and worth and always allied on the side of progress and upbuilding of the country, we are constrained to grant to the subject of this article a representation in the history of Nez Perces county.

A. C. Gaylord was born in Bradford, Pennsylvania, on January 19, 1845, being the son of Giles and Nancy (Taylor) Gaylord. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1816 and died in 1880. He was a pioneer of Carroll county, Illinois; his parents were pioneers of Bradford, Pennsylvania, and both lived to be one hundred years old. The mother of our subject was born in Bradford, Pennsylvania, in 1818 and still lives with our subject, being aged eighty-four years. Her parents were pioneers of Pennsylvania. When this son was two years old, the family came to Carroll county, Illinois, and there he grew to manhood and received his education. In 1862, though still a lad, he was stirred by the call of patroitism, and enlisted in the Ninety-second Illinois, afterwards going to join the Seventh Cavalry, in which latter he fought until the close of the war. He was under General Thomas a good portion of the time.

Mr. Gaylord was active in the taking of Fort Donelson, in all the conflicts in the raid at Nashville, and in many other struggles, ever conducting himself with the true spirit of bravery and faithfulness of a patriotic soldier and man of courage and intrepidity. At the close of the war he laid aside the weapons of carnage and went to Manning, Iowa, and there took up the livery business. Seven years later, he went to Springfield, Nebraska, engaging himself in the hotel and livery business combined. Soon we see him in the Hot Springs country, South Dakota, where he acquired title to three thousand acres of land and devoted himself to raising stock. He continued steadily at that as well as buying and shipping for seventeen years. It was 1901 that he sold his estates and stock in Dakota and came to Nez Perces county. He bought a farm on Russell ridge and then opened a hardware store in Peck, where he is doing a good business now.

In 1882, while in Dakota, Mr. Gaylord married Miss Mary, daughter of John Bingham, of Illinois. Mrs. Gaylord was born in New York city, in 1863, and has three brothers and two sisters. Mr. Gaylord has three brothers, Orlando, an old soldier, Preston, Joseph. To Mr. and Mrs. Gaylord, one child, Ackie, has been born. Mr. Gaylord is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a Republican, being active in the realm of politics. He is generally an attendant at the conventions and is always on record for good men, while in school matters, Mr. Gaylord labors for better facilities and education of the masses more fully.

ELGEE C. CHASE. The varied experience that Mr. Chase has had in different portions of the United States has satisfied him that the fertile and favored spot of the reservation country is a place worthy to be courted and as a country of resources for the farmer and stockman it is unexcelled. His farm lies four miles southeast from Nezperce and was selected by him about two hours after the country had been thrown open to settlement. It is mostly all good land, is well improved and has yielded to his skillful husbandry rich returns of crops in the years he has been here. He handles diversified farming and keeps enough stock to consume all the productions of the farm.

Elgee C. Chase was born in Columbia county, Wisconsin, on October 5, 1862, being the son of John G. and Eleanor (Walton) Chase, natives of Vermont and Canada, respectively. When Elgee was a child, the family removed to Dodge county, Minnesota, and there he grew to manhood on a farm. In 1884 he went to Potter county, South Dakota, entered a preemption claim, farmed there and traveled over the country until 1890, when he went to Butte, Montana, and engaged in mining. In 1892 he returned to his boyhood home, and in 1893 visited the World's Fair at Chicago. In 1894 Mr. Chase came to Colfax, and soon we see him lumbering on the Clearwater. Then he wrought in Rossland, British Columbia, and at the opening of the reservation, came hither, as stated before. His farm is one of the excellent ones of the section, is well supplied with spring water and is a beautiful and valuable estate.

On December 2, 1897, Mr. Chase married Miss Mary, daughter of Fred E. and Mary (Bolin) Honroth. Mr. Honroth was a native of Germany and came to the United States when a child. At Louisville, Kentucky, he enlisted as first sergeant in Company G, Twenty-eighth Infantry, in April, 1861. He served in General Grant's army and was in numerous severe battles. In the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, he was severely wounded in his shoulder and was discharged on account of disability. His wife was a native of Indiana and in 1891 they came to Pomeroy, Washington, and later to Pierce, where he died in 1894, having never recovered fully from the strain of the war. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chase, Warner E., deceased, Mary E. In the spring of 1900, Mr. Chase had a severe attack of Nome fever and it was ascertained that the only cure was a trip to that region. He went, got one hundred and twenty miles into the interior, suffered about all a man can suffer without perishing, and stuck to it for one and a half years, and then the fever was entirely cured and he returned to his family and farm, a wiser and well cured man. Since then, Nez Perces county has appeared even better than it did before.

EDISON E. HARRIS is one of the well known and representative business men of Peck and his stanch qualities of worth have made him one of the highly respected and substantial men of this section. It is quite fitting that a review of his life form a part of his county's history, having been a man of activity and a promoter of good schools, progress and upbuilding.

E. E. Harris was born in Jamesville, ———, on April 15, 1864, being the son of Jackson and Susan C. (Thayer) Harris. The father was born in Canada in 1836, of Irish extraction, was a pioneer to California and now resides in Oklahoma. The mother was born in New Hampshire in 1838 of English descent; her father was a veteran of the war of 1812 and of the Mexican war, and lived to be eighty-eight years of age. Our subject was taken to Minnesota in 1871 and in 1878 the family went thence to North Dakota, being the first settlers on the Fort Ransom reservation. From this resulted, in 1884, a gold excitement in that section. Edison grew to manhood and received a common school education in this section, and then graduated from the Ottawa University in Kansas. He made a trip to Texas in 1889, seeking a business location and brought back a band of cattle to Nebraska to winter. In 1893 he made the race to the Oklahoma country and secured a claim, where he toiled for four years and then for the benefit of the health of the family, he sold out and removed to the salubrious sections of Nez Perces county. He made settlement at Ahsahka, secured a postoffice, and was appointed postmaster, this position Mr. Harris still holds, handling the office by an assistant. He opened a general merchandise store with M. Means, in that place and two years later removed the stock to Orofino. After this Mr. Harris was engaged as bookkeeper for Fox & Debaum, at Juliaetta, then at Lane and is now in the same position for the McGrew Mercantile house in Peck. Mr. Harris is manager of the concern and does a fine business.

On June 21, 1887, at Lisbon, North Dakota, Mr. Harris married Miss Sarah A., daughter of Thomas and Martha Roach, natives of Canada, where also Mrs. Harris was born. They have two children, Susan and Crystal. Mr. Harris has two brothers and one sister, George R., Jack T., and Esther Whybark, all in Oklahoma. Mr. Harris is a member of the I. O. O. F., having assisted to organize the lodge at Orofino. He is also a member of the liberal Christian church. In politics Mr. Harris is a Republican and is now chairman of this precinct committee. He is active at all the conventions and especially interested and active in promoting good educational facilities. He was the moving spirit in organizing the Ahsahka district and in getting nine months of school each year.

WILLIAM BOLLINGER. This gentleman is a well known and representative business man of Lewiston, being at the present time a proprietor of the Bollinger hotel, one of the popular and established hostelries of Lewiston, where he does a fine business and is well liked by every one.

Mr. Bollinger was born in New Ulm, Minnesota, on September 1, 1868, being the son of Rudolph and Sophia (Ihrig) Bollinger. The father was born in Zurich, Switzerland, on July 23, 1826, came to America when a young man and now lives at Dayton, Washington. The mother was born in the province of Hessen, Germany, on May 7, 1845, and is still living. Her father and mother were also natives of the same province. Our subject was educated in primary studies in New Ulm and at the age of fifteen came with his parents to Dayton, Washington, where the father took a homestead, which he still owns, having added more since that time. William completed his education in Dayton and remained on the farm with his father until becoming of age, went to Dayton and clerked in a grocery store and general merchandise establishment for August Engel. Five years later he went into the butcher business, spending one year, and then came to Lewiston and opened a restaurant with his present partner, John Bell. They operated the Royal for three years, adding meanwhile a grocery store, when the grocery was sold and the restaurant burned down. Being partly insured, they saved a little from the wreck and bought the lots where the hotel now stands and put up the building. The hotel was a popular resort from the first and they are now handling the Scully house as an annex and have built a large addition to their establishment. The house is justly popular because of the skill and affability of Mr. Bollinger in his care of the traveling public.

Our subject has brothers and sisters as follows, Emma, wife of Herman Hessel, in Oregon; George, Fred, Mary, Minnie, all on the farm at home. Mr. Bollinger is happily affiliated with the following different fraternities: the I. O. O. F., the Rebekahs, the Encampment, the K. of P., the Uniform Rank, the D. O. K. K., the W. of W., the Auxiliary Circle, and also with the Sons of Veterans of Dayton, Washington. The father of our subject fought in the Union army in Company C, Fourth Minnesota.

GEORGE W. TANNAHILL. The facetious speaking of a man said, "He is a self-made man and he did not quit until the job was done." Such is surely applicable to the subject of this sketch. He is a self made man, and he has done a good job. He is one of the leading young men of Nez Perces county, having demonstrated his ability, acumen and stirring qualities in his profession, that of the law, wherein he is making a brilliant success, but to gain which he has labored long and faithfully, making the most of all of his opportunities in life.

Mr. Tannahill was born in Selma, Van Buren county, Iowa, on July 2, 1872, being the son of John and Almira (Jones) Tannahill. The father was a carpenter and builder, born in Ohio, in 1843, and died in 1875. His father, Frank Tannahill was a native of Wales and he married Poly A., who was born in Iowa, and died in 1897. The mother of our subject was born in Iowa in 1847 and is living in Chautauqua county, Kansas. The paternal grandfather of our subject was Henry V. Jones, a native of Ohio, whose wife was Hulda Herrington, who died in 1898. George W. lost his father when he was a child of three. The mother married again and the stepfather being very kind to this lad gave him a good education until thirteen years of age, when he desired to do for himself and accordingly went to Indian Territory and rode the range for a Mr. Brown. Two years later we find our subject in school in Kansas and again in Indian Territory, this time working in a saw mill. He then went to school and in 1890 came to Pomeroy, Washington, where he worked on a ranch, then went to Leland, Idaho, and farmed for himself for a couple of years. Then he turned his attention to operating a hardware store in Leland until 1896, when he sold out and removed to Valparaiso, Indiana, and entered the excellent law school of that place. He graduated in due time, having read law considerable before, and on September 14, 1897, he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the state of Indiana. He went to his old home and made a visit, then came on to Lewiston, where he has been practicing since that time. He has secured a good practice and is one of the reliable and capable members of the bar, having distinguished himself on many occasions, where he has done telling work. Mr. Tannahill is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the K. of P., and the Eastern Star, having taken many degrees in the first order named. In political matters, he is a stanch Democrat, faithful to the principles of Jeffersonian statesmanship and is active in that realm. He is interested in the mercantile business with his brother, at Ilo, Idaho. Mr. Tannahill has two brothers, Samuel O., in mercantile business at Ilo; John L., in stock business in Indian Territory. We wish also to record that the father of our subject was a faithful soldier for the Union in the Civil war.

ROBERT L. PENNELL. The young men who have made and are making a fine success in the business world of Nez Perces county are a prominent class of the population and as a distinguished individual of this number, we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name heads this paragraph. He is a native of Chautauqua county, Kansas, born on October 13, 1876, the son of Samuel W. and Almira (Jones) Pennell. The father was born in North Carolina in 1848, and is now a cattleman and farmer in Kansas. He was a soldier in the southern army and his father was a native Virginian, while his mother came from German stock. The mother of our subject was born in Iowa, in 1850, and is still living at the home place in Kansas. Her parents, H. V. and Hulda Jones, were natives of Iowa, also. Our subject attended the common schools and worked with his father until he had arrived at the age of twenty and then he went to Valparaiso, Indiana, where he attended the state normal school. Graduating in 1898, he went to Chicago and accepted a position in a wholesale grocery house, after which he returned home. It was May, 1899, that he came to Lewiston, Idaho, and took up the business of the hardware and furniture merchant. He has won a good success in this line and is one of the well established business men of the city, having a profitable and extensive patronage. Mr. Pennell has brothers and sisters as follows, Charles W., Maude, Mollie, Grover Frank and Jennie. He has also the following named half brothers, S. O. Tannahill, George W., and John. Mr. Pennell is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is interested in fraternal insurance. In politics, he is allied with the Democrats and is an active and potent factor in the labors of the party in his county. The grandfather of Mr. Pennell, H. V. Jones, was one of the sturdy pioneers of the western plains.

On June 26, 1902, Mr. Pennell was married in Spokane, Washington, to Miss Edna Hilton, a native of California. Her parents were early settlers of Oregon and at present her father is a merchant at Leland, Idaho.

EARL E. FAIRLEY. Our subject is one of the younger men whose energy and stirring qualities have added life to the business development of Nez Perces reservation country and at the present time he is operating successfully the only livery and feed stable in Peck. He is industrious, enterprising and capable, and stands first class with all the community.

Earl E. Fairley was born in Cherokee county, Kansas, on January 7, 1880, being the son of Edward H. and Martha (Sailing) Fairley, natives of Iowa and born in 1848 and 1850, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Douglas county, Washington, also in the reservation section of Nez Perces county, while his parents were pioneers in Iowa. Our subject went with the family from Kansas in 1884, to California, thence to Oregon, and finally they settled in Douglas county, Washington, where the father took up stock raising. There Earl grew to young manhood and received his educational training. When the reservation opened, the father came hither and took land, the relinquishment of which he purchased, adjoining the town of Peck. Earl worked with his father until 1899, when he opened his present business in Peck, a first class livery and feed barn. Since that time he has devoted his talent and energy to building up his business and has gained a fine patronage.

On May 21, 1902, Mr. Fairley married Miss Helen A. Parks, her father, Miles Parks, being a saw mill man of the Potlatch country. Mrs. Fairley was born in Canada in 1880 and has three brothers and one sister, Ford and Monroe, in the Potlatch country, Florence and Raymond at home. Mr. Fairley has one brother, Oliver, living in Peck. Mr. Fairley is a member of the M. W. A., Peck Camp, No. 7144. In political matters he is allied with the Democrats and is constable of this precinct. Mr. Fairley is a man of promise and has already gained a very enviable prestige. Mrs. Fairley is a teacher of standing and also is considerably interested in writing, having written a number of meritorious articles.

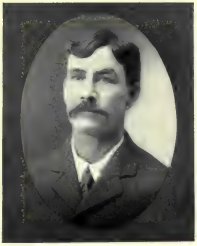
HON. FRANK B. WILLIS. It is indeed a pleasure to incorporate in this volume a review of the career of this esteemed and popular gentleman, who has been prominent alike in his county, Nez Perces, as in Custer, his former county, and in the entire state of Idaho, as well, having filled responsible offices and having always manifested a becoming sagacity and enterprise in all his ways, both public and private business.

Mr. Willis was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, on October 10, 1845, being the son of John F. Willis, a native of New Hampshire, born in 1785 and died in 1855, and a pioneer of northern New York. The mother of our subject was a member of the Whitney family of New York, where she was born and died in 1848. When ten years old, Frank B. was left an orphan, but remained at the old home, a part of the time being spent at the St. Lawrence Academy and at Eastman's College at Poughkeepsie, New York. When nineteen, Frank B. came to Red Wing, Minnesota, where a half brother lived, and there he clerked in a dry goods store for eighteen months. Immediately after the Sioux war, in 1866, he crossed the plains from Abercrombie with an ox train. He landed in Montana, and the first sight that met his eye was three men dangling from the limb of a tree. Such a thing expresses the times of that then, new, rough and ready country. Our subject worked in the vicinity of Helena, for two years, then came to East Bannock, Montana, and mined. In 1870 he went to Salmon

City, Idaho, and mined there until 1878. Then he went to Challis and opened a livery stable. Next we see him assessor of Custer county, being the first elected incumbent of that office which he held for five successive terms. He was also elected grand master of the I. O. O. F., for the jurisdiction of Idaho, and he has held some of the highest offices in this order. In 1893 and 1894 he was representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Atlantic City and Dallas, Texas. In 1891, having been active and prominent in politics for years previous Mr. Willis was elected lieutenant governor of the state of Idaho, acting in conjunction with Gov. W. J. McConnell. Subsequent to this service, he sold his interests in Custer county and repaired to Pocatello and engaged in the drug business there. Six years were spent at this and then he sold out and came to Lewiston, where he bought the Aune interest in the furniture stock of Aune & McGilvory. He sold out that stock and in 1900 opened the Lewiston Furniture and Undertaking Company, where he is doing a good business at this time.

The marriage of Mr. Willis and Miss Anna O. Diehl, of Salt Lake City, was solemnized in 1887; two years later Mrs. Willis died, leaving one child, who died at the age of six. In 1892 Mr. Willis married Mrs. Della B. Burns, widow of Judge James Burns, of Custer county, Idaho. She was born in southern Ohio, came west and was a teacher in Nebraska and Iowa. Mr. Willis has but one living brother, Charles B., in Willisville, New York, the old home. Mr. Willis is a member of the Artisans and is one of the highest in the I. O. O. F. He has always been a Republican, and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He is prominent in the councils of his party and has always been active in it. In addition to the fine business that Mr. Willis is doing in Lewiston, he owns property in Pocatello and in Custer county, Idaho.

JAMES WILLIAM WHITCOMB. The subject of this review is one of the well known and leading citizens of Nez Perces county, having been one of the active participants in improvement and advancement in its limits for a number of years. He is at the present time owner of a fine farm of one-half section in Tammy hollow where he also rents twelve hundred acres of grain land and operates with his own, being thus one of the largest farmers of the entire county. He has his estate improved in an up-to-date manner, and has the best of all kinds of machinery for its cultivation. Good buildings of all kinds needed are in evidence and in addition, Mr. Whitcomb has a fine eight room house and a large barn in Lewiston, corner of Eighth street and Eighth avenue, where he resides during the school season.



James W. Whitcomb was born in Adams county, Illinois, on March 28, 1859, being the son of Emory Stratton and Rhoda (Beatty) Whitcomb. The father was born in 1819, at West Swanzy, Maine, and came as an early pioneer to Illinois, where he was married, his wife being a native of Illinois. He was a wool carder and a miller and wrought at his trades in Illinois. In the spring of 1880, Mr. Whitcomb came to Walla Walla, leaving the parental roof and the old homestead of Illinois. One year later he was in Nez Perces county and there took government land which he still owns. Steadily and constantly has Mr. Whitcomb wrought in the goodly enterprise of producing the fruits of the field and building up the county and is deserving of great credit for his worthy labors.

On November 12, 1885, Mr. Whitcomb married Miss Sallie, daughter of James R. and Mary C. (Ruddell) Nelson, early pioneers of Nez Perces county. Six children have been born to this happy union, as follows, Marvin R., Mamie A., Homer E., Delia M., Lee V., Joseph M. Mr. Whitcomb is a member of the M. W. A., of Lewiston. Several years since, his parents came from Illinois and the father died here in September, 1899, but the mother died in August, 1889. Mrs. Whitcomb's father is living in this county but her mother died on November 17, 1898. Mr. Whitcomb is one of the substantial and reliable men of the county and has been very zealous and active in the cause of education and general progress. He and his estimable wife are worthy members of society and stand in high regard in the community.

WILLIAM A. TESTERMAN is a true frontiersman and in many ways and districts he has shown forth the proof of this. He was born in Newton county, Missouri, on August 6, 1851, being the son of Harvey and Nancy (Eads) Testerman, natives of Tennessee, whence they came to Newton county, Missouri. The father died in 1853 and our subject was brought up with his mother and stepfather, Perrin Pay, with whom he came to Fredonia, Wilson county, Kansas. In 1872 he went to Sherman, Texas, then on to western Texas where he was a cowboy for years. The Comanches were hostile at that time and as he was a member of the Texas Rangers, he had many skirmishes with the redskins, but was never wounded, although he has seen many killed by their deadly arrows. Mr. Testerman was with the noted scout, Jack Stillwell, and had much frontier experience. His health failed and, alone on horseback, he made the trip to San Juan, Colorado, encountering hostile Indians and much hardship. He was without food for three days and laid out at night. He mined in Colorado and also had a hay ranch, and in 1878 left that country for Goldendale, Washington. He bought some horses there and in 1879 drove them to Wyoming. On May 8, 1881, Mr. Testerman married Miss Annie B., daughter of Ephraim and Sarah J. McFarland. Mr. and Mrs. McFarland came from the east to Linn county, Oregon, in pioneer days and there Mrs. Testerman was born. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Testerman took another trip with horses to the east, this time taking his wife with him. They had a fine time, hunting deer, birds, antelope, and catching fish. this delightful trip, Mr. Testerman settled in Gilliam county, Oregon, and secured twelve hundred acres of fine land. He did well raising wheat and the year of the panic had fifteen thousand bushels, which he hauled twenty-five miles and sold for nineteen cents per bushel. This strain ruined him financially and he was forced to come to the reservation with borrowed money. He rented land from the Indians in the vicinity of Lapwai, and in 1899 he bought his present place of one-half section from the state, it being school land. His estate is located four and one-half miles east from Nezperce. The farm is in a high state of cultivation and Mr. Testerman is one of the heavy property owners of this section. He has a fine residence, excellent barn, and all outbuildings and improvements that are needed on the farm. Mr. Testerman rents one hundred and twenty acres of Indian land near by and does a general farming business and also raises stock. He own a share in the tramway to Kamiah. Eight children have been born to this happy couple, Charles A., James F., Annie B., William M., Ada C., Ida E., Harvey E. and Robert L. Mr. Testerman has always been an intrepid and skillful frontiersman and although much in the midst of rough men, he has never allowed himself to be intemperate or immoral and is the possessor of an unsullied reputation.

GEORGE W. UNDERWOOD. This esteemed gentleman is one of the first of that worthy band of pioneers who came into this country when it was wild and inhabited only by savages, and here he has done excellent labor for the opening up of the resources at hand, the development of the country, the advancement of good government, and the establishment of free institutions of civilization.

George W. Underwood was born in Middlesex, Yates county, New York, on October 9, 1839, being the son of Adams and Mahala (Aldrich) Underwood. The father was a farmer and was born on January 7, 1803, in Vermont and died in 1843. He was a highly educated man and had taught school for nineteen winters in one place. The mother was born in New York, on May 18, 1804, and died in August, 1885, in Middlesex, New York. Our subject remained at home after the death of his father, laboring with an older brother and attending school. Before he became of age, he went west to Michigan and Illinois and one year later returned to his home. He had learned the wagon and carriage maker's trade and at that time worked for a carriage maker. It was in 1860 that he came west via New York and Panama, to San Francisco and thence to Douglas county, Oregon. The next spring he came to Walla Walla and thence, in 1861, to Lewiston. He went into the mines and worked summers with William Stevenson, his partner. They did carpenter work thus until 1873, and then located on his present place, twenty miles southeast from Lewiston, and with Mr. Stevenson went into the stock business. Before this Mr. Underwood had worked some as wagon and plow maker at the Indian department at the Lapwai agency.

In July, 1883, Mr. Underwood married Tillie (Giles) Yane, daughter of Shovel and Caroline (Short) Giles, natives of New York, and born respectively in 1835 and 1844. The father lives in Oregon and the mother is dead. Mrs. Underwood was born in New York in 1858 and has two brothers, James and William. Mr. Underwood has one brother and one sister, Adams, and Lucy J. Adams, both in New York. They have one child, Ora, daughter of Mrs. Underwood by a former marriage. Mr. Underwood is a member of the blue lodge, the chapter, and commandery of the Masonic order. He is a charter member of the Nez Perces Lodge at Lewiston, and he is also a member of the Pioneers' Association of this county. Mr. Underwood cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860 and has voted for the Republican candidates ever since. Mr. Underwood is still in the stock business and is a substantial citizen.

FRED B. SEARS is a native of the occident and in this realm he has spent his entire life, being imbued with the true western spirit and that enterprise and energy which has brought to the front the inland empire country and made the entire Pacific slope one of the great sections of the world. His native place is Carson City, Nevada, and the date of his birth, March 17, 1862. The parents, James D. and Marietta (Camburn) Sears, were natives respectively of New York and Michigan. The father's family is an old and prominent New England house. He went to California in the winter of 1849-50 and did placer mining on the American river. A few years after he went east, married, returned to the coast and now lives in Grand Forks, British Columbia. He possesses considerable property there and is engaged in the real estate business and mining brokerage. The mother of our subject is living with him at present and her mother is still living in Michigan. She comes from an old American family of English descent. Our subject was raised principally in southern California, studied in Inyo county and then returned to Carson City when he was sixteen. His parents went to Washington and he was variously engaged, being in the water business for ten years. Later we see him in Palouse, handling meat. Two years were spent there and he went to Spokane, where he was special police for a time after the fire and in January, 1890, he came to Wallace. He was engaged in the meat trade there for a year and in the spring of 1891 Mr. Sears went to Wardner. He conducted a first-class butcher shop and had an excellent trade. Lately he came to Lewiston and opened up a fine shop here. Mr. Sears has four brothers and one sister, Jesse R., Charles F., Frank D., Justin C., Mrs. Nettie E. Barger.

At Palouse, on January 2, 1900, Mr. Sears married Miss Martha E., daughter of Joseph and Nancy Knight. The father was a well known pioneer in the Polouse country, and is now deceased. The mother lives in Palouse. Mrs. Sears has the following brothers and sisters, Henry P., probate judge in Wallace; Everett, Samuel, Mrs. Georgia Coleman, Mrs. Marie Todd. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sears, Carl F., Henry D., Mildred, aged eleven, four and two, respectively. Mr. Sears is a member of the Elks, Coeur d'Alene 331; of the K. of P., Galena No. 12; of the Junior Order of American Mechanics; of the Eagles, Wardner Aerie. Mr. Sears is a true blue Republican and is frequently a delegate to the county conventions, where he is an influential member. Mr. Sears is a thorough western man by both birth and practice, is enterprising, up-to-date and popular and one of the substantial business operators in this entire Coeur d'Alene country.

WILLIAM STEVENSON. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to give to this worthy pioneer and substantial farmer and loyal citizen of Nez Perces county, a representation in his county history, since he has labored for many years for the development of this county, has maintained an unsullied reputation, has always been a good and upright man and is highly esteemed by all to-day.

William Stevenson was born in Prince Edward Island, on September 21, 1841, being the son of Charles and Jane (Orr) Stevenson. The father was a farmer, born in Scotland in 1802 and died in Prince Edward Island in 1889. His ancestors were natives of Scotland and his father was John Stevenson. The mother of our subject was also born in Scotland in 1808, and died in 1860, her parents being Robert and Jane Orr. William remained with his parents until of age and then started for himself, having received his education from the schools of his native place. He went to New York and thence via Panama to San Francisco, arriving there in 1863. He labored on a farm for a time, then went to Puget Sound where he worked in the woods until 1865. One year was spent in Canyon City, Oregon, then and afterwards, he went to Montana and thence to Lewiston. It was 1866 that he landed in this county. He worked in the mines in the summer and wintered in Lewiston. In 1873 he took up his present place, twenty miles southeast from Lewiston, where he has remained since, giving his attention to general farming and raising stock. He has four hundred acres of land and his stock consists of horses and cattle.

On June 14, 1882, Mr. Stevenson married Miss Julia, daughter of A. J. Glass, who was born in Ohio in 1830, and died in 1898. This wedding occurred in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Stevenson was born in Illinois in 1857. Her brothers, John R. and Thomas C., live in Nez Perces county, and her sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Day, resides at Douglas island, Alaska. Mr. Stevenson has brother and sisters named below, Robert, in Prince Edward island; Margaret Wyand, Jane Head, Mary, deceased; Martha McLeod, Agnes, deceased; half brothers, Henry B., and Charles. To Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson there have been born six children, Grace M., Winifred G., Clarence C., Ella B., Mildred R., and Laura May. In political matters, Mr. Stevenson is a staunch Republican and always attends to voting and the interests of his county. He is an ardent and intelligent supporter of good educational facilities and has done much for the schools. Mr. Stevenson is a member of the Pioneer's Association. He is respected by all, is a loyal friend and a kind neighbor and is one of the substantial men of his section.

WILLIAM E. RATCLIFFE. It is seldom our opportunity to review the career of a man who has had more experience in the life of the frontiersman and in the hardships of pioneer life than the subject of this article and it is very fitting that an account of his life be embodied in this history of Nez Perces county, inasmuch as he has done a great deal here for the advancement of the county and has always conducted himself in a commendable manner, and is today one of the substantial men of the county.

William E. Ratcliffe was born in Henry county, Indiana, on January 20, 1845, being the son of Isaac and Hulda (Carr) Ratcliffe, natives of Ohio, both being born in 1820; the father dying in 1891 and the mother in 1853. Our subject went with the family to Marshall county, Iowa, when he was thirteen and he remained a dutiful son with the father until he was nineteen, and then he desired to go to the West accordingly he fitted out four teams and joined a train in Omaha that was to make the journey. At Pawnee Springs, the Indians began to manifest their hostilities, threatening to scalp the immigrants and from that time until they landed at their journey's end, the sturdy immigrants would not allow a red skin to show his head in the camp. They fought the entire distance, but were fortunate in not losing a man. When they were camped on the Platte river, a poor unfortunate band of immigrants on the other side, who had seven wagons, were all murdered by the savages. Our subject and his comrades were powerless to do anything to avert the awful catastrophe and the fiendish red men did a thorough work. One man was brought into the camp with nine arrows in his body, but he recovered. The other ten of that hapless train were killed. May 16, 1864, was the date they started and one hundred and twenty days later they stopped in the Grande Ronde valley. A short stop was made at Boise, while enroute. The spring of 1865 Mr. Ratcliffe went to Boise and remained one year. Then he went to Portland, and afterward visited Benton, Lane, Douglas, Linn and Wasco counties. In the last named county he operated a butcher shop for two years. His next move was to Linn and then Marion and Yam Hill counties. Later he went to Portland and afterwards to Salt Lake. From there he went to Lower California through Nevada, taking his family with him and landing in San Barnardino on November 15, 1880. He crossed the Los Vegas desert of sixty miles without water, having his family with him. Two years were spent in Los Angeles county and then by steamer he went to Santa Barbara and bought teams to make his way through the state to Red Bluff, whence he returned to Lane county. The next move was to Davenport, Washington, where he remained eleven years and operated a stock ranch and butcher shop. Then he came to Nez Perces county and his son took up land where the town of Peck now stands.

Mr. Ratcliffe married Sallie A. Bridges, in September, 1867, the wedding occurring in Lane county, Oregon. Her parents, Samuel and Betsey Bridges, were early pioneers to Oregon, 1852 being the date of their immigration. Mrs. Ratcliffe was born in Iowa in 1845 and crossed the plains with her parents in 1852. She died in 1889, leaving four children, Betsey, J., wife of John Horwage in Davenport, Washington; Isaac N., Marion A., Nancy E., wife of J. O. Moore, all in Peck, Idaho.

In 1891, Mrs. Ratcliffe married a second time and in 1900 this lady also passed away. Mr. Ratcliffe has the following brothers and sisters: Mary, Jemima, Louisa, all deceased; Thomas E., in Idaho county. Mr. Ratcliffe is a Quaker and has always followed their faith. He is a Democrat, and while interested in the welfare of the county, is not a politician. He is an advocate of good schools and advancement in all lines and has always labored for this.

JOHN BIELBY. This genial gentleman is proprietor of a nice hotel and a good feed stable in Fletcher, where he has done a thriving business since the opening of the house and on account of his kind care for the welfare and comfort of guests, his wisdom in providing entertainment, and the business-like manner in which he operates his hotel, he is rapidly gaining an increasing patronage and has the reputation of having as fine a place as there is on the reservation for caring for guests.

John Bielby was born in Bridlington, East Riding, Yorkshire, England, on October 30, 1843, being the son of William and Hannah Bielby, natives of the same place. The father was a Methodist preacher and continued his calling until his death. Our subject was the eighth of a family of nine children and was educated in his native place. On May 27, 1865, Mr. Bielby married Miss Elizabeth S. Hodson, who was born in Butterwick, Yorkshire, England, on October 21, 1843. On October 3, 1871, Mr. Bielby started with his wife and three children from Liverpool to Boston, on the steamer Porttrain. They landed finally in Fillmore county, Minnesota and farmed there until 1879, when he removed to Lac Qui Parle county, the same state. In 1892 they went to Alberta, Northwest Territory, where Mr. Bielby operated a dray line for a year and then took the oversight of a coal mine. It was in 1896 that he came to Pullman and the fall of that year, October, he located his lots in Fletcher and erected a dwelling house. Later he put up a good building for a hotel, having commodious office, parlors, kitchen, dining room, bed room, and so forth below and occupied with sleeping rooms above. He does a good business here as well as in his feed stable. Mr. Bielby was one of the very first who located in Fletcher and is one of the leading men of the town. The following named children have been born to Mr. Bielby and his faithful wife: Mary A., wife of J. Nelson, a farmer in Alberta; Sarah E. wife of J. Blades, a butcher in Alberta; Margaret H., wife of E. Dunbar, who operates and owns a large elevator and general merchandise store in Beaver Creek, Rock county, Minnesota; Ellen, wife of R. P. Pettepiece, editor and owner of a Socialist paper in Vancouver, British Columbia; Alice, wife of R. Hutchinson, a miner of Rossland; William, at home.

JOHN H. BLACK. The subject of this review is one of the sturdy men who have made the reservation portion of Nez Perces county one of the best places in the state of Idaho. He is well respected, is a man of ability and erudition and has a wide influence in the affairs of the county.

John H. Black was born in Clark county, Missouri, on January 4, 1860, being the son of Andrew J. and Ann (Burner) Black, natives of Ohio. The father is of Scotch-Irish lineage and now lives near Southwick. The mother died when John H. was a small boy. For twenty years of his life, our subject was in Missouri and during this time he gained his education from the district schools. Then came a trip to the west and settlement was made near Colfax, and one year was spent on a dairy ranch. Then he farmed until 1890, after which he purchased a ranch adjoining Leland. Here he remained until the opening of the reservation, when he took his present place in the vicinity of Gifford. He was in financial straits at that time, but by hard work and taking advantage of the resources of the country, he has come to be well rewarded with the goods of this world. This last year Mr. Black rented his land and is now living in Gifford. He has the following brothers and sisters: Charles E., in Leland; Samuel, at Southwick; Matilda J., wife of John A. Porter, a banker of Luray City, Missouri; Mabel, a school girl in Leland. Mr. Black is a staunch Democrat, active in all questions of interest and a zealous laborer for good schools and roads.

On February 9, 1890, Mr. Black married Miss Mary E., daughter of Matthew and Elizabeth (Luther) Williams, the wedding occurring at Leland. Mr. Williams was born in Virginia and died in 1901, aged seventy. His death resulted from a team running over him. He was a pioneer of Illinois, being one of the first settlers in Gallatin county. Then he went to Pratt county, Kansas, in 1885 and then engaged in stock raising, merchandising and banking. He owned a large hotel and other property. The mother of Mrs. Black was born in Illinois and died at the residence of her son, Rev. Williams, on the reservation, in March, 1900. Mrs. Black was born in Illinois in February, 1873 and has five brothers and three sisters. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Black: Norval A., born May 26, 1895; Ila M., born November 22, 1898, and Norma Irene, born October 20, 1901.

HARDY W. SHELBURN is a prosperous general merchant at Peck, where he does a good business, and owing to his ability and careful attention to business, is steadily gaining a lucrative and increasing patronage. He is a man of good principles, manifests integrity and worth and has gained the respect and confidence of all.

Hardy W. Shelburn was born in Plover, Wisconsin, on October 18, 1866, being the son of Hardy H. and Valeria (Sutton) Shelburn, natives of Missouri, and born, November 14, 1836, and December 22, 1838, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Wisconsin and is now in partnership with his son in the store in Peck. The mother died in August, 1870. Our subject grew up and was educated in his native place and then the family removed to Norman county, Minnesota. On the Red River Valley Journal he learned the printer's trade and labored there for five years, being foreman when he quit. Then he went to braking on the railroad and farmed until 1889, when he came to Spokane. This was in November and soon he removed to Stevens county, near Newport. He was the second settler there and seven years were spent on a homestead, raising hay and selling wood, and then a move was made to the vicinity of Spangle. In 1899 he came to Peck. He bought an interest with E. E. Carter and one year later sold out to him. Carter then moved away and on May 24, 1901, in company with his father, he opened a general merchandise establishment. They have succeeded well and now enjoy a fine trade.

On December 14, 1895, in Stevens county, Washington, Mr. Shelburn married Miss Hester, daughter of George W. and Mary Casteel, natives of Ohio and Missouri, respectively. The father was born in 1844. Mrs. Shelburn has three sisters, Minerva Meek, Nettie Blalock and Sophia Rice. Mr. Shelburn has four sisters, Sarah Foster, Dora Marion, Kate Geaudreau, and Julia Newby. To our subject and his faithful wife there have been born four children, Ada, Harry, Ila, Muriel. Mr. Shelburn is a member of the I. O. O. F. In politics he is associated with the Democratic party. Mr. Shelburn has always cast his influence on the side of good government and good schools and is one of the influential and capable men of this section.

JOHN J. PHILIPI. Among the capable, enterprising and successful business men of Lewiston is to be mentioned the industrious and skillful tradesman whose name appears above, and who has since 1885 operated a first-class tailor shop in Lewiston, where he is now doing a thriving business, being highly respected and in good standing. John J. was born in Austria, near Prague, on November 1, 1856, being the son of John and Anna (Borovec) Philipi. The father was a weaver, born near Prague and died aged fifty, in 1870. The mother was also born in the same place in 1830, and she is now living in Washington. Her parents, Tony and Anna Borovec, both died in Portland. Our subject was educated in Austria, then was bound out to a tailor in 1870, serving four years, at the expiration of which time he came to the West Indies, thence via Panama to San Francisco and Portland, whither his mother and three brothers had preceded him the year previous. He worked for a time at his trade, then returned to San Francisco, working for a few months and then enlisting in the regular army, Company D, First Cavalry. In 1877 he was sent to Nez Perces to assist in quelling the Indians and he participated in a number of engagements. He then returned to the Golden Gate and was transferred to the Twenty-first, Company K, under Captain Downie, being company tailor, and in 1882 he was honorably discharged at Vancouver. He opened a tailor shop and did well there until 1885, when he came to Lewiston and engaged in the tailoring business here, where he has wrought with a winning hand since that time, being one of the substantial and leading business men of the city. In 1897 Mr. Philipi took a homestead on the Nez Perces reservation and proved up on it recently, having a fine farm, well improved.

The marriage of Mr. Philipi and Miss Fannie, daughter of Martins M. and Fannie Podamy, natives of Austria and immigrants to America in 1871, was solemnized in Portland, on May 22, 1882, and to them four children have been born, Ida, Chester, Allie and Lela. Mrs. Philipi has four sisters, of whom three are now living, Mary Connasek, Anna Bonty and Josie Kiten. Mr. Philipi has three brothers, Joseph, Anton and Henry. Mr. Philipi is a member of the Maccabees, while he and his family are Catholics. Mr. Philipi is a Democrat and active in political matters. In addition to his farm he has a fine business in Lewiston and has conducted his financial matters in a becoming and wise manner. He is a member of the Pioneer Association and is really one of the builders of the county, having labored faithfully in all his ways.

SHERMAN W. FANNING is a westerner by birth and has devoted himself to the development of the raw country of the west for many years with gratifying results in a fine farm, good improvements and a substantial holding of property that makes him one of the well-to-do men of the vicinity of Nezperce, his farm being about one mile southwest from Nezperce.

Sherman W. Fanning was born in the vicinity of Albany, Oregon, on September 18, 1865, being the son of Elias E. and Mary A. (Gladhill) Fanning, natives of Morgan county, Illinois. Levi Fanning, grandfather of our subject, was a Mexican war veteran. The father of Sherman was a member of the state militia in Illinois. In 1852 Mr. and Mrs. Fanning crossed the plains with a train of over two hundred people.

Cholera attacked them and many of the emigrants were buried by the trail. Six months were consumed on this weary journey and they settled near Albany on a donation claim. In 1874 they came to the vicinity of Forest Grove and in 1877 they all settled near Pomeroy, Washington. The father was a prominent politician in Oregan and served in the legislature from Washington county. He was also prominent in the Grange movement in that state.

On July 4, 1887, Mr. Fanning married Miss Effie M., daughter of George W. and Sarah E. (Bragg) Warfield, natives of Illinois, and came from Union county, Iowa, where Mrs. Fanning was born, to Pomeroy, in 1881. Mr. Warfield died on January 11, 1899, but his widow is still living in Whitman county, Washington. Mr. Fanning resided near Pomeroy until the spring of 1898, when he came to his present farm, which is now well supplied with buildings and the farm is highly cultivated and a valuable place. Mr. Fanning is a member of the W. W. Camp No. 419, of Nezperce. Two children have been born to him and his estimable wife, Sherman W. and Arthur L. Mr. Fanning's mother died on December 5, 1891, aged fifty-five. His father died on December 23, 1900, aged sixty-seven. He is a director of the Nezperce tramway, the first one on the Clearwater, of which he was one of the instigators.

LEE MAYS. While the worthy pioneers who first started the commercial activity and business of Nez Perces county did a noble work, still there are many who have come here since that have manifested excellent enterprise also in the continuation of the industrial interests of this section. Among this number we mention the subject of this sketch, who, in company with F. Gritman, does a fine business in Lewiston, being proprietors of the White Front livery and feed stable in Lewiston. They have a fine equipment of stock, vehicles and buildings, and are up-to-date and careful liverymen, doing a fine business at the present time.

Mr. Mays is distinctly a western product, being born in Walla Walla, on January 19, 1877, and at the age of thirteen doing for himself, since which time he has always conducted his affairs with great credit to himself. His father, John Mays, who was a carpenter, farmer and stockman, born in 1857, crossed the plains in an early day, and died in July, 1902. His mother, Rachel (Beard) Mays, was born in 1857 and is at Green Creek, Idaho. When our subject was one year old, his parents went to the vicinity of Dayton and farmed. That continued to be his home, except from 1895 to 1898, when he was with the Walla Walla Dressed Meat Company, of Dayton. Mr. Mays was in the livery business there until he came to Lewiston. He then formed a partnership with Mr. Gritman and together they started the livery stable mentioned and have since that time done a fine business.

On June 10, 1902, Mr. Mays married Miss Nellie, daughter of John A. and Ellen A. (Watris) Knox, at Dayton, Washington. Mr. Knox was born in New York, in 1845, came west in 1889 and settled in Columbia, where he lives now and is an esteemed and successful farmer. Mrs. Knox was born in Wisconsin, in 1847. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Mays was John E. Knox, born in Ireland, of Scotch descent, while her maternal grandfather, Levi Watris, was born in Canada and came to America when young. Mrs. Mays was born in Iowa, on September 26, 1881, and educated in the high school in Columbia county, Washington. She has the following brothers and sister, John Arthur, Clara Mays, Walter and Bruce, all in Columbia county. Mr. Mays has the following named brothers and sisters, Daughty, deceased; Andrew, near Dayton, Washington; Lulu, wife of William Hood in Kooskia, Idaho; Maude, wife of Willis Baldwin, in Dayton, Washington; Stella, Grace, Charlie, at Green Creek; also a half brother, Robbie Dunn. Mr. Mays is active in the political world and has always allied himself with the Democratic party.

JOHN R. WOLFE. Among the enterprising and successful young men of Nez Perces county who are making a good success because of ability and industry we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, who at the present time is conducting an assaying office in Lewiston, where he is doing a fine business. Mr. Wolfe was born in Brown county, Kansas, on December 2, 1869, being the son of John C. and Cintha (Doughty) Wolfe. The father is a grocery man in Moscow, was born in Illinois in 1848, came to Washington in 1875 and to Idaho in 1876 and is now councilman of Moscow. He enlisted in the Union army when a boy and his parents took him out, after which he returned and re-enlisted. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio in 1849 and is living in Moscow, while her mother is still living in Illinois. Our subject remained with his parents until of age. He attended public school and worked on the farm and finally took a course in the University at Moscow, finishing with a special course in mineralogy. He then opened an office for assaying for two years in Moscow, after which he repaired to Florence and did business there for a time and at the time of the Buffalo Hump excitement he went thither and opened an office for assaying, mining engineering and surveying, doing also a contracting business. Later we find him in Stuart on the Clearwater, running an assay office. Then he took a position with the Lolo Pioneer Mining Company in the Pierce City district and stayed with them until 1901. Then he went to Moscow and erected the White Cross Mills, after which he came to Lewiston and opened an assaying office, where he is doing a good business.

The marriage of Mr. Wolfe and Miss Lunia, daughter of J. R. and Sarah Fariss, of Latah county, was solemnized in Moscow on January 20, 1891, and to them has been born one child, Robert W., born August 18, 1902. Mr. Fariss is a farmer and a native of Virginia and in addition to Mrs. Wolfe, who was born in Stanberry, Missouri, on June 24, 1870, he had other children as follows, George, at Pueblo, Colorado; Delmer, in Idaho; Cinthia and Effie, in Moscow. Mr. Wolfe has two sisters, Neva, wife of L. J. Lindley, in Pullman; Ada, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe are members of the Christian church and are hearty supporters of their faith. He is a Republican as have been his people for some time.

FRED GRITMAN has not long been in business in Lewiston, but he has manifested the ability and geniality that have already won him a good patronage and which made him many friends in other sections adjacent to Nez Perces county, where he has wrought for a long time. He was born in Central, Menard county, Illinois, on February 22, 1861, being the son of Delos W. and Mary E. (Davis) Gritman, natives of New York, the father dying in 1894, and the mother in 1893. Our subject remained at home, attended the common schools, and labored on the farm with his father until the time of his majority and then came to Walla Walla county, Washington. Soon he went to Columbia county and started at the art of agriculture, but mostly handling cattle and sheep. He met with fair success in the business and remained at it for twenty years. Then he sold his stock, retaining his cattle, and came to Lewiston. This was the first of 1902. The change was made as Mr. Gritman was breaking down from the arduous exercise of riding horseback. In Lewiston he went into the livery business in partnership with Lee Mays, and they operate the White Front livery on Main street, which is a first-class establishment in every respect, being provided with accommodating attendants, fine stock and elegant rigs, and the proprietors are tireless in their efforts for the comfort and safety of their patrons.

On October 26, 1881, Mr. Gritman married Miss Laura B., daughter of Henry and Emily (Kincaid) Gaines, in Illinois, and to them have been born six children, Lottie, Addie, Fred S., H. Lee, Ernest, Oneta, all at home. Mr. Gaines was a farmer, born in Kentucky, and died in 1892. His wife was also a native of Kentucky, born December 12, 1832, and died on March 20, 1902, at Mason City, Illinois. Mrs. Gritman was born in Illinois on March 31, 1861; she has two brothers and two sisters, Charles, Anna Copper, James E., and Mollie Stone. Mr. Gritman has the following named brothers and sisters, Nettie Rayburn, Charles A. D., Nellie Clark, May Rowe, Lulu Johnson and Earl. Mr. Gritman was deputy assessor in Columbia county and has always taken active interest in political matters, both of state and county, being allied with the Republican party.

OWEN DEVLIN, a respected and well known citizen of Nez Perces county, whose uprightness and ability are manifest in his labors and achievements, is a son of the noted Emerald Isle, and the good Irish blood that courses in his veins has enabled him to successfully battle with the adverse forces of the world and gain a good holding in the material line, while his integrity, manly qualities, and intrinsic worth have gained for him the encomiums, good will and confidence of all who know him.

Owen Devlin was born on June 11, 1853, in Ireland, being the son of Patrick and Kate, also natives of Ireland. The former was born in 1824 and died in 1894, while the latter was born in 1824 and died in 1898, being farmers all their lives. Our subject was reared and educated in the native place and there wrought with his father until he had reached the age of nineteen. This was in 1872, and that marks the year when Owen severed home ties, parted with native land and sailed for better opportunities in the land of the free. He went at once to Illinois and commenced railroading, which he followed for three years with his headquarters at Rock Island. His next move was to Clayton county, Iowa, where he continued railroading for fifteen years. It was 1890 when he came to Spokane and nine years were spent in the labor wherein he had become proficient, railroading. Then he made his way to the reservation and in 1899 purchased his present farm. This estate consists of one quarter section and is situated three miles southwest from Peck. Mr. Devlin has given the same assiduous attention and labor, always dominated with wisdom of a high order, which always characterized him in earlier years and he has won the smiles of fortune and is one of the substantial and prosperous men of the county. He has a good residence, commodious barns, excellent orchard, and other improvements to match, while he devotes himself to general farming and raising cattle and hogs.

In July, 1876, Mr. Devlin married Miss Margaret Sturum, a native of Germany, born in 1864. Her parents were natives of the same country and came to this country in 1866. She has three brothers and one sister living. Mr. Devlin has the following brothers, John, in Iowa; Thomas, in Ireland; Patrick in Iowa; James, in Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Devlin have been born the following named children, Kate Graham, James, Martin, Susie, Agnes, Patrick, John, William, Michael, Bessie. Mr. Devlin is a member of I. O. O. F., while he and his wife are adherents of the Catholic church. He is a member of the school board and is always in favor of improvements and progress in educational and all lines.

JOHN H. UTT. Among the prosperous and substantial farmers in this vicinity we should surely place the name of the genial and capable gentleman that introduces this paragraph, for he deserves representation in the history of his county.

John H. Utt was born in Jersey county, Illinois, in 1842, being the son of John and Nancy (Gardner) Utt, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father was born in 1800, came as a pioneer to Illinois when there was but one store in Alton. He took part in the Black Hawk war and is now dead. The mother died in 1861. Our subject remained with his father on the farm, gaining from the country schools the educational discipline needed to assist him in the battles of life, until he was of age. Then he went to Plumas county, California, and farmed for five years. In 1883, he settled in Chautauqua county, Kansas, where his home was for sixteen years. In 1866 Mr. Utt went to Illinois and married Miss Nancy, daughter of James and Nancy Armstrong. Mrs. Utt was born in Illionis, and in 1883 was called from her happy home by death, leaving her husband and four children to mourn her loss. The children are named as follows, Rufus, in Nez Perces county; Jennie Bothwick, in Little Rock, Arkansas; John E., in Palouse, Washington; Mony. Mr. Utt has the following named brothers and sister, Henry, William, deceased, Sarah J., deceased. Mr. Utt is interested in political matters and is associated with the Democratic and Populist parties. His brother William was a participant in the great struggle of the Civil war and fought for his country. Mr. Utt is quite active in advocating good schools and general progress. He owns a good farm in Cedar Vale, Kansas, in adition to the quarter section where he resides, one mile southwest from Peck. He took this last land with his government right in 1899. Since that time he has devoted himself to its improvement and is one of the respected men of the vicinity, being public spirited and ever ready to aid his fellows in the race of life.

JOHN W. KILLINGER. The mining interests of the west have brought here some of the finest talent in special lines to be found and one of the prominent professional gentleman attracted hither is the subject of this humble review. He is a graduate of some of the best schools on mining, assaying, metallurgy and kindred subjects that are to be found in the United States and at the present time he is operating a laboratory for assaying in Lewiston.

John W. was born in Lebanon, Pennsylvania, on December 30, 1865, being the son of Hon. John W. Killinger. The father was for years a state senator from Lancaster county and then was sent to Congress for eight terms. He was a warm personal friend of James G. Blaine, was one of the committee who assisted to get Lincoln into Washington after his election, was all through the trying times of the war and did creditable service for his constituency, being a man of excellent ability and integrity. He retired from Congress in 1888 and died in Pennsylvania in 1896. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and lived at the old homestead in Lebanon, Pennsylvania. Our subject was well educated in the public schools, prepared for college at the Media Academy, and was graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston in the class of 1886, having taken the chemical course. He went into business in Lebanon and in 1891 came west to Portland and took charge of the metallurgical and assaying departments of the Fiske School of Mines. He arrived in Lewiston in September, 1898. Previous to locating here he had been to the Columbia School of Mines in New York and taken a special course.

Mr. Killinger married Miss Olive S., daughter of John and Margaret Aldridch. To this union there has been born one child, John W. Mr. Killinger is a Mason and member of the Knights Templar. He and his wife are members of the Episcopalian church, of which he is trustee. In politics, he is allied with the Republicans and is active.

Theodore Hittell, uncle of our subject, was author of the leading history of California and was state senator there, being also a leader in the committee of revision of the constitution of the state. He was a pioneer of 1849 and is regent of the Berkely University. John S. Hittell, a brother, is also a prominent writer.

LOUIS GROSTEIN. A well known pioneer, a man of wide experience in the mines of Idaho and in frontier life in general, our subject is now one of the business men of Lewiston and a patriotic and worthy citizen. He was born in Buffalo, New York, on July 26, 1852, being the son of Jacob and Betsy Grostein. The father was born in 1792, in Poland, was with Napoleon in Russia and came to the United States in 1838 to escape punishment on account of having been allied with Napoleon. He settled in Albany, later was a clothier in Buffalo, and died in Lewiston in 1886. The mother was born in Poland in 1803, and died in Lewiston in 1888. At the age of fifteen, our subject came west with his sister, landing in Lewiston on May 12, 1867, having come via Panama and San Francisco. He was educated in Buffalo and Lewiston and here went with his brother Robert to Clearwater Station, where he engaged in business in 1869 and then went to Newsome creek in 1872. He was in business with his brother Isaac there; then went to Elk City, where he entered into partnership with Mr. Bernard until 1875. After that we find him operating a store in Warren until 1880, then he came to Lewiston. On February 23, 1881, Mr. Grostein married Miss Clara J., daughter of William and Mary Writer, the father a farmer and pioneer from Iowa, his native state. Mrs. Grostein was born in Florence on August 30, 1863, being the first white child born there. She has brothers and sisters named as follows, Josephine, Walter, Carrie, Greer and Elbert. Mr. Grostein has two brothers and one sister, Robert, Rachel Bernard, Isaac. To Mr. and Mrs. Grostein have been born four children, as follows, Isaac C., twenty years of age on September 3, 1902, now in the fruit business in Lewiston; Eunice, seventeen, at home; Jacob M., thirteen, at home; Mary B., aged seven. Mr. Grostein is a member of the Masonic fraternity, both the blue lodge and the chapter. He is a Democrat and active in politics, and while he always helps his friends to be elected, he has never sought political preferment for himself. He is also a member of the Pioneer Association and is one of the real builders of the country. He was in the Sheepeater war and the Nez Perces war and his wife was one of the number shut up in the block house on Slate creek while the Indians had them surrounded. Mr. Grostein was one of sixteen that went out from Warren to get Frank Smith on the Salmon and bring him to Warren.

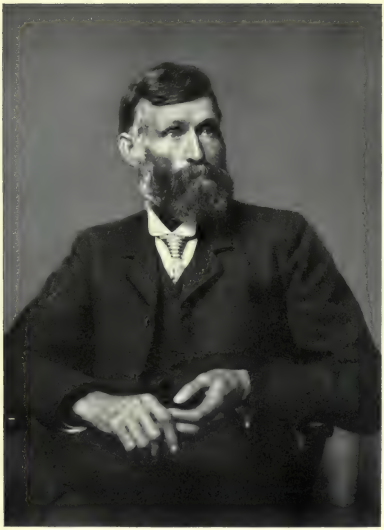
RUFUS H. BEEMAN. President Roosevelt is said to admire men who "do things." We feel sure that had he had the opportunity of knowing the subject of this article, he would, for that reason, be well impressed with him. A doughty pioneer, an intrepid Indian fighter, a sociable and generous man, a patriotic citizen, Mr. Beeman is one among a thousand and a brief review of his intensely interesting career will be profitable and interesting reading for the history of Nez Perces county.

Rufus H. Beeman was born in McKean, Pennsylvania, on August 3, 1832. His father was a lumberman and a native of Connecticut, and his family had been residents of New England for many generations. The mother of our subject was a native of Pennsylvania, and three years after the death of Mr. Beeman she married Mr. McIntosh, a native of Scotland. Shortly after this, the family removed to Potosi, Wisconsin, and there Mr. McIntosh mined and later discovered a very valuable lead mine. When twelve, Rufus left home and resided with Mr. Parker, a miner, where he attended school a part of each year and worked in the mines the balance of the time for six years. In 1852 he came to the Cascades, Oregon, herded cattle, cleared land and boated on the Columbia. In 1854, we see him in Roseburg and from then until 1861, he had a freight train from there to Jacksonville, Oregon. During the Rogue river Indian war in 1855 and 1856, he fought the savages and participated in the battle of Hungry Hill, said to be the bloodiest battle ever fought on the coast. He was about to be killed, while assisting a wounded comrade, but managed to escape without a scratch. He was in Company C, Ninth Regiment, under Captain Rynearson and Colonel John E. Ross. He came to Walla Walla in 1861 and there freighted and farmed until 1872. In 1874 Mr. Beeman removed to Genesee valley and bought five hundred and sixty acres of land. He cultivated it to the cereals and while there ran for sheriff and was defeated by one vote. Seventeen years were spent there and part of that time he operated a general store, but while trade was good his collections were poor and therefore he was obliged to withdraw from the field. He then bought a half section in the Potlach country near Juliaetta and about a year before the opening of the reservation, he sold it and bought cattle. When the reservation opened he came hither and rented land from the Indians, one section in one place and two hundred and forty acres in Garden Gulch. His daughter, Clara B., filed on a quarter and that with other rented land, was cultivated to oats and flax, having nearly five hundred acres all told. Mr. Beeman is one of the largest farmers in this portion of the county and is abundantly prospered.



On February 19, 1856, at Roseburgh, Oregon, Mr. Beeman married Miss Caroline, daughter of Levi and Elizabeth (Ream) McBee, natives of Ohio and Maryland, respectively; both died while crossing the plains in 1852. Mrs. Beeman was born in Missouri, on February 19, 1842, was with relatives at the Cascades, Oregon, for a time and then lived with E. F. McNall at Roseburg until she was married. She has one brother, Isaiah, a blacksmith and farmer, near Goldendale, Washington. Mr. Beeman has one sister, Sarah, wife of Abraham Anderson, in Lafayete, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Beeman also has two sisters, Barbara A., wife of Edward Chambreau, at Portland; Rebecca, wife of Isaac Knighton, a farmer in Morrow county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Beeman, twelve children have been born, named as follows: Henry, in Wallowa county, Oregon; Francis M., a herder, in Okanogan county, Washington; Frederick S., William Charles, all stockmen in the same place; Egbert, at home; Leroy, also at home; Mary E., wife of Joseph Henry, a freighter, near Milton, Oregon; Rosella, wife of Lewis Taber, a farmer near Ellensburg, Washington; Lura, wife of Jack Johnson, a farmer in Okanogan county; Adelia, at home; Anna, born August 5, 1864 and died October 16, 1883, and was the wife of Albert Fansler, a native of Virginia, and she left one child, Iris, who died aged fourteen; Arabelle A., died June 22, 1896, aged twenty-three years, three months and two days. Mr. Beeman was an active Democrat in earlier days, but is not so much so now. He is a respected and prominent man in this community.

THOMAS H. BERRY. Many strong hands and willing minds came to the opening of the fertile reservation country and they have made a wonderful and commendable progress in transforming the entire face of the country from a wilderness to fertile farms and pleasant and valuable estates. Among this worthy number we are constrained to mention the affable and skillful agriculturist whose name appears above. His farm, one mile north from Melrose, was obtained by government right and he has labored with assiduity and intelligence to make of it a valuable rural abode. He has good, comfortable buildings and other improvements and has demonstrated himself an upright man, a public spirited and progressive citizen and one who has won the confidence of all.

Thomas H. Berry was born in Gentry county, Missouri, on March 11, 1860, being the son of James B. and Elenor (Grantham), natives of Illinois, mention of whom, with their family, is made in the sketch of L. L. Berry in this volume. Our subject remained with his parents, a dutiful and industrious son, until the time of his majority, and then entered the realities of life on his own responsibility. He worked with his father some time after that age and went with him to Dakota in 1883. But Thomas returned to Gentry county and then made his way back to Dakota, after which he journeyed to Iowa and settled for a time near Marshall county. Again he went to Missouri and on February 14, 1888, he took the trip to Latah county, or rather completed the trip on that date. He farmed in the Cove, near Palouse, for ten years and on May 27, 1898, he came to the reservation and took his present estate.

On March 20, 1887, in Gentry county, Missouri, Mr. Berry married Miss Arminda J., daughter of John and Eliza A. (Hammonds) Finders, natives of Illinois and Kentucky, respectively. Mrs. Berry was born in Gentry county, Missouri, in 1870, and she has three sisters and one brother. To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born five children, Gracie Elenor, deceased; Thomas Frederick, and John Fay, Hester and Eliza Fern. Mrs. Berry is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Berry is a Populist in political matters and takes the part of the intelligent citizen in the affairs of the day.

CHARLES A. LEEPER. In a number of lines the subject of this sketch has achieved success, having demonstrated his ability as an educator, a frontiersman, and is now one of the leading farmers of Nez Perces county; it is affirmed that he owns more cattle than any other one man in Nez Perces county, having now six hundred on the range. Mr. Leeper is also a man of sterling and intrinsic worth, of moral character, integrity and uprightness.

Charles A. Leeper was born in Marion county, Indiana, on January 19, 1850, being the son of Judge William and Obedience A. (Parsly) Leeper. The father was a farmer and capitalist, born in 1817, in Indiana, and served as lieutenant in the Civil war. He was also county judge in Nodaway county, Missouri. His father, John Leeper, was of Scotch-Irish extraction and belonged to a prominent old family of Scotland which include a number of professional men of Edinburg. The mother of our subject was born in Virginia in 1823 and died in 1868, being of Scotch descent. Our subject remained at home until he was twenty-six years of age, having been educated in the public schools and the state university at Columbia. He came west in February, 1876, to Salmon City, Idaho, and taught three terms of school and also farmed. He was in Custer county when it was cut off from Lemhi, removing to Nez Perces county in 1883, where he bought a man's right to three hundred and twenty acres of land and settled down to raising stock and farming. He now owns the princely domain of fifteen hundred and eighty-six acres of fine farm land which is devoted to agriculture and feeding his fine bands of cattle. Since 1883 Mr. Leeper has continued at the business in this county and is now one of the prominent men and leaders in his work.

On February 12, 1888, Mr. Leeper married Miss Annie E. Bollinger, a native of Sandusky, Ohio, being born in 1866. She came to Lewiston to visit her uncle, S. Wildenthaler, and the acquaintance was formed which later ripened into courtship and at the date mentioned Mr. Leeper went to Ohio to claim his bride. Mrs. Leeper has three sisters, Josephine Weible, Sophia and Rosa. Mr. Leeper has the following named brothers and sisters: William, George, Ollie Falconer; also four half brothers, Frank, Fred, Robert and Lawrence. To Mr. and Mrs. Leeper have been born five children, Maude, Annie, Alice, Louise and Helen. He is a charter member of the K. of P. in Lewiston, and has passed the commandery degree of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Leeper is a member of the Catholic church. Mr. Leeper is an active Democrat, was nominated for the legislature and was beaten by three votes. Was nominated again and won the day, but in Latah county the courts decided against him in the contest that followed. He has been chosen as county commissioner for three terms and is now chairman of that important body, and in all of his public service he has been characterized by efficiency and candor, always conserving the interests of his constituency and the welfare of the commonwealth.

It is of note that Mr. Leeper's ancestors fought in the Revolution and he had an uncle on his father's side who fought with the south and three maternal uncles who fought with the North. He was a scout in the time of the Indian trouble in 1878 and had much experience in repelling the savages in Lemhi county. Mr. Leeper is a member of the Pioneer Association, and is a man respected by all.

JOHN B. MORRIS, M. D. For more than twenty-five years this worthy and capable gentleman, whose record in the state of Idaho is set with many gems of courage, ability and genuine kindliness for his fellows, has labored in the medical profession with display of genius, adaptability and uprightness that have placed him in the lead as a pioneer, as a professional man of high repute and a stanch and true man of many virtues.

Dr. Morris was born in Knoxville, Ray county, Missouri, on October 1, 1850, being the son of Benjamin and Amanda (Hamilton) Morris, natives of Virginia. The father died in Missouri, in June, 1851. The mother was born October 5, 1812, and died October 30, 1889. Our subject remained with his mother until he had reached his majority. In the meantime, he had gained a good education from the public schools and the academy. He assisted his older brothers to care for the family and also taught school for means to educate himself. It was in 1872 that he matriculated at the St. Louis Medical College and thence he graduated in 1874. He had the distinction of paying the entire cost of his education from his own earnings. After graduating he determined to try the west, and accordingly came to Mount Idaho in 1875, where he settled to the practice of his profession, gaining good success from the start. When the terrible Indian war broke out in 1877 Dr. Morris chanced to be in Portland and he at once turned his face to the scene of trouble in the vicinity of Mount Idaho. He was the first and only physician that came to the rescue of the poor wounded soldiers who had participated in the battle where, thirty had been killed. To get to these unfortunate men, Dr. Morris had to cross the reservation of a hostile tribe and in reality took his life in his hands to assist his fellows, and be it ever said to his credit that he made his way through, using a gun that General Howard had loaned him; he cared for the suffering men, he nursed and doctored them back to life, and to his skill, his bravery, and his love for his fellows many a one owes his life. It is with a feeling of regret, however, that we are forced to chronicle that there was not another physician who would go with Dr. Morris. Following the war, which closed in 1878, Dr. Morris settled in Lewiston and there continued his practice even until the present time, having great success and being highly esteemed by his fellows wherever he is known. He has a large and lucrative practice and no man is really honored by his fellows more than the subject of this sketch, who risked his own life to assist others.

The marriage of Dr. Morris and Miss Laura, daughter of T. S. and Elizabeth (Hutchingson) Billings, was solemnized on September 24, 1879, and two children have been born to them, Cora E., graduated from the Lewiston high school at the age of seventeen, in June, 1902; Benjamin Ray, attending school. Mr. Billings is a native of New York and is now a harness dealer in Lewiston. His wife is a native of Canada, where also Mrs. Morris was born on March 11, 1859, in Toronto. She is an only child and came in an early day to California with her parents. Dr. Morris has the following named brothers and sisters: Levi, James W., Mrs. John Prichard, Mrs. J. R. Warder, Mrs. M. M. Sherlock, Benjamin F. and Hamilton. Dr. Morris is a thirty-two degree Mason. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian chuch. The Doctor is very popular in political matters and for four years he served the county as treasurer, being elected first in 1894, on the Democratic ticket. He has been alderman and school director for a number of terms. The Doctor is prosperous, having considerable property in Lewiston, and is president of the Lewis Mercantile Company, a wholesale grocery house of that city, which is doing a good business.

HANK TRIMBLE. A veritable pioneer from the time that he doffed swaddling clothes to stretch his first suspenders, and made of the stuff that wins in the frontier fight, while he has also ever maintained a high sense of honor, and being a man of consummate energy and execution, the subject of this sketch is accorded a prominent place among the worthy men who opened this country, and he is certainly deserving of the same.

Mr. Trimble was born in Illinois in 1844, May 26, being the son of Edward and Abarilla (Ross) Trimble. The father was born in 1816 and was killed by the Indians on the Platte river in 1846, when he was coming to the Willamette valley. The mother was born in 1819, and died in 1896. The family started for the west in 1846 and as the stock strayed on one night when they camped on the Platte, Mr. Trimble went to search for them and was killed by Pawnee Indians, who cast his body in the river. The heartbroken widow came on through and at The Dalles secured the services of some parties who assisted her to Oregon City. Two years later they went to Salem and here our subject attended school some, but the mother, having married a man named Powell, and he not being congenial to Hank, the latter struck out for himself at the age of nine. He stayed with his uncle, Jonathan Bratton, then went with Dr. S. A. Smith for a year, attending school, after which, being eleven, he went with a pack train. This was in 1855, and the train was attacked by Indians and captured, several of the packers being killed, but our subject escaped by an accident. He returned to the Willamette valley and in 1859 and 1860 attended school at Peoria, Linn county, Oregon. It was as early as 1861 that he came to Lewiston, or where Lewiston now stands, and had to wait for four days to get across on the ferry, the rush being so great. He went to Oro Fino and worked in the mines and has been there off and on since that time. He mined and packed until 1865, then went to Boise and mined and then followed the same business in Montana, on Elk creek, and there, in the summer of 1868, he took out one hundred and forty-four thousand dollars from the ground. He went to Walla Walla and then came to Lewiston and mined and kept a saloon until 1880, having a hydraulic on the Clearwater and at Warren. In 1880 he bought land and took two quarters and went to farming and raising stock. He has made a great success of it, handling more stock than any one man in this country. Last winter he fed one thousand. He has just sold about two thousand acres of land and now has plenty of land left. He also has fine cattle and property in Lewiston.

At Helena, Montana, in 1869, Mr. Trimble married Anna (Dunlop) Myer, whose father was a pioneer of the Pacific coast. Mr. Trimble has brothers and sisters as follows: Martha J. St. George, living at Pomeroy, Washington, the town being named from her first husband, J. M. Pomeroy, who died there; Mary Ellen Adams, in San Diego, California; Frank and Horace, deceased. Mr. Trimble is a Democrat and active in politics. He has the best fitted stock farm in the country and his wisdom and skill have been manifested in the brilliant success that he has achieved. He is a member of the Pioneer Association. It is of note by way of reminiscence that Mr. Trimble had twelve uncles and cousins murdered in the Mountain Meadow massacre and in the Salmon Falls massacre by the savages.

LOWRY L. BERRY is one of the younger men of enterprise who have assisted materially to open the reservation country to be a fertile and valuable farming vicinity. He is a man of good ability and handles his business affairs with commendable zeal and thoroughness which have given him the desirable meed of prosperity and good success. He has a fine piece of land of eighty acres, which is improved in excellent shape. At the present time Mr. Berry is erecting a commodious residence for his family, while good outbuildings, orchard, and so forth, embellish the farm.

Lowry L. Berry was born in Gentry county, Missouri, on April 25, 1871, being the son of James B.

and Elenor (Grantham) Berry, natives of Illinois, born in 1825 and 1827, respectively. The father was a farmer and merchant and died on July 9, 1893. He was a volunteer in the Civil war, where he gave faithful service for his country. He was a pioneer in Missouri and Dakota, and his father was also a pioneer to Missouri. The mother of our subject lives with him and has done so since the death of her husband. In 1883 the family went from Missouri to South Dakota, settling in Potter county, where the father and elder sons took land. Four years were spent there and then they all sold out and came to Latah county. There they remained until the death of the father in 1893, when our subject took charge of the farm estate and since that time has continued thus. Lowry received his education in the various places where the family lived and was trained by a skillful and progressive father. When the reservation opened he came and secured his present place.

On December 9, 1897, in Latah county, Dr. Berry married Miss Florence, daughter of Thomas and Loraine (Camp) Williams, natives of Kansas. Mrs. Berry was also born in Kansas, the date being 1873. She has four brothers and one sister. Mr. Berry has the following named brothers and sisters: William H., Mary J. Craig, James D., Jacob N., Thomas H. and George R. Elsie M., Evelyn E., Chrissie E. and a child as yet unnamed have been born to bless the household of our subject and his estimable wife. Mrs. Berry is a member of the Methodist church. Politically, Mr. Berry is affiliated with the Populist party, and is always found on the side of progression and is especially interested in good schools.

WYLEY T. JOHNSON. The southeast fourth of section twenty-four, township thirty-four, range one east of the Boise meridian belongs to Wyley Johnson. It bears the marks of being one of the best tilled and kept farms in the vicinity. Mr. Johnson has a seven-room residence, with water piped in, and all of the modern conveniences and this is but a sample of his farm improvements and achievements. He borrowed money in the east to make his way west and has wrought with industry and sagacity until he is now one of the most prosperous men of the reservation country. Mr. Johnson has cattle and hogs to consume the abundant harvests of his fertile farm and he is as successful in raising stock as in his farming.

Wyley Johnson was born in Montgomery county, Tennessee, on March 10, 1860, being the son of Len H. and Martha (Turner) Johnson, natives of Tennessee. The maternal grandfather, Wyley Turner, served in the war of 1812. The father of our subject died in 1871 and the mother removed her family to Humphreys county, Tennessee, in 1876. In 1884 Mr. Johnson came to Albion, Cassia county, Idaho, and there wrought on a stock farm. The next winter he went to San Francisco with a train of stock for Samuel Guinn. He remained a time in California and in 1891 came to the Palouse country, then went to Cassia county again, whence he again went to California. Soon we see him in Pullman and when the reservation opened he was among the enterprising ones who came and selected fine farms.

On July 27, 1898, Mr. Johnson married Miss Florence, daughter of Milo H. and Lucy A. Adams, of the vicinity of Nezperce. They had one child, Milton A., born August 27, 1901. Mrs. Johnson taught school three terms in Bingham county, Idaho, and also taught the first school in Fletcher. She was also saleslady in J. T. Orbison's store in Nezperce for a year. They are highly respected people and hold a leading place in the society of the community.

DR. JOHN H. LEWIS. Nezperce is to be congratulated in securing as a permanent resident the subject of this article, who has shown himself in his large and ever increasing practice in dentistry to be a master in his profession, a noble and upright man, and a keen and discriminating student of deep erudition, not only in the technical departments of dentistry but in general information.

John H. Lewis was born in Blackhawk county, Iowa, on February 11, 1875, being the son of Ezra J. and Anna M. (Harris) Lewis. The father was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and came with his parents to Carroll county, Illinois, where he was married, his wife being a native of that county. Later they removed to the birthplace of our subject and in 1885 they came to Cheyenne county, Nebraska, whence, in 1889, they journeyed to Marion county, Oregon. Dr. Lewis attended public school in the east and the high school at Newport, Oregon, gaining the money for his expenses in the latter by teaching school. We may also remark that Dr. Lewis is a self-made man in every respect, for his own efforts have contributed solely to the fund that gave him his training in his profession. He possessed the requisite courage, ambition and tenacity of purpose to accomplish this worthy achievement and it is greatly to his credit in his life that he has so done, for it has given him an independence, a self reliance and freedom of thought that have contributed much to his excellent success in professional life. Succeeding the high school course, Dr. Lewis studied at the University of Oregon in Eugene, then took a dental course at Albany. During the latter part of this extended study he spent one and one-half years in Lewiston in the prosecution of his profession with Dr. W. F. Galbraith. In November, 1899, the Doctor located permanently in Nezperce and has from the first done a good business and at this time he is firmly established in the confidence and esteem of the entire populace. He took an extended post graduate course in prosthetic dentistry in Portland, in 1900, and now he is in charge of one of the finest dental parlors in the state. The Doctor owns the office building where he operates and also is contemplating in the near future to erect a beautiful residence on the lots which he also owns.

On July 15, 1901, the Doctor had the happy privilege of taking to himself a wife, the charming lady being Miss Dora B. Laird, a native of Lane county, Oregon. He and his wife are devout members of the Church of Christ and he is an acting elder in this congregation at Nezperce. Dr. Lewis is a member of the W. W. and the M. W. A.

CHARLES A. BACON. About one mile northeast from Melrose is situated the estate of the representative agriculturist and esteemed citizen and well known gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph. From the raw state of nature Mr. Bacon took this land and has made it a fine producing farm with all the necessary improvements, as comfortable house, good barns, fences, and so forth. The farm contains one hundred and sixty acres of good land and produces the cereals.

Charles A. Bacon was born in Newaygo county, Michigan, on December 26, 1857, being the son of Erastus and Lucy A. (Done) Bacon, natives of New York. The father was born in 1821 and was a pioneer to Michigan, as his father was also. Our subject worked with his father on the old farm and gained the educational training to be had from the schools during the winters. He continued in activity on the homestead until thirty years of age, and in 1890 sold out and came to Port Angeles, Washington, where he labored for five years. At the opening of the reservation he made his way thither and secured the land where is now situated the family home. Since that time he has given his attention assiduously to its improvement and cultivation. He has been blessed with success and is deserving of the same. And while he has industriously handled the duties of life as they came, he has also worked for the advancement of the interests of the county and has always allied himself on the side of good schools and good government. He is a Democrat in politics and sustains the principles of Jefferson.

On September 5, 1886, in Michigan, Mr. Bacon married Miss Roena L., daughter of Enoch and Hannah J. (Kimbell) Doty, natives respectively of Michigan and New York. The father, a pioneer of Michigan, was a soldier in the Eighth Michigan Infantry, and died from the effects of a wound in 1873. The mother's birth was in 1843. Mrs. Bacon was born in Michigan in 1867. She has one sister, Achsah Platt, in Nez Perces county. Mr. Bacon's brothers and sisters are all dead. To Mr. and Mrs. Bacon there have been born the following named children: Charles E., Ery L., Frank A., Harry D., Lucy J.

DAVID W. POTTER. Although this gentleman has not been in Nez Perces county many years, he has nevertheless, been in the vicinity and has done good work in the upbuilding of the country and deserves space in the history of the county, being a good business man, upright, and of sound principles. He was born in Weyauwega, Wisconsin, on August 17, 1851, being the son of Wilber and Maria Potter, natives of New York, born respectively in 1810, and on August 17, 1832. The father died in 1900, and the mother still lives in Minnesota. Our subject worked on a farm and received his education from the common schools of his vicinity. At the age of twenty five, he left the parental roof and settled on a ranch that he had taken near the home place. For nine years he was occupied there and then went to Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and there engaged in the dray business. In 1885 he sold out and came to Peola, in the Blue Mountains. He worked at milling and took up a timber claim in Asotin county and farmed for seven years and then removed to Colton, Whitman county, where he engaged in livery and draying. He was deputy sheriff of that county for a term and constable and marshal of Colton for five years. In the spring of 1902, he came to Lewiston and opened a livery stable, which he is carrying on in a creditable manner. He still owns a fine farm near Colton, and also property in town.

On December 25, 1877, Mr. Potter married Miss Gertie, daughter of Charles White, a native of Michigan, now living in Peola. Mrs. Potter was born in Plainville, Minnesota, on August 18, 1858, and has one brother, Albert, now deceased. Mr. Potter has brothers and sisters, as follows, Charles, in Dakota; Delbert, in Minnesota; Allen, deceased; Harriett, wife of T. Watson, in Los Angeles, California; Alice, deceased; Stella, wife of Charles Works, in Minnesota. Mr. Potter has also the following half brothers and sisters, Albert, who has been assistant secretary of state of Wisconsin; Peter, at Black River Falls, Wisconsin; William, now in Montana, having been wounded in the Civil war; Jasper, wounded in Civil war and now a cripple on account of it; Horace, in the Civil war, now in Minnesota; Julia Hall, in Sparta, Wisconsin; Mary, wife of Thomas Hogue, in Sparta, Wisconsin; Matilda, at Black River Falls, Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Potter there have been born three children, Ernest, a soldier in the Philippine war; Harry and Ray, at home. Mr. Potter is a member of the K. of P., at Colton, Washington. He is a Republican and active in the political realm.

ALEXANDER H. VAVER is a capable and experienced man in the manufacture of all kinds of timber products and at the present time is in charge of a fine saw-mill plant at Melrose, of which he is part owner. It is one of the finest plants in the county and is doing a good business in the development of the country.

Alexander H. Vaver was born in Chippewa county, Wisconsin, on January 5, 1867, being the son of Alexander and Betsy (Dixson) Vaver, natives of Canada and born in 1828 and 1842, respectively. The father died in 1900, having been a pioneer in Wisconsin before the day of railroads there and a successful operator of saw-mills. The mother died in 1900; her father was a trader of the Hudson Bay Company and pioneered all through the west and northwest. He was of Scotch lineage. Our subject grew to manhood in Wisconsin and learned from the beginning the saw-mill business and the handling of timber and its products. There he wrought in this field until 1897, when he repaired to Minnesota, settling at Crookston for two years. Next we find him in Great Falls, Montana, with the Butte Commercial Company. A year later he returned to Wisconsin and then again came west, settling in Lewiston. He operated for the Small & Emory Saw-mill Company for two years and the M. A. Snyder Company was formed, of which Mr. Vaver is one of the members. The mill was put up at Melrose and Mr. Vaver has been handling it since.

In Wisconsin, in the year 1892, Mr. Vaver married Miss Louise Winsenson, whose parents were natives of Denmark. She was born in Wisconsin in 1874 and has two sisters, Stina Flanders, in Wisconsin; Anna Lock, in Oregon. Mr. Winsenson was a soldier in Denmark and also served three years to defend the flag in the Civil war and received a pension for his valiant service. Mr. Vaver has the following brothers and sisters: William, John, Frank and Henry, Clara, Emily Coleman and Florence. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vaver, James. Mr. Vaver is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Encampment and also of the M. W. A. He is a Republican and an active worker for those principles. Mrs. Vaver is a member of the Lutheran church and her husband of the Methodist.

BENJAMIN F. BASHOR. The affable and genial subject of this article, who has labored so faithfully in this county, is granted with pleasure a representation in this volume of the history of Nez Perces, since he is one of the popular and prominent men in its precincts and since also he is a man of good principles and integrity.

Mr. Bashor was born in Las Animas county, Colorado, on April 3, 1873, being the son of Michael M. and Susan (Garst) Bashor, the father a German Baptist minister, born in Virginia in 1830, and his parents born in Pennsylvania. The mother of our subject was also born in Virginia in 1832, her father being born in Germany and coming to America when a boy and her mother a native of Pennsylvania and an immigrant to Virginia when young. Our subject's parents were married in Tennessee, December 11, 1850, and in 1872 came to Colorado and the father preached in Trinidad. When Benjamin was six years old the family came to Marion county, Oregon. He was educated in the common schools of that and Linn county at the Mineral Springs Seminary and then finished at the Willamette University in Salem in 1894. He taught two years and then came to Nez Perces county in 1896, taking a homestead in July of that year. He was postmaster at Steele, taught school, farmed, and acted as justice of the peace. In 1900 the Republicans nominated him for county assessor, and the people promptly elected him and in that capacity he is serving now.

October 16, 1898, Mr. Bashor married Miss Emma C., daughter of William C. and Rebecca Waide, and to them has been born one child, Vernon B., two years old. Mr. Waide is a farmer and was born in Ohio, in 1845, was a soldier in the Civil war and now draws a pension. The mother is a native of the Buckeye State, born 1844. Besides Mrs. Bashor, they have children as follows: Martha Pope, Dora B. Day, John F., Nelson W., Charles W., Ida Hackett and Alice. Mr. Bashor has the following named brothers and sisters: Mary Bryant, Frederick F., George W., Adam A., Henry W., Noah N., Amanda C., Sarah M. Monsey, Jacob F., Levi M., Nancy Z. Rinehart, Anna Bashor, Suda E. Bashor. Our subject and his worthy wife are members of the Baptist church and devout supporters of the faith. He is a Republican in politics and active in that realm. Mr. Bashor has a good farm of two hundred and forty acres near Steele. His grandfather Bashor lived to be ninety-eight years of age and his grandmother was eighty-eight at her death; his maternal grandparents were also of good age when they died. Mr. Bashor is a man whose kindness and geniality have won him many friends, is a worthy citizen and has the confidence of all.

EZRA BAIRD. A typical pioneer, a staunch man, a patriotic citizen, and as wise and fearless a frontiersman, as entered these wild regions years since, the subject of this sketch is rightly placed with the leading and prominent men of this part of the state. He was born in Schoharie county, New York, on May 11, 1839, being the son of Joseph and Sallie A. (Gifford) Baird, the father being a milling man, died in 1864, while the mother was born in Gilbosh, New York, and died at the age of seventy-five, in 1891. In 1849, the family removed to Broome county, New York, where our subject was educated. On April 1, 1861, he left New York City for San Francisco, arriving there on the twenty-fourth of the same month. The news of the outbreak of the Civil war had preceded him by pony express. He labored in a bakery for one year and on April 1, 1862, started for Lewiston, which he reached on June 15, 1862. He with four companions bought a boat at The Dalles and sailed to Lewiston, fishing and hunting enroute. He was soon on the road to Elk City, but stopped at Newsome, twenty miles this side and mined there, also operating a hotel for four years. In 1871 he bought the express business from Lewiston to Elk City, and the next year put on a stage to Florence and Warren. In 1874 he was elected sheriff of old Nez Perces county and served for three consecutive terms and in 1882 was re-elected. In 1885 Mr. Baird sold horses in Montana and went to Washington, D. C., to see Cleveland inaugurated and visited his old home. In 1886 he sold more horses in Montana, then made another trip to Washington and secured the position of United States marshal for Idaho. He served two years and nine months and then gave place to Dubois, letting the latter have the one year and three months and in Cleveland's time this same man turned against our subject. In 1889 Mr. Baird bought a hotel on St. Reiges river in anticipation of the railroad. In 1893 he again took the Elk City stage and in 1894 he went into mining, having now large interests in Buffalo Hump, Thunder Mountain, and other places, while he has also bought and sold many farms.

In September, 1872, at Mount Idaho, Mr. Baird married Miss Alice, daughter of James and Katherine (Crusin) Odle, pioneers of the west. To this happy union there have been born the following children: Edna, at home in Lewiston; Lewis, at home assisting father. Mrs. Baird was born in Rosenburg, Oregon, and has two sisters and one brother, Mrs. John Rice, Emma Rice, and George. Mr. Baird has two brothers and two sisters; Lewis, William, Sarah Langdon, and May Avery. Mr. Baird has taken thirty-two degrees in the Masonic order and was a charter member of the Mt. Idaho lodge. He is an active worker in the realm of politics and is allied with the Democratic party, being deeply interested in its success. He attends the county conventions and is always alert for the advancement of the Jeffersonian puriniciples. Mr. Baird is also a member of the Pioneer Association, being one of the real builders of the Nez Perces country.

HON. GEORGE A. MANNING. James Manning was of English descent, his ancestors coming to the colonies in 1640, and he served in the Revolution as colonel and sustained a wound at Valley Forge. His son, James, was born in Maine, then a part of Massachusetts, in 1795, and married Jane Bowness, who was born in county Kent, in England, in 1805 and died in Maine, in 1884. Her father, Isaac Bowness, came to America in 1818 and was superintendent of public works in New Brunswick, receiving a large grant of land which is still in the family. To James and Jane Manning were born our subject on November 21, 1836, in Oldtown, Penobscot county, Maine; Cyrus M., who came to the vicinity of Lewiston, in 1862, worked at lumbering, fought in the Nez Perces war, and was killed in a runaway in 1880; Hamilton died when he was young; William C., who came to California with our subject and was companion with him in all the war hardships, being in Libby prison, was promoted to rank of major and died in 1892; John B., died in Oregon; Mrs. M. A. White, in Lewiston; Mrs. Lydia Cushman, in Spokane. Our subject was educated in the Oldtown Academy and came to San Francisco, via Panama, in 1859, and mined two years with good success. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Second California Cavalry, as private and steadily began by merit to rise in rank. He was instrumental in arresting the principal members of the Knights of the Golden Circle on the Pacific coast. He gained the rank of second lieutenant in First California Cavalry and was detailed to organize a battalion to serve in the east. He went east as captain and his five hundred men were the only Californians who fought in the war in the east. He was attached to the Second Massachusetts. He was active in the service until February, 1864, when he was captured and languished in Libby prison, and others. He was one of six hundred officers placed in Charleston to avoid bombardment of the city. He was in various places and was finally paroled at Raleigh and reached his own lines at Wilmington, North Carolina, in March, 1865, and went after Johnston but he surrendered before he was captured. After a most worthy service in the hardest of the fray, in the keenest of the suffering, the worthy subject of this article was mustered out on July 20, 1865, with rank of major and badly wounded in side and leg. He returned to Maine and remained there until December, 1869, when he went to California and then to Lewiston in 1870. He went to lumbering and farming, taking a preemption close to town which he still owns. In 1878 Mr. Manning was a member of the tenth senate of the state. He has been clerk of the United States court, serving in 1880 and 1881. He was deputy United States marshal from 1882 to 1886, and district attorney of Kootenai county in 1888 and 1889. Then he took up real estate business and in 1890 he was appointed by the President one of the National Commissioners of the Columbian Exposition which position he held for eight years, since which time Mr. Manning has been giving his attention to fruit raising, milling and real estate.

On September 29, 1855, Mr. Manning married Miss Susan E., daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Manning) Hawthorne. To them have been born three children, Fred M., proprietor of the Idaho steam laundry, in Lewiston; James A., raising fruit at Lewiston; Charles F., at Post Falls, Idaho. Mr. Hawthorne was born in Massachusetts as were his ancestors for generations back, being a descendant of Nathaniel Hawthorne. Mrs. Manning was born in Bangor, Maine, on December 15, 1836, and was educated in Boston. Her brother Charles is a lumberman in Maine and her brother Frank is a stockman in Colorado. Mr. Manning is a prominent member of the G. A. R. and his wife affiliates with the Methodist church. He is one of the prominent and leading men of our county and is highly respected by all.

JENNIE M. ROBNETT. This lady is the county superintendent of schools and is one of the most efficient and highly esteemed incumbents of the office that Nez Perces county has been favored with. Her general popularity is evidenced by the majority of five hundred that was given her at the first election, being larger than any one ever gained before on the Republican ticket.

Jennie M. Robnett was born in Farmington, Dakota county, Minnesota, on March 10, 1874. Her father Jason M. Herrington, was born near New Nork, in 1843, and his father, Jeremiah Herrington, was a lumberman. Jason M. was too young to enlist in the Civil war but evinced his patriotism in going as bridge constructor for the army. Mrs. Robnett's mother, Lavinia Sykes, was born in Lexington, Ohio, in 1842. Her father, George W., was born in Pennsylvania and he and his wife were pioneers to Minnesota and experienced the troubles of the Fort Snelling

Indian outbreak. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Farmington and Long Prairie, whither the family removed, and then completed the high school course in Lewiston, after which she taught and then graduated from the State Normal. She manifested true pluck and spirit in this commendable labor, demonstrating that some one besides young men can work their way through college. It was in 1892, that her father decided to come west, and being a lumberman, he located at Lewiston, on account of the immense pine forests of Idaho. In 1898 Miss Herrington graduated from the state normal and was elected principal of the Clarkston schools and contrary to her wish she was elected to the position of county superintendent and so well did she discharge its duties that she was re-elected and is now serving her second term.

On February 6, 1900, Miss Herrington was married to Clarence W. Robnett, of Lewiston. He was born August 11, 1872, at Waterbury, Washington, and was educated in Lewiston and Pomeroy. At the age of twenty he accepted a position in the Lewiston National Bank and is now bookkeeper there. Mrs. Robnett has the following named brothers and sisters, Elsworth M., Lafayette, Minnie Herrington, Jerry, Nettie Knight, Nellie Herrington, George, Jason, Lewis, and Gladys. Mr. Robnett has two brothers and two sisters, William M., Mrs. Clara Rainwater, James, and Mamie Akin. To Mr. and Mrs. Robnett there has been born one child, a baby. Mrs. Robinett's uncles, David, George W., Lewis F. and John Sykes, served in the Civil war and the latter died from injuries received there. Mrs. Robnett is one of the highly esteemed ladies of the county and has made a worthy record, demonstrating her ability and energy, while she has the esteem and confidence of all.

LEWIS SANDERS is at the present time one of the capable men of Melrose, having a machine shop, where he is working up a fine patronage. Formerly, he was well known in the milling business but since his property was destroyed by fire, he has turned his attention to mechanics, being skilled in that work. Mr. Sanders is a man of integrity and uprightness and is reckoned one of the substantial and leading citizens of this community.

Lewis Sanders was born in Texas county, Missouri, on February 14, 1866, being the son of Jefferson and Elizabeth (Fry) Sanders, natives respectively of Missouri and Kentucky. The father was a pioneer in Missouri and died there in 1884. The mother still lives in that state. Lewis worked at home as a dutiful son and attended the schools until he was nineteen and then he went to railroading on the M. K. & T. lines. Following this for a time he soon drifted west to San Bernardino. He returned from there to visit in his native place and on August 9, 1889, he came west to Waverly, Washington, where he devoted his attention to farming until 1896. At that date, Mr. Sanders came to the reservation and took land near Melrose and farmed it for five years; at the same time he operated a flour mill which he and his brother-in-law, George Allen, built. For four years they operated the mill with good success and then it was destroyed by fire. Then Mr. Sanders sold his farm property and opened a machine shop in Melrose, where we find him at the present time.

In July, 1891, while in Washington, Mr. Sanders married Miss Frances, daughter of Isaac and Esther Huffman, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Sanders was also born in the Old Dominion State, on February 13, 1866. She has one sister and three brothers living, while Mr. Sanders has three brothers and two sisters. Fraternally, Mr. Sanders affiliates with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. In political matters he is allied with the Democrats and takes an interest in all measures that are calculated for the benefit of the country and its progress.

MORTIMER A. SNYDER, one of the prominent men of Nez Perces county in the industrial and manufacturing line, while also a leader in any line of enterprise and the substantial upbuilding of the country, is eminently fitted for representation in any work that purports to grant mention to the leading men of the county.

Mr. Snyder was born in Montreal, Canada, on January 12, 1855, being the son of Atkinson and Susan (McBean) Snyder, natives of Montreal, and born in 1820 and 1823, respectively. The father was a successful merchant and lumber dealer, of English descent and died in 1862. The mother, who still lives in Canada, was of Scotch descent, being the daughter of Colonel Archibald McBean, who came to Canada from Scotland. He was a large lumber dealer and on account of distinguished service was presented with a handsome sword from Queen Victoria. Our subject remained at home and attended school until the death of his father and then was adopted by his grandfather, McBean. Then he completed his educational training in the Normal school and learned the lumber business, which has occupied his attention continually since that time. He is a thorough master of the business and has operated mills in various sections of the United States and Canada. In 1871 he went to the vicinity of Buffalo, New York, and took charge of a sawmill, but later removed to Bay City, Michigan, and there operated a mill for two years. With his cousin, T. H. Snyder, we next see him in Manitoba, where they erected one of the largest mills of the country and made a financial success of the enterprise. Later he was in the Rockies and handled a mill for the Palisser Company on the Columbia river. In 1883 he went to Seattle and there took charge of the Fremont Milling Company's plant, where he was engaged until April, 1901, when he came to Lewiston for his wife's health. In the following April he came to his present location in Melrose and is now completing one of the finest mills on the reservation, which is fitted with all the latest and best machinery and equipped with a fine dry kiln, the only one in the county.

In 1883 Mr. Snyder married Miss Elvira, daughter of A. R. and Mary Gerald. The father, a native of Iowa, was a merchant. He served in the Civil war under Captain Donaldson. The mother was the daughter of Major Armstrong, an old English soldier who settled in Manitoba in 1847. Mrs. Snyder was born in Winnipeg and has one brother, Mortimer, in Moscow, and two sisters, Jennie McKenzie and Lucy Kingly, both in Moscow. Mr. Snyder has the following brothers and sisters, Robert, in Michigan; Alma Milne, in Montreal. To this worthy couple have been born the following named children, Wilmer G., Howard, Myrtle, and Raymond. Mrs. Snyder is a member of the Congregational church. Mr. Snyder is a member of the A. O. U. W., while in politics he is a Republican. Mr. Snyder is a progressive, intelligent and substantial citizen, a man always allied on the side of progress and upbuilding. He had four cousins in the Civil war, two of whom were killed.

M. A. KELLY, M. D. It gives us pleasure to be permitted to outline the career of the estimable gentleman and pioneer, whose name initiates this paragraph. Doctor Kelly came to Lewiston in 1862 and has been a familiar figure here most of the time until his death, being well and favorably known to all and the recipient of the friendship and good will of all. His father, Alexander Kelly, a farmer by occupation, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1780, and fought in the war of 1812. He came of Irish extraction and died in 1859. The mother of Dr. Kelly was Rachel Cox, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1783, of Scotch descent and she died at the ripe old age of ninety-five, in 1878. On January 4, 1862, Dr. Kelly married Miss Abbie M., daughter of John Gordon, a lumberman of Oldtown, Maine. The wedding occurred in Marysville, California; Mrs. Mounce, of Lewiston, is the daughter of this worthy couple. Mr. Gordon's mother, who was a St. Clair, was born in Oldtown, Maine, and died in East Portland, in 1898. She was a sister of the celebrated Dr. St. Clair of Cleveland, Ohio, and a woman of superior ability and education. Mrs. Kelly was born in Oldtown, Maine, in 1842, and had good educational facilities. She was attending the Catholic school at Marysville, California, when she married Doctor Kelly. A very interesting romance is connected with this marriage. The death of Dr. M. A. Kelly occurred on May 27, 1903.

BENJAMIN F. JACKS. It is a pleasure to be able to chronicle in the history of Nez Perces county the career of one of her leading and public-minded citizens, the gentleman mentioned at the head of this article.

Benjamin F. Jacks was born in Gallia county, Ohio, August 9, 1839, being the son of Solomon and Lavina (Macomber) Jacks, farmers. He was educated in the common schools and remained at home until of age. On July 11, 1861, young Jacks enlisted in Company A, Fiftieth Illinois, under Captain H. P. W. Kramer, in the Second Division and Second Brigade of the Sixteenth Corps of the western army. General Dodge, who is now living at Fort Dodge, Iowa, which town was named for him, was division commander, and General Cooke commanded the brigade. Mr. Jacks was in for service as the following will show. He participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Pittsburg Landing, Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth and the battle of Corinth on October 2, and 3, 1862. Also he was in the battle of Resaca, Dalton and many skirmishes. Mr. Jacks was in charge of two hundred men in the construction of the defense at Memphis, being there in the engineering department. In all this long service and heavy fighting, which continued for three years and three months, Mr. Jacks was always courageous, faithful and found at the post of duty. Space forbids detail, but who can read the list of those terrible battles where he faced he cannon and fought for the country during those awful days of carnage without recognizing in the person of Mr. Jacks one of the worthy veterans whose arms saved our country from dire destruction and preserved to unborn generations the benign influence of our free institutions. On October 28, 1864, at Rome, Georgia, Mr. Jacks was mustered out and returned to his home in Illinois, spending three months in a royal visit and then he turned his face to the prairies of Iowa and took up the civilian's life. There on February 18, 1866, Mr. Jacks married Miss Mary M. Rhodes, at Des Moines. Her father was James S. Rhodes, who was a faithful preacher in the Christian church for thirty-five years. Her mother was Eliza Adams, a native of Kentucky and her parents were pioneers of Illinois.

Mr. Jacks' father built the second house in the now flourishing city of Columbus, Ohio. He was a physician and practiced for thirty-five years and also preached in the Methodist church for fifteen years.

Mr. Jacks had five brothers who fought for the Union and we desire to make a brief notice of them. Augustus, sergeant in Company I, Second Illinois; Henry, twin brother of our subject, sergeant in Company G, Second Illinois Cavalry; George W., private in Company G, Second Illinois Cavalry; John, private in Company I, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, and he was killed in the battle at Big Blue, near Independence, Missouri; Isaac, private in Company I, Tenth Iowa. Henry had a remarkable experience at the battle of Three Springs, Tennesse. Nineteen bullets pierced his clothing and one burned the skin, yet he escaped uninjured. Mr. Jacks was always ready for duty and often took the place of a weaker comrade. He was never in the hospital nor off duty but once when burned.

Mr. Jacks is an elder in the Christian church and also in politics he has been active, having served in every Democratic convention for ten years past. From 1865 to 1870, he farmed in Iowa, then located with his family in Nebraska for five years. The family was nearly killed in a cyclone there and he returned to

BENJAMIN F. JACKS

Iowa. On April 11, 1887, he came to Pendleton, Oregon. On November 7 of the same year he came to Leland, Idaho, and bought a quarter section. Seven years he farmed that and then came to his present place, one mile east and-half mile north from Gifford. Mr. Jacks has a fine place, well improved and his orchard of ten acres is a model in every respect and doubtless the finest one on the reservation. It is replete with points of excellence in every respect and reflects the industry and skill of the proprietor.

Mr. Jacks has four fine sons, who are coming forward to do credit to their worthy father in the walks of life; their names with those of their three sisters, are as follows: Alemeda A., James, William C., Jesse N., Orrin W., Eva J., and Pearl O. Mr. Jacks has every reason to take a pardonable pride in the many achievements of his life, wherin he has manifested great wisdom, faithfulness and integrity. He made a fine record in the war that is a credit to any man, he has displayed the works of his hands in producing as fine an orchad as can be found in this vicinity and he has for the comfort and solace of his golden years, which are beginning to run apace, capable and worthy children, and it is with pleasure that we have been privileged to speak of this worthy and venerable veteran and his gracious and estimable partner in life.

HORACE W. NELSON is a man of sterling worth and honor and has displayed the qualities of substantiality and enterprise in all his ways. Since coming to Nez Perces county in 1880, he has remained here and is well and favorably known throughout its borders.

Horace W. Nelson was born in Marion county, Iowa, on January 18, 1872, being the son of James R. and Mary C. (Ruddell) Nelson. The father is now living on the old homestead in Tammany hollow and the mother died on November 20, 1898. She was the daughter of Elder John M. Ruddell, a pioneer in Adams county, Illinois. Horace was the fifth of a family of ten children, eight boys and two girls. The parents were both born and raised in Adams county, Illinois, and came to Iowa and in 1876, they came thence to Walla Walla via San Francisco and Portland. In 1880 they migrated to Tammany hollow and there our subject was reared and received his education in this county. On Christmas day, 1892, he married Miss Della, daughter of James and Martha A. McKissicks, natives of Tennessee. The father died there and she came to Nez Perces county with her mother in 1890. The mother now lives with her son, John, near Lewiston. Mr. Nelson has a large number of work horses, a fine equipment of farming machinery and handles several hundred acres of land each year. He owned a farm but sold it and now rents land from other parties. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 8, also of the Encampment, both in Lewiston. Mr. Nelson has spent the major portion of his life in Nez Perces county and has gained a standing for honor and real worth of character that is very gratifying. His ancestors were people of a high sense of honor and integrity and this son is in no wise an exception.

HON. EBEN MOUNCE. This well known business man and esteemed gentleman of enviable prestige was born in Linn county, Iowa, on July 19, 1856, being the son of Isaac and Persilla (Timmons) Mounce. The father was a stockman, born in Muscatine, Iowa, in 1821 and is now living in Lewiston. The mother was born in Van Buren county, Michigan, in 1836 and died at Lewiston, in 1900. Our subject attended public school and then went to Western College, at Western, Iowa, and in 1878 came west to Vancouver, Washington. Soon after that he was in Lewiston, where he took a homestead near town and went to raising stock. He devoted himself to this for ten years with excellent success and then sold the stock, retaining the land. He removed to town and was appointed deputy sheriff under J. M. Eakins, for two years and then was nominated on the Democratic ticket and elected, although the county is Republican. Two years as sheriff were spent with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. The law allows only one term in this office and then as Harry Lyden was elected, our subject was made deputy for two years longer. He was also serving at this time as deputy United States marshal, continuing in this until 1897; then he turned his attention to real estate and was connected with the Idaho Investment Company until 1900, when he sold out and formed a partnership with W. H. Skinner, the firm being known as Skinner & Mounce. Mr. Mounce was one of the original directors of the Idaho National Bank and connected with it for some time.

The marriage of Mr. Mounce and Miss Callie J. Rose was solemnized in Iowa. She died in 1890, leaving one child, Lionne, now at home. Mr. Mounce was married a second time to Eva (Kelly) Yantis. She is the daughter of M. A. Kelly, M. D., who is mentioned in another portion of the work. Mrs. Mounce was born in Lewiston in 1866. To this marriage one child was born on June 4, 1897, Gordon. Mrs. Mounce has by her former marriage, one daughter, Frances Yantis, now at home. Mr. Mounce has the following named brothers and sisters, John S., a farmer in this county; Clara, wife of J. L. Goodnight, near Genesee; Lafayette, farmer twelve miles southeast from Lewiston; Hattie, wife of William Ruddell, of this county; Edith, wife of George Ruddell, of this county. Mr. Mounce is a member of the M. W. A. and a charter member of the Lewiston lodge of K. of P. He is an active Democrat and owns considerable property in the town and country. In 1899, the people called Mr. Mounce to the state legislature and although his county was Republican, he gained a majority of ninety-five and made a clean and good record in those halls. He has ever been the friend of education and sought to aid the state normals while in the legislature. He was chairman of the committee on county offices and of the committee on education, of public lands, and was one of the joint committee of house and senate. Mr. Mounce made a good record, did faithful work for his county and for the interests of the state.

WILLIAM H. SKINNER. The father of Charles Skinner came from England to the place where Hartford, Connecticut, now stands in an early day and the city is partly on land that he owned. Charles was born there and married Sarah Orborne, of Maine, then removed to New Brunswick. His son, Alfred, married Abigail Bigelow, to whom was born Henry Skinner, in Kings county, Nova Scotia, on March 26, 1824. On March 26, 1845, this gentleman was united to Ruth A., daughter of James and Mary Illsley, a native of Kings county, Nova Scotia, and to them were born William H. Skinner, the subject of this sketch, on July 24, 1856, in Cornwallis, Nova Scotia, and also James Stanley, now in Lewiston; Alfred L., in Lewiston; Samuel W., John, and Oscar, deceased; Charles A., in Brookings, South Dakota; Bradford, deceased; Mary and Agnes A., both deceased. On April 13, 1873, our subject married Miss Elizabeth A. Laird, who died in July, 1886, leaving five children, Ansel O., at Rathdrum, Idaho; Agnes A., now Mrs. C. L. Wright, at New Hampton, Iowa; Charles H., Guy E., and Mary E., all in Lewiston. On February 29, 1888, Mr. Skinner married Miss Georgia A., daughter of George and Catherine Laird, and a cousin of his former wife. Mrs. Skinner was born in Bradford, Iowa, in March, 1860, and has two brothers, J. G. Laird and J. J. Laird, and E. G. Laird, Mrs. W. R. Longhorn, and Mrs. E. G. Sage, half sisters. To Mr. and Mrs. Skinner have been born the following named children, Gladys I., deceased, Catherine, Ruth A., Rae G., Grant, Helen, and Georgia, all at home. Mr. Skinner was educated in Nova Scotia at Acadia College and at Bradford Academy, in Iowa. He came with his parents to Iowa in 1869. He had taught four years before his advent to Iowa and there for two years he was one of the thorough educators. In 1873 he took a homestead in South Dakota, Brookings county, moving there in 1875. He farmed for a few years and in 1878 he opened a real estate and loan office in Brookings. There he continued until 1900, when he sold and came to Lewiston, where he engaged in contracting, paving the main street in Lewiston. He then went into real estate with Hon. Eben Mounce, the firm was known as Skinner & Mounce. In 1901, Mr. Skinner was elected to the office of mayor of Lewiston, and 1902 reelected without opposition and he is serving in that capacity at the present writing. It speaks highly of his ability and integrity that he was so soon called by the people to this responsible office. While in Brookings he was postmaster from 1891 to 1895, was elected to the office of district clerk and served the county for five years, was secretary of the board of regents of the State Agricultural College and the United States Experiment Station there and was chairman of the board of county commissioners for three years. In all this long public career in important offices it must be said of Mr. Skinner that he has with great faithfulness, and excellent efficiency conserved the interests of all, and in every case the office sought the man and not the man the office. In his position of chief executive of Lewiston he has wrought many beneficial changes and his work is appreciated by a discriminating people. He is a member of the Masons, blue lodge, Royal Arch Chapter, and Knights Templar, also of the A. O. U. W., the M. W. A., and the K. of P. He and his family are allied with the Baptist church and are staunch supporters of the faith. Mr. Skinner is one of the able men of our county, and has wrought with marked wisdom and executive force for its interests; is held in high esteem by all, being a man of enterprise and progressive ideas and dominated by keen perception and practical judgment and sound principles in all of his ways. In addition to his other arduous and many labors, he has found time to study law and is admitted to the state courts.

MILES S. JOHNSON is one of the leading men in Nez Perces county, being at the present time county attorney and one of the most prominent practitioners of the country, a keen student of human nature, thoroughly posted in the lore of the law, and a pronounced success on the public rostrum.

Mr. Johnson was born in Portland, Oregon, on July 2, 1871, being the son of Jasper W. and Mary E. (Post) Johnson. The father is a lawyer, born in Indiana in 1836 and still practicing in Denver, Colorado. He was brigadier general of the Pacific troops at Olympia during the war and was first county judge of Umatilla county, Oregon. The mother was born in New York in 1843, came to Oregon City in 1853, via Panama; her father, John D. Post, was a graduate of Yale College, coming to the coast in the same year that his daughter did, and acted as president of the first college on the coast, it being located at Oregon City. Later he returned to New York and was connected with various institutions of learning. His mother came of the Pierpont stock that founded Yale.

Our subject was reared and educated in Portland, where he remained until the early part of 1892. At that time he went to Aspen, Colorado, being admitted to the bar there, having completed the course of reading that was begun in Portland. He practiced in Colorado and Utah until 1897, having access to all the courts. Then returned to Portland and engaged in the political campaign of 1898, stumping the state for the Republican party. In July, 1898, he came to Lewiston, and opened an office. In 1900 he was nominated for county attorney and after a stubborn fight was elected with three others of his ticket.

On June 5, 1901, Mr. Johnson married Miss Sarah G. Sweet, niece of Edward A. Temple, president of the Bankers' Life Association of Des Moines, Iowa, who raised this lady. The wedding occurred at Chariton, Iowa. Mrs. Johnson, who was born in that town on September 24, 1876, has two sisters, Harriett Sweet, and Mrs. Kate Rose. Mr. Johnson has the following brothers and sisters, Clara W. Knight, Thurston L., Harry B. He is a member of the K. of P. and the Artisans. Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Episcopalian church. Mr. Johnson is strictly a westerner in every true sense of the word, and has a good practice in Lewiston and adjacent country. His grandfather William was with Whitman in the early days, and his aunt, Mrs. Mary Clymer, was with Spalding at the time of the massacre, and narrowly escaped. Hezekiah Johnson, his great uncle, was the first Baptist missionary on the Pacific coast. His uncle, John A. Post, was postmaster for years at Boise, Idaho. Mr. Johnson has a fine home in Lewiston, where his estimable wife presides with gracious dignity, making it a centre of refined hospitality. He has a fine practice and stands high among his confreres as also with the people, being a man of sound principles and with a noble sense of honor and justice.

WILLIAM E. TIMBERLAKE was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, on June 26, 1838, the son of Benjamin E. and Eliza M. (Overstreet) Timberlake. The father was a contractor, born in Madison county, Kentucky, in 1808, and his mother, formerly Mrs. Ball, was also a Kentuckian. The mother of our subject was born in Albermarle county, Virginia, in 1817 and her parents were Virginians. Our subject lived with his parents until he was eighteen years of age, then went to work for himself in the community until twenty-nine years old; he then decided to come west and in 1867 we find him in Walla Walla. In his boyhood days, he had gained his education from a subscription school, walking many miles and then paying for the privilege of learning. This arduous way had hardened him into the traces of life, he was filled with vigor and ready for the occasions presented in the west. He clerked for a time, then went to Lewiston and was soon in the mining town of Warren, where he spent four years clerking, from 1868 to 1872. Then he went to Walla Walla and on May 1, started for Texas, where he bought a herd of cattle, then left there June 20, landing in southern Colorado, October 1, 1872. Wintering there, the next spring found him on the drive again, and on November 13, 1873, he turned his stock on the range in Routt county, Colorado. He handled them there until June 25, 1880, then sold out and came to Lewiston, landing there on July 25. He had been very successful in the cattle business, but in 1870, at the breaking out of the Utes, he lost heavily, and now has a claim of twenty thousand dollars against the government, which is being litigated. Arriving in Lewiston, he purchased the Raymond house, on July 30, 1880, and from that date until March 4, 1901, he was installed as manager of that popular house, and continued as such until March, 1901, when he leased the hotel. Mr. Timberlake has real estate interests in the country and property in Lewiston. At one time he was interested in the Lewiston Mercantile Company but sold out in 1901. At present he has mining interests. At one time Mr. Timberlake was elected mayor of Lewiston but refused to serve, and has always declined the honor of public office, but has labored hard for his friends' election. He is allied with the Democratic party, and laconically remarks that he has been trying to elect a Democratic president.

Mr. Timberlake was married in 1876 and has now one grown daughter. Mr. Timberlake had relatives on both sides of the struggle in the Civil war and was in and out of the lines on both sides and had many thrilling experiences. While in the stock business he was active against the Indians in the outbreak. One of his herdsmen, Mowery by name, was killed by the Indians. Swift Timberlake, of Liberty, Missouri, who for so many years fought the James and Younger boys, and traced them so much, was a noted officer in the entire country, and a cousin of our subject. While Mr. Timberlake was in the stock business, the government sent special agents out from Washington a number of times to quell the Indians and prevent their driving him out of the country.

COMMODORE B. NELSON. Nez Perces county does not come one whit behind in the excellency of her mechanics as she does not in any other line. One to be mentioned especially in this number of worthy workers is named at the head of this page. Mr. Nelson is well known and highly esteemed and is now operating one of the leading blacksmith shops in the town of Lewiston. Being a natural mechanic, he has added to this a wealth of skill and experience that make him one of the leaders in his line, and he is doing a fine business.

C. B. Nelson was born in Adams county, Illinois, on September 3, 1868, being the son of James R. and Mary C. (Ruddell) Nelson. When a child, his parents came to Marion county, Iowa, and in the fall of 1876, he came with them, via San Francisco, to Walla Walla, where the father entered government land and farmed until January, 1880. Then a move was made to the vicinity of Lewiston. Commodore remained with his parents and received his education in these various places.

On September 2, 1888, Mr. Nelson married Miss Melissa, daughter of John and Barbara (Shoup) Tripp. Mrs. Nelson was born in Adams county, Illinois, on July 13, 1868, and came to Nez Perces county the April before she was married. Subsequent to their marriage they removed to Lincoln county and there farmed for a short time, after which they returned to Nez Perces county, then in 1890 went to Rathdrum and Mr. Nelson took up the logging business until 1895. The following year he returned to Lewiston and opened a blacksmith shop and since that time has devoted himself to this important industry. In the beginning of this labor Mr. Nelson was associated with Mr. Nelson, no relation, but in 1897 his partner died and he has operaated the labor alone since. The shop hires one man and part of the time two men and does a fine business. Since the start, Mr. Nelson has done a thriving business and is one of the prosperous men of the town now. He has a fine modern residence of ten rooms at the corner of Second and Prospect avenues, elegantly furnished, over which Mrs. Nelson presides with refined dignity and graciousness, making it one of the very attractive homes of the city. Mrs. Nelson has a most beautiful collection of house plants upon which she took the first premium at the inter-state fair in Lewiston and her artistic ability in arranging them creates a beautiful effect. She has received a second premium also for the choicest selections of house plants. Mr. Nelson is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 8, in Lewiston and is also a member of the Encampment. He has been noble grand in the lodge. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, James Carl and Ruby Olive.

SERAPHIN WILDENTHALER is among the oldest pioneers of Lewiston as well as one of its most substantial citizens. He was born in Baden, Germany, on July 1, 1827. His family sailed from Havre, France, in 1852 and settled in Sandusky, Ohio. Soon thereafter our subject came back to New York and went thence, via Panama, to San Francisco. For eight years he prospected and mined in the Golden state and came thence to northern Idaho in 1862. Hostile Indians attempted to stampede their horses while they were enroute and one morning they found the ground filled with arrows that had been shot at them in the night, the weapons being half buried by their force. In due time they arrived at Lewiston, a city of five thousand, all living in tents. A crossing was effected on the Snake where the ferry is now operated. Every day a pack train wound its way out from Lewiston and the tinkle of their bells was a familiar sound of the day. For three years Mr. Wildenthaler mined at Orofino and in the autumn of 1865, in company with Nye and Harness, took a pack train of flour to Kootenai and there sold it for sixty-five dollars per hundred. Later in the same years he opened a bakery in Lewiston with C. Baker. But the freedom of the hills called him and he sold out to his partner and went to Montana. He mined on Harvey and Ten Mile creek and then went to Arizona, California, Nevada and finally came back to Sweetwater and South Pass. Mr. Wildenthaler joined the workers on the Union Pacific and operated a bakery along the line, moving it sixteen times to keep abreast of the road. He witnessed the laying of the silver rail and the driving of the golden spike that celebrated the completion of the first transcontinental railroad in the United States, which act was done at Promontory Point. Mr. Wildenthaler visited Ohio at this time and two months later came back to Walla Walla. In 1870 he selected Lewiston as his home place and bought a half interest in the grocery and bakery business of Conrad Wintch. This partnership continued until 1878 when Mr. Wildenthaler bought the entire business. He conducted it alone until 1901 when he sold a share to Joseph E. Kincaid. The next year Mr. Kincaid sold his interest to D. O. Powell. The firm still occupies the same place on west Main street, but the old wooden structure has given place to a brick building.

In 1878 Mr. Wildenthaler was united in marriage with Miss Hattie Palmer and they have become the parents of two daughters and one son.

WILLIAM E. SCHNEBLY. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant this estimable gentleman a representation in the history of Nez Perces county since he has not only made a handsome success in business matters in the west, as his fine holding and enterprise will show, but has also achieved a success as an educator; in addition to these two lines of commendable labor he has also done worthy work in the ministerial line, having been exceptionally favored as a missionary in establishing churches of his faith. Mr. Schnebly is a Baptist of the true stock and has preached for many years in the sections where he has resided and many places in the west are deeply indebted to him for sound moral teaching and gospel preaching.

A more minute detail of his life will be interesting and therefore we note at the beginning that he was born in Clarke county, Missouri, on December 14, 1854, being the son of John H. and Mary E. (Northcraft) Schnebly. The father was a farmer, born in Maryland in 1816 and died in 1889. He was sheriff of Clarke county for two terms, was pioneer of that county as he had been of Peoria, Illinois and was a capable and respected man. The mother of our subject was born in Virginia in 1830 and died in 1890. Her father was a pioneer of Clarke county, Missouri, having come thither in the thirties. Our subject received a common school education while at home and remained with his parents who removed to various places. The father served in the Civil war in the quartermaster's department and on account of the scourge of the war removed after it closed to Lafayette, Saline and Knox counties, to the latter in 1869. When William was twenty-five years of age, he saw the need of better education and so labored and attended Edina Seminary. He began his career of teaching at that time and has followed it more or less since. He taught and preached and finally in 1881, came west to Montana and the next year to Garfield county, Washington. He farmed four hundred acres there, taught school, and preached, being as busy a man as could be found in the county. About this time, being thirty, he determined to study in the theological seminary and accordingly went to Louisville, Kentucky, and took a course. He returned to Latah county where he had purchased land and settled to till the same, but also took up missionary work in his church. For three years he was missionary pastor in Kendrick and he established churches at Ping, Washington, Pine Grove, Idaho, Kendrick, Big Meadows, and Lookout. Mr. Schnebly remained in Latah county until the reservation was opened and then took up land where Lookout now stands.

On January 13, 1888, in Knox county, Missouri,

Mr. Schnebly married Lucy A., daughter of Wellington and Amanda A. (Stapeles) Buford, natives of Virginia and pioneers of Lewis county, Missouri, both dying in Knox county. Mr. Buford was a brickmason and for years was judge of Knox county. Mrs. Schnebly was born in Knox county in 1854 and has ten brothers and four sisters. Mr. Schnebly has the following named brothers and sisters, Frances V., Elizabeth V., Arabella, John H., Andrew, and Richard, the last one deceased. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Schnebly, William B. B., at home. Mrs. Schnebly's brother, George, was a soldier in the Civil war. Mr. Schnebly is a Prohibitionist and was nominated by his party for secretary of state. He is an advocate of good schools and morals and always labors for these worthy ends. Mr. Schnebly is a man of business and is handling the telephone system of this section, having been the promoter of it and now owns a two-third interest in the property. In addition to this he has a farm of one hundred and twenty acres at Lookout and one hundred and sixty in Latah county.

HORACE STANLEY. About two miles north from Steele post office is located the estate of Mr. Stanley, which he secured from the government by his homestead right, filing on the land in August, 1897. Since that time Mr. Stanley has been laboring assiduously in the good work of improving and opening his place, and he is now the owner of a fine farm, with good improvements, stock, orchards, buildings and so forth, all of which is the result of his industry and wisdom, for he came to the country in a "prairie schooner," which was the sum total of his assets at that time.

Horace Stanley was born in Guthrie county, Iowa, on October 17, 1865, being the son of Samuel C. and Emma (Newman) Stanley, natives of Indiana, where also they were married. When Horace was four years of age the family went to Jasper county, Missouri, and later to Berry county. It was 1877 when they went to Cherokee county, Kansas, and in the spring of 1888 they migrated to San Diego county, California, where the father went to raising fruit.

In Cherokee county, Kansas, Mr. Stanley married Miss Mary, daughter of William and Abigal (Lee) Jessup. The wedding occurred on November 22, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Jessup were natives of Indiana and were married there. Subsequent to that event they removed to Wayne county, Iowa, where Mrs. Stanley was born on April 14, 1864. In 1866 the family went to Cherokee county, Kansas, and there her mother died in 1877, and her father passed away in 1885. In 1884 Mr. Stanley had taken a trip to Yamhill county, Oregon, for the purpose of exploring the country, and in 1886 he returned to his home in Kansas. In 1889 he came with his family to where his father dwelt in California, and thence in 1890 to Yamhill county again. In 1896 he migrated from that county to Latah county, and in 1897 came to his present place. He bought the right of a squatter and took a quarter section at that time. Mr. Stanley has been active in the endeavors of building up the country and has always labored for good schools and good government. He has rendered excellent service as director and in all matters for the building of good roads and so forth he has also been zealous. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley are devout members of the Friends church and are real exemplifications of the principles of the faith. To this worthy couple there have been born five children,—Emma L., born October 7, 1889; Carl J., born October 22, 1891; Ethel A., born July 27, 1893; Howard S., born June 10, 1895; Warren N., born July 7, 1897.

SIMEON J. GILLMORE. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to incorporate in the history of Nez Perces county an epitome of the career of the esteemed gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. He was born in Pulaski county, Indiana, on February 27, 1863, being the son of James and Mary A. (Rumbough) Gillmore. When a child he went with his parents to Michigan and there he was reared until thirteen, when he began the labors of life for himself. He wrought in different parts of Michigan in logging and timber work and also did much dock building on the lakes. In 1891 he came to Tacoma and engaged in logging, and the next year he came to the Okanogan country, where he delved for the riches of the mining regions. Later we see him in this same work in Shoshone county, Idaho. There, also, he was occupied in locating timber claims, in which he was skillful. When the reservation was opened he came hither and located on a choice quarter section of land, three miles north from Mohler. To the improvement and opening of this he has devoted himself with an energy and skill that have brought their sure reward of a good competence and a fine and valuable farm. Mr. Gillmore states that when he landed on his present place he had but ten days' rations and he was obliged to continue for three years, nearly, before he got any returns of any value from the farm. But he was determined to make a valuable estate and he has been very successful in this labor. He has plenty of implements of all kinds for the cultivation of the farm, has it all tilled, fenced and bearing the fruits of the field, while a good house, orchard and other improvements are in evidence. Mr. Gillmore is a member of the W. of W. and is a reliable and honorable man, who is deserving of the generous approval and esteem that are bestowed upon him from his fellows.

JAMES R. LYDON. Since this volume is purporting to grant consideration to the leading citizens of Nez Perces county, therefore it is fitting that the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article should be mentioned herein, since also he is a man of good standing, uprightness and ability, and has spent most of his days in this and adjacent counties. James R. was born in San Francisco, on November 15, 1865.

He was elected city treasurer in 1891, and that and various other employments occupied him until 1895, when he was appointed deputy sheriff under his brother, Harry Lydon. Two years later, this labor being finished, he went into the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and continued there until 1900, when the people called him to act as county treasurer. He was nominated on the Democratic ticket, and although many of that ticket suffered defeat he was elected by a handsome majority. Since January 1, 1901, he has filled that office with credit to himself and acceptability to the constituency.

OSCAR B. CHESLEY is one of the later settlers in Nez Perces county, but he is a pioneer in the place where he now resides, having come to Rock Creek and started the town of Chesley in 1899. He established a general merchandise store, got a post office located, and since that time has been doing a good business, and in addition to those industries mentioned he also operated a hotel. Mr. Chesley is a man of ability and enterprise, and has shown himself a valuable citizen. In political matters he is active, always taking part in the affairs of state. In his walk he is a man of integrity and has won the good will and esteem of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

Oscar B. Chesley was born in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on March 15, 1864, being the son of Israel and Jemima (Hendricks) Chesley. The family dates back for many centuries and the family tree is without break in all this long time. The Chesleys were always noted in the military actions of their day and took a prominent part in the Indian and Colonial wars.

The original emigrant, Philip Chesley, came to America from Dover, England, and was among the founders of Dover, New Hampshire, in 1642. The descendants scattered from this point, and in 1758 Camuel Chesley, who joined the colonial forces, went to Halifax and the following year settled on a grant of land in Nova Scotia allowed for military services. The father of our subject descended from this branch of the family and was born at Granville, Nova Scotia, and later emigrated to Canada, finally settling on his new farm at Campbellsport, Wisconsin, in 1850, where he still resides. The mother of Oscar was a descendant of the early Pennsylvanians and was born in that state; later moved to Wisconsin, where she was married, lived and finally died, in 1900.

Oscar was educated in the Fond du Lac high school and then taught for several terms; in 1887 he came to the Black Hills country, South Dakota, and settled at Oelrichs, where he edited and published the Oelrich's Times, a weekly newspaper. He also acquired title to over four hundred acres of land there, which he still owns. Mr. Chesley was elected clerk of courts of Fall River county, South Dakota, on the Republican ticket, and also served an unexpired term of another incumbent.

On May 30, 1898, near Omaha, Nebraska, Mr. Chesley married Miss Minnie J., daughter of Charles G. and Louisa (Roberts) Laing. The father came to the country where Omaha now stands when there were but two houses, and he fought the Indians several times. He was a native of Canada, of Scotch extraction. The mother of Mrs. Chesley was born in Illinois. Mrs. Chesley's brothers and sisters are Prince C., Lizzie Graham, and Rose, Cyrus, Margaret, Lena, Kirk, at home, in Springfield, where Mrs. Chesley was born. Her uncle William and his three sons were killed near Oberlin, Kansas, by the Indians. Mr. Chesley has two brothers, Walter W. and Arthur D. Mr. Chesley is a member of the M. W. A. and of the I. O. O. F., while he and his wife are church people. He was admitted to the practice of land law in South Dakota. He had four uncles who fought for the Union, and two were killed in battle, one died before he came out of the war and one came home and died from the effects of his hardships. Mr. Chesley is one of the leading men of his section, and his ability in business matters, his careful management of the affairs of life entitle him justly to this position. In the fall of 1902 Mr. Chesley was nominated by the Republicans to the office of probate judge.

CAPTAIN LOUIS D. SCHATTNER is one of the veterans of the Philippine struggle, being captain of Company B, First Idaho Infantry. His company was detailed for the service of the Philippines and he was active in the battle of Manila. Shortly after this he was taken sick and was sent home after serving there for eleven months.

Our subject was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, on October 1, 1858, being the son of David A. and Ursula (Kast) Schattner. The father was a highly educated gentleman, was in the military in Germany, was born on January 6, 1833, and died in 1895. He held the permanent position of foreman of the grand jury and was a prominent and highly esteemed man. The mother was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, also, in 1836, and died in 1872, being a thoroughly educated lady of distinction. Our subject was educated in the high school of his native place, and then graduated from the Polytechnic schools. He came to America in 1873 and soon established himself in the drug business in Baltimore, but later went to Texas, following the same business. Soon after we see him in Butte, Montana, mining. He next enlisted in the regular army, Company G, First Cavalry. For ten years he served in the western department. He was engaged in the Nez Perce war, with the Bannocks and the Sheepeaters, the latter on the Salmon river. After his honorable discharge he went to Billings, Montana, and then to Spokane, Washington, and later opened a drug business in Kendrick. After the fire there he established himself in Leland and was there appointed postmaster. It was 1895 that he came to Lewiston; then again we find him in Montana, in the drug business. After his return from the Spanish-Philippine war he went to Lewiston and opened a drug store, which, however, he recently sold, and is now engaged in life insurance. The brothers and sisters of our subject are Katherine, Fredericka, Richard A., Rosa, Marie, all in Germany. The children of Mr. Schattner are named as follows: Gretchen and Guy W. Mr. Schattner is a thirty-second degree Mason and in politics a Republican. He has never accepted nomination, but has always worked faithfully for the election of the other good men. He has property in Lewiston and in Leland. On July 25, 1902, he was appointed United States deputy marshal, by (Marshal) Hon. R. Rounds.

ALFRED W. KROUTINGER. This well known and representative business man and financier of Nez Perces county is today holding one of the most responsible offices within the gift of the people of the county, that of sheriff, and he is discharging the duties thus incumbent upon him with efficiency and a display of uprightness and wisdom.

Alfred W. was born in St. Louis, Missouri, on July 29, 1859, being the son of Adolph W. and Anna W. (Jacobs) Kroutinger. The father was a major in the regular army for thirty-five years; was born in 1830 and died in Idaho county, Idaho, in 1893. His ancestors were military men in Germany; he came to the United States, enlisted in the army and was retired in 1889. The mother was born in England on March 3, 1842, and came to the United States in infancy. Alfred was educated in the Chickering Institute, in Cincinnati, and the Washington University, in St. Louis. In 1877, when our subject was twenty years of age, he came with his father, who had been ordered to quell the Nez Perces, to central Idaho. He at once began bookkeeping for John P. Vollmer & Company. Several years were spent in this labor and then he was selected as cashier for the First National Bank in Lewiston, and was later appointed receiver in the United States land office by President Cleveland, and served from 1892 to 1896. He was also deputy auditor and recorder from 1884 to 1888, and the last two years of this period he was city treasurer. In 1896 he acted as practicing attorney before the United States land office and continued in that capacity until 1900, when he received the nomination on the Democratic ticket for sheriff of Nez Perces county, and was elected. He is still filling that office in a creditable manner.

On May 3, 1881, in Lewiston, Mr. Kroutinger was married to Miss Anna E. Vollmer, a sister of John P. Vollmer, who had raised this sister after the death of her parents. Mrs. Kroutinger was born on November 11, 1864, at Indianapolis, Indiana; her brother and sister are as follows: J. P. Vollmer and Mrs Corine Truscott. Mr. Kroutinger has no brothers or sisters. Our subject and his estimable wife have become the parents of one child, Anna L., who was nineteen years of age on January 15, 1902, is a graduate of the high school at Lewiston, and a very proficient musician. Mr. Kroutinger is a member of the Masons, Scottish Rite Chapter, and has taken all the degrees in that order but one. He and his family affiliate with the Episcopal church. Mr. Kroutinger is active in politics and is also a vigilant business man. He is in partnership with B. F. Morris, one of the best known men in Idaho, and they handle considerable real estate.

JOHN F. POWERS has been a resident of Nez Perces county since February 5, 1902, at which date he purchased his present farm, four miles southwest from Melrose. But he has lived in the west all of his life, and a large portion has been spent in the vicinity of Nez Perces county. He was born in Saltese Junction, Washington, on December 19, 1874, being the son of William L. and Rebecca (Davis) Powers. The father was born in Pike county, Illinois, in 1842, and now lives on the Sound. The mother was born in Iowa in 1844. In 1853 the father came to the Willamette valley and seventeen years later removed with his family to Saltese, in the Palouse country. Our subject was born there, being the first white child born in the northern part of Whitman county. The father did merchandising and was one of the most successful salesmen in the entire eastern part of the state. He and his brother, John G. Powers, now of Palouse City, were wealthy and influential merchants and were partners for years. The father retired from the store and dealt in timber and later went into the stock business extensively. In 1896 he sold out and went to southern California for his health. Our subject remained at home in attendance at school and assisting his father until of age, and then started for himself. He went to southern California with his father, but after three years in the vicinity of San Diego and tiring of the country, he returned and settled in Palouse. Later he came to Nez Perces county, as noted above.

On June 5, 1895, Mr. Powers married Miss Mary Bures, in Palouse. Her parents died when she was an infant. Mrs. Powers was born in Bohemia, on September 22, 1874, and came to the United States in 1878. She has one brother, Benjamin Bures, in Spokane. Mr. Powers has one sister and three brothers,—Benjamin, Clifford, William and Annie Kincaid. To Mr. and Mrs. Powers there have been born two children, Delmar and Nelson. Mr. Powers is a member of the W. of W. In political affairs he is an active Republican, attending the conventions and caucuses. He has been clerk of the school board for some time and he is always on record for good schools and the betterment of educational facilities.

WILLIAM C. WAIDE was a stanch supporter of the flag in the time of internal strife and did valiant service in this capacity. He has since proved himself as worthy in civil life and is now one of the prosperous farmers on Central ridge, being about nine miles southeast from Peck.

William C. Waide was born in Mason county, West Virginia, on December 22, 1843, being the son of Samuel and Mary (Greenlee) Waide. He was reared on a farm and educated in the log cabin school houses of that day, and when the war was at its height he enlisted in Company I, Ninth West Virginia Volunteers. His father had enlisted in the Ninth also, but was obliged to retire from active service on account of his advanced age. He was a colonel in the state militia. Our subject started his military career on February 25, 1864, and fought at Clyde Mountain, Winchester, Lynchburg, Fisher Hill, Charlotstown and was almost constantly in action all the time he served. He was in the Eighth Corps under General Crook and later under General Sheridan. He was captured three different times, but was not in prison. He served until the close of the war and was then honorably discharged to return to quiet life in his native place. He farmed for a time there and then moved to Lawrence county, Ohio, where he married Miss Rebecca Suiter, on February 29, 1867. Her parents were William and Martha Suiter. Mr. Waide removed to Miami county, Ohio, in 1870, and in 1885 he came to Portland and farmed close to that city for a decade and more. He sold his farm of one hundred and twenty acres there in 1898 and came to his present location, which he secured as a homestead. He has good improvements, raises general crops and some stock and is on the list of the prosperous farmers of his section. He and his estimable wife are members of the German Baptist church and are devout in the path of the faith they have espoused. Eight children have been born to this household, named as follows: Mrs. Martha Pope, of Butte, Montana; Mrs. Dora Day, of near Southwick; John F., at home; William N., near Russell, Idaho; Mrs. Emma Bashor, in this county; Charles E., of Yamhill county, Oregon; Mrs. Ida Hackett, near Steele; and Mary A.

JAMES H. WANN. Among the capable and successful business men of Nez Perces county we are constrained by force of right to mention this gentleman, whose name initiates this paragraph, and who is well known as a merchant at Spalding and an orchardist.

James H. Wann was born in Lawrence county, Missouri, on November 11, 1849, being the son of Daniel and Sarah J. (Hague) Wann. The father was a farmer, born in Tennessee, in 1815 and died in 1850. He was one of the very first settlers in Lawrence county, Missouri, was county commissioner and chairman of that body. The mother was born while her parents were crossing the ocean from Scotland to the United States, in 1818. Her parents were both Scotch, the father being born in Edinburgh, a descendant of highlanders of note, and himself being a graduate of Edinburgh University. Our subject remained at home until of age. The mother came to Cass county in 1856 and to Kansas City in 1862, she having married a second time a gentleman by the name of A. J. Farmer. At the time of his majority, James went into the mercantile business with his brother, Dr. J. B. Wann, in Lawrence county. Ten years were spent there and then he went to Halltown and started a store and a drug store in Mt. Vernon. In 1881 he sold the entire business interests there and came west and in company with his brother he went to farming extensively in Garfield county, Washington. Later our subject went to Pataha and embarked in the hardware business on his own responsibility. He did well and remained there until 1887, when in October of that year he went to Camas prairie. He took up the mercantile business there and in the fall of 1892 he was elected county assessor and tax collector of Idaho county on the Democratic ticket. From 1888 to 1896 he was engaged in raising sheep and cattle, which he sold and bought a fruit ranch in the vicinity of Spalding. He now handles this in connection with a general merchandise store and assistant postmaster.

In 1871 Mr. Wann married Miss Sarah F. Neil, in Greene county, Missouri. Her parents, Benjamin A., and Nancy (Wallace) Neil, were natives of Tennessee and the mother of Scotch extraction. Mrs. Wann has one sister and three brothers, named as follows: B. G. Neil, Prior, David B., Jane West. Mr. Wann has two brothers, John B., a physician in Missouri; Daniel J., at Pullman, Washington. The following children are the fruit of this marriage: Charles A., merchant at Mohler, Idaho; William D., at home; Loren B., in Culdesac; Della O'Conner, in Spokane; James Norman, at home. Mr. Wann is a Mason, having taken the highest degree obtainable. He is a notary public, handles cattle in addition to his other labors and is an active Democrat, and good man. His brother, William M., was killed in the Civil war.

WILLIAM M. EVANS. At Willola, in Nez Perces county, is located the enterprising gentleman mentioned above, and there he is the present incumbent of the postoffice, does a general merchandise business and handles a ferry, the last two industries in partnership with his brother-in-law, Charles W. Wright.

William M. Evans was born in Linn county, Oregon, in 1867 and remained with his parents until 1886. Being then about nineteen, he started for himself and various employments engaged him for two years. Then stirred by the tales of wealth in the British Columbia regions, he mined two years in the vicinity of Nanaimo. After this venture he was employed for some time in railroading and bridge construction. In 1893 he made his way to Juliaetta, hired land from his brother, mention of whom is made in another portion of this volume, and there farmed for three years. At that time, the reservation was opened and he came to his present placed and filed on a quarter section. In connection with his brother, Mr. Evans built roads for the ferry which they operated and later he bought the ferry from his brother and is still operating it. In addition to this and the merchandise mentioned above, Mr. Evans has been busy in the sawmill business, erecting the first mill on the reservation. Two years he devoted time and energy to this industry and made a success of it as is the custom of Mr. Evans in any line that he attempts.

On August 3, 1894, Mr. Evans married Miss Minnie M. Wright, daughter of William A. and Ella (Emrick) Wright, of Dublin, this county. Mrs. Evans was born in Columbia county, Washington, on December 19, 1878. To this happy union there have been born three children, Lola, Willie and Henry.

Mr. Evans and his gracious wife are among the most valuable additions to society in this section. They are highly respected people, and the business ability, integrity, energy and wisdom manifested by Mr. Evans have given him a place of influence and prestige, while he has also gained a gratifying success in his business enterprises.

In politics, Mr. Evans is a Republican and is an active worker in the county conventions, and always stands by his convictions. The postoffice was named for his two children, Willie and Lola.

CHARLES W. WRIGHT. The stirring and genial young man mentioned at the head of this article is one of the successful business men of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, being now equal partner in the mercantile and ferry business owned by Evans & Wright at Willola.

Charles W. Wright was born in January 2, 1874, being the son of William A. and Ella (Emerick) Wright, natives of Ohio and Washington county, Oregon, respectively. They now live at Dublin, this county. Our subject has the following brothers and sisters, Harry S.; Henrietta, deceased, wife of Robert Hall, of Latah county, who had two children, Roy E. and Vera; Earl, with parents; Myrtle, wife of William Evans; and Cora, wife of Oliver Anderson of this county. He has also one adopted sister, May, with his parents. Charles was educated in the public schools in Dayton, Washington, graduating at the age of nineteen. Then he farmed for a time and in 1894, came to the reservation and rented Indian land, handling three hundred acres for three years. After this he located a homestead sevn miles west from the town of Nezperce and that was the scene of his labors until 1902, when he sold out and after a visit to Washington, he returned to the county and purchased a half interest in Mr. Evans' business at Willola, where we find Mr. Wright at this time rapidly building up a good patronage. His skill, good judgment, business tact and kind and pleasant ways have added strength to the firm and the partners are now the recipients of a first-class patronage.

On September 30, 1893, Mr. Wright married Miss Annie, daughter of Elijah and Minerva (Farris) Davidson, pioneers of Oregon. Mrs. Wright was born in Josephine county, Oregon. Four children have been born to them, Charles R., Jesse J., Levina A. and an infant. Mrs. Wright has the following brothers and sisters: Winter L., in Bandon, Oregon; Summer, in Culdesac; Thomas B., at Bandon, Oregon; Frank F., at Grants Pass, Oregon; Pearl, single, living with her parents. Mr. Wright is a member of Phinney Camp No. 492, of the W. W. at Fletcher. He and his wife also belong to the auxiliary. Mr. Wright is a Republican in political matters, but is not desirous of personal preferment.

Mr. Wright's eldest son had eleven grandparents at one time and was the fourth generation living.

JESSE H. FANSLER was born in Randolph county, West Virginia, on April 25, 1849. This was later Tucker county, West Virginia. He was reared on a farm and educated in his native place, where he remained until 1887. Then came a journey to eastern Tennessee and Mr. Fansler farmed there for two years. After this he went to Knoxville, Tennessee, and acted as salesman for a furniture house, then was with the Eureka soap company for a time. He left Knoxville in May, 1892, and landed in Lewiston on June 6. He engaged with his brother in cutting cord wood and then went at the business himself and also took his present place as a homestead. This was in 1897 and since then it has been the family home.

In Randolph, West Virginia, in 1879, Mr. Fansler married Miss Amanda Roy, a native of Virginia. Eight children have been born to this union, Camden B., Zadie, Zernie, Manning G., Jessie, Roy, Golden, William T. On May 10, 1900, Zadie married Charles C. Miles.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, Henry Fansler, was a drummer boy in the Revolution. He later married Miss Stone, a native of Pennsylvania. Their son, named Solomon, was born in 1800 in Randolph county, Virginia, and married Miss Flanagan, a native of the same county, and they became the parents of the subject of this sketch. The mother's ancestors were among the first settlers in New Jersey. Mr. Fansler is at the present time engaged in the mercantile business at Webb, Idaho.

BERTRAM W. TEFFT. The thrifty farmer and stockman, who is mentioned at the head of this article, is one of the builders of the reservation country, having taken his present home place about two miles northwest from Morrow at the opening of the section to settlement. He has persevered here in the good work of improvement and is now a leading man of the section.

Bertram W. Tefft was born in Elgin, Illinois, on December 2, 1867, being the son of Thomas W. and Emily (Folle) Tefft. The mother was born in Elgin and died about 1868. The father was born in New York state on October 30, 1824. He went to California in 1849, when he went to Elgin. He filled the office of chief of police there and was in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-First Illinois Infantry and now lives in Elgin. Our subject received an academic education, and when nineteen came to Nez Perces county and settled on unsurveyed land and proved up later. He took his present place at the opening of the reservation and has now a fine six-room residence, a first-class barn, and other improvements to match. He was here when there were but four votes cast in his precinct, thus being a real pioneer in this section.

On this prairie, on June 22, 1892, Mr. Tefft married Miss Catherine, daughter of Lemuel and Sarah A. Hendrickson, who came to Oregon in 1843. Mrs. Tefft's uncle, Milton Doan, was the first white child born in Multnomah county. Her father died in the Potlatch country in 1887 and her mother died May 16, 1901. Mr. Tefft has the following brothers and sisters, Harvey W., Albert P. and Emma Mead. Mr. Tefft has brothers and sisters named as follows: Margaret Slaven, William, Elizabeth Miller, Grace Sharp, Mary Park, Nellie Stevens, Benjamin. Five children have been born to this couple, Victor, Evelyn, Ruth, Loris and Ray. Mr. Tefft is a Democrat and a progressive and public-minded man, well liked and of good standing.

JACOB N. GWIN is a man of stirring activity and integrity, and has made a good name for himself in Nez Perces county and adjacent sections; he is deserving of consideration in the volume that mentions the leading men of the county. He was born in Washington county, Tennessee, on March 4, 1853, being the son of James K. and Mary A. (Whistler) Gwin. The father was of Welsh extraction, was born in Tennessee and died in 1874, having wrought at tilling the soil. The mother was born in Tennessee, in 1824, and now lives in this county. Her father, Jacob Whistler, was born in Virginia, and her mother, a Miss Swecker, was a native of that state also. The Swecker family were pioneers of Virginia, and some of its members were massacred by the Indians. Mr. Whistler died at the age of eighty-five and his wife was eighty-seven when she passed away. Our subject remained at home working on the farm and gaining a good education, both from the public schools and Washington College, until manhood's estate. At twenty he came to Trinidad, Colorado, with his parents. There he was interested in carpentry. They made the trip from Kit Carson, Colorado, to that city with Mexican freight outfits. Trinidad was his home until 1883; during that time he had taught school and been interested in various businesses. Then he came to Washington, settling near Dixie, where he assisted in threshing wheat that yielded forty bushels per acre without rain after May 12. He taught school after settling there, then removed to the vicinity of Garfield, and later came to Moscow to educate his children. There he was chosen to preach in the German Baptist denomination, and at this he labored faithfully for some years, also doing carpenter work. In 1896, on account of bronchial trouble, he went to Ashland, Oregon, with team, where he found relief. Three years were spent there and then he came to Nez Perces county and bought land. On the election of Mr. B. F. Bashor to the assessorship of the county, in 1902, our subject became deputy, and is acting in that capacity now and giving general satisfaction.

The marriage of Mr. Gwin and Miss Margaret J., daughter of Jacob and Anna (Arnold) Nead, was solemnized in Tennessee on January 5, 1881, by J. B. Pence. They have the following children: Ethel A., Laura M., Dora A., Emma J., Edgar J., deceased, Bertha A., Lois, deceased. Mrs. Gwin was born in Washington county, Tennessee, on December 16, 1854, was educated there and taught school. Her father was born in Virginia in 1829 and died in 1862, while her mother was born in Virginia in 1828 and died in Tennessee in 1880. Mrs. Gwin had three uncles in the Confederate army. Her brothers are deceased and are named as follows: James, Benjamin and Jacob; and one sister, Cornelia Hopkins, who lives at Dayton, Washington, and two—Mary and Rebecca—are deceased. Mr. Gwin has brothers and sisters as follows: Phoebe I. Sipe, Mary J. Bashor, Joseph A., James F., Margaret E. Boyles, Emma M. Whitney. Mr. and Mrs. Gwin are members of the German Baptist Brethren church and are devout supporters of their faith. They have a good ranch in Nez Perces county and have raised as high as eighty-six and one-half bushels of grain per acre.

FRED RUCHERT is one of the sturdy and enterprising men whose nativity is in the Fatherland, but whose spirit and energy have led to this prosperous country. His estate lies two and one-half miles east from Lapwai and he is numbered with the substantial and reliable men of the community.

Fred Ruchert was born in Prussia, on July 15, 1842, being the son of Charles and Minnie (Croppe) Ruchert. The father was a carpenter, born in Prussia in 1801, and died in 1874. He was in the German army. The mother was born in 1808, and died in 1873. Our subject was educated in the schools of his own country and then farmed there until 1872. At that time he decided to come to the United States and accordingly we see him in Door county, Wisconsin, soon working with his brother in the timber. He bought a piece of land the second year, cleared it and settled to farming there for fourteen years. Then he sold out and came to Wallowa county, Oregon, paying attention to farming there also. Later he was in the Grande Ronde valley and there farmed and raised stock until 1898. He sold again and settled next time in Anatone, Asotin county, Washington. He did well in the stock business there until he was burned out by some jealous companies. Then he was forced to leave that section and purchased land in Nez Perces county as mentioned above.

In Germany, on October 2, 1872, Mr. Ruchert married Miss Minnie, daughter of John and Minnie Grabbart, and the next day they started for the United States. Mr. Grabbart was an attendant on a wealthy duke in Germany. Mrs. Ruchert was born in Germany in 1849, and has one brother and three sisters,— Morris, Karalina, Austina and a baby. Mr. Ruchert has the following brothers and sisters: Theodore, who participated in the Danish, Austrian and Prussian war in 1864, in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the Franco-Prussian war in 1870-72; Charlie, Christ and Sophia. To Mr. and Mrs. Ruchert there have been born eight children,—Frank, Lizzie, Albert, Otto, Eddie, Emma, Henry and William. Mr. Ruchert was in the Austro-Prussian war. In political matters he is allied with the Republicans and always takes an intelligent interest in political matters. He and his family are adherents of the Lutheran church.

ARTHUR SKELTON. This young and industrious farmer resides five miles southeast from Peck, on a quarter section that he secured by his homestead right, filing on it in January, 1897. Since that time Mr. Skelton has devoted himself to its culture and improvement, and he has a good farm and tills it in a skillful manner.

Arthur Skelton was born in Calhoun county, Alabama, on June 5, 1872, being the son of James J. and Mattie J. (Stewart) Skelton, natives, respectively, of Calhoun county and St. Clair county, Alabama. They were married in the latter county and resided in the former, where Mr. Skelton was a furniture dealer and also county treasurer. He served in the Civil war, all through. The grandfather, Stewart, of our subject, was a general in the Confederate army. Arthur was educated in the common schools and the state normal at Jacksonville, and in 1892 he went west to Texas and Colorado. The following year we find him in Walla Walla, then later in Colfax, and soon in Pierce City, where he sought the smiles of fortune in mining labors. Later Mr. Skelton visited Lewiston and afterwards settled in the Potlatch country until the date mentioned, when he came and secured his present home place.

On October 14, 1896, Mr. Skelton married Miss Mary E., daughter of James V. and Elva V. Cotter, natives of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. They came to Latah county in 1888, and Mr. Cotter died in 1894, but his widow is still living, making her home in Nez Perces county. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Skelton, Daphne L., born December 11, 1898. Mrs. Skelton was born in Isabella county, Michigan, on April 8, 1876. This young couple have done well in this county, are highly respected and are always found allied on the side of good government, progression and sound principles, being possessed of admirable integrity, affability and wisdom, which bring to them the good will and approval of all.

WILLIAM B. REESE. From a worthy family of excellent quality came the subject of this sketch, a popular and esteemed citizen of Nez Perces county. Dr. Reese is one of the talented and leading professional men of the county and has achieved distinction in different lines of enterprise, ever manifesting the happy qualifications of which he is richly possessed, and displaying uprightness and integrity in all his ways.

Mr. Reese was born in Hendersonville, North Carolina, on February 4, 1849, being the son of William and Margaret C. (Plumblee) Reese. The father was born in North Carolina in 1807, and was a carriage maker. While he owned slaves, he never would buy or sell them. He was of French and Welsh extraction and died in 1884 with pneumonia. His father was a soldier in the Revolution. The mother of our subject was born in North Caroline in 1815 and died in 1890. William B. remained with his parents until of age, gaining a good education and being employed with his father. At the age of twenty-five he was admitted to the Methodist conference and was a traveling minister for seven years. At the end of that time he was forced to abandon his calling on account of throat trouble. He immediately went to studying medicine and graduated from the Vanderbilt University in 1882, then went to practicing medicine in Mitchell county and five years later, when his father died, he went to the old home to care for his mother, and there practiced for two years; then he went to New York city and took a post graduate course in the Polyclinic hospital. He then closed his business in the south and came to Genesee, Latah county, arriving there in April, 1891. Three years were spent there in successful practice, and then a move was made to Leland, where we find him in his profession until 1900, when the people called him to act as probate judge of Nez Perces county. The election was a stubbornly fought contest, he being on the Democratic ticket, but as he was not a strong partisan he received much Republican support. He is now in the city of Lewiston and fulfilling the duties of that important office with credit and distinction.

The marriage of Dr. Reese and Miss Anna, daughter of Rev. Andrew and Lucinda (Phillips) Robertson, was solemnized on February 6, 1888, in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and three children have been born to them—T. Caroosso, in Lewiston; John M. and Willie, at home. Mrs. Reese was born in Georgia and her father in the same state, while her mother was born in North Carolina. The father was a Methodist minister, and his father was also a minister in that church, and died in his eighty-fourth year, having been a soldier in the war of 1812. Mrs. Reese's grandfather Phillip was born in 1788, died in 1889, and his wife also lived to a good age. This veteran was married without a dollar, became the father of eighteen children, left them each a farm and died with plenty himself. He handled his own farm until ninety-seven years of age. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Reese are: Christopher B., Joseph, John W., Reuben, Bright, deceased, Clara Stover, Hattie Richie. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Reese are: John, deceased; James, Henry C., deceased; Thomas C.; Solomon; Mary Dunlap; Ellen Burges. Judge Reese is a past master Mason with membership at Genesee. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church, South. He is a stanch Democrat and active in the realm of politics. He owns property in North Carolina and at Genesee, and farms near Orofino. His brothers, James and Henry, fought in the Civil war and the latter was killed at the battle of Seven Pines, while the former languished one year in the war prison at Elmira, New York.

JAMES W. McFADDEN. This venerable defender of the flag on many fields of blood is one of the substantial citizens of Nez Perces county, residing two miles south from Southwick, and in his private life, as in the service of his country, he has manifested the true courage born of principle, and has been dominated by the wisdom that has materialized the enterprises of business into a goodly competence for the golden years of his active and well spent life.

James W. McFadden was born in Venango county, Pennsylvania, on December 5, 1838, being the son of John and Mary McFadden. James W. grew up on a farm, received a good education and when the Civil war broke out enlisted in Company H, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry. Three years later, when his time had expired, he re-enlisted in the same company and served until the close of the war—ten months. He was in the batles of Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, besides many others. His regiment participated in seventy-five battles and skirmishes. Being honorably discharged at the close, Mr. McFadden returned to his home, having the satisfaction of knowing that, althought he had suffered almost untold hardship, serving under Sheridan and others in active and vigorous warfare, the country was safe; he had rendered the patriot's offering and is now entitled to the patriot's honors and rewards.

On January 29, 1869, Mr. McFadden married Miss Hannah, daughter of John and Hannah (Weakley) Foster, natives of Pennsylvania, and the father was a veteran of the war of 1812. Mrs. McFadden was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, in April, 1833, and though now in her seventieth year she has no silver threads of age and is hearty and active after a pioneer's life of labor. This marriage occurred in Mercer county and Mr. McFadden took up his residence in Venango county until 1876, then took train October 2 and came to San Francisco, thence to Portland by steamer, then up the Columbia by boat to Wallula, thence to Walla Walla, and there after a short stay a team was purchased and they went to Whitman county, where they took up a soldier's homestead. In 1881 they sold that property and came to their present place. A preemption was taken and as much more land was added by purchase later, and since that time they have labored on together and have been attended by the prosperity that comes to wise industry. Mr. McFadden was forced to go to Lewiston and Moscow for all supplies, and often paid twenty cents per pound for sugar and other things in proportion. The nearest neighbors were some miles away, and they labored with zeal and determination to make their valuable and handsome estate. Three hundred acres are brought under tribute to produce annual fruitage, and thirty acres are devoted to a valuable orchard. Two imposing barns grace the estate, outbuildings in abundance, and a nine-room residence of modern architectural design is the comfortable and tasty home. Mr. and Mrs. McFadden are deserving of great credit for the wisdom and labor they have shown, and they are accorded the same in generous measure. They are both members of the Presbyterian church and are devout in the faith. Four children have been born to them,—John P., married to Esther Mathew, in Nez Perces county; James M., married to Bertha Guernsey, near Peck; Clyde E. died eight years ago, aged twenty-one; Bernice, wife of Lee Mathew, in this county. The eldest son has three children, the second two, and the daughter is the mother of one child.

JOSEPH F. EDWARDS. Biography is becoming distinctly the literature of the day, and doubtless it is here to remain. It is fitting therefore that in the history of his county that the biographies of the leading men should appear and thus we place before our readers an epitome of this prominent gentleman, who has done a large amount for the advancement and progress of Culdesac, being at the present time one of the heavy real estate holders and also engaged in transferring real estate.

Joseph F. Edwards was born in Manitowoc City, Wisconsin, on November 4, 1858, being the son of John W. and Frances (Hunter) Edwards. The father was a carpenter and ship builder, born in Calais, Maine, in 1812, January 23, died on January 8, 1897. He participated in the Black Hawk and the Civil wars. In the latter he was orderly sergeant of Company K, Twenty-first Wisconsin Volunteers. He served under Generals Rosecrans and Thomas, and was in the battles of the Wilderness, Lookout Mountain and Vicksburg. The mother of our subject was born in Nova Scotia in 1822, and died on May 10, 1898. These people were pioneers to the vicinity of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in 1833. At the age of thirteen Joseph started to sail on the lakes, and continued until he was twenty. He then came west to California and on September 28, 1878, he settled in Nez Perces county, in the vicinity of Genesee. For twenty years he farmed there, and in 1898 he came to Culdesac, locating the first store in a tent July 29, 1899. Prior to that time he had also been organizer for the W. of W. Soon he sold his interest to his partner, Mr. E. T. Brandon, and in November of the same year started a general merchandise store for himself. He continued that with the post office until June, 1901, when he sold out and erected several buildings in the town. He recently completed Magnolia hall, the largest two-story structure in the town. Now Mr. Edwards is engaged in the real estate business.

On March 4, 1889, Mr. Edwards married Miss Ada V. Nelson in Latah county. Mrs. Edwards is the daughter of T. F. and Mary E. (Greer) Nelson. The father, a Baptist minister in Idaho county, was born in North Carolina and was a Confederate soldier. He has represented Idaho and Latah counties in the legislature and at the time Heitfield was elected Mr. Nelson came within two votes of being United States senator. Mrs. Nelson was born in North Carolina, as was also Mrs. Edwards, November 19, 1871. She has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas, Rosa Howton, Horace, Samuel, John and Gordon. Mr. Edwards has the following named brothers and sisters: Charles A., Margaret Spencer; George, Thomas and John, all deceased. Mr. Edwards is a member of the W. of W., the I. O. O. F., having passed all the chairs of the latter order, and past chancellor of the K. of P. He is also a member of the Rebekahs and the Women of Woodcraft, his wife being a member of these last named orders also. Mr. Edwards is an active and intelligent Republican. He is a committeeman of the Culdesac precinct. Mr. Edwards is always an advocate of good schools, and is a liberal contributor towards all institutions for the benefit of the community. He has assisted much in contributions toward the location of the new mill and other industries of the town. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, as follows: Mary Frances, Charles M., Everett W. and a baby which died in infancy.

EDWARD G. WILLIAMS. Two and one-half miles northeast from Lapwai is the quarter section where is located the family home of the subject of this article. He has improved the land in a very praiseworthy manner, having good buildings and an orchard of two thousand trees. It is quite appropriate that this history should contain a biographical account of this worthy citizen, and therefore we append for the perusal of all some of the details of his career.

Edward G. Williams was born in Sangamon county, Illinois, on August 16, 1857, being the son of Isaiah B. and Phoebe (Baker) Williams. The father, who was a farmer, born in Ohio in 1810, died in 1901, participated in the Black Hawk war. The mother was born in Kentucky in 1817 and died in 1892. Her people were pioneers in Kentucky. Edward worked on a farm and attended school until young manhood's estate was reached. At his majority he started for himself. He bought land and lived there until 1883. Then he removed to Sumner county, Kansas, bought land near Belleplaine and farmed for four years. Next we see him in Prairie county, Arkansas, and two years later he returned to Sangamon county, Illinois. Five years were spent there, and then he went to Iowa, remaining three years. In March, 1897, he came to Juliaetta, Idaho, and the next year purchased a man's right to a homestead, where he now lives.

In Illinois, on December 25, 1879, Mr. Williams married Miss Sarah J., daughter of Gilbert and Delilah Hatler, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively. Mrs. Williams was also born in Illinois. She has three sisters and one brother,—Josephine, Emaline, Albert and Daisy. Mr. Williams has the following named brothers and sisters: Susan, Mary, James H., Hattie, Mattie, Amos S., Sanford, Abraham. To Mr. and Mrs. Williams there have been born six children,—Lola, Ethel, Homer, Murray, Alvin and Marie. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Williams is a strong Republican and attends the conventions and primaries and always takes an active part in local matters. He advocates good schools and is a public-minded citizen allied on the side of progress and advancement.

RUFUS B. MILLER. Mr. Miller is a man of varied and extensive experiences in the enterprises of life and has always wrought with a manifestation of industry and wisdom. He is at present located on his estate, one mile northeast from Peck, where he does a general farming business and is prospered in his endeavors. He is a man of zealous interest in the educational progress of the country, labors assiduously and unremittingly for this end and is also allied on the side of general progress as well.

Rufus B. Miller was born on March 7, 1858, in Wythe county, Virginia, being the son of Austin and Elizabeth (Newland) Miller, both natives of Wythe county, where they passed their lives. Rufus was reared there and received a good education in the common schools and then finished with a course in the college at Marion, Virginia. Following this, he devoted himself to teaching for a time and then, on September 1, 1881, he married Miss Josie S., daughter of Joseph and Sarah E. Hutton, natives of Washington county, Virginia, where also the mother died. The father is still living on the old homestead. Mrs. Miller was born on October 11, 1863. In 1884 Mr. Miller came with his family to Dayton, Washington, and remained one year with his uncle, R. G. Newland, who represented the territory of Washington three terms in the United States congress. In 1885 a move was made to the vicinity of Sprague and Mr. Miller located a homestead and tilled it until 1892. Then he sold out and removed to Oakesdale, Washington, and there operated the farm of Hon. T. G. Mulkey for two years. In 1898 Mr. Miller came to the vicinity of Nezperce and settled on school land and in the fall of 1901 he sold this and came to his present place and is now engaged in general farming. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Bessie E., born August 9, 1882, and now the wife of Asa Baumgardner, living near Kamiah; Marion M., born June 7, 1884, and now deceased; Margie M., born January 2, 1886, and now attending school in Milton, Oregon; James V., born October 9, 1888; Robert B., born October 10, 1890; Paul, born March 17, 1894, and now deceased; Blanch E., born February 2, 1896; Frank T., born May 31, 1898; Maud E., born May 7, 1901. Mr. Miller and his wife and four eldest children are members of the Methodist church, South, and at the present time Mr. Miller is superintending the union Sunday school in the neighborhood. He is a zealous supporter of the faith and is a man of broad views and possessed of a public spirit that allies him on the side of progress and the betterment of all in advancement along all lines.

WILLIAM H. DAVISON is one of the well known men of the state of Idaho, being at the present time host of the Raymond Hotel in Lewiston, which is doubtless doing as fine a business as any hostelry in the state, on account of the skill and ability of the manager. He is a man of uprightness and many attractive qualities. William H. was born in Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras county, California, on October 11, 1856, being the son of James W. and Mary E. (West) Davison. The father was born in England, on May 3, 1834, came to the United States when three years of age and died March 13, 1900. The mother was born in New York in 1833 and died in Placerville, Idaho, in 1888. The parents came to Idaho, via Portland and The Dalles, and thence by stage to Placerville, where the father mined for two years and then opened a hotel, which he operated for twenty years. Our subject was early trained in the arts of a host and also acquired his education from the San Francisco schools. Then, after 1886, our subject removed to Boise and opened the Central Hotel. One year later he went to the mines and remained for four years. Then he returned to Boise and conducted a restaurant successfully for seven years. On February 19, 1897, Mr. Davison took charge of the De France, which had fallen into a bad state through mismanagement; in a short time our subject had it on a paying basis and soon a very popular house. On April 4, 1901, Mr. Davison took charge of the Raymond House, which he is operating at the present time with most excellent success. The house is well appointed and the skill, ability, executive force and affability of the host is felt in every department and is one of the most comfortable places for travelers to be found in the west.

On April 25, 1899, Mr. Davison married Annie Smith Pierce, daughter of Scott and Rebecca Smith, at Lewiston. Mrs. Davison has brothers and sisters as follows: William, Clarence, Mary Ormsby, of Boise; Nellie Thomas and Mrs. Villa Isham, of Grant's Pass, Oregon; Mrs. W. R. Thomas, of Lewiston. Mr. Davison has brothers and sisters as follows: Thomas, died August 4, 1877; Mrs. John Myer, of Boise. Mr. Davison is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., and has been for twenty-five years, joining at Placerville in Covenant Lodge, No. 6. He attended the grand lodge in Portland as delegate in 1878, staging most of the way. He joined the Elks, in February, 1902. In political matters Mr. Davison is allied with the Republicans, but is not partisan, believing in sound principles and good men wherever put forth and nominated. He is interested in mining at Buffalo Hump and at Wood river.

DR. BENJAMIN L. COLE. Among the professional men of Nez Perces county is to be mentioned the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph. He is a man having a high sense of honor, has maintained an untarnished reputation, is imbued with an understanding of his stewardship and in all his walk has so conducted himself that he has the entire confidence of the people and enjoys an enviable prestige.

B. L. Cole was born in Vicksburg, Mississippi, on April 14, 1866, being the son of Morris C. and Julia B. (Leas) Cole. The father is a minister in the Baptist church, was born in New York, in 1831, and now lives in Whatcomb, Washington, being still active in the ministry. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in the Fourth New Jersey, and was mustered out at New Orleans, in 1865. His father died aged eighty-two, having served faithfully as a Methodist minister, and his mother was seventy-six at the time of her departure. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1840 and is still living. When mustered out, the father of Benjamin settled at Vicksburg, later went to New Orleans. In that city the son was reared amid refining and literary surroundings, being highly educated. His father was a cultured man and for a time was secretary to the superintendent of education for the city of New Orleans. Our subject completed his professional course in the New Orleans Dental College and in that city he practiced until 1892. In that year he came to Walla Walla and two years later went thence to Tacoma. In that city he had charge of the infirmary for the first year of its existence. Later we find Dr. Cole in Juliaetta, where he practiced successfully until 1901, when he came to his present location in Culdesac. Dr. Cole is favored with a good and increasing practice, because of his skill and also his excellent success that is the result of painstaking and constant study. He has three brothers and one sister—Morris C., Thomas B., John H. and Julia B. Dr. Cole is a member of the K. of P. and of the M. W. A., and of the Sons of Veterans, being in Benjamin Harrison Camp, No. 1, New Orleans, of the latter order. He is a member of the Baptist church. His maternal grandfather was a judge in Vicksburg, Mississippi.

WILLIAM M. PEDEN. It is gratifying indeed to see the prosperity that has attended the efforts of our subject since he settled in his present location, one mile east from Summit. He came with a saddle horse and blankets in December, 1895, and while camping on his land the snow came and covered him a foot deep. The next spring he moved his family here, but as there were no roads it was tedious work. All honor to the brave pioneers who blazed the way into these wilds and have made of them fertile and productive farms. Mr. Peden has done his share, for from the little shack which he built for his family and the wilds that stretched in every direction, have been evolved by his labors a good home, large barn, substantial outbuildings, a well cultivated and fertile farm, and a good orchard, all of which is deserved because of the faithfulness and industrious labors of Mr. Peden and his worthy wife.

Mr. Peden was born in Davis county, Iowa, on November 25, 1865, being the son of Henry and Mary E. (Johnson) Peden, natives of Ohio. The father was born in Kentucky in 1819 and died in 1896, and was a pioneer in Nodaway county, Missouri. The mother was born in Tennessee in 1833 and still lives in Nez Perces county, Idaho. When they lived in Missouri all their property was blown away by a cyclone. The father enlisted in 1861 in the Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry and participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and many other struggles. In the battle of Lookout Mountain he was carrying a blanket under his arm and nine bullet holes were found in it. At this battle he was wounded in his left leg and sent home. During his illness he was married, but as soon as he recovered he returned to the front and served out his time, being honorably discharged in 1864. Then they moved to Davis county, Iowa, and when our subject, who was the oldest of six boys and three girls, was seven, they all went to Ohio, but soon came back to Iowa and then removed to Gage county, Nebraska. In 1888 the father crossed the plains with team and settled in Whitman county, Washington. In 1890 our subject made the same trip and remained in Whitman county, teaming until the trip to find his present location, as described above.

In Gage county, Nebraska, on January 14, 1886, Mr. Peden married Miss Laura Guthrie, whose parents were born in Missouri and Tennessee, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Nodaway county, Missouri, and died in Oregon in 1896. The mother still lives with a brother near Winchester. Five children have been born to them, Elsie E., Lena M., Lizzie A., Harvey D., Hattie E. Mrs. Peden was born near Marysville, Missouri, on May 23, 1868. Lena, the second child of Mr. Peden, has assisted her father to harvest three hundred and fifty acres of grain each year for four years past, driving the lead team on the binder machine all the time. Mr. Peden and his wife have labored faithfully and are now seeing the rewards of their toil and enjoying the fruits of their labors. They are members of the Congregational church and are devout supporters of the faith, while in all matters of progress and advancement Mr. Peden is always active. He has done labor on all the roads in his section and is a zealous advocate of good roads.

G. E. PRIBBLE. While the time of the residence of our subject in Nez Perces county has been rather brief, still he has so identified himself with the interests of the county that he is justly entitled to representation in its history as one of the stanch and commendable laborers for its upbuilding and advancement.

G. E. Pribble was born in Greensburg, Indiana, on September 1, 1867, being the son of John W. and Susan (Scontz) Pribble. The father was born in Clermont county, Ohio, in January, 1837, was a pioneer in Montgomery county, Iowa, and now is a retired farmer in Red Oak, Iowa. The mother was born in southeastern Indiana, in 1847, he and is living at the home place in Red Oak. The family came to Iowa when our subject was four years old, engaged in farming and raising stock on a large scale and did well. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa and was educated in Shenandoah College. Completing his education, he went industriously to farming and later spent two years in carriage painting. About the time of his majority he went to the San Luis valley, Colorado, and took land. He had a half section under irrigation there and remained four years. Selling out after a successful venture, he went to Carbon, Wyoming, and took up the coal business. Three years later he returned to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and took the position of shipping clerk and later that of foreman of a warehouse. In 1901 Mr. Pribble came to the Big Bend country, in Washington, and in April, 1902, he came to Peck and bought a half interest in the ferry plying to the station on the north of the Clearwater, which has proved a good investment. Mr. Pribble intends to soon take up some other business with this.

On December 23, 1888, in Corning, Iowa, Mr. Pribble married Miss Jessie L., daughter of Charles F. and Emma (Archer) Lathrop. The father is a jeweler and was born in Wisconsin. He held the office of sheriff and other positions of trust in Iowa and was a pioneer in Nebraska. His wife was born in Michigan and her parents are living in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Mrs. Pribble was born in Delaware county, Iowa, on May 21, 1872; she finished her education in the high school and was also accomplished in music, having given instruction in that branch for years. She has two brothers and two sisters, William and Ernest, in Iowa; Bertha Vredenburg and Maude, both in Iowa. Mr. Pribble has one brother, Ira A., living in Salina, Kansas, being a traveling salesman for the Union Pacific Coal Company, of Omaha. Mr. Pribble is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. Politically, our subject is a stanch Democrat and active in that arena. His father was rejected from the war on account of being a cripple, but his wife's father served in the war.

SAMUEL HOLT. The days of pioneer hardships are largely done in Nez Perces county; the times of Indian fighting are over; the toil of the sturdy frontiersman has resulted in a prosperous and wealthy community of intelligent and progressive people. One who has passed the years of toil, danger and hardship as one of the real pioneers and who has demonstrated himself one of the real frontiersmen of the country, having passed through all the trying times referred to, is mentioned at the head of this article. Samuel Holt is well and widely known both as a business man of Culdesac, having a first-class hotel there, the "Commercial," and also as the intrepid, fearless and sturdy pioneer of thrilling early days.

An epitome of his career will be interesting reading and therefore we make it a part of the county history. He was born in Fort Scott, Kansas, on July 22, 1840, being the son of Thomas A. and Mary (Cardwell) Holt. The father was a lieutenant in the regular army, participated in the Mexican war and died when our subject was one year old. The mother was born in Tennessee in 1823, and the time of her death was 1853. After her husband's death she had married John L. Kline in 1852. In 1853 they started across the plains, when within one hundred and fifty miles of Boise City she sickened and died. Our subject and his older brother, Frank, three years his senior, came with their stepfather to Eugene, Oregon, and there wintered. When he was thirteen years old the two boys came to Walla Walla together and he went to cooking for Ed Whitman's pack train. In 1863 he was at Lewiston and also at Idaho City with a pack train. In 1866 he was cooking at Heartown, and more or less since that time he has followed cooking. In 1868 he returned to Lewiston, and that town has been his headquarters most of the time since. When the Nez Perces reservation opened up he came and on May 22, 1896, he took a claim seven miles southwest from Culdesac, which he still owns and handles. In addition to that Mr. Holt operates the "Commercial," as stated above, one of the leading hostleries of the county. He has a good trade and is wise in his management to please the traveling public. During the Nez Perces war he served seven months, pursuing the Indians most of the time. He carried dispatches from Lewiston to Walla Walla at that time and made the best time on record. He rode the distance of ninety-eight miles in seven hours and forty minutes, having four relays.

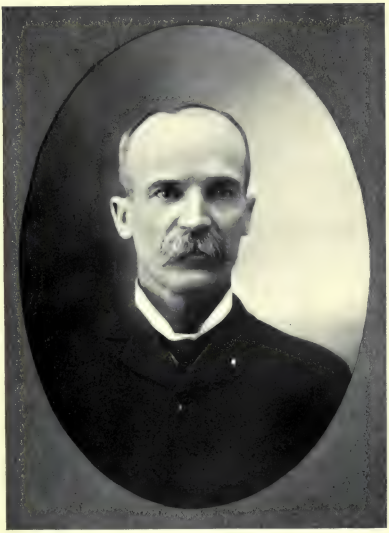
On November 2, 1885, Mr. Holt married Miss Laura A., daughter of Samuel and Lucinda (Privett) Minnick, the nuptials occurring in Lewiston. The father was a carpenter and a native of Illinois and a pioneer to Oregon. The mother died in Oregon in 1871. Mrs Holt has one sister, Addie Lubkins, living in Spokane. She also has three half-sisters and three half-brothers in Spokane. Two children have been the fruit of this happy marriage, Mabel and Chester, both at home. Mrs. Holt was born in Albany, Oregon, on February 5, 1870, and came with her parents to Waitsburg while an infant. Mr. Holt has one brother, Frank, living in Yakima. He is the only living relative. Mr. Holt is a Democrat and active in matters of political moment. He is an advocate of good schools, and one reason of his moving to town was to educate his children better than could be done in the country.



WILLIAM H. YOUNG. This well known business man of Lewiston has not been here as long as many of the worthy pioneers, still his industry, capability and excellent success in his business, as a music dealer, having the only exclusive store of that kind in Lewiston, together with his good moral qualities of worth, entitle him to representation in any volume that purports to give review of the leading citizens of the county of Nez Perces.

In Cobden, Canada, on December 24, 1857, occurred the birth of William H. Young to George A. and Eveline (Marshall) Young. The father was a pilot in Canada and was born in the north of Ireland in 1826, his parents also being natives there, while his mother, a Meredith, was closely related to the royalty of Scotland. The mother of our subject was born in Canada in 1828 and now lives in Lewiston. Her father was born in Connecticut and her mother was born in Vermont. Her father was a shipbuilder. William H. was educated in his native land and remained there until 1875, when he and his brother, John M., came to the United States and settled in York, Nebraska, working the blacksmith shop of their uncle, Benjamin Marshall. In 1877 they started a grocery store in York and in 1882 removed to Riverton, being there in the mercantile business also until 1887. Then he sold and invested his money in land in northwestern Kansas, which proved a poor venture. In July, 1889, he abandoned the land, removed to Smith Centre and went to clerking. In August of the next year he was in North Dakota selling music. In 1892 he returned to Smith Centre and opened a music store, where he did business until 1901, when he came to Lewiston and bought out F. G. Erb & Company. He is now doing a fine business, having the only strictly music house in the city.

On August 10, 1881, Mr. Young married Miss Kate, daughter of Edward and Mary (Rankin) Gibson, natives of Canada, and of English descent. The wedding occurred in Canada. Mrs. Young was born in Cobden, Canada, on August 4, 1858, and was educated in the Bowman Academy. She died November, 1900, in Smith Centre, Kansas, having been the mother of the following children: George E., deceased; W. Bertram, a good musician, eighteen years old and now in Taylor, California; Rex J., Virgil R., Winifred H., Kate, Mary, Douglas A., all at home. Mrs. Young had one brother and two sisters, John, Julia Burns, Rebecca Stuart. Mr. Young had three brothers, John M., George A. and James T. Mr. Young has property in Smith Centre, in addition to his business and holdings in this county. He is a man of business energy and very proficient in his line.

HILBERT B. SMITH. The town of Lewiston and the traveling public of the northwest need no introduction to the capable and entertaining gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article, being the proprietor of the Grand Hotel, one of the most popular hostelries in the state of Idaho, and justly deserving of its standing on account of the excellent manner in which it is conducted by its skillful and affable proprietor.

Mr. Smith was born in Vernon county, Missouri, near Nevada City, on October 30, 1872, being the son of Hiram R. and Sarah J. (Salmon) Smith. The father was a farmer and died in February, 1873, and the mother died in 1893. Shortly after the father's death the family removed to Pike county, Illinois, settling on a farm near New Canton, which the older brothers tilled. Our subject attended school and assisted his brothers in the care of the farm, remaining there until 1889. Then he came to the west, settling at Sprague, Washington, taking up the restaurant business. In 1895 he went to Trail, British Columbia.

WILLIAM H. YOUNG.

In 1898 Mr. Smith came to Lewiston and opened the Model restaurant in partnership with his brother Hiram R. They did a good business until 1901, when the entire property was destroyed by fire. On the fifth day of June, in the same year, Mr. Smith opened the Grand restaurant and afterward the Grand Hotel. The establishment is conducted on the European plan and has thirty-seven sleeping apartments; the cuisine is unexcelled, as is also the service of the entire house.

On November 25, 1897, at Trail, occurred the marriage of Mr. Smith and Miss Myrtle, daughter of James and Nettie (Merrick) Gibbs. Mr. Gibbs was a farmer, born in New York state in 1846, and the mother in Iowa in 1856; both are in the mining country of British Columbia. Mrs. Smith was born in Delaware county, Iowa, on November 10, 1876, was educated in the common schools and came west with her parents in 1883. She has the following named brothers and sisters: Irving W., Grace, Reece and Blanche. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Smith are named below: Wesley Acres, a half-brother, George A., a half-brother, Seldon Smith, Robert, Hiram and Ella (Acres) Eakin. Mr. Smith is a member of the K. of P., the M. W. A., and the W. of W. He is allied with the Republican party and is one of the leading business men of Lewiston, being capable, upright and possessed of sterling qualities.

LEWIS W. MUSTOE. It gives us pleasure to record the salient points in the career of our subject, as he has been a real pioneer in the reservation portion of the Nez Perces country and has shown commendable zeal and energy in his labors for its upbuilding and development.

Lewis Mustoe was born in Bath county, Virginia, on June 8, 1859, being the son of Adam G. and Nancy (Wilson) Mustoe, natives respectively of Bath county, Virginia, and Barbour county, West Virginia. They were married in the latter place and came to Bath county to live and in 1871 removed to Adair county, Missouri. In these places our subject grew to manhood, received a good common school education and learned well the art of farming. He then took various trips to Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, and in 1889, he made his way to Moscow, where he explored the country and then went to the north fork of the Clearwater and there spent several years hunting, trapping, prospecting and exploring the country. He was a very successful nimrod and many excellent specimens of big game were the trophies of his chase. Later we see him in the Potlatch country and there he remained until the twenty-sixth day of March, 1896, on which day he located his present claim, about fourteen miles southeast from Peck. He had the pick of farms, being one of the first settlers, and his judgment was good, for Mr. Mustoe has as fine a piece of land as is to be found on the reservation. He has bestowed his labors with wisdom and industry and the result could but be that such effort would be rewarded with a competence that is gratifying. Mr. Mustoe has devoted himself to raising the cereals and flax and is one of the successful men in this line. It is interesting to see that all this has been accomplished without the aid of capital, for Mr. Mustoe came with a couple of horses and has wrought it all out by the sturdy labors of his hands. He has had all the various hardships of the mountaineer and pioneer to endure and is one who has shown in it all endurance, continuity of purpose, determination to succeed despite the various hardships and obstacles, and has accomplished his purpose. The mother of our subject died on July 11, 1891, at the old home in Missouri. The father came to the Potlatch country in 1893 and died in September, 1899.

CLYDE D. CHAPMAN. This intelligent and progressive business man of Culdesac is one of the men who is bringing that town to the front. He operates a livery stable, having the finest barn in the town. He enjoys a good trade, owing to his care of the needs of patrons and accommodating ways and affability. In addition to his business, Mr. Chapman has a timber claim and also a farm, where he raises flax, doing a good business in that line.

Clyde D. Chapman was born in Poweshiek county, Iowa, on November 16, 1875, being the son of Emulos C. and Mary C. (Stitt) Chapman. The father was born in Indiana, in 1851, now lives at Melrose, Idaho, having come to this state in 1887. His father was born in Knox county, Ohio, and was a pioneer in Illinois. The mother of our subject was born in Kansas in 1855, her father being a pioneer in that state and a soldier in the Civil war for four years. The parents of our subject removed to Nebraska in 1882 and engaged in farming and raising stock for five years. In 1889 they came to Idaho and settlement was made in Westlake. A pre-emption was taken and there Clyde labored with his father and attended school. Although when he became of age, and even before, he worked some for himself, still he made his home with his parents until 1901. Mr. Chapman is still enjoying his bachelor freedom and is a popular resident of the community. Mr. Chapman has the following named brothers and sisters: Carl, deceased; Harriett V. Stinson and Claud H. This latter is an exceptionally bright and precocious lad. Mr. Chapman is a member of the I. O. O. F.; the W. of W., and the Women of Woodcraft. In political matters he is a Republican and takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of that realm.

VICTOR SPENSLEY. This energetic, industrious, and capable gentleman, has a special talent of adaptability that has enabled him to turn his force and ability in different directions with great success and also with credit to himself. At the present time he is on a farm, one mile north from Lapwai, has a comfortable home and handles considerable stock, cattle, horses and hogs. He owns one hundred and seven acres of land, property in Lapwai, and also property in Nezperce.

Victor Spensley was born in the northern part of England on May 30, 1861, being the son of Joseph and Mary Ann (Southern) Spensley. The father was a physician and surgeon and has the remarkable record of practicing for sixty years. He was born in 1812 and died in 1888. His father was also a physician. The mother of our subject was born in 1812 and is still living. Victor was educated and followed the dry goods business; in 1881 he came to the United States.

Settlement was made in western Minnesota, and in Murray and Pipestone counties he followed merchandising for four years. Then a move was made to Bazile Mills, Nebraska, and there Mr. Spensley opened a livery stable. One year later he went to western Nebraska and farmed. Next he came to Baker City, and in October, 1894, he settled in Lapwai. He raised hogs for a year or so and then opened a restaurant in Lapwai. Later he operated a livery stable in Lewiston and then he returned and erected a hotel and feed stable in Lapwai, which he operated until June, 1902.

On February 21, 1895, Mr. Spensley married Miss Kate Piatt, in Dawson county, Nebraska. Her parents were Lafayette and Eliza (Cole) Piatt, natives respectively of Indiana and Illinois. Mrs. Spensely has the following named brothers and sisters: Joshua, Dora, Elizabeth, Walter, Chauncey, Pearl and Earl. Mr. Spensley has the following named sisters: Mary F., Emma A., Agnes, Minnie and Kate. The second one is able to speak six different languages, and all are well educated. Part of them belong to the Catholic church and part belong to the Episcopalian church. In political matters Mr. Spensley is a Republican and takes the proper interests in the affairs of state. He is an advocate of continual progress in educational facilities and is an enterprising and progressive citizen.

NELS P. SKOW. This intelligent and industrifarmer and stockman of the reservation country is one who has done his share in the good work of improvement and opening up of the country and he is entitled to a consideration in his county's history.

Nels P. Skow was born in Denmark, on September 13, 1857, being the son of Peter and Catrine Skow, natives of Denmark, and died in 1894 and 1895, respectively. Nels grew to manhood in the native country and was educated in the common schools. At the age of twenty he came to the United States and settled in Minnesota. He railroaded there for three years and then went to Canada and did the same work until 1886, when he made his way to Portland, Oregon. There and in the Sound country he railroaded and later went to farming in Stevens county, Washington. He was defrauded out of his honest earnings there after eight years of hard toil. In 1896 he came to the reservation country and took his present place, four miles southeast from Melrose. This has been the scene of his labors and plans since, and he now has a fine farm all under cultivation, good buildings, comfortable residence and a goodly holding of stock.

On October 22, 1894, Mr. Skow married Mary A. Curry, daughter of Matthew and Elsie (Walker) Curry, natives of Scotland. One son has been born to this union, Nels. By a former marriage Mrs. Skow has two children, Elsie and Bernice. Mrs. Skow was born in Ashland county, Ohio, in 1868, and has four brothers and two sisters, Theodore, Maggie Marion, William, Matthew, Elsie and Earl.

Mr. Skow has the following named brothers and sisters: Peter, Samuel, Bertie, Catherine and Elsie. They are both members of the Methodist church and hearty supporters of their faith. In political matters they are both Republicans and intelligent in the questions of the day and also actively interested in the advancement of the welfare of the community. Mr. and Mrs. Skow are respected and influential people.

CHARLES C. BUNNELL. No more familiar figure and substantial business man and patriotic citizen is seen on the streets of Lewiston than the subject of this article. Mr. Bunnell was born in Rochester, New York, on October 5, 1835, being the son of Dennis D. and Eliza (Durand) Bunnell, natives of Connecticut, the mother coming to New York in 1818. When two years old, our subject came west with the family to Michigan and settled in Marshall. The father farmed there and also conducted various financial operations. In March, 1850, he died and in October of the same year the mother passed away, having returned to New York to be among old friends. Charles C. remained with his brothers, Augustus and D. D., for two years in Milwaukee, then returned to Rochester, New York, and there learned the tinner's trade. He worked at it five years in Rochester and then went to Michigan for a few months, then on to Portland, Oregon, in May, 1857, whence he took a trip to San Francisco, but returned to Portland, and then to The Dalles, where he did well, saving one thousand dollars. He went to Portland in 1860 and opened a tinware and stove store with his brother, D. D. They worked together until 1868. In 1862, however, our subject came to Lewiston. A few people had stopped there the previous year, but Mr. Bunnell is about one of the oldest settlers. He and his brother put up a quartz mill at Sparta, Baker county, Oregon, which proved a financial failure; in 1868, when he and his brother dissolved partnership, the mill fell into his hands and he sold it at a great sacrifice. Our subject started into the tinware business in Lewiston in 1862, manufacturing all his own stock; he soon added hardware and stoves and prosperity came to him constantly. He labored faithfully year after year, gaining a fine patronage by his kind and upright treatment of all and his business became one of the mammoth affairs of the city; he now owns the block where he conducted it, having sold the business, feeling assured that he has well earned the retirement that now comes to him in the golden years of his well spent career. He also owns a number of dwellings and some farms adjacent to Lewiston. 1899 was the date that Mr. Bunnell sold his business and retired from the store.

The marriage of Mr. Bunnell and Miss Flora Springer, daughter of Wesley and Rebecca (Shoemaker) Graves, was solemnized on September 22, 1872. Mr. Graves came to Oregon in 1852 and he was proprietor of the Chemetka Hotel in Salem for years. Mrs. Bunnell was born in Knox county, Illinois, in 1845, and was but seven years old when she came with her parents to Oregon. The other members of her father's family are Johanna Springer, in Lewiston; Mary Lenninger Graves, in Oregon; Mattie Cardwell, also in Oregon. Mr. Bunnell's brothers and sisters are, Augustus, William and Dennis D., all deceased.

Mr. Bunnell is a charter member of Nezperce Lodge of Masons, No. 10, and has been its treasurer since its organization. He and his estimable wife are members of the First Presbyterian church in Lewiston. He has never sought office in any form and although being frequently solicited by friends to accept, he has steadily declined. Mr. Bunnell is one of the real builder of the county and has been one of its most successful business men, is esteemed by all and highly respected as a worthy pioneer and gentleman of integrity. He has been a director of the Lewiston National Bank since 1888, and for three years was president of the institution.

THOMAS M. BUTLER. This enterprising and leading farmer in the vicinity of Rosetta, is a native of the occident, and his career has all been spent in the west. He is a son of this country, in which commendable pride may be taken, and has done a great deal to assist in its development and upbuilding. Therefore a brief review of his life will be quite in place in this history of his county.

Thomas M. Butler was born near the John Day, in Oregon, on November 12, 1867, being the son of Jason R. and Mary K. (Fields) Butler, natives respectively of Rockland, Maine, and Linn county, Oregon, the latter being born on December 12, 1847. The parents were farmers and our subject received a common school education and was reared amid the surroundings and labors of a western farm. He remained in the native place until 1890, engaged in farming and at the year mentioned he migrated to the favored country of Idaho. He rented land on the Potlatch until 1896 and then, upon the opening of the reservation, he selected his present place, two miles west from Rosetta and homesteaded it. Since that time this has been his home and he has devoted himself to general farming and has prospered. At the present time Mr. Butler is erecting a fine, two-story house, which, when completed, will be one of the finest rural abodes in the county. In addition to the comfort and beauty that skill and architecture can make of the residence, Mr. Butler is exceptionally well favored, in that from the veranda of his beautiful home can be seen for miles the fertile valleys of the Potlatch and the Cottonwood, making a sight that will feast the eyes of the lover of landscape beauty. This enrapturing view is one of the most beautiful to be found anywhere on the reservation and to have it constantly as the vista of the home place makes Mr. Butler especially favored in his home surroundings.

Mr. Butler married Miss Mabel J., daughter of Charles B. and Margaret (Weeks) Herrick, and a native of Iowa, on June 13, 1886. She has two brothers and one sister living, Fred, Clarence and Nellie G. Mr. Butler has the following named brothers and sisters: William C. and Clarence A., both living in Idaho; Lucinda, A., wife of Charles W. Little; Lillia A., wife of Charles W. Laughlin; Catherine L., wife of Lonzo McWillis; Sophrona A., wife of Fred N. Fells; Clara E., and Bessie A.

CHARLES C. MILES. It is very gratifying to see so many enterprising and sagacious young men taking up business and residence in Nez Perces county, and a real leader in these qualities mentioned is the subject of this article. He is postmaster at Webb, having been the moving spirit in getting the office established. In addition to that he handles a general merchandise business and his fair dealing, his uprightness, and his differential treatment of customers have given him a good patronage that is constantly increasing. He also handles a farm, having a fine estate well improved and stocked with cattle, horses and hogs. Thus it is seen that Mr. Miles is one of the leading men of this section, is an active, public minded, and capable young man of excellent standing.

We note that Charles C. Miles was bon in Wise county, Texas, on October 30, 1874, being the son of John and Caroline (King) Miles. The father was a farmer, born in Marion county, Missouri, a pioneer of Texas and a soldier in the Civil war, being in Company E, First Arkansas Cavalry. The grandfather was killed at the battle of New Orleans. His great-grandfather, although the son of a slave owner, grew up believing that slavery was wrong and left home on account of his sentiments. The father was sheriff of Parker county, Texas, and is now living in Douglas county, Oregon. His birth occurred in 1844. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri, on April 11, 1847. When Charles was ten years of age the family removed to Colorado for his father's health. Then they went to southern Idaho, later to northern California and finally settled in Myrtle Creek, Oregon, where they now live. Our subject was well educated in the various places where he lived and for years taught in Oregon, being numbered with the leading educators of the section. He went to Crook county, Oregon, later, and read law and then removed to Nez Perces county, where he took land. In 1898, when the Spanish war broke out, he was in the field plowing when he heard of it, and he immediately unhitched his teams, turning them on the range, leaving thirty acres of sowed grain uncovered, and at once went to enlist for the conflict. He was a member of Company B, First Idaho Volunteers, and participated in the battle of Manila, helped take that town, fought with the insurgents there, was in the conflict at Santa Anna, and also at Caloocan. He returned in 1899, being discharged for disability. He afterwards went on to his ranch, opened a store, got his postoffice and has since done business there.

On May 10, 1900, Mr. Miles married Miss Sadie Fansler, at Lewiston. Her parents, Jesse and Amanda (Roy) Fansler, were born respectively in Virginia in 1849 and in West Virginia in 1864. Mrs Miles was born in West Virginia in 1883. She has the following brothers and sisters: Camden, Zernie, Jessie M., Roy, Golden, William. Mr. Miles has the following named brothers and sisters: Telitha, John R., Ira, Harold, Rose and Arthur. By a previous marriage Mr. Miles has two children, Frances R., and John R. Mr. Miles has been elected justice of the peace but did not qualify. He and his wife are members of the Christian church. In political matters he is a stanch and active Republican. He takes great interest in the progress of all good measures, and is especially active in promoting good schools. He has been a member of the central committee from his precinct for two years.

JEFFERSON D. TRIPLETT. A good substantial man and a loyal citizen of our free land, a pleasant and accommodating neighbor, and an industrious farmer, we are constrained to grant to the subject of this article a representation in the history of Nez Perces county.

Jefferson D. Triplett was born in Putnam county, Missouri, on December 9, 1862, being the son of John and Mary (Bridgefarmer) Triplett, natives of Kentucky. The father was born in 1820 and his parents were natives of Kentucky and of English and Irish extraction. The mother was born in 1819 and her parents were also natives of Kentucky and of Irish lineage. When three years old Jefferson went to Arkansas with his parents, and there grew up and was educated in the district schools. At seventeen, he left home and railroaded, and later spent four years on the Northern Pacific. Returning home, he labored in a saw mill for two years and then came to Idaho and filed on a forty on the reservation, about one and one-half miles southwest from Gifford. He rents one hundred and eighty acres in addition and raises much flax and barley. Mr. Triplett has eight brothers, George, in Spokane; William, farmer in Missouri; John, a trader in Arkansas; Mack, engineer in a saw mill, and Richard, a farmer, both in Arkansas; Dock, Jasper and Columbus, in Nez Perces county.

At Leland, on February 9, 1890, Mr. Triplett married Miss Ella Florence, daughter of Matthew and Elizabeth (Luther) Williams. Mr. Williams was born in West Virginia and died September 14, 1900, aged seventy-three. His wife was born in Illinois and died March 1, 1899, aged sixty-three. Mrs. Triplett was born in Illinois and has the following brothers and sisters: Charles W., in Lewiston, and George A., in Asotin county, Washington, twins; John E., a Methodist preacher in Prosser; William M., in Asotin county; Lowe L., near Gifford; Martha, wife of M. Duty, a retired farmer in Illinois; Mary, wife of John Black, at Gifford; Lulu, wife of E. Carter, near Gifford. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Triplett, Fred, born January 18, 1891; Edith, born July 17, 1892; Nellie, born November 30, 1893; Hazel, born in December, 1895; Marion, born in October, 1897; George, born in April, 1900. Mr. Triplett is a Democrat and has been a delegate to the conventions and was constable in the Potlatch country. He is active for good roads, excellent schools, and progress and development generally.

ROBERT M. WRIGHT. Many were the hardships that the subject of this article had to undergo in the times of the terrible Rebellion. His father was a Union man, and living in West Virginia, he was exposed to great dangers and troubles and these things early impressed themselves on young Wright. In Barbour county, that state, Robert M. was born June 10, 1858, his parents being William J. and Sarah A. (Hiskell) Wright. The father was born in Barbour county June 8, 1833, and was a pioneer of that county, as also was his father. William Wright fought for the stars and stripes in Company F, Tenth West Virginia Volunter Infantry. He still lives though wounded in the war and is a very active politician and was a delegate to the national convention in 1900. The mother of our subject was born in Preston county, West Virginia, in 1834 and her father came from Germany. Robert M. grew up on the farm, received his education in the schools of his vicinity, and there he farmed until 1890. Then he sold out and made the long journey to Kendrick, Idaho, thence to the Potlatch. Later he bought the townsite of Southwick and named the town Grafton, but the post office has since been changed to Southwick. It is a good business point. In 1896 Mr. Wright sold his interest there, went to the reservation, took a claim near Steele and farmed there until 1901, when he sold the property and bought two hundred and forty acres where he now lives, one and one-half miles south from Southwick. He has a good house and barn, raises cattle and does a general farming business. Mr. Wright also breeds fine Poland China and Berkshire hogs, and raises so much stock that they consume all the grain of his farm.

In 1880 Mr. Wright married Miss Laura Mustoe and to them were born Ernest L., Robert R., Clinton C. and Darl D. In 1894 Mr. Wright married Miss Amanda Myers and two children were born to them, Madolin, William M. In 1898 Mr. Wright married Miss Eva, daughter of Tweed and Cordelia Helm, natives of Missouri. Mrs. Wright was born in California in 1871 and has four sisters and two brothers: Lizzie, Emma, Jane, Lucy, Newton, and Charlie, the last one being in South Africa. Mr. Wright has the following named brothers and sisters: Arnold R., Lewis, Tabitha E., Martha E., Catherine E., Sarah E., Florence E., Amanda. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are members of the United Brethren church, while Mr. Wright is a Republican and an active participant in the questions of the day and of local interest. He is a prominent figure in the conventions and the caucuses. In educational matters Mr. Wright has made his influence felt for betterment and advancement and has done good service on the boards.

GEORGE H. WYMAN. Just west from Rosetta post office is the estate of Mr. Wyman, a man whose labors along the line of pioneering in and developing this western country, have been assiduous and well bestowed. He is a man of thrift and keen discrimination in financial affairs and has prospered in his homestead venture on the reservation.

George H. Wyman was born in Vinton county, Ohio, on May 25, 1846, being the son of Arthur and Annie (Salts) Wyman. The father was a native of New York, as were his ancestors for some generations back. He died in Knox county, Illinois, in his seventy-eighth year. The mother was born in Maine, of German and Scotch ancestry and died aged seventy-nine. When seven, George came with his parents from Ohio to Illinois and there spent twenty-seven years. He was educated in the district schools and began his individual business career when he was twenty. He rented land and farmed in Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and in 1899 he came to Washington. He located near Oakesdale, bought land and farmed until 1891, then removed to the vicinity of Leland, Nez Perces county. He farmed his own property and leased land and when the disastrous year of 1893 came, he, with the majority of others, lost his land. Upon the opening of the reservation he came hither and located his present place. A man anxious for the same place pulled a gun on Mr. Wyman, but firmness gained the day and not only the land, but the angry man is now a friend. Mr. Wyman has a neat and comfortable home, a good barn, outbuildings and orchard and does a good farming business. He has some exceptionally fine apples, one specimen weighing one pound and ten ounces. Mr. Wyman has three brothers, John, Edward J. and Stephen, farmers in Knox county, Illinois; also two sisters, Minerva, in Knox county, wife of Noah C. Dawson; Eliza, widow of Robert Bolding, now living on her fruit ranch near Leland.

On May 21, 1866, Mr. Wyman married Lucinda, daughter of Freeman and Rebecca (Jackson) Myrick, both deceased. To this union there were born five children: William A., gardner near Willola; Stephen A. rents Indian land near his father; Edward A. has eighty acres near his father; Emma, now deceased, wife of Thomas Terrel: Annie, wife of John Eaton, of Elberton, Washington. In October, 1892, Mrs. Wyman was called by death from her home and family. On August 24, 1894, at Juliaetta, Mr. Wyman married Martha H. Baker, widow of James H. Baker. She was born in Franklin county, Vermont, in 1850, the daughter of George E. and Mary (Rowe) Edgar, natives of Scotland and England, respectively. Mrs. Wyman has two sons by her former marriage, Charles and John, in Michigan. Mr. Wyman and his wife are members of the United Brethren church. He is an active Republican, takes part in the conventions, and is especially active in the progress of the country. He is always on hand to donate any work for the bettering of the roads and is an enthusiastic laborer for upbuilding in all lines and this has been of inestimable good to the community.

WILLIAM J. RAMEY. The progressive, talented, successful and leading business man of whom we now speak, is well known in Nezperce and through the county, being a large lumber dealer and manufacturer, as well as a large real estate holder. His excellent capabilities have been manifested in a commendable manner in his business career and owing to his keen perception and discrimination, coupled with energy, he has placed himself among the heaviest property owners in this part of the state.

William J. Ramey was born in Dassel, Meeker county, Minnesota, on February 26, 1869, being the son of Sylvester and Delilah C. (Gilbert) Ramey. The father is a native of Kentucky, and his parents were natives of the same state. Just at the breaking out of the war, they removed to Minnesota and there he enlisted in the Union army and fought for the flag for two and one-half years. He is now aged fifty-eight and lives in Kootenai county, Idaho. In 1880 he was in Portland in the saw mill business with our subject, and then he was foreman and manager of Goldsmith & Company's mills at La Prairie, formerly Texas Terry, Washington, being an expert timberman. The family then resided in Lewiston and later Mr. Ramey was bridge builder for the Northern Pacific. He went to Kootenai county in 1889. The mother of our subject was also born in Kentucky, of parents who were natives of that state, too. She went with them to Minnesota at the close of the war and there married. William J. was educated in the district schools in Minnesota, then in Rockford public schools, and finally took a course in the business college in Spokane. Subsequent to this, he traveled for fire insurance for two years and then opened an office in Tekoa, Washington, where he continued until 1896. Then he came to the reservation, being quick to perceive the advantages there to be had. He bought a milling plant twelve miles north from Nezperce and to the operation of this and handling his fine farms in the county he has since continued. He has about eight hundred acres of excellent land, all in to hay and grain and he feeds scores of cattle and hogs. Mr. Ramey has a fine residence in Nezperce and also business property there: he has constructed a private telephone for his use, from the mills to the residence and office, it being the finest private line in the county. His mill will cut thirty thousand feet of lumber daily and he has machinery to produce all kinds of finished material, and is doing a thriving business, in all of which, as in his real estate matters, is seen his executive force and wisdom. His brother, Charls P., is foreman and manager of the mill at Russell and is a capable man. Mr. Ramey has also four sisters: Jane, wife of Paul Roscoe, a stockman in northern Idaho and Montana; Victoria, wife of Alexander Bailey, a saw mill man at Harrison, Idaho; Roxy, wife of Charles Van Amburg, a mining man at Murray, Idaho; Effie, wife of Edward Ribstein, a hardware merchant at Harrison.

On February 6, 1895, Mr. Ramey married Miss Bertha A. Whitney, at Palouse, Washington, and to them have been born thee children: Marvel A., Lois, and Olga. Mrs. Ramey was born in Woodburn, Oregon, on September 20, 1879, and her parents, David and Minerva (Braun) Whitney, were pioneers of that state. The father was born in England and is an old sea captain. The mother was born in Illinois of German ancestry. Mr. Ramey is a member of the K. of P. in Wallace, Idaho; and of the W. W. and M. W. A., in Nezperce. He is an active Democrat in political matters and interested keenly in all that is for improvement and advancement.

ADAM KAMMERS. The achievements of this enterprising gentleman in several lines demonstrate him to be possessed of excellent ability and keen business discrimination and he holds the meed of his labor in good income paying property in various places.

Adam Kammers was born in Cook county, Illinois, in June 1865, being the son of Matthew and Lucy Kammers. The father was born in Germany in 1814 and came to the United States in 1848, settling on ten acres, now a part of the city of Chicago. He gardened and later sold his land for excellent prices. He died in 1891. The mother of our subject was born in Germany in 1824 and died in 1876. Adam went with his parents to Tennessee when he was thirteen and later they settled in Iroquois county. Twelve years there and they sold out and removed to Hamilton county, Iowa. Thirteen years were spent there and our subject then came to the Palouse country in 1889. He bought town property and lived in Uniontown for some time and then bought a farm of two hundred and forty acres. In 1897 he bought his present place, about one mile northwest from Westlake, and now has here a half section. He does a general farm business, raises stock and is well-to-do. Mr. Kammers has also been operating a blacksmith and wood work shop in Westlake and is doing a good business. He is purchasing property in Vineland and has the contract to erect a church building there. Mr. Kammers has recently rented his fine farm for six years and is devoting his energies entirely to mechanical work, in which line he is skillful and liberally patronized.

In December, 1887, in Wright county, Iowa, Mr. Kammers married Miss Barbara, daughter of Christian and Kate (Elier) Slader, natives of Germany. Mrs. Kammers was born in Germany and has the following named brothers and sisters: Tony, Peter, Susan, Kate. Mr. Kammers has four sisters, Hannah, Lina, Kate and Mary. Four children have been born to our subject and his wife, Frank, John, Walter, William. Mr. Kammers and his family are all members of the Catholic church. Politically he is allied with the Democrats and a firm supporter of progress and upbuilding. Mr. Kammers has been successful in another line than what we have mentioned; for six years he has owned and operated a threshing outfit.

CHARLES L. WALKER was born in Breckenridge county, Kentucky, on June 4, 1852, being the son of Ralph B. and Judith (Compton) Walker, natives of Kentucky. The father was an orderly sergeant under Major Winker, in the Rebellion. Besides our subject they were the parents of the folowing named children: Henry C., born February 21, 1846, in Breckenridge county, was a private in Company K, Third Kentucky Cavalry, has been county commissioner in Barber county, Kansas, for six years and was nominated by the Democrats and Populists for representative; Mary E., wife of Ben F. Walker and born in Breckenridge county, November 8, 1848; Levi T., born January 14, 1850; John A., born September 17, 1854; George R., born November 27, 1857. Our subject remained with his parents until he was twenty-two and then started in life for himself, possessing the capital of two good strong hands, a courageous heart, and plenty of pluck. December 12, 1876, he married Emeline S., daughter of Hans S. and Millia Cochran. The father was born in Indiana on December 31, 1822, and served in the Rebellion. The mother was born in Tennessee and died on February 18, 1898. Mrs. Walker has the following named brothers and sisters: John W., born in Greene county, Indiana, on September 10, 1843, served in the Rebellion and died before the close of the war; William O., born in April, 1845, and served four years in the Rebellion, was one year with the militia in Kansas and also served in the same capacity in 1874 and 1875 in Barber county against the Indians, and then joined Roosevelt's Rough Riders; Elizabeth J. Clements was born in July, 1855; Henry O., born in July, 1850, and served two years in the Rebellion; Albert W. and Alfred A., twins, born December 9, 1851; Emma S., born August 24, 1853; Mary A., born April 7, 1859 and married to Robert Kirby. Our subject remained seven years in Barber county and served two years as sheriff, then followed the cattle business until 1882. In that year he came to Whitman county and farmed for three years. Then came six years in Washington, two in Milton, Oregon, after which he spent four years in Colfax, in charge of the orphans' home. After this he traveled some time in Oregon and Idaho and finally settled about two miles northeast from Forest, where he has a fine piece of yellow pine land. He has devoted attention to clearing some of the land and making improvements. Mr. Walker is an active man in advancing the school interests of the vicinity and a good substantial citizen. He is a Republican in political matters. To Mr. and Mrs. Walker there have been born the following named children: Laura E., born August 18, 1877; Zopher L., born December 7, 1878; Lenora G., born July 29, 1881; Albert A. and Albertia A., twins, born in Nez Perces county, January 15, 1885; Eugenia N., born in King county, Washington, on April 23, 1888; Herbert R., born March 15, 1897, in Whitman county, Washington. The first three were born in Barber county, Kansas.

ADAMS G. JOHNSON. A well known and prominent citizen of the reservation country, being also influential throughout the country, for he was elected county commissioner, having a plurality of two hundred and forty-four, Mr. Johnson is entitled to a place among those represented in the county history and it is with pleasure that we accord the same to him.

Adams G. Johnson was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, on January 14, 1839, being the son of Jeremiah H. and Harriet M. (Getty) Johnson. The father was born in Washington county, New York, on December 12, 1797, and died in 1871. The paternal grandfather of our subject was born in Vermont and died in 1852, aged eighty-four. This venerable gentleman had married Miss Parker, a native of the Wyoming valley in Pennsylvania. She removed from that fateful valley just three days before Chief Brant's terrible massacre, going to the Mohawk valley in New York. Some of the Parker family fought in the Revolution. A brother of the lady mentioned was Captain Thomas Parker in the war of 1812. This man had two sons in the Civil war; one, Colonel Thomas Jefferson Parker, commanded the Thirty-fourth New York Infantry, and Captain Fred Parker was commander of a company of his regiment and he fell at the battle of Chancellorsville. Our subject's father was related to Stephen Hopkins, the signer of the Declaration of Independence, and he bore the name of his illustrious ancestor, the middle initial indicating Hopkins. The family was also related to General Nathaniel Greene, of Revolutionary fame. The mother of our subject was born in Erie county, New York, in 1805 and died in 1872, being of Scotch-Irish descent. Adams G. was raised on a farm in Illinois and educated in the district schools there. In 1859, he and his father and some friends went to Osawattomie, Kansas, but returned the same year. Then our subject went to Pikes Peak and mined for a time, but as politics became heated, the southerners there threatening vengeance in case Lincoln was elected, Mr. Johnson returned to Illinois for the express purpose of voting for Lincoln. He made the journey with ox team. Upon the breaking out of the war, Mr. Johnson enlisted in Graham's Independen Rangers, a cavalry company, which was taken from Moline, Illinois, the place where Mr. Johnson went in as a corporal, to Quincy and there mustered in. Thence they went to Fort Leavenworth then to the siege of Lexington, Missouri, where our subject was captured by Price. Being paroled he went home, but later was discharged at St. Louis and then re-enlisted in the Eighth Kansas Infantry, Company I, under Captain H. C. Austin, and he served until the close of the war. He was in detached and garrison duty much of this time. Mr. Johnson was mustered out on November 4, 1864, at St. Louis, after which he served one year as auditing clerk in the commissary under Captain Hollis Steadman. Then he went to raising cotton in Arkansas, later kept hotel in Moline, Illinois, for a time, and in 1871 he came to The Dalles, Oregon. His family having gone to California to visit relatives, they joined him later and for a decade he raised sheep and farmed. Then he was deputy sheriff, then deputy United States marshal and other official positions occupied by him until 1895, when he came to Genesee, Idaho, and at the opening of the reservation he came hither, and in 1898 he filed on his present place, three miles south from Nezperce. He has a good farm and does general farming.

Mr. Johnson married Miss Mary E. Hogue on October 29, 1866. Her parents, James M. and Emma (Ridgeway) Hogue, lived in Newcastle, Placer county, California, the father being of Scotch descent and a native of Tennessee, while the mother was born in Philadelphia and was of English extraction. Two children have been born to this marriage, Hollis C., a dentist and dealer in mines, in Columbus, Montana; Emma, wife of S. B. McCullough, a stockman in Idaho county. Mr. Johnson has one sister, Helen S. Young, a widow in Geneseo, Illinois. Mr. Johnson is a Republican and active in the political field, always being allied on the side of progress and improvement.

ISAAC TELLIER is one of the men who has opened the western country for settlement, being an intrepid pioneer and a man of enterprise and stirring energy. His wife and children's allotments were taken in 1894 and he has a fine body of land of four hundred and eighty acres, with a good large house and other improvements, as orchard, fences, and so forth.

Isaac Tellier kas born in Walla Walla, on February 20, 1860, being the son of Louie and Angelique (Tecomtah) Tellier. The home ranch joined the Whitman ranch. The father was born in 1806 in Canada, and died in 1880. He settled in the vicinity of Walla Walla in 1853, was an independent trapper and sold to the Hudson's Bay and American Company. He knew Whitman, Spalding and all the early missionaries, also Dr. McLoughlin. The mother of our subject was born in the Flathead country in 1822 and lives with this son. Her uncle, Coon-Coon-Staine, was chief of the Flatheads. Our subject lived on the home ranch and was educated there until fifteen, when he rode the range until twenty-two. In 1883 he went to the Coeur d'Alene country and learned the harness maker's trade. Then he packed to British Columbia with General Sherman and afterward for the Northern Pacific. After this he went to the Flathead reservation and worked for the mission for a time, continuing until 1894.

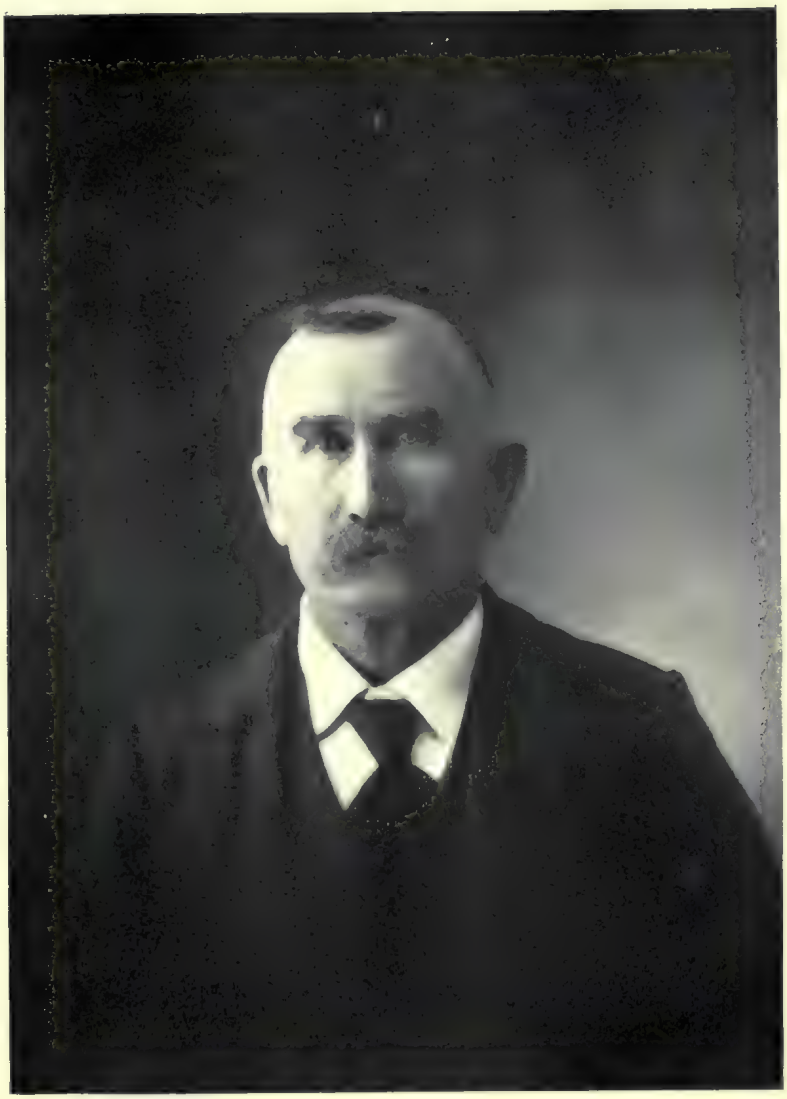
On April 14, 1888, in Montana, at the Flathead mission, Mr. Tellier married Miss Cecile, daughter of Louie and Mary Ann. The father was a Frenchman and the mother a Nez Perces Indian woman. Her father was a smart man and one of the first among the Indians who was educated. His Indian name was Kimpilets, but in English he was known as Dick Richards. He was a powerful chief and a firm friend of the whites. Mrs. Tellier was born in Missoula, Montana, on May 30, 1864, and she has one sister, Lillie Compleville. Mr. Tellier has the following brothers and sisters: Mary Beauchamp, Nelson, Cleofaus, Theodore, Adelaide. The children born to Mr. and Mrs Tellier are named as follows: Rosa Findlay, who was educated in the Montana mission and is at Kamiah; Esther, educated at the Montana mission; Cleofaus, Laurett, Albert, Louie, all at home and will be educated in the English schools. Mr. and Mrs. Tellier are members of the Catholic church. He is a Democrat and takes an active part in the campaigns.



THOMAS J. S. MABBOTT. While Mr. Mabbott is one of the best farmers of his section he is also equally skilled in the art of the carpenter and builder and his life has been mostly made up in labors in these two important lines. He was born in Iowa county, Wisconsin, on January 8, 1849, being the son of Christopher and Mary A. (Springthrop) Mabbott. The father was a farmer and stockman, born in Rutlandshire, England, on March 26, 1809. He came to the United States in 1844 and died in 1886. The mother was born in Rutlandshire, England, September, 1809, and died in 1890. Our subject was educated and grew to manhood in Iowa county and remained with his parents until he was twenty-four. He perfected himself in the carpenter trade and then worked at it eight years in McGregor, Iowa. Then he removed to Sauk county and engaged in the grocery business for two years, after which he farmed and in 1894 he took an extended trip all over Iowa, Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming, Washington and other places, finally settling in the vicinity of Genesee. He farmed two years and in 1896, he came and secured his present place a mile southwest from Ilo.

On June 24, 1874, in Wisconsin, Mr. Mabbott married Miss Nellie, daughter of Luke and Mary Ellen (Ballou) Farwell. The father was a farmer, born in Ohio, in 1826, and died in 1860, at Pikes Peak, being in that excitement. His father was a pioneer in Iowa county and went to California in the exciting days of 1852, remaining ten years. Mrs. Mabbott's mother was born in Illinois in 1827 and died when this daughter was but four years old. Mrs. Mabbott was born in Iowa county in 1852, May 26, and has two sisters, Adelia Jain and Adora Pope. Mr. Mabbott has the following brothers and sisters: Charles W., John R., Amos M., Mary A., Edward J., Christopher A., Martha A., George W., Laura J. Five children have been born to this worthy couple: Ernest C., May L., Grace A., Guy E., Ruth N. Mr. Mabbott is a progressive and active Republican and is on hand in all the primaries and the campaign fight, while also he takes great interest in the advancement of school facilities. He has a good home place, well improved, and handled with skill and thrift.

ALBERT G. WISNER is one of Nez Perces county's leading farmers and stockmen, being a man of excellent capabilities and sterling worth, which have been duly manifested in his business achievements, his political career and in his walk as a citizen and as an upright man. He dwells about ten miles southeast from Lewiston, on a fine farm of three hundred and sixty acres of good land. This is laid under tribute to produce good wheat and barley each year, while in addition, Mr. Wisner handles about three hundred head of hogs each year. This alone would be a sufficient industry for one but also the one line in which Mr. Wisner has gained the finest success is in breeding excellent Hereford cattle. He has some specimens that would delight the eye of a stock connoisseur and of which he is justly proud. Mr. Wisner also handles a section of rented land.

It will be interesting to trace the life of such a successful man and with pleasure we append the details. Albert G. Wisner was born in Genesee county, New York, on October 31, 1851, being the son of Peter S. Wisner, who had married Miss Haner. The father was a carpenter and a native of the Empire state also, and 1880 is the year of his demise. The mother died in 1856 and thus Albert never knew the tender hand of a mother while he was growing up. The parents removed to Kent, Michigan, before the death of the mother and after that sad occurrence, the father kept the little band together until our subject was ten years of age and then they all went for themselves. However, Albert remained there and labored at different callings until he was twenty-four. He had purchased a portion of his father's farm and in 1876 sold that and came to Douglas county, Oregon. The next year, we see him in Lewiston and there he enlisted with General Howard to fight the Indians. Then he was hired by the government to aid in the construction of roads. Next, he logged on the Clearwater and in the fall of 1879, he took a claim south of Tammany hollow. Later, he sold that property and bought the farm where he now lives. His place is embellished with a fine, modern, eight-room house with plenty of closet and pantry room and exceptionally well arranged for comfort and convenience. He also has a fine, large, red barn and out buildings. Mr. Wisner deals in cattle a great deal, being an excellent judge of stock.

In April, 1882, Mr. Wisner married Miss Lillie, daughter of W. H. and Ora (Kirk) Wishard, natives of Indiana. The father was a wheelwright and died in 1894 and the mother died in 1872. Mrs. Wisner was born on September 9, 1861. Mr. Wisner has the following-named brothers and sisters: Rebecca Ogden, Matilda Vanorton, Byron D., Louisa Frazee and John S., Adelia Sessions, Gustavus, Ruth Warner, Frederick. Mr. and Mrs. Wisner have one adopted child, Lauretta. In political matters, Mr. Wisner is a stanch Republican and votes the ticket straight; he often attends county conventions as delegate. He was elected county commissioner on his ticket in 1894 and with great credit to himself and advantage to the county he served his term and was renominated, but the entire party was snowed under. Mr. Wisner had three brothers, Byron, John and Gustavus, who fought for their country in the time of the dark rebellion. One entered the ranks when but fourteen years of age. Mr. Wisner is a strong advocate of good schools, has always worked for their betterment and is to be credited with much good accomplished in this line.

EDWARD B. WILSON. It is remarkable how many excellent mechanics there are in the reservation portion of Nez Perces county and as a pioneer of them all, as well as a leader in both proportions of business, and excellence of equipment, we are constrained to mention the well known gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. Mr. Wilson is a pioneer in that he was among the very first settlers in the reservation country, and also in that he erected one of the first blacksmith shops in Nezperce. To the prosecution of the business he has steadily devoted his labor and excellent skill since that date and it is without doubt that he has today one of the best paying concerns in the state. Recently, Mr. Wilson took as partner in business Mr. Davis, and the firm is known as Wilson & Davis. Mr. Wilson is a first class mechanic in both wood and iron, and handles a number of men in his shop. His shop is now one of the finest to be found. It is fully equipped with all modern and up-to-date appliances and is a model of neatness and order. The upper story is arranged for a nice hall to accommodate theatrical entertainments, it being provided with good stage, curtains and scenery. It is of note that when Mr. Wilson came to this town in the fall of 1896, he was not well provided with finances, and when he erected the first shop in February, 1897, he had but fifty dollars. With this humble start, by industry, executive ability, and excellent skill of Mr. Wilson, there has been evolved a business, as stated above, second to none in the state; he has since purchased his partner's interest. The equipment, buildings, land, and so forth, all belong to Mr. Wilson, personally, and are at a low estimate worth over five thousand dollars. In addition to this, Mr. Wilson owns a seven-room cottage of neat and tasty architectural design, which is his family home.

Reverting more to the early life of our subject we note that he was born in Morgan county, Illinois, on March 9, 1862, being the son of Henry and Harriet (Breckon) Wilson. The father was born in Illinois in 1833, of English parents, and now lives in Central City, Nebraska, retired. The mother of our subject was born in England in April, 1833, came to the United States when she was six years old with her parents, who are dead. She was married in 1854. Edward was reared on a farm, educated in the common schools and then took a course in mechanical drawing. When twenty-three, he went to Nebraska and opened a blacksmith shop. Eleven years were spent there and a move was made to Moscow; then he operated a shop in Cornwell, after which he came to Nezperce, as stated above. Mr. Wilson has two brothers, Lincoln, a blacksmith in Wyoming, and Albert, a Methodist preacher.

At Archer, Nebraska, on September 6, 1888, Mr. Wilson married Miss Viola V., daughter of Jacob B. and Martha Templin, natives of Ohio. The father was a merchant and operator of creameries in Archer, Nebraska. He was a popular and prominent man and held many public offices. He is a veteran of the Civil war and carries a wound in his hip, which crippled him for life. He served in the Ohio Cavalry all through the conflict. Mrs. Wilson was born on May 19, 1871, and has the following brothers and sisters; Wilbur, a farmer at Archer, Nebraska; Leonard, residing with his parents; Oliie, wife of George Ayers, county attorney of Merrick county, Nebraska; Clara, wife of Roy Farnham, a farmer near Wheatland, Wyoming; Jessie, a student in Lincoln University; Alice, at home. Mr. Wilson is a member of the I. O. O. F., North Star Lodge, No. 56, of Nezperce; of the M. W. A. and the W. W., both of Nezperce. He and his wife also belong to the auxiliaries of the last two orders. They are prominent members of the Methodist church and have an excellent standing in the community. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson there have been born six children, Harry, Pearl, Lloyd, Roy, Earl, Glenn.

His father served in Company D, 101st Illinois Volunteer Infantry for three years from enlistment to the close of the war, under General Sherman, and on the march to the sea, Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga and Peach Tree Creek.

ARTHUR S. CORDINER. We are constrained to mention this genial and capable gentleman, who has labored with unflagging interest for the upbuilding of the country and the handling of his business enterprises. He has a fine farm in the vicinity of Melrose, it being about three miles southeast from the town, and there he has bestowed his labors with excellent visible results and he is counted one of the substantial men of the community.

Arthur S. Cordiner was born in London county, Ontario, on April 13, 1866, being the son of Arthur and Ellen (Beatty) Cordiner. The father was born in Scotland in 1818 and still lives. He came to Canada in 1848 and farmed there. He was one of the councillors in his county. The mother of our subject was born in Scotland in 1828, and died in 1893. Our subject remained at home until he was eighteen, being educated in the famous schools of Ontario, which have justly gotten a world wide reputation. Then he came to Walla Walla and worked on a farm for five years. His next move was to Whitman county where he farmed for himself. This was a trying time for Mr. Cordiner for he went to that county with two thousand dollars cash and came away in six years with one thousand dollars of debt. In 1896 he settled on his present place and two brothers took land adjoining his. They have labored together and our subject has a fine orchard and does a general farming business, also raising many shire horses.

Mr. Cordiner is a Democrat and always on the side of progress and advancement. He is a member of tne M. W. A. and of the I. O. O. F., both at Melrose. He has the following named brothers and sisters: Alexander, John, Mary Jarron, William, George, Jessie Cunningham, Ella Cook, Anna Nevel, Peter F. and James B., twins, both graduates of Pullman, and Peter is now attending Ann Arbor University and Robert S.

GRANVILLE O. DAVIS. To the honest and hardworking mechanics, and those who have taken hold with their hands and wrought out the development of the reservation country, we are constrained to grant a prominent place in the history of our county, for we firmly believe that the ones who have done the labor are the ones who should receive the credit of opening any country, regardless of the amount of wealth the laborer has gathered. As a leader in the realm of mechanics in Nezperce, we mention Mr. Davis, of the firm of Wilson & Davis, doubtless the largest firm for blacksmithing and wheelwright work in the county, and the operators of as good a shop and as well furnished and equipped as there is in the state. They employ three men besides the proprietors and Mr. Davis attends to the wheelwright department.

Granville O. Davis was born in Ross county, Ohio, on February 10, 1858, being the son of Horatio H. and Lucy (Kuhl) Davis, natives of Fayette county, Ohio, born on February 22, 1833, and 1835, respectively. The father has a large shop in Lyndon, Ohio, where he is a prominent citizen and his ancestors came from the Plymouth Rock pioneers. He was married in 1854. The ancestors of our subject's mother lived in Virginia for seven generations back. Granville was educated in his native place, finishing with a course in the South Salem Academy. In 1878 he started in blacksmithing for himself in South Salem, Ohio, and fifteen years he wrought there. It was 1893 that he came to Johnson, Washington, and there operated the best shop until 1901, when he came to Nezperces and at first entered partnership with S. J. Doggett, but later sold to Mr. Doggett and in November, 1901, formed his present business relations. Mr. Davis has three brothers, Peter K., a traveling salesman for the Gilliam Manufacturing Company of Canton, Ohio; Horatio H., with the same company; Jesse R., a physician in New York city. Mr. Davis also has three sisters, Ogeda V., single, living with parents; Annie, wife of Joseph Rohan, a horseshoer in Jeffersonville, Ohio; Lucy, wife of Amer Wilson, a farmer at Johnson, Washington.

In Ross county, Ohio, on October 30, 1878, Mr. Davis married Miss Vedie L., daughter of Joseph and Louisa (Wilson) Lumbeck, natives of Ohio. The father was an undertaker and died in 1885, aged fifty-eight, while the mother died January 20, 1903, in Burlington, Iowa. Mrs. Davis has one brother, Daniel W., a physician at Burlington, Iowa. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis, Bonnie L. and Edna W. Mr. Davis is a member of the K. P., McLean Lodge, No. 262 of Greenfield, Ohio; and also of the W. W., at Nezperce. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and are highly respected people.

JACOB H. MOWRY. It is with pleasure that we essay the task of outlining the career of this estimable gentleman, since he has demonstrated in the face of overwhelming odds, his integrity, determination, and ability to endure hardships and win success in spite of the greatest opposition and obstacles to overcome.

Jacob H. Mowry was born in Miami county, Ohio, on May 11, 1860, being the son of Phillip and Sarah (Shellenbarger) Mowry, natives of Pennsylvania. The mother died when our subject was eight years old. His father is now aged seventy-eight and is living a retired life at Covington, Ohio. Our subject was reared on a farm which his father rented from the noted patent medicine man, Dr. Harter. He was educated in the high school and when twenty-one went to Arkansas to raise cotton. Later he removed to Iowa, and in various places in that state he wrought at farming and in the starch works until the opening of the reservation when he came hither and bought the relinquishment to his present place. He was rather depleted as to finances, and his wife was very poorly from consumption. Mr. Mowry was forced to leave the family and go to Walla Walla and work in the harvest fields to secure food for them. On November 10, 1897, Mrs. Mowry died and left four children, the youngest four years old. Mr. Mowry remained at home and cared for his little ones as best he could and little by little improved the ranch. He worked out and one day earned a little pig, which he brought home under his arm. He now has one hundred and twenty-five descendants of that animal on his place and is being prospered exceedingly in raising hogs, being very skillful in that line. Mr. Mowry has his place improved well, has platted twenty acres and sold some lots and is one of the leading and respected men of the county. His children are bright and showing great talent in the line of music and there is great credit due our subject for his faithful and wise manner in which he has met the adversities of life and has wrought.

On January 6, 1884, Mr. Mowry married Miss Millie A., daughter of Charles and Mary (Thomas) Walker, now deceased. Mrs. Mowry was born in Illinois in 1869. She had the following brothers and sisters, Lester, Fred, Charles and Milton, all residents in Iowa; Allie, wife of Seth Smith, in Racine, Wisconsin; Lula, single and on the home farm in Marshall county, Iowa. The four children of our subject are named as follows: Roy, born May 15, 1885; Fred, born January 7, 1887; Hazel G., born December 30, 1891; Pearl, born January 3, 1893. Mr. Mowry has two brothers, Samuel and John, both farmers near Covington, Ohio. He is a Republican and is often seen at the conventions. Mr. Mowry is one of those worthy men whose example and walk and business enterprise are worth much for the upbuilding of the country and it is gratifying that we are able to record that he is now enjoying the reward of the wise effort that he has bestowed.

FRANK J. DECKER. The travels and experiences of this well known and substantial resident of Mason prairie would fill a volume and the best way to recount the career of a man is to see what he has done. So we will give in as great detail as we are able to do the review of Mr. Decker's life.

Frank J. Decker was born in Jefferson county, Indiana, on February 4, 1849. His father, George D., was a machinist, born in France and at nineteen years of age he was head of a large shop. He patented the first shoe pegging machine and was also the patentee of several other valuable inventions. He married Judith, daughter of John and Eleanor Hall. She was born in Kentucky. The father died in 1839 and the mother in 1899. Our subject went to live with his grandmother when he was thirteen and two years later he commenced to learn the harness trade. Next we see him in Kansas City then in Stark county, Illinois, where he worked in the coal mines. In the fall of 1869, he went to Montana, looked the country over and in his trips nearly lost his scalp, only avoiding that unpleasant experience by secreting himself in the brush. A few nights following this he was awakened in his camp by breathing in his face; carefully lighting a match, he held it to some prepared tinder which displayed a bear who was quite at home, but at this he concluded to depart. Game was plenty in those days in Montana and one day when he had gotten into settled quarters, he heard a disturbance in the yard and went out to find a lusty elk with his antlers caught in the door of the dog house. The dog inside was resenting the intrusion as desperately as circumstances would permit. In 1870 Mr. Decker landed in Helena and worked there with one man for six years. While he was there, the Chessman reservoir broke and Mr. Decker was in the way of the awful torrent. He was tossed about as a cork and not a thread of clothing was left on his body. He was bruised terribly all over his body but escaped with his life and a broken leg and no clothes. Several others perished in the flood. He was broken in finances because of this catastrophe and made a new start in life. He took up farming and also freighted to Fort Benton from Deer Lodge and other points. He then bought sixty-five head of cattle and went to the head of the Teton and a hard winter killed all. This left him with a four-horse team and thirty dollars. He came west and located in Spirit valley and two years later came and took his present place, known as the Mason creek ranch. He has one hundred acres in meadow, two good barns, a comfortable residence, twenty-five cattle and other improvements and property. Mr. Decker was one of the very first to settle in this part and is well known all over this section, having kept for years a stopping place and feed barns.

Mr. Decker has two children by his former marriage, Emma A., born April 21, 1878, at Helena, Montana; Ella E., born January 20, 1880, at Helena, and wife of Edward Cole.

Mr. Decker married a second time on August 12, 1897, Ida A., daughter of Otto and Anna M. (Robison) Brown, becoming his wife then. She was born in Montana, on June 22, 1880. Her mother was born in Denmark, July 19, 1864. The following named children have been born to this union: Clarence G., born February 11, 1898; Frederic F., born December 28, 1899; Elmer E., born January 9, 1901; all were born in Nez Perces county.

CHARLES A. MARKWELL. This young man is one of the substantial property owners of the reservation portion of our county and he is also one of the vanguard of progress and development, having a fine farm in the vicinity of Nezperce, while also he has great interests in the mining regions of the Coeur d'Alenes.

Charles A. Markwell was born in Missouri on September 20, 1871, being the son of Sylvester and Esther (Stevens) Markwell. The father was born in Indiana, on May 29, 1840, and his parents were born in Missouri. He is a mining man and raiser of stock. The mother of our subject was born in the vicinity of Bangor, Maine; her father was a native of England and her mother of Scotland. When an infant, our subject was taken to Nevada with his parents and there was educated in the graded schools, also attending school some in Healdsburg, California. He labored with his father until twenty-one, when they all came to Wallace, Idaho, where he and his father went into the dairy business. This he conducted until 1901, and then sold out to his brothers. In 1898 Mr. Markwell filed on his present claim, purchasing a relinquishment. He has given attention to the cultivation and improvement of this farm since that time and it is one of the valuable places in this vicinity. Mr. Markwell also owns stock in the famous Hercules mine, in Burke, for which property one million five hundred thousand dollars were recently refused. He also owns three dwellings and a business building in Burke, which he rents. Then he has a one-third interest with his father and brothers in a fruit ranch and stock farm two miles from Wallace. Mr. Markwell has three brothers and two sisters.—J. Fred, a dairyman near Wallace; Frank P., a partner in this dairy; Jess E., in Wallace; Effie F.; Emma, wife of Thomas J. Hardwick, a vegetable farmer near Wallace. Mr. Markwell's father was in the Civil war and after considerable sickness he was discharged. Mr. Markwell is a thorough business man and has operated with display of great wisdom and keen foresight in his ventures, success having crowned him each time. He is of excellent standing and has the good will and esteem of all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance, being an affable and pleasant companion and a loyal friend.

GEORGE W. DILL. This prosperous farmer is to be classed among the most enterprising men of the county and his hard labors, deprivations and hardships endured in the struggle to open this new country, demonstrate him to be possessed of true grit, energy, wisdom and powers to overcome.

George W. Dill was born in Nevada county, California, on June 24, 1870. His father, Henry P., was born in St. Louis, on June 13, 1833. In the early fifties he went across the plains with ox teams and although the Indians were on every hand they escaped a battle and he was soon in the mines of the Golden state, where he discovered some valuable properties. After mining for some time on his own responsibility, he took the superintendency of a large hydraulic company and operated it for seventeen years. He is now farming in Washington. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Sullivan. She was born in California in 1850, May 28. They had the following children, besides our subject: Henry, died in California; Laura L. Hayhurst, Elizabeth L., with parents. George W. worked with his parents until he was of age and then went to Whitman county and farmed for three years. In the panic of 1893 he was completely broken up financially and packed his blankets seventy miles to work in the timber. Two years there and he came with a three-horse team to the reservation country and during that trip camped out when the mercury registered twelve degrees below zero. He took a quarter by homestead right and has given himself to its culture since. He had a stopping place for freighters and travelers during the days of freighting to Grangeville. He was one of the first to settle on Mason prairie and has made a fine showing, having marketed over twelve hundred bushels of grain this year, has stock and is a prosperous man. He drew up the petition for the first school district and was appointed director by the county superintendent. Politically he is a Democrat but is an independent thinker and chooses rather the man than the tenets of any party.

DAVID H. LOWRY. Characterized by public spirit, enterprise, and keen business ability, being withal a man of excellent qualities and actuated with a sence of high honor in his relations, it is fitting that the subject of this article be accorded a prominent position in the history of Nez Perces county. Mr. Lowry is the man who has really thought out the problem of successfully locating a town and has given practical exemplification to his plans and ideas in the thrifty and stirring village of Dublin. This town was platted on June 1, 1900, and they have two substantial stores, a flour mill of sixty barrels capacity, good blacksmith shop, other enterprises and a fine hotel building. The town has an abundant supply of pure water, an important item which few other towns can boast of in this section. Mr. Lowry gave the Northern Pacific right of way and station ground on his land, it being selected by that company. He has offered free lots for school and church buildings and is a strong supporter of these things.

David H. Lowry was born in Ireland, on February 22, 1856, being the son of Hugh and Ann (McKelvey) Lowry. The father was born in Ireland on June 21, 1817, and died on January 4, 1890. He came to the United States in 1870 and settled in Lincoln county, Missouri. The mother was born in Ireland in 1830, and died in April, 1892. Our subject was educated in Ireland and came to the United States with his parents when he was fourteen. He worked with his father on the farm, later went to Jackson county, Missouri, and farmed prosperously for seven years, after which he came to Lewiston. He farmed in the Genesee country and was on the Sound and in various employments until 1895, when the reservation opened and he selected his present place, upon which the town of Dublin is situated. Mr. Lowry has given his attention to general farming and handling his other lines of business, in all of which he has met with success. He has fourteen brothers, six of whom are living, John, Henry I., William P., Robert M., James, George. Mr. Lowry has been a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. In 1900 he was elected justice of the peace, but refused to qualify. He is an active Democrat and a potent influence that helped to carry the precinct for that ticket notwithstanding the land slide of the other precincts. He is skillful in raising the excellent English Berkshires and the Poland Chinas, having the best strains in the west.

JAMES M. WHEAT. Among those who have done commendable work in the development of the reservation country we are bound to mention the enterprising and capable gentleman whose name appears above.

James M. Wheat was born in Madison county, Iowa, on December 25, 1853, being the son of Augustus and Isabella (Smith) Wheat. The father was born in Alabama in 1822 and died in 1902. He operated a general store for years in Indianapolis. He then became a pioneer in Madison county, Iowa. His father, James Wheat, was a soldier in the war of 1812. The mother of our subject was born in Nauvoo and now lives in Missouri. Her father, John C. Smith, was one of the first settlers in Clarke county, Iowa, and is now operating a large mill in Portland. When our subject was eleven, the family went back to Indiana and made their home there for ten years. Then they returned to the old home in Iowa and in these places our subject was educated. When James was twenty-one he farmed in partnership with his uncle, J. T. Wheat. In 1883 he sold out and came to Genesee, where he settled on a farm until the reservation was opened. At that important time he came hither and selected his present place, about one mile south from Ilo. He has it well improved with comfortable buildings, orchard, fences, and much besides, and is one of the thrifty men of the section. In addition to general farming he pays considerable attention to breeding and raising fine Poland China and Berkshire hogs, and is successful in this line.

On January 16, 1877, Mr. Wheat married Miss Jennie M., daughter of William and Elizabeth (Simmons) Lockridge. This was in Warren county, Iowa, and eight children have been born to them, Charles E., William, Jessie, Everett, Lucella, Esther, Dora Z., Savanah M. Mrs. Wheat has six brothers and sisters, —Leander, Samuel, John, Allen, Sarah Follett, Savanah Crow. Mr. Wheat has four brothers and sisters, Pantha Etta, Sarah T., Eldora, Edgar. Mrs. Wheat was born in Warren county, Iowa, in 1861. Her father was born in Virginia and was a farmer. Her mother was born in Kentucky and is a direct descendant of Daniel Boone. Mr. and Mrs. Wheat are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. He is a Republican and active in the local campaigns. Recently Mr. Wheat has been elected to the important position of road overseer and doubtless there will be manifested in his labors in this line the same efficiency and wisdom as have characterized him in all his ways.

SAMUEL M. EBY. Among the leading citizens of the vicinity of Nezperce, we are constrained to mention the well known and capable gentleman whose name initates this article. Mr. Eby is one of the shrewdest and most successful business men of the county. He is the owner of much land grouped around the town and his keen foresight, executive ability and fine management have placed him among the heaviest property owners and leaders here.

Samuel M. Eby was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, on March 3, 1841, being the son of Christian and Diana (Murray) Eby, natives of Maryland. The father descended from the Pennsylvania Dutch, was born in 1808, and died in 1891. The mother is of English extraction, was born January 9, 1814, was married March 3, 1836, and died in 1900. Her father was a farmer and merchant. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and after school days were past he taught for two years and then farmed. Later, we see him in Indiana and seven years were spent in successful farming. Then a move was made back to Ohio, and then he came to Missouri, where his business ability led him to acquire large tracts of land which he still owns, and which is operated by his son. Then Mr. Eby made one of the unfortunate moves of his life, a trip to Florida, where he lost about seven thousand dollars, but he still owns part of the real estate there and may yet make a winner out of it. Thence Mr. Eby went to the Rogue river country, Oregon, and after a short time came to the reservation and bought land in the vicinity of Nezperce. To the management of these estates and the care of his other business, Mr. Eby devotes himself now. He has two brothers and three sisters,—Joseph W., a farmer in Ohio; John, a farmer in Tennessee; Agnes, wife of Samuel Wampler in Dayton, Ohio; Rebecca, widow of Levi Ikenberry, in Camden, Ohio; Jane, wife of A. C. Prugh, at Camden, Ohio.

Mr. Eby married Miss Nancy J. Collett, on April 17, 1866, in Miami county, Indiana. She was born in the same county, on November 13, 1843 and died at Warrensburg, Missouri, July 14, 1885, leaving the following children, Agnes, wife of John Snyder, a farmer in Maryland; Edward M., a stockman and who looks after his father's property in Missouri; Laura D., with parents. On September 12, 1886, at Warrensburg, Missouri, Mr. Eby married Miss Minnie E., daughter of Peter S., and Sarah A. (Miller) Garman. She was born in Elkhart, Indiana, and her father was a preacher in the German Baptist church. To this second marriage there have been born five children—George, Vernice, Hazel, Delfa and Isabel. Mr. Eby is a preacher in the German Baptist church, to which he and his wife belong; he is an ardent worker and supporter of the faith, being a man of great influence and filling the position of leader in a faithful and efficient manner.

ALEXANDER MILLER, a member of the thrifty band of sturdy men who came to this country at the opening of the reservation to make of it one of the most fertile and productive regions of the west, is now to be numbered with the leading citizens of this section and is a well-to-do and substantial man.

Alexander Miller was born in Fulton county, Ohio, October 18, 1850, being the son of Alexander and Polly Anna (Lyba) Miller. The father was born in Switzerland in 1810 and came to the United States in his boyhood days. He died in 1899, having been one of the prominent oil men in early days in Pennsylvania. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1826 and died in 1868. She descended from the Puritan stock; her grandfather Lyba fought in the Revolution and her grandmother who recently died played a conspicuous part also in that memorable struggle. Our subject worked with his father in the oil regions until eighteen and then returned to Ohio and there bored oil wells. In 1876, he went to Dickinson county, Kansas, and bought a farm of railroad land and also drilled wells in addition to the farm improvement and labors. He remained there for twelve years and in 1889, he sold out and came to Spokane, that being the time of the big fire. He took up railroading and was located at Medical Lake for nine months and then went to Colfax, where he continued that labor until 1895. In that year, Mr. Miller came to the opening reservation and secured his present estate as a homestead. It is located a mile and a half south from Ilo and this has been the family home since that date. He has made good improvements and does general farming and raising hogs.

In 1871, Mr. Miller married and two children were born to them, George and Amy. George is attending the Northwestern Medical college in Chicago where he will graduate in three years more and then will return to this country for practice. He has also had a course in Ann Arbor. Amy married George Palmer and they live in Colfax. Mr. Miller has two brothers and two sisters,—George, John, Jane Townes, Matilda Buria. Mr. Miller is a staunch Democrat and is an advocate for improvement in all lines and especially so in matters of education. His home is a valuable and pleasant place and the six-room residence, good barn, fine orchard and other improvements are all evidences of his wisely bestowed labors.

CHRISTIAN J. FIKE. No list of the leading agriculturists would be complete without an especial mention of the sagacious, capable, and upright gentleman, whose name appears above.

Christian J. Fike was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, where he was also raised and educated. When twenty-one he came to Iowa and bougnt land near Garrison, farming it for twelve years. Then his father came to Iowa and bought land near Waterloo, and our subject sold his estate and purchased land adjoining his father's, which was the family home until 1897, the date of the migration to Nez Perces county.

The parents of our subject, Jacob C. and Elizabeth (Blough) Fike, were natives of Pennsylvania. The father was born in 1828 and died in April, 1902, being descended from the Pennsylvania Dutch for several generations back. The mother was born in 1827 and still lives in Iowa. She also is descended from the Dutch of Pennsylvania. Upon coming to the reservation, Mr. Fike purchased the relinquishment of a settler, which is still the family home. The land adjoins Nezperce and lies so as to overlook the town and is one of the most valuable places on the reservation. Mr. Fike has displayed both industry and wisdom in improving and he has a splendid orchard and is a very prosperous man. Mr. Fike has the following brothers and sisters, John, a retired farmer at Waterloo, Iowa; Samuel, on the old homestead at Waterloo, Iowa, and his mother resides with him; Sarah, wife of Benjamin Lohr; Susan, wife of Henry Grady, at Waterloo; Mary, wife of Albert Blaough, a farmer near Waterloo.

On October 3, 1865, Mr. Fike married Miss Frances B., daughter of Abraham and Fanny Allison. Mr. Allison brought his family from Ohio to Stevenson county, Illinois, thence to Iowa and he is now living in Kansas. The mother is dead. Mrs. Fike was born in Miami county, Ohio, on September 8, 1846, and was educated in Illinois. She has two brothers and three sisters, David, a stock buyer in Kensett, Iowa; Henry H., a banker and prominent man at Sac City, Iowa; Susan, wife of Peter Fike, a farmer in Kansas; Mary, widow of John Moses; Martha, widow of George Thomas, living on her homestead on the reservation. Mr. and Mrs. Fike have become the parents of six children,—Jacob H., born July 18, 1867, a school teacher and elder of the German Baptist church in Indiana; Bert, born November 14, 1877, engineer in flour mill at Nezperce; Fannie E., born January 14, 1880, wife of John McCahill, a farmer near Nezperce; Abraham R., born July 27, 1882, in Iowa; Franklin W., born January 17, 1885, at home; Charles C., born June 22, 1887, living with parents. Our worthy subject and his estimable wife are devout and faithful members of the German Baptist church and are devout supporters of the faith. Mr. Fike is allied with the Republican party but is not forward in that realm. He is a man of keen business ability, is exemplary in his walk and is respected by all. He and his faithful wife have raised a large family of children, whom they have taught in the fear and admonition of the Lord and it is with great pleasure that we are allowed to place the record of such stanch, reliable and worthy people in the history of our county.

CHARLES D. THOMAS. This rising young attorney promises to place himself among the leaders in his profession in the near future as he has displayed great aptness and ability in the profession. At the present time he is a member of the firm of Stearns & Thomas, which handles a general loaning, real estate, insurance, and law business in Nezperce.

Charles D. Thomas was born in Danbury, Iowa, on January 7, 1871, being the son of Daniel and Mary (Smith) Thomas, natives of New York and Ohio and born in 1830 and in 1837, respectively. When Charles was young he came with his parents to Moscow and there he attended the public schools and in 1890 he graduated from the Hillsdale College at Hillsdale, Michigan. Returning to Idaho, he took up the work of the educator and for three years he was assistant principal of the Genesee schools. In July, 1901, Mr. Thomas entered into partnership with Judge Stearns and since that time has steadily pursued the study of the law, which he had followed in his teaching. Mr. Thomas has one brother and three sisters, Frank B., at Colville, Washington, in the building business; Lovina, wife of Melvin Chapman, at Waterville, Washington, raising stock; Ida, wife of Scott Dennison, a farmer at Colville; Alice, wife of Alonzo Horn, a railroad man of Moscow.

On April 18, 1893, Mr. Thomas married Miss Dora R., daughter of Allen and Rachel (Robertson) Bond, natives of Virginia, and now living in Irving, Oregon. Mrs. Thomas has the following brothers and sisters: Lincoln, merchant in Irving, Oregon; Edward, a merchant at Baker City; James, a farmer at Irving; Frank, a railroad man at Irving; Mary, wife of A. J. Green, an attorney at Moscow; Helen, wife of James Ebert, a farmer near Eugene, Oregon; Clara, wife of J. D. Spencer, a farmer near Irving; Daisy, wife of Charles Minkler, railroad conductor at Portland. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, Vesta D., Reginald F., aged six and four, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are members of the Christian church. He is a member also of the I. O. O. F., Morning Star Lodge, at Nezperce; of the K. O. T. M., Nezperce Tent; of the M. W. A., of Nezperce; of the Yeoman of America, at Nezperce. Mr. Thomas is an active Republican and has done good service in the county and state conventions. He is a bright, cultured and capable young man and he is the recipient of the good will and esteem of all who know him.

It is an interesting reminiscence that Mrs. Thomas is one of a family of eight children, all of whom were born and married in the old family home in Irving, Oregon.

In 1902 he was nominated by the Republican party as candidate to the state legislature and was elected by a large majority, receiving two hundred and forty-three votes in his own precinct. He was also a member of the seventh session.

CHARLES LARSON. In at least two lines of endeavor has Mr. Larson achieved success and is now one of the prominent and successful farmers and business men of the reservation country, being located at Ilo, where he carries on a thriving business as a wheelwright and wood workman. He was born in Norway, on September 25, 1873, being the son of Lars and Mary (Erickson) Larson, natives of Norway and born in 1787 and 1836, respectively. The father died in 1881, aged ninety-four. The mother later married Mr. Nelson and is now living in the Potlatch country. Charles was educated in his native country and there learned the trade which he now follows, also perfecting himself at a carpenter's school. He worked on piece work until eighteen, when he came to the United States, whither his mother and stepfather had come four years previous to this time. Mr. Larson settled at Moscow and took up his trade which he followed for five years. In 1895 he took his present farm as a homestead, but he returned to Moscow, off and on, working at his trade. In April, 1901, he opened his present business and is doing well.

On November 3, 1896, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Larson married Miss Anna, daughter of Julius and Sophia Shoemaker, natives of Sweden and Germany respectively. Mrs. Larson has three sisters and four brothers. Mrs. Larson was born in Latah county, on April 4, 1880. Mr. Larson has three brothers and one sister, Leonard, Louis, John, Lena. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Larson, Hazel I., John. Mr. Larson is a member of the M. W. A., at the Ilo Camp. He is a stanch Republican and believes in progress and improvement and is always fostering public enterprises which are for the welfare of all. Mr. Larson has a fine farm, of one hundred and sixty acres, well improved with buildings and last year he sold of oats alone three thousand and five hundred bushels.

DANIEL W. YORK is a man of the true grit as has been demonstrated by his success in this new country in spite of hardships and scant means, which entailed great labors and deprivations. He has a good farm three miles northwest from Morrow and has improved it in a becoming manner. He threshed eleven hundred bushels of grain this year and feeds most of it to his stock, having some fine hogs. Altogether, Mr. York is prosperous and one of the leading and substantial men of the community.

Daniel W. York was born in Alabama, on November 6, 1863. His father, Caswell, was born in Tennessee, on April 20, 1827. He was among the Indiana volunteers and was detailed on the bridge brigade and went ahead preparing the way for the army to pass. He homesteaded land in Spokane county, having previously married Elizabeth Wallace of Tennessee. Besides our subject, they had the following children: Adam, John E., Nancy Crane, Jane Nelson, Mary E. Behrens, Henry C. and Daniel W., twins. Henry C. was a member of the National guards at Tekoa, Washington. Our subject worked with his parents until he was twenty-four and then went to Tekoa, Washington, where he engaged in the lumber business with his brother. They continued for two years and then Mr. York turned his attention to farming in the same county until the spring of 1897, when he settled on his present home place. He has stuck to the battle with grit and has shown real skill and wisdom and is now being rewarded with good success and prosperity. In addition to the other things mentioned on the farm, Mr. York raised one hundred and fifty bushels of timothy seed.

On May 17, 1891, Mr. York married Miss Mary J., daughter of Amos and Elizabeth Blue. She was born in Linn county, Oregon, on October 17, 1870. The following children have been born to this marriage: Edna E., born in Whitman county, Washington, on March 14, 1892; Hattie E., born in Spokane county, April 14, 1894; Arthur H., born in Nez Perces county, March 30, 1902. Mr. York is a member of the I. O. O. F. and he and his wife belong to the Christian church. He has been clerk and trustee on the school board for five years and was elected again at the last meeting.

SIDNEY J. DOGGETT. Among the mechanics of Nez Perces county there is none with more skill in his line, enterprise in business, good practical judgment and ability, than the subject of this brief article. Mr. Doggett now handles the first shop in size and business on the reservation, doing a general blacksmith business with all of its branches and operating a half dozen men.

Sidney J. Doggett was born in Siskiyou county, California, on April 29, 1867, being the son of William C. and Jane P. (Redman) Doggett. The father was born in St. Louis county, Missouri, on March 14, 1825, and followed mining until he came to Sprague, Washington, where he farms. The mother was born in St. Louis county, Missouri, on January 10, 1838. The family came to Washington when Sidney was seven months old, where he was reared and educated. When eighteen he rode the range in the Palouse and in 1890, he rented land near Pullman and farmed. It was 1896 that he came to the reservation and bought the relinquishment of a settler and followed farming until he proved up on the place. During the times between the rush of farm work he gave his attention to the blacksmith's art and he became very proficient in it. In the fall of 1901, he erected a substantial building in Nezperce and opened a shop, and as said above, he is handling the largest blacksmith business in the reservation country. Mr. Doggett has the following brothers and sisters: John, a farmer at Chesley; Jefferson D., farmer near Walla Walla; Robert S., a farmer at Johnson, Washington; Francis E., a farmer in California; Isaac H., and Frederick T., farmers at Sprague, Washington; Sierra Nevada, wife of T. A. Brown, a farmer at Pullman. Mr. Doggett is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Rebekahs in Nezperce; also of the W. W., and the M. W. A. and the Women of Woodcraft, all in Nezperce. He is a Democrat but is never zealous of personal preferment.

On February 23, 1891, Mr. Doggett married Miss Edna A., daughter of Alsa and Sarah (VanBibber) Woodward. Mrs. Doggett was born in Missouri on October 5, 1874; she has the following brothers and sisters: William D., a farmer at Johnson, Washington; Caroline, in Missouri; Martha, wife of John Brown, a saw mill man at Kendrick; Cinderella, wife of Robert L. Doggett; Alice, wife of Wm. Anderson, in Washington. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Doggett,—Lulu M., Herbert E., Etta, William A., George, and Esther. Mr. Doggett is enjoying the meed of honest industry and wisdom in the competence that he possesses and the prosperous business that he is handling, while also the confidence and good will of all are his in unstinted measure.

LEWIS D. STEVENS. This prosperous farmer has well earned the meed of success by his thrift, his industry, and his wisdom in managing the resources of the country in these pioneer days and is to be classed among the substantial and capable men who deserve representation in the history of the county.

Lewis D. Stevens was born in Alpine county, California, on April 10, 1876. His father, Alexander H., a farmer, was born in Perth, Scotland, on May 4, 1849, and married Sarah F. Trimmer. Our subject remained with his parents until nineteen. He came to Nez Perces county on July 9, 1885, and engaged in the cattle business with his father and for himself. On August 14, 1895, Mr. Stevens married Miss Addie, daughter of Darius B. and Arabelle J. Randall. Mr. Randall's first work in life was as a teacher, being a first class educator. He was first lieutenant in the Rebellion and later was lieutenant in a company at Fort Lapwai. A detailed account of his career in the Indian troubles will appear in another portion of this volume and we will not revert to it here. He was a brave and courageous man and with a handful of sixteen he was pitted against one hundred and twenty-five Indians. He fought the Indians with display of desperate and great valor but was overpowered and slain. It is said that officer Perry stood and witnessed the awful massacre with no move to avert it. Mr. Randall was judge of Idaho county at the time of his death. He was beloved and esteemed by all. Mrs. Stevens was born December 8, 1876, in Idaho county and her brothers and sisters are named as follows: Oronoco L. Ingram, born April 25, 1866, in Linn county, Oregon; Henry A., born August 28, 1867, in Nez Perces county; Belle J. Gable, born November 2, 1870, in Nez Perces county; Maude E. Byron, born September 16, 1873, in Idaho county. Mrs. Stevens has also one half sister, Jay M. Dorman, born March 13, 1883, in Idaho county. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have two girls, Ruth Elizabeth, born June 19, 1898, in Idaho county; Lauretta Jay, born September 18, 1900, in this county. Mr. Stevens has devoted himself to the improvement of his estate and has done commendable work. He raised about two thousand bushels of grain last year and feeds it all to his stock. He has fine stock, having twelve cattle, sixty horses, thirty sheep and many hogs.

DAVIS S. WRIGHT is a saw mill man and a true blue Republican with no uncertain motto on his banner and with plenty of keen penetration into issues and ability to handle convincingly the political questions of the day. His mill is located four miles west from Ilo, is one of the best and perhaps the largest plant in the reservation country and is handled with a wisdom and business ability that have given to the owner a gratifying success. In the political field he is known as one of the strongest factors of the party in this section and a terror to opposers, and in the caucuses and conventions he is a familiar figure and a power.

Davis S. Wright was born in Ohio, on April 15, 1858, being the son of Charles S. and Deborah (Oliver) Wright. The father was born in the state of presidents in 1838, and his father was a pioneer there. Charles S. Wright is now operating a flour mill in Dublin. The mother of our subject owns Ohio as her native place also and her parents were pioneers there. She and her husband came to Walla Walla in 1873. Our subject was taken from Ohio to Wisconsin by his parents when he was two weeks old, the trip being made by wagon. Settlement was made in Vernon county and ten years later they pulled up stakes and turned the prow of their prairie schooner toward the setting sun and cast anchor in Washington county, Oregon. There they farmed and about 1872 or 1873 they came thence to Walla Walla. Our subject was educated in Oregon and Washington and when he was nineteen went to do for himself. He was married about that time and went to farming near Walla Walla, where his home continued to be until 1892, in which year he removed to the Potlatch country. He settled in Kendrick and took up the livery business and assisted materially to build that town. In 1896, Mr. Wright came to the reservation and took a farm near Fletcher and in 1898, he took up the saw mill business as mentioned above.

On November 24, 1877, Mr. Wright married Miss

Emma, daughter of Thomas and Lydia (Skinner) Whetstone, the wedding occurring in Dayton, Washington. Mr. Whetstone was a pioneer in the Walla Walla country and built the first house on the wagon road from that town to Lewiston. It is located in Whetstone hollow. Mrs. Wright was born in Columbia county, Washington, in 1860. She has the following named brothers and sisters, Mary, Alice, Robert E., all living in Nez Perces county. Mr. Wright has three brothers, William A., in Dublin, George W., in Kendrick, Amos A., in Spokane. Three children have been born to our subject and his wife,—Robert O., Lilly Johnson, Bessie L., in Nez Perces county. Mr. Wright is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge 65, at Magnolia. He has been justice of the peace for two terms.

ESLI W. BEAN. This enterprising and thrifty farmer dwells about two miles northeast from Morrow, upon land that he took wild and secured through homestead right. He has made a good home from his place and is numbered with the progressive and public minded men of the section.

Esli W. Bean was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, on April 30, 1848, being the son of Edward S. and Mary (Vaughn) Bean. The parents were pioneers in Rock county and died when he was young. After the death of the parents, he went to live with his sister, Mrs. Vielie. He remained with them until he was nineteen, gaining a good education and working on the farm. Then he went to Plover, Portage county, Wisconsin, and worked in the timber two years. Then he came to San Francisco and thence to Walla Walla. Here he worked in a saw mill for his cousin, Lon Bean, on the Walla Walla river. Four years later he came to Latah county and settled where the town of Palouse now stands. This was in 1875, but no Palouse was there then. He took land and farmed for a time and then went to Longmount, Colorado, with cattle. He worked there in a hardware and tinning establishment and sixteen years later came back to Oregon. This was in 1893 and three years later he came to his present place.

In February, 1879, Mr. Bean married Miss Lulu Crawford and two daughters, Goldie and Fern, are the living children born to them. Mr. Bean is a firm Republican and active in the primaries and conventions. He is an ardent supporter of good schools and advanced twenty dollars to assist in painting a new school house if the neighbors would take hold and erect one. Mr. Bean has the following brothers and sisters: James, Lizzie, Hepsie Howard, Ira, Hulda.

HENRY J. GERTJE. This young farmer is an enterprising and successful toiler, whose labors have done much to advance the welfare of the reservation portion of the county and whose standing is first class among his fellows.

Henry J. Gertje was born in Waseca county, Minnesota, on June 13, 1876, being the son of John and Mattie Gertje. The father was born in Germany in 1832. About 1884 the family came to Dakota from Minnesota, where the father took land and farmed for three years. The next move was to Latah county, in the Potlatch country, and there our subject received his education and grew to manhood. On November 1, 1897, Mr. Gertje came to the reservation and took his present place, about two and three-fourths miles east and one south from Melrose. He has a good place, well improved, excellent labor having been done by him since his settlement here.

On January 30, 1900, Mr. Gertje married Miss Estella, daughter of William and Anna (Greer) Parnish. The father was a millman born in Virginia in 1840 and served in Company F, Twenty-fifth Ohio, and was wounded at Gettysburg. The mother was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, in 1847. Mrs. Gertje was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on August 10, 1876, and has two brothers, William and Charles, at Spalding. Mr. Gertje has the following named brothers and sisters: George, John, Herman, Mary Tedie and Edward. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gertje, Lulu I. Mr. Gertje is a stanch Republican, is always present at the post of duty and is an active worker. He is also strongly in favor of good schools and he and Arthur Cordiner helped to build the school house and hired the children to come to get the school started, and it is interesting to note that Mr. Gertje and Mr. Cordiner were both bachelors at that time. Mr. Gertje has a good home place and is highly esteemed in the community both for his excellent labors as well as for his intrinsic worth.

EDWARD S. HEGEL. About six miles northwest from Morrow is the home place of our subject, which was secured by homestead right on June 7, 1897. Since that time, Mr. Hegel has devoted himself to improving the farm and building up the country. He is a man of industry and worth and is entitled to and receives the esteem of all.

Edward S. Hegel was born in Eau Claire county, Wisconsin, on May 24, 1869. His father, John F., who was born October, 1818, in Baden, Germany, was a plasterer and mason. He served in the confederate army under Price and Johnston. He married Eliza J. Folt. Edward S. worked for his father until he was fifteen, then went to Portland remaining three years. Next we see him at Ellensburg, Washington, and later was in the Okanogan country. He was also at Hunter, the same state, where he was occupied in raising stock with his brother for five years. Selling out, he went to Palouse country and farmed for two years. At the date mentioned he took his present place and is fast bringing it all under tribute by cultivation. Mr. Hegel married Miss Cordelia, daughter of George W. and Carry S. Wayne, who are mentioned in this volume. Mrs. Hegel was born in Silverton, Oregon, on December 10, 1877. Mr. Hegel's father manufactured the first brick made in Ellensburg and in North Yakima and later burned the first kiln in the Okanogan country. He died in 1896. Our subject was school director and is actively interested in good schools and general progress.

CHRISTIAN FLAIG. In recounting the items in the career of the subject of this article we note first that he was born in Germany, in April, 1867. His parents, Joseph and Mary (Wernz) Flaig, were also born in Germany, the father in 1830, and are now deceased. Our subject received his educational training in the schools of his native land and followed teaming and driving stage until he had arrived at his majority. Then he bade the fatherland and all its loved ones and associations farewell and sailed away to New York, whence he went direct to Spokane, Washington. He soon selected Rosalia as the place of operations and went to work in the saw mills. In the year 1888 he came to Spokane, and in 1895 he left Rosalia and came to the reservation country and located his present place, one mile south from Ilo. He has a quarter section of good land, well improved, having a fine house and orchard and buildings, and other improvements; thrift and order characterize the entire premises.

In 1896, at Lewiston, Mr. Flaig married Miss Minnie, daughter of Frederick and Louise Johns, natives of Germany, who now live near Ilo. The former was born in 1853, and the latter in 1878, being an only child. Mr. Flaig has three brothers and sisters,—Mary, Franz and Amale. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Flaig,—Louise and Fred. Mr. Flaig is a member of the M. W. A. He is a Democrat in political alliances and is a progressive man. In addition to his farming he owns and operates a fine threshing machine.

FRANK A. KEMPER. It is pleasure to us to be able to grant to this prominent and substantial citizen a consideration in the history of Nez Perces county, both because of his excellent industry and wisdom, which have accumulated a good holding for him, and because of his real worth and integrity.

Frank A. Kemper was born in Lippstadt, Germany, on August 31, 1845, being the son of Henry and Mary E. (Heimyer) Kemper, natives of Westphalia. Frank attended school from seven to fourteen. At the age of twenty he joined the regular army and served in the Franco-Prussian war, being under General Mantaufel. He served in four of the fierce battles of that war, namely, Forbach, Columba, Gravalotte and Auxere. He endured great hardships and terrible fatigue in forced and long marches. Many bullets passed through his clothes and many soldiers fell at his side, but Mr. Kemper was never wounded. He was honorably discharged in 1871, and in October of that year he came from Bremen to the United States, landing in Baltimore October 22, after eleven days at sea. On March 13, 1872, he started for San Francisco, and his train suffered wreck at Oakland, but he was not injured. Then he came by steamer "Ajax" to Portland, and there followed his trade, harness making, for four years, and then went to Cornelius and farmed for some time. There, on January 16, 1877, Mr. Kemper married Miss Barbara Thomas, a native of Bavaria, Germany. In 1887 they came to Uniontown, Washington, where Mrs. Kemper died on September 18, 1888, leaving three children,—Joseph, Kate and Nicholas. On July 25, 1889, Mr. Kemper married Kate Hageman, a native of Peoria, Illinois. She was born on March 4, 1855, and came to Uniontown via San Francisco and Portland, in 1885. Mr. Kemper left the harness-making trade and in 1893 made a trip to the reservation to inspect the land and view the country; the result was that on November 18, 1895, he was on hand to file on his present place, about two miles northwest from Nezperce. He has a fine seven-room house, a large barn, first class granary, bearing orchard and the entire premises show skill and industry. In Mr. Kemper's house was held the first Catholic service of the entire reservation country, and for two years there was service there on each alternate Sunday. Father Suer, a well known and faithful missionary, was the officiating priest. One child, Mary Magdalen, has been born to this couple.

THOMAS H. LADOW. This worthy pioneer has done much to open this western country for the abode of his fellows. He is worthy of a place in the history of northern Idaho and it is with pleasure that we accord him consideration. He is a man of integrity and strong character, and has manifested great energy and enterprise in his course.

Thomas H. LaDow was born in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, on August 22, 1853, being the son of John and Cornelia (Geer) LaDow. The father was born in Ohio, in 1819, and was a pioneer in Wisconsin and Minnesota, being in the last state at the time of the Sioux uprising. He was also a pioneer in Washington. The mother of our subject was born in New York in June, 1826. The family went to Wisconsin, and in 1859 went thence to Dayton, Ohio, returning again to Wisconsin; Thomas distinctly remembers the debates between Lincoln and Douglas. They went from Wisconsin to Minnesota, and in 1868 came across the plains with ox teams to Walla Walla. Four years after that the father went to unsurveyed land north from Palouse and settled, and that is the home where our subject remained until twenty. In November, 1873, he began carrying the mail from Lewiston to Spokane, there being no town at Spokane, only a store or so, and no town between that and Lewiston. This was the first mail route into Spokane. Until 1882 the mail was carried on horseback, and in that year Mr. LaDow got the contract for himself. He then put on a four-horse stage. Two years later he sold out and took a line from Colfax to Cheney. In 1884 he went to the Coeur d'Alene mines and there operated until his exchequer was empty; then he returned to staging.

He operated the first line from Moscow to Colfax, then he took the line from Farmington to Spokane and later bought a livery stable in Moscow. In 1886 Mr. LaDow went on the road as a traveling salesman for farm implements, and in a short time he went to farming near Palouse. In March, 1896, he came to the reservation and took his present place three miles south and two east from Melrose. He has a good farm, well tilled, fine barn and orchard and also handles considerable other land.

On November 9, 1884, at Moscow, Mr. LaDow married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Amos and Mary (Gwin) Phillips. Mr. Phillips was a pioneer to Whitman county in 1874. Mrs. LaDow was born in Dakota in 1863 and has two sisters and one brother, Nora Whitson, Hiram and Jennie Ames. Mr. LaDow has the following brothers and sisters: Josephine, Emmett A., Lora Palmer, Hattie Cox and Stella McConnell. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. LaDow,—Leonard, and Floyd, deceased. They are members of the Christian church in Melrose. Mr. LaDow is clerk of the school board and has been since the district was organized. He is greatly interested in good schools and general progress. Mr. LaDow is a stanch Republican and his friends strongly urged him to accept the office of county commissioner.

By way of reminiscence it is of note that Mr. LaDow was present when the volunteers, Captain Randall, Lew Willmott, James Curley, C. M. Day, Josh Rowden, and Joe Moore, were surounded by the Indians and Captain Randall and Joe Moore were killed almost in sight of the soldiers. Mount Idaho was but a trading post and Grangeville was not then built.

CHARLES W. MOTE, the enterprising farmer and patriotic citizen whose labors have resulted in great good in the line of development in Nez Perces county, resides about four miles southwest from Forest, on a farm which he secured through homestead right, and which his industry and thrift have cultivated and improved in a commendable manner.

Charles W. Mote was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, on June 20, 1850. His father, Jacob C., was a farmer, born in Darke county, Ohio, on October 27, 1827, and was a pioneer in southwestern Missouri. He was a confederate soldier under General Greene. He married Rachel, the daughter of John and Mary Jane Cline, and she died on April 15, 1876. They had one child besides our subject,—Emma F. Worthington. Our subject's grandfather was born in Ohio, and his father was born in England. Charles W. worked for his parents until twenty-two, and in 1878 he went by ship to Nino, California. One year later he went to Siskiyou county and dairied six years and also packed to the mines some. On October 19, 1885, Mr. Mote married Miss Lida A., daughter of Henry C. and Hannah Cory. The father was born in Indiana on January 24, 1829, and his father, Daniel F. Cory, was born in Ohio. Henry C. Cory died July 1, 1892, and his wife May 9, 1895. Besides Mrs. Mote, they had the following named children: Mary E. Walker, born December 24, 1850 (Mr. Walker was in the Illinois Infantry during the Rebellion); Lesius H., born December 10, 1852, a graduate of the Springfield Academy; Aaron E., born January 28, 1855, a miller; Elsja M., born January 20, 1857, a pioneer in Spokane; Susa L. Davidson, born January 15, 1859; William E., born April 12, 1861; Elda E. Estes, born September 1, 1865; Ina A. Denny, born January 12, 1870; Daniel F., born August 20, 1873. He was a regular at Vancouver for three years, and was on the Oregon at the time the Spanish fleet was captured. Our subject and his wife landed in Union county, Oregon, on November 1, 1885, and he farmed there for a decade. On December 4, 1895, he came to his present place, which has been the family home since that time. One child has been born to them, Cory A., born February 14, 1890. Mr. Mote is a member of the M. W. A., and in political matters is a Republican.

JOHN V. WILKS. In addition to the business of general farming which our subject carries on, he has been greatly interested in contract work and freighting, having followed the latter from Lewiston to Grangeville for eleven years. Also he furnished the telephone poles for the line from Lewiston to Mt. Idaho, from Morrow to Nezperce and from Ilo to Culdesac.

John V. Wilks was born in Steuben county, New York, on April 12, 1851. His father, William Wilks, was born in England on January 10, 1821, and was a farmer and lumberman. He married Harriet, the daughter of Rance and Sarah E. Robbins. She was born in New York state in 1827, and is now living in Tillamook, Oregon. Our subject has the following brothers and sisters: Sarah E. Christianson, William M., John V., James, George, Charley L., Mary Ann Hull, Olive L. Ramon, Hans, Ellen Crugg, Hattie A. Clinesample, Emma, Lillie E. and Albert. Our subject remained with his parents until he was nineteen and gained meanwhile an education from the district schools. Then he began farming and lumbering in northern Wisconsin, where four years were spent, and during this time he married Miss Eliza C., daughter of William D. and Cynthia E. Newton, natives of Vermont. The father was a pioneer in Wisconsin and had many fights with the hostile savages. He was an expert violin maker. The mother was born on August 4, 1822, and was left a widow in Wisconsin with nine children, and she endured great hardships and wrought with an untiring hand to accomplish the support and bringing up of this large family. She taught the first schools in Oconto county and was a practicing physician, being in great demand among the people of her vicinity. She died on December 4, 1901. Mrs. Wilks has the following brothers and sisters, Charles H., born September 20, 1845; George N., born March 22, 1847; Sarah E. Hiszh, born April 7, 1855; Robert P., born May 21, 1848; Edward D. W. I., born in 1849;

Myron A., born June 1, 1852; Luman O., born in 1854; Hattie A. Foltsz, born in 1856. When Mr. Wilks married he went to York, Nebraska, and lived there for seventeen years. Thence he came to Rockford, Washington, and did timber work for three years. The next move was to their present place, about one mile northwest from Forest, where he has a farm of eighty acres, which is well fenced. He also has good buildings and other improvements. The school house is on Mr. Wilks' place and he is an active advocate for good schools. In 1893 he was chosen road supervisor and held it seven years and is asked again to fill this position. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilks there have been born the following named children, John W., born April 2, 1873; Eddie, born January 22, 1875; Emeline, born April 21, 1876; Eliza L., born July 10, 1878; Martha E., born December 28, 1880; George F., born March 16, 1883; Rosa M., born June 5, 1885; Bertha M., born March 29, 1888; Lillie E., born April 21, 1891; William D., born July 25, 1892; Zoa F., born June 10, 1894; Ruth E., born May 28, 1895; Myrtle A., born February 8, 1898.

JOSEPH S. SIMMONS, a prosperous and intelligent farmer residing about two miles northeast from Ilo on the estate which he took by homestead right from the wilds of nature, has done good labor in the building up of the country and is one of the enterprising devotees of progress in every line, especially in the matter of betterment of educational facilities, for the purpose of which he even advocates doubling the school tax.

Joseph S. Simmons was born in Warren county, Iowa, on November 20, 1859, being the son of William C. and Mary B. (Allen) Simmons. The father was a farmer, born in Maryland in 1819 and died in 1876. He came to Warren county as early as 1846, being one of the very first settlers there. The mother was born in Indiana in 1821 and is now living in Nez Perces county. Her father was in the Blackhawk war and also in the war of 1812. She was a grandniece of Daniel Boone and her parents were pioneers in Kentucky. Our subject received his education in his native place and remained there until young manhood. 1879 marks the date when he started west for himself and he was in the first rush to Leadville, in the San Juan country, and then traveled in New Mexico, Arizona, Montana, Wyoming and returned to Iowa after he had been absent four years. He farmed there for a couple of years and in 1886 came to Genesee, settling to the basic art for nine years. Then came a move to Camas prairie and when the reservation opened he took his present place and has devoted himself principally to raising grain and improvement of his farm since. He is one of the substantial agriculturists in the section and a man whom all respect.

On January 4, 1885, in Iowa, Mr. Simmons married Miss Mary F., daughter of Absalom B. and Susan (Little) Banks. The father was born in North Carolina in 1828 and the mother in Kentucky in 1838 and they both live in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Simmons was born in Warren county, on July 26, 1867, and has the following brothers and sisters: James George, Isabella, Andrew J., Cora J. Mr. Simmons has brothers and sisters named as follows: Lewis A., Mehalah A., John B., Lucinda R., William T. Three children have been born to this couple, James, Herbert, and an infant unnamed. Mr. Simmons is an active Democrat and a familiar figure in the caucuses and conventions.

ERNEST C. MABBOTT. This young and enterprising agriculturist has done his share toward the opening of the reservation country and it is with pleasure that we accord him a review of his career in the history of this section.

Ernest C. Mabbott was born in Iowa county, Wisconsin, on April 2, 1874, being the son of Thomas and Nellie (Farwell) Mabbott, natives of Iowa county, and now living in Nez Perces county. They were among the first settlers in Iowa county, and have wrought well on the frontier. The maternal grandfather was in the Pikes Peak excitement and died in that country. Our subject grew to the age of eighteen in Iowa county and received a high school education. When he was eighteen he came to Genesee, and one year later went thence to eastern Colorado and remained two years. In 1895 he came to Genesee again, and two years after that time he came to the reservation and secured his present place, two miles north and two east from Ilo. He has done well by devoting himself to general farming and raising hogs.

On December 19, 1899, Mr. Mabbott married Miss Mary, daughter of Jefferson and Priscilla (Tatron) Tuttle, natives of New York and born, respectively, in 1844 and 1843. The wedding took place in Yuma, Colorado, and two children have been born to them, —Lela A. and Ivan E. Mrs. Mabbott was born in Howard, Nebraska, on November 12, 1880, and has two sisters and three brothers,—Nellie, Frank, Cora, Winfield and Thomas. Mr. Mabbott has the following brothers and sisters: May Lyford, Grace Markham, Guy, Ruth. Mr. Mabbott is a member of the W. of W. at Fletcher. He is a Republican and a progressive citizen, always laboring for the general welfare and advancement. He affiliates with the I. O. O. F. at Ilo.

JOSEPH STACH. Without doubt some of the most enterprising citizens of this country have come to us from the Fatherland, and one among this worthy number is mentioned at the head of this article; it is with pleasure we accord him representation in the history of his county, since he is a man of uprightness and integrity, since he has done a first class work in developing the country, since he is now one of the substantial men of the community, and since he is a patriotic and public minded citizen of worth and excellent standing.

Joseph Stach was born in Germany on November

27, 1859, being the son of S. and Hattie Stach, natives of Germany. They came to this country when our subject was twelve years old and settled in Todd county, Minnesota, where they still reside, prosperous and prominent people. Our subject was educated in Germany and in Minnesota, and grew to manhood in Todd county. In 1884 he came to Uniontown, Washington, and in 1892 he returned to Minnesota and there, on August 21, 1893, he married Miss Martha Kripstach, whose parents were natives of Germany. Mr. Stach came back to Washington then, and his home was there until the opening of the reservation. His inherent energy and enterprise led him to be on hand on the eighteenth of November, 1895, to take his present place, which lies about three miles northwest from Nezperce. He filed on the nineteenth of November, 1895, and since that date he has been one of the prosperous, industrious and leading citizens of this section. His place shows genuine skill, industry and wisdom and the abundant returns from field and stall testify of his prosperity and substantiality.

Mr. and Mrs. Stach are stanch members of the Catholic church and they are liberal supporters of the faith. Six children have been born to gladden their home,—Hetta, Barney F., Celia, Joseph, Albert and John.

JACOB E. FREEBURN. As a pioneer of the country adjacent to Forest and one of the untiring laborers to bring development and progress, we chronicle the items of the career of our subject and grant him space in the history of his county.

Jacob E. Freeburn was born in Franklin county, Iowa, on December 27, 1856, being the son of William Freeburn, who was born in New Jersey, on August 6, 1817. He was an enrolling officer in the Civil war and received an honorable discharge at the close of the war. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Maggie Shannon, and died in August, 1901. The following named children were born to this union: John P., a soldier in the Civil war; William, Wesley S., Mary C. Brockman, Matilda Peters, Clara Welch, Charlie E., Martha W., Clark, Maggie, Upton, and also the subject of this article. Jacob E. worked at home until he was twenty-four and then married Martha, the daughter of Allen W. and Emily Bottorff. The father was born in Iowa and the mother was born in Illinois on September 27, 1828. They had the following named children in addition to Mrs. Freeburn, James M., Jacob, Sarah J. Keen, Laura M. Carter, William A., Theodosia Krowlman. After his marriage the subject of our sketch went to farming in Nebraska and continued for three years. Then came a move to Walla Walla, whence he came to Nez Perces county and bought one hundred and sixty acres of land. He conducted a hotel and bar in Morrow and then in Forest for a time. Later he located on unsurveyed land on the Salmon, where he is now running a band of cattle. He has over fifty head of stock and also a house and lot in Forest. He has bought and sold considerable town property and was one of the very first to settle in its precincts. To Mr. and Mrs. Freeburn there have been born five children,—Emma E. Critchfield, Jessie M. Lemons, William A., Cora E., Della V. Mr. Freeburn has done a great deal to build up the country and is one of the influential men of the section.

HENRY D. COOLEY. As a veteran of the terrible Civil war, a successful business man in the east, a traveler to many sections of the west, a substantial farmer of Nez Perces county and an upright and capable man of integrity and sound principles, we grant to the subject of this article consideration in the history of his county.

Henry D. Cooley was born in Whitewater, Wisconsin, on July 18, 1842, being the son of Orville and Caroline (Curtis) Cooley. The father was born in Attica, New York, in 1823, and died in Minnesota in 1895. He was a pioneer in California in 1849, also a pioneer in Wisconsin and Minnesota, having owned some of the land where Milwaukee now stands. The mother of our subject was born in New York and died in Minnesota in 1890. In 1859 the family removed to Rochester, Minnesota, where the father bought land. When the Civil war broke out, Henry D. was stirred with patriotism and on June 26, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Second Minnesota Infantry, under Colonel Van Cleve. He fought at the battles of Mill Springs, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, Chickamauga, Perryville, Kentucky, Atlanta and also made the famous march to the sea under Sherman. He was veteranized in Chickamauga. Mr. Cooley was in the grand review at Washington and the contrast between the well dressed troops from the Potomac and the ragged veterans just out of the terrible march to the sea, was very apparent. Mr. Cooley was taken to Fort Snelling, Minnesota, and there mustered out on July 11, 1865. He returned to Rochester, bought land and settled to farming. In 1872 he came to Walla Walla and one year later returned to Minnesota and there bought wheat until 1891. In that year he went to Palouse and opened a confectionery store but later went to the Okanogan country in Washington. Returning to Palouse, he remained until the opening of the reservation and then took his present place, about three miles southeast from Melrose. He has a good orchard and raises the cereals and some stock.

On November 3, 1867, at Rochester, Minnesota, Mr. Cooley married Miss Josephine, daughter of John and Cornelia (Gere) La Dow. The father was an early pioneer farmer in Minnesota and came to Washington and settled near the Idaho line in 1888. Mrs. Cooley was born in McHenry county, Illinois, in 1847, and has the following brothers and sisters: Emmett, a preacher of the Christian church in Palouse; Lora Palmer, in Walla Walla; Hattie Cox and Stella McConnell, both in Palouse; Thomas, in Nez Perces county and enjoying the distinction of carrying the first mail from Lewiston to Spokane. Mr. Cooley has the following brothers and sisters: Alta Hubbard, and Ella Orderkirk, both in Rochester, Minnesota; Vernon, killed in an accident on his farm at Gary, South Dakota. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cooley—Louis R., at home; John, in Nez Perces county: Marion Wellis, and Leonard, both in Spokane. Mr. Cooley is a member of the G. A. R. and a strong Republican, while his wife is a Prohibitionist. They are both members of the Methodist church. Mr. Cooley is a strong advocate of good schools and labors for this end with zeal.

CHARLES W. GRINSTEAD, a thrifty farmer and influential man, who lives about one mile northwest from Forest, is one of the substantial men of property and a public minded citizen of this section.

Charles W. Grinstead was born in England, on December 1, 1860. His father, Charles G. Grinstead, was a clergyman and devoted himself to his calling all his life. He married Sarah A. Stanley, whose father was a prominent physician and surgeon. The father died in March, 1899, and the mother died on November 30, 1901. Our subject remained with his parents until he was twenty-four, having received a good college education. He left England in the spring of 1885 going direct to Ontario, Canada, where he remained nine months and then made his way to the United States and engaged in the mercantile business. In 1899 he came to his present place and bought one hundred and thirty acres of land. It is partly in cultivation, all fenced and furnished with plenty of good improvements, among which may be mentioned a fine eight-room house, good large frame barn and other buildings. He has sufficient stock to carry on the place and is a thrifty farmer.

On September 6, 1892, Mr. Grinstead married Miss Gertrude, daughter of George W. and Eliza Cline. Mr. Cline was a barrister in India and not only handled the language with fluency, but was also a very prominent man in his profession and exceptionally talented. Mrs. Grinstead has the following brothers and sisters: George L., Charles H., Edith C. Bullock, Adaline R. To Mr. and Mrs. Grinstead there have been born three children—Charles C., Gertrude L. A., Ledlie S. R. Mr. and Mrs. Grinstead are members of the Episcopal church and devout and faithful supporters of the same. Mr. Grinstead is an ardent and well informed Republican.

ABSALOM B. BANKS. This venerable and enterprising stockman and agriculturist is one of the industrious men who have made the reservation country blossom as the rose, thereby adding materially to the wealth of the country.

Absalom B. Banks was born in Stokes county, North Carolina, on November 19, 1828, being the son of Squire and Elizabeth Banks, natives of North Carolina and born in 1807 and in 1820 and died in 1882 and 1886, respectively. The father was a pioneer of North Carolina, as was his father, who was a patriot in the Revolution and experienced many thrilling adventures and narrow escapes. When our subject was three the family went to Indiana, thence to Kentucky and later again to Jennings county, Indiana. There our subject was reared and remained until manhood's estate. He gained his education from the pioneer schools of the day and when thirty, having been interested until that time with his father, he bought a farm and settled to labor on his own account. When thirty-two he went to Iowa and took land in Marion county. Four years later he sold and removed to the southern part of the state. Later he sold there and removed to central Kansas. Six years there and he removed to northeastern Iowa, where he remained for twenty-six years. Next we see him in Harrison county, Missouri, where he remained for eight years. On October 26, 1901, Mr. Banks landed on his present farm, which he purchased. It is a good place and lies about one mile east from Ilo.

In 1857 Mr. Banks married Miss Susan, daughter of Jefferson and Elizabeth Little, farmers and natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Banks has two brothers, George and Wayne. Mr. Banks has the following brothers and sisters who are living, from a family of six brothers and six sisters: Emma, Albert, James. Six children have been born to this worthy couple: James, George, Andrew, Isabella Phillip, Mary Simmons, Cora Jane Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Banks are members of the United Brethren church and are highly respected people. Mr. Banks was a member of the home guards in Kansas and desired to go south and fight but was held in Kansas.

HERBERT T. HOSLEY. This stirring and highly respected young man is, in company with his brother, handling a fine business as blacksmith and mechanic. He is a man of broad experience in various branches of mechanical industry and has proved himself a skillful and talented artisan in his line of work.

Herbert T. Hosley was born in Mendota, La Salle county, Illinois, on April 22, 1869. His father, Andrew J. Hosley, was a cabinet maker and was born in Arlington, Vermont, on July 20, 1841. He was a pioneer in Rooks county, Kansas, and served three years and eleven months in the Eighty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was one of the crew on the flying train to assist in fighting the awful Chicago fire. Mr. Hosley married Jennie Matteson and they became the parents of five children, our subject, Isabella J. Wilkins, Robert A., Ida Eaton, and Frank H., now in partnership with the subject of this sketch. The firm is known as Hosley Brothers, of Forest, and they do a good business. Our subject remained under the parental roof until he was seventeen and then entered apprenticeship in the Dowing & Watham Machine shops at Clay Centre. Three years in that shop and then we see him in Spokane, where he entered the employ of the Washington Water Power Company. Later he was engineer in the Tidball block and went to Dayton in 1891. He took charge of the Eckler sawmill and in the spring of 1892 he entered the employ of Feehan as engineer. He remained with him until 1901, and then opened his present shop where he and his brother are doing a good business.

On October 28, 1894, Mr. Hosley married Miss Elsie E., the daughter of John G. and Margaret C. Ball. The father is a farmer and was born on April 25, 1856, and the mother was born on October 22, 1859, and they are both still living. Besides Mrs. Hosley they were the parents of three children, Liberty L., Orville O., Violet V. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hosley, Cecil F., Marion B., Freeda G., Fay H. Mr. Hosley is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is prominent in fraternal circles. He has been noble grand of his lodge and is now P. G., D. D., and G. M. of Idaho. He is also a member of the M. W. A. Mr. Hosley stands well in the community, is a man of stirring energy and has hosts of friends.

HAROLD L. LEE. An enterprising business man of good standing, possessed of the meed of honest endeavor in a good holding of property and withal a substantial and capable man and public minded citizen, the subject of this article deserves representation in the history of his county.

Harold L. Lee was born in Throndhjem, Norway, on August 17, 1873, being the son of Halvor A. Lee. The father was born in 1840, educated in the official schools and held different state offices for many years. He was also an expert painter and carver. He married Lydia, the daughter of Eric Ovre, who died in 1876. Our subject lived with an uncle and aunt until he was eleven and then started on the long voyage for the New World. After landing he journeyed to Yankton county, South Dakota, and for four years was employed in herding cattle. On March 3, 1890, he came to Moscow, thence to Mason prairie. His father took a homestead here and our subject proved up on it later. Then he filed on a place which he relinquished. After this he removed to Forest and opened a livery and feed barn. He has two and one-half acres of land, house and barn and is doing a good business.

On March 3, 1899, Mr. Lee married Ella M., daughter of Isaac and Amanda Malone, natives of Iowa and Oregon, respectively. The father followed farming, carpentering and teaching school. Mrs. Lee was born on March 3, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Lee have two children, Mary A., Mable E. Mr. Lee is a member of the M. W. A., while he and his wife belong to the Lutheran church. Mr. Lee is an active and interested Republican, being influential in the campaigns.

GEORGE E. TATKO. Engaged in the dual occupation of farming and raising stock, the subject of this sketch has done excellent work in the development and improvement of the reservation country and is deserving of representation in the volume of its history.

George E. Tatko was born in Germany, on March 13, 1859, being the son of John and Aggie (Meyer) Tatko, natives of Germany; the father died in 1873 and the mother in 1862. The father was born in 1820. Our subject grew to young manhood and was educated in his native country. He heard of the excellent opportunities in the new world and came hither seeking the road to fortune. He worked in the railroad shops in Allentown, Pennsylvania, whither he had come from New York, his landing place. Three years were spent in the shops and then Mr. Tatko came to Iowa and farmed near Osage for two years. In 1889 he came thence to Spokane and worked in a sawmill for one year. The next move was to the vicinity of Palouse in Whitman county, where he farmed for five years. At the opening of the reservation in 1895, he came hither and took his present place, one-half mile south from Ilo. This has been the family home since that time and Mr. Tatko is one of the enterprising residents and leading farmers of this section.

In 1894, at Lewiston, Mr. Tatko married Mrs. Cynthia Lenz, a native of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. She has the following brothers, Joseph and John Strubble. Mr. Tatko has one sister, Sophia, still in Germany, and has one half-brother, Jacob, also in Germany. Mr. Tatko is a member of the I. O. O. F. and he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Tatko is a Democrat and is an advocate of better schools. He owns now one-half section of land which is well improved and in addition to doing general farming, he raises cattle and hogs, being one of the prosperous men of the section.

SAMUEL S. MORSE. This enterprising agriculturist is one of the developers of the reservation and is now enjoying the fruits of his wise labors in his home, about one mile north from Nezperce, where he has a fine farm, well improved and productive of annual dividends of a gratifying amount.

Samuel S. Morse was born in Delaware county, Ohio, on April 30, 1854, being a son of Ahira and Rosa (Laffey) Morse, natives of Vermont and Ireland, respectively. The father was in the war of 1812 and was first married in 1824. This wife died leaving him a family of seven children. In 1841 he married the mother of our subject, who came to the United States in her twelfth year. Our subject is the youngest of seven children, making fourteen in both families. The father died on September 15, 1854, in his seventieth year. After the father's death, Samuel went with his mother and stepfather to Chariton, Lucas county, Iowa, where he gained his education in the log school houses, and remained until he was at the age of maturity. In 1873, the family went to Butler county, Kansas, and there our subject entered a preemption. In 1881 he came to Walla Walla and in 1885 returned to Butler county, where he was married on December 31, 1885, to Amanda J., daughter of James and Emily C. (Yantis) Dunbar, natives of Russell county, Kentucky. They removed to Appanoose county, Iowa, and there on March 11, 1857, Mrs.

Morse was born, being the sixth of a family of eight children. Mr. Dunbar died in Iowa and the widow went to Butler county, Kansas, in 1873. She lived with our subject and his wife until the time of her death on September 19, 1902, being then in her seventy-fourth year. She was a devoted member of the Christian church and Mr. and Mrs. Morse are also members of the same church. Mr. Morse's mother died in Butler county, Kansas, on January 7, 1900, in her seventy-seventh year. As soon as Mr. Morse was married he came with his wife to Pomeroy, Washington, whence he went in May, 1894, to Milton, Oregon, and in the spring of 1896, they came with team and wagon to the reservation country and he secured his present claim, which consists of eighty acres of exceptionally fertile land. Five children have been born to this household, Maud C., born August 12, 1887; Elmer S., born August 26, 1889; Nellie F., born March 11, 1894; Wilbur S., born in Nezperce, August 17, 1896, being the first boy born in that town; Ora I., born August 8, 1899. Mr. Morse has two brothers in the west. They came in 1868. Ahira, who is an invalid, has suffered from paralysis for eleven years and is now living in Milton; F. B. Morse, now in Walla Walla.

CHARLES E. CHAPMAN. Truly this gentleman is entitled to honorable mention among the pioneers to the reservation portion of Nez Perces county as will be evinced from the points of his career mentioned, while also he has shown forth stanch qualities of uprightness and integrity in his walk.

Charles E. Chapman was born in Woodbury county, Iowa, on June 24, 1868, being the son of George and Frances J. (Herrington) Chapman. The father was born in Yorkshire, England, on February 24, 1827, and came to the United States in 1849. He settled in Illinois, moved to Iowa in 1867, and died on September 22, 1892. He had two brothers in the Civil war. The mother of our subject was born in Wayne county, Pennsylvania on December 27, 1830, and died in 1875. Her parents were pioneers in Pennsylvania; she had two brothers in the Civil war. Our subject was educated in Iowa, Dakota and Montana. The family went to the latter state in 1883, and two years later migrated to Emmons county, Dakota. Upon the opening of the Nez Perces reservation, Mr. Chapman came hither and in April, 1896, he settled on his present claim, about two miles east from Melrose. He had arrived in Moscow the year previous, and his entire capital was fifteen cents, three poor horses and a covered wagon. He had traveled the entire distance from the east by team.

On October 29, 1896, Mr. Chapman married Mrs. Phoebe Dill, a daughter of William and Catherine (Pruner) Beasley. The father was a farmer, born in Illinois, Morgan county, on February 28, 1839, came as a pioneer to Umatilla county, Oregon, in 1865, to Idaho in 1886 and died July 15, 1902. The mother of Mrs. Chapman died in 1878. Mrs. Chapman was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, on September 28, 1873, and has one sister, Mrs. Sarah Cox, near Odessa, Washington. Mr. Chapman has one sister and three brothers, Rosella Coker, Levi, Henry and David. To Mr. and Mrs. Chapman there have been born three children, Gertrude, Mildred and William. By her former marriage, Mrs. Chapman had two children, Edwin, deceased, and Hazel. Mr. Chapman is a member of the M. W. A., Melrose Camp, No. 6216. He is a Republican and has been elected constable, but refused to qualify. Mr. Chapman has one hundred and sixty acres, well improved, a fine threshing outfit, and several thousand dollars' worth of property besides. He came to the reservation without enough money to file. His wife was obliged to hold the claim, having only an unchinked cabin with dirt floor, while he went to earn money. All the hardships incident to this trying life they bravely bore, and their combined wisdom and labors have made them among the most prosperous people on the reservation and they are entirely worthy of this good fortune that has rewarded their labors.

THOMAS H. THOMPSON is the efficient and faithful postmaster at Melrose and also handles a general merchandise estblishment, where he has a good patronage. He is a man of stanch qualities, public spirited and active in the welfare of the place and the upbuilding of the country.

Thomas H. Thompson was born in Blue Earth, Wisconsin, on January 2, 1859, being the son of Hans and Martha (Johnson) Thompson, natives of Norway, and now residents of Melrose. The father was born in 1837 and came to the United States in 1857. Our subject lived in Wisconsin until of age, gaining a good training from the common schools. Then he went to Dakota and took land, farming for three years. After that he went into the lumber business, doing well, and later operated a threshing machine for himself and other parties, in all of which he did well. In 1888 he went to Seattle and for eight years he farmed but did not prosper. His next move was to Moscow and in the fall of 1896 he came to his present place, on the reservation. He took the land as a homestead where Melrose now stands and donated twenty acres for a town site. He secured the establishment of a postoffice in 1897 and I. N. Huffman was the first incumbent of the office. In 1901 Mr. Thompson was appointed as postmaster and still retains it. At the same date, Mr. Thompson established his store and his ability and geniality made him successful.

On April 13, 1880, in Dakota, Mr. Thompson married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Matthias and Sarah Thompson, natives of Norway. Mrs. Thompson was born in Jackson county, Wisconsin and has four brothers and three sisters. Mr. Thompson has the following brothers and sisters, George, Ole, deceased; Carrie Douglas, and one other sister, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have been blessed by the advent of four children, Sever, Annie, Hattie and Elmer. Mr. Thompson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. He is a Republican and always takes the active part that becomes the intelligent citizen, and is one of the delegates to the conventions nearly every year. Mr. Thompson is also a warm advocate of the upbuilding of good schools and always labors for this worth end.

CHARLES D. BENSON. Among the intelligent and enterprising mechanics who are producing creditable evidences of their skill and wisdom, we are constrained to mention the genial gentleman whose name is at the head of this article and who is now operating a first class blacksmith and machine shop in Culdesac. He has had abundant success and experience heretofore and is a valuable acquisition both to the town and county.

Charles D. Benson was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, on November 2, 1856, being the son of George W. and Elizabeth (DeHass) Benson. The father was born in Baltimore and the mother in Wheeling. The maternal ancestors of our subject came from Massachusetts and were early pioneers of Wheeling and the grandfather was a doctor and also operated a drug store. On the father's side, our subject's ancestors were Irish and on his mother's side they were French. Charles gained a good education from the public schools and from the state normal, being kept from graduating from the latter on account of his father's death. That sad event occurred when he was sixteen and then he went to learn the blacksmith's art. He wrought until twenty-one and then went to Ashland, Kentucky, and beat the anvil for the Ashland Coal & Iron Company for three years. Two years were spent at Terre Haute, Indiana, and in 1876, we find our subject at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. After this we note that he wrought in Kansas City, Topeka, Santa Fe, Galveston, Texas, Colorado, then six years again in New Mexico, and again in Colorado and finally in 1888, he came to Tekoa, Washington. He wrought some for the Union Pacific and then came to Moscow and in company with George H. Goude, they opened a foundry. They put in eleven thousand dollars apiece and later incorporated for thirty-three thousand. They did a large business until 1893 and the hard times then forced an assignment. Our subect immediately opened a smaller shop and wrought successfully for four years when he was taken one year from his work by a surgical operation. He went to business again and later was forced to again retire for a year on account of another operation. Upon recovering from this he went to Pullman, Washington, and in partnership with George Gausney, he whought there for two years. On February 8, 1900, Mr. Benson landed in Culdesac and at once he opened a shop. He has a good shop, is an exceptionally skillful and competent machinist and blacksmith, and stands well with all the people and enjoys a fine patronage. In addition to the arts mentioned, Mr. Benson is a first class worker in wood and does much wagon work.

On October 26, 1891, Mr. Benson married Miss Annie F., daughter of R. G. and Jane (Day) Newland. Mr. Newland was one of the early pioneers to Washington and Oregon. He settled on the original homestead of Mr. Jesse N. Day on the Touchet near Dayton, who owned the town site of Dayton, and was one of the substantial men of that section. Dr. J. H. Day of Walla Walla was an uncle of Mrs. Benson. He died in 1896, aged eighty-seven, and was a highly respected and universally beloved man. Mr. and Mrs. Benson have five children, Esther and Vester, twins, Edna, Fred and DeHass. One, Maggie, an exceptionally robust child, died at two years of age.

It is of note that Mr. Benson took passage on the steamship Metropolis, when he was in Philadelphia in 1876, and started for Rio De Janeiro. Five days out, the date being January 5, 1877, the vessel was wrecked and eighty-one lives out of one hundred and thirty were lost. Our subject held to the chains under the bowsprit for hours waiting for the debris and dead bodies to float away and finally dropped into the ocean and swam ashore, being assisted to land by rescuers.

Mr. Benson was a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the W. of W. Mrs. Benson, whose parents were natives of Virginia, was born near Dayton, Washington, and was educated in Waitsburg and Walla Walla. Her father was state representative once of Walla Walla county and once of Columbia, and was speaker of the house for one term.

WILLIAM H. GAGE. We are pleased to grant to Mr. Gage a consideration in the pages of the history of the Nez Perces county since he has wrought in this section for a long time, has manifested those qualities of worth and perseverance that bring the meed of success and has maintained an unsullied reutation, becoming one of the leading men of his community, being esteemed and respected by all. He was born on October 1, 1857, in Gardner, Grundy county, Illinois, being the son of Thomas W. and Martha A. (Rogers) Gage, natives respectively of Vermont and New York. They came to Illinois in an early day and where Chicago now stands could have been taken as homestead land at that time. They removed to Missouri in 1869 and to Kansas in 1876, where the father died in 1896, aged sixty-six years and the mother still lives there. Our subject received very little schooling, but spent his boyhood days in working for his father and in the coal mines in Missouri. He has been careful to investigate and has read much during his life, thus having made up for the lack of schooling. In 1879, he came west, locating a preemption near Moscow, where he went into the livery business but sold out two years after starting, then removed south from Genesee, where he purchased two hundred acres of land and farmed until 1887 when he sold and bought his present place, three miles south from Genesee. This land was wild at the time Mr. Gage bought it, which he cleared and broke, building a good house, barns, outbuildings and otherwise improving it until it is a model farm. He has a fine orchard of five hundred trees and does a general farming business and handles some stock. Mr. Gage has been active in the field of education, always laboring for good schools and has been both school director and road supervisor, and always evinces a manifest interest in the local politics.

On December 6, 1885, Mr. Gage married Miss Julia, daughter of E. A. and E. A. (Warner) Sampson, natives of Missouri and Indiana, respectively. They crossed the plains in 1847 to Oregon and then returned to the states to come out west again in 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Gage have become the parents of seven children, as follows, Jessie, going to school in Genesee, William C., Ernest W., Mabel A., Chester E., Pearl A., and Eunice A. Mr. Gage affiliates with the W. of W. and the A. O. P. He is a man of broad experience and native talent which gives him a great prestige in the community where he is respected and confided in by all.

PETER JUTTE, deceased. It is very fitting that in the volume that chronicles the history of Nez Perces county, there should appear a proper memorial of the late esteemed and beloved gentleman whose name is at the head of this page, since he was one of the early settlers of this portion of Nez Perces county, and here he labored with display of great faithfulness, enterprise and wisdom for many years and since also he was a man of great strength of character, being upright, capable, and possessed of a sterling worth and principle that always guided him in the path of unswerving integrity and maintenance of an unsullied reputation and high honor.

The deceased was born in Saint Peters, Ohio, on April 2, 1860, being the son of John and Kate Jutte, natives of Germany and immigrants to the United States in 1850. Locating in Ohio, they spent the years of their life there and now repose in the Catholic cemetery in Saint Peters of that state. In his native town our subject received his early schooling and there remained with his parents until he had arrived to the age of twenty-four. At that time he made a journey to Ottertail county, Minnesota, and two years later, he came thence to Nez Perces county, Idaho, purchasing a half section of land where the family home is now located, about four miles west from Genesee. He began at once the labors of transforming the raw sod to a fertile farm, and improvements began to appear in various portions. Fences and barns were built, a fine residence erected, and all the modern improvements of a fine western grain and fruit farm were added in due time. He manifested great wisdom and untiring care of the entire estate and under his careful husbandry it was made to produce abundant crops of the cereals and other things. He purchased from time to time pieces of land until the estate is now four hundred and seventy acres of fine land. In addition there is one acre in the town of Genesee, where the intention was to erect a home to be occupied by the family. The farm produces as high as six thousand bushels of wheat annually, and it is kept in excellent condition.

On January 19, 1886, occurred the marriage of Mr. Jutte and Miss Veronika, daughter of Joseph W. and Barbara (Secrist) Doll, the father being a native of Ohio and the mother of Germany, and they reside in Ottertail county, Minnesota. To Mr. and Mrs. Jutte there were born six children, four of whom are living, as follows, Barney H., Anton C., Albert J. and Edward F. On April 16, 1902, the messenger of death came to Mr. Jutte and snatched him hence. It was a time of universal mourning, for he was widely known and beloved by all who had the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with him. With solemn services the remains of the good man, the true and devoted husband, loving and wise father, capable and noble citizen of our land was consigned to the last resting place in the Catholic cemetery in Genesee. He had been in lifetime a popular member of the W. of W. Camp No. 207 of Uniontown, and a devout adherent of the Catholic church. The heavy grief and attendant burdens that have fallen upon Mrs. Jutte are nobly borne, and it is with great wisdom and commendable ability that she is assuming the responsibilities and discharging them in a becoming manner. She is handling the farm and maintains the home place.

HENRY J. ROGERS. This successful and capable young agriculturist is the owner of a good estate one and one-fourth miles southwest from Melrose, where the family home is and where Mr. Rogers has bestowed his labors with wisdom and skill.

Henry J. Rogers was born in the Willamette valley, Oregon, on March 12, 1874, being the son of Henry M. and Palina (Whited) Rogers. The father was born in Wales in 1828, came to America with his parents when he was five, and in 1852 crossed the plains with ox teams and settled in the Willamette valley, being one of the earliest pioneers of that country, where he lived on one farm for thirty years. He was one of the home guards of the territory. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana in 1832 and died in 1899. Her parents were pioneers in Indiana and Ohio. The father of our subject was one of the early miners of the Boise and Powder river regions and there met all the hardships of the arduous frontier life. In 1877 the family came to Moscow, it being the year of the Indian outbreak. Henry heard the beginning of the Butter creek battle, and though young, called his parents' attention to the frequent shots. The father secured three quarters of a section near Moscow and there Henry grew up, being educated in the common schools and also in the university. At the opening of the reservation, he came and bought the relinquishment to his present place and settled down to make a fertile farm and a good home. He has a generous orchard, raises much grain and handles hogs and cattle enough to use all of his grain on the farm.

On September 29, 1895, in Moscow, Mr. Rogers married Miss Lulu, daughter of James and Mary Wilcox, natives of Missouri, the father being a farmer and plasterer. Mrs. Rogers was born in Missouri, in 1876, and was educated in the grammar schools in Kent, Washington. She has one brother and one sister, James, in Missouri, and Lillie Hobson, in Beeman, Idaho. Mr. Rogers has the following brothers and sisters, Eliza Heick, Marion and Matilda Burgess, Rebecca Burgess, Thomas, Minnie Robertson. One child, Henry James Cecil, two and one-half years old, has been born to this happy marriage. Mr. Rogers is a member of the W. W. and is a socialist in political matters. He and his wife are members of the Church of Christ and he holds the office of elder in the Melrose congregation. He is a man of good influence in the community and is one of the solid and well esteemed citizens.

BENJAMIN F. AYTCH. The energy, skill, good business qualifications and fine achievements of Mr. Aytch demonstrate him to be a man of excellent quality and one who has won first class success in the battle of life. He was born in San Joaquin county, California, on September 14, 1869, being the son of William H. Aytch, who was born in West Point, New York, in 1819. He was one of seven who fought the Indians against great odds in the Yosemite valley. He married Amanda, daughter of John and Caroline Rodgers. She was born in Missouri. To Mr. and Mrs. Aytch were born eight children, the subject of this article, Kitty, William E., Ella E. Redfield, Charles H., Ada A., Lillie R., Elonzo. Our subject has always remained with his parents and they are living with him at the present time. They all went to Canyonville, Oregon, in the seventies and later returned to Siskiyou county, and in 1894 came thence to his present place. Mr. Aytch landed here with one dollar and at once began to secure sheep, upon which he cleared four thousand dollars. He now has a fine farm about five miles southwest from Forest, eighty acres of which is good meadow, all being fenced, has comfortable buildings and much room for hay and stock, of which he owns over thirty head. He is prosperous and one of the substantial men of the section. Mr. Aytch is a member of the I. O. O. F. and in political alliances is with the Republicans. He is a man of good standing, liberal and public minded and always labors for the general good and advancement along all lines.

MICHAEL N. NYE, a thrifty farmer living about one mile east from Forest, should be ranked as one of the pioneers of this section and is surely to be credited with a public spirit and good labors in improvement and building up the country.

Michael N. Nye was born in Kosciusko county, Indiana, on February 17, 1847, being the son of Michael Nye, a brick-mason, who was born in Pennsylvania, in 1808, and a pioneer in Indiana. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Peter and Nancy Kimes, who were also pioneers of Indiana. Besides our subject there were born to this marriage six children: Omar, Jasper, Nancy Disher, Rebecca Vanator, Rowan, Mary Magrin. Michael N. was educated in the common schools and remained with his parents until he was sixteen and then enlisted in Company A, Seventy-fourth Indiana Infantry. He served eighteen months and then was discharged on a general order, on July 25, 1865. He returned home, where he remained for two years, then went to Iowa in the fall of 1867, traveling also in Kansas and Nebraska until the beginning of 1871. Then he returned to Marshall county, Indiana, and married Miss Eliza, daughter of Charles H., a native of Kentucky, and Sarah E. Patterson, a native of Indiana. The father died on January 1, 1870, and the mother died on February 4, 1894, leaving seven children: Mrs. Nye, Mary J. Chapman, George A., Blair M., Nancy E. Harvert, James W., Arrilda Bell. In 1876 Mr. Nye went to Iowa with his family, farmed there two years and then went to Kansas and took a homestead. They remained there and in town adjacent until 1888, when they came to Idaho and located on his present place, which has been the family home since. The land was unsurveyed when they came and they held by squatter's right but filed in 1896. They have a portion of the farm cultivated, about seventeen head of stock and buildings and fencing. Mr. Nye is an active supporter of good schools and has given his children a college education. Politically, he is allied with the Republicans and is intelligent in the issues of the campaigns both of state and nation. Four children have been born to this couple: Zoa A., at the present time head nurse in the Mountain View sanitarium in Spokane; Bertha, also a trained nurse; Charles A., a stockman on the Salmon river; Minnie E., a graduate of the State Normal School at Lewiston. The young ladies who are nursing are both graduates of the Battle Creek school for nurses and are skillful in their work.

SENEBER S. BROOKS. About two miles southwest from Ilo is found the home of the thrifty and prosperous citizen mentioned at the head of this article and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to him consideration in this volume.

Seneber S. Brooks was born in Linn county, Oregon, on August 17, 1856, being the son of Durin P. and Amanda C. (Hill) Brooks. The father was born in Michigan in 1834, crossed the plains in 1852, settling in Linn county. He was a farmer and stockman and died in Huntsville, Washington, in 1882. He was a volunteer in the Rogue river Indian war of 1856. The mother was born in Tennessee, in 1834, and died in 1888. Her parents came to Oregon in 1851 from Iowa, where also they had been pioneers. Our subject grew to manhood in Oregon, attending common schools. The family had come to Umatilla county when he was thirteen and there also he attended school. When he came to the years of maturity, he went to the state university in Linn county and took a two years' course.

He farmed in Umatilla county, in Dayton county and finally took land near Farmington, Whitman county. He gave his attention to farming and teaching for a number of years and continued on his Whitman county place until 1895. Then he came to his present place the day the reservation opened and secured it by homestead right. He has made this the family home since and it is now a well improved and valuable place. Mr. Brooks gives his attention to general farming and also to handling stock. He has cattle and hogs and is breeding some fine Berkshires. Mr. Brooks is erecting a new barn and is making substantial improvements.

In Lewiston, on November 8, 1885, Mr. Brooks married Miss Victoria, daughter of Elias and Callistine (Holman) Forgey. The father was born in 1835 and the mother was born in Missouri, and both are living. Mrs. Brooks was born in Linn county in 1866 and has the following brothers and sisters: Vina Bolic, William A., Isaac, Dawn, deceased, Mrs. Ollie Barnes, Loufisa Cliff, Louisa Watkins, Elias, deceased, Demarkis. Mr. Brooks has the following brothers and sisters: Vinna, deceased, Hershel, Flavius, Mary, deceased, Clarburn D. To Mr. and Mrs. Brooks there have been born seven children: Blanche, Mabel, Florence, Clark, Claude, Prudence, Roy. Mr. Brooks is a member of the I. O. O. F. He is a stanch Republican and always active in the campaigns. Mr. Brooks is justice of the peace and was nominated by his party for county commissioner in 1900, but was defeated by the fusionists. He has been road overseer for four years and is an advocate for improvement and advancement in this line as also in educational facilities, for which he untiringly labors. Mr. Brooks stands well and has the confidence of all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

CHARLES H. BROCKE is one of the substantial respected and honorable citizens of the vicinity of Nezperce. The labors of his hands dispensed with wisdom and industry have done a worthy amount in the good work of building up this country and of augmenting the wealth of the county, while his own holdings have been increased to a prosperous degree.

Charles H. Brocke was born in Dixon county, Nebraska, on September 4, 1859, being the son of John P. and Christina (Webber) Brocke, natives of Germany, and born on the banks of the Rhine. The father served as a soldier in the German army and then they migrated to Dixon county, Nebraska. The country was very new and in 1863 there occurred the awful Wiseman massacre in their neighborhood. While the father was in the army, and the mother away from home, the Indians killed all their children, five in number. The neighbors were all frightened and fled from the country and Mr. Brocke was left to hold the frontier position alone. He did so and later the country settled up permanently. Our subject had but scanty opportunity to secure an education in this wild country, which he was forced to gain by careful personal research and reading nights. On October 17, 1881, he married Miss Catherine, daughter of Henry and Catherine Burgel, natives of Germany. They came to the United States and located in Wisconsin and in 1874 went thence to Nebraska. In 1897 our subject came west to Kendrick, landing there on February 16. In April of the same year he came and bought the relinquishment of his present place, putting his filing on it on April 17. It was all unimproved and he at once set to work to make it one of the valuable home places of the community and the excellent improvements show the industry and wisdom with which he has wrought. He does a general farming business. Mr. and Mrs. Brocke are devout and active members of the Catholic church and are of exceptionally fine standing in the community. They have eight children, John P., Mary C., Katie, deceased, Christina, Rosa, Lena B., Frank H., and Katie E. Mr. Brocke's father died in 1891 aged sixty-six. His widow is now living in Vermillion, South Dakota, aged seventy-two.

WESLEY STEEL is one of the heavy land owners of Nez Perces county, having six hundred and forty acres in the vicinity of Melrose, while he makes his home in Lewiston, where he has a good residence and some business property, being one of the substantial business men and a true type of the enterprising westerner.

Wesley Steel was born in Monroe county, Ohio, on April 1, 1854, being the son of Jabe and Susan (Mann) Steel. The father was born near Philadelphia, and went to Ohio as a pioneer in an early day. He was a stockman and served in the Civil war for four years in the Second Virginia Cavalry. The mother of our subject was born in Monroe county, Ohio, her parents being natives of the Keystone state and pioneers to Ohio. Our subject left the parental roof when he was fourteen years old and made his way to Tazewell county, Illinois, where he worked on a ranch for five years. Then he went to Van Buren county, Michigan, and dealt in horses until he was twenty-one and also learned the butcher business. Then he went to San Francisco, thence to Roseburg, Oregon, and bought stock, where he did business for five years. After this he moved to Pendleton, where he dealt in horses for two years. Then we see him in the Grande Ronde river valley in the stock business, where six successful years were spent. His next move was to Asotin, Washington, where he built a large two story brick business block and a flouring mill. He also raised sheep and for nineteen years he was one of the most prosperous men of that section. He then sold everything there but his home, and spent some time in traveling to various sections. Finally, Mr. Steel settled in Lewiston and bought business property and also the fine tract of land spoken of above. It is very fertile land and produces abundantly. Mr. Steel has fine buildings and his farm is handled in a skillful manner.

Mr. Steel married in Asotin, in 1885, Miss Mollie

Flynn, daughter of Thomas and Ruth (Porter) Flynn, natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Steel was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and has two brothers, Samuel, in Asotin, and George, in Genesee; she also has one sister in Tennessee. Mr. Steel has two brothers and one sister, Hough and Andrew Jackson, both in Ohio; Abigail Mann, in Kansas. Two children have been born to our subject and his wife, Charles E., aged sixteen, and Bonnie, aged three. Mr. Steel is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Steel affiliates with the Redmen of Asotin and in political matters is an influential Republican.

Mr. Steel is a man of integrity and substantial qualities, having had great experience in the west and he is a true pioneer and a supporter of progress and improvement.

WILLIAM J. WILSON, a farmer and stockman dwelling about two and one-half miles northeast from Forest, is one of the industrious and progressive men whose labors have resulted in such excellent development of the reservation country and it is fitting that a review of his career be incorporated here.

William J. Wilson was born in Sanilac, Michigan, on February 16, 1868, being the son of Andrew W. and Susana (Neal) Wilson. The father was prominent in county affairs in Sanilac county and there married and his wife died in 1881. She was a native of Canada. They had the following named children: Emity, Elonzo, Cudy, Jennie, Albert, Bogart, Robert N., in addition to the subject of this article. William J. was educated in the common schools and remained with his parents until he was sixteen and then migrated to North Dakota. He continued there one year and then made his way to Washington, where he railroaded and farmed until 1887. Then he went to Lewiston and later came to Mason prairie and located his present place. It is now well fenced, improved and returning good dividends in crops. He has about fifteen head of stock and is one of the prosperous men of the section.

Mr. Wilson married Miss Rosa A., daughter of William and Margaret (Stevenson) Slavens. The mother was born in Oregon on January 21, 1855. The father was a native of Illinois, and December 15, 1845, was the date of his birth. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Geneva B., Bay N., Gladys, Lester, Ecla, Marvin. Mr. Wilson is a Republican and actively interested in political matters. He has been school trustee for eight years and is an ardent advocate of good educational facilities and does all in his power to obtain this good end. He is a member of the M. W. A.

BRYANT M. CREWS, one of the stockmen and pioneers of the Mason prairie country, is deserving of mention in the work which chronicles the history of Nez Perces county, and with pleasure we grant him such. He was born in Montgomery, Virginia, on April 11, 1857, being directly descended from the early settlers of the new continent, as his great-grandfather came hither in the Mayflower. The parents of our subject, James P. and Mary I. (Gardner) Crews, were natives of Appomattox and Campbell counties, Virginia, respectively. The father was born April 22, 1832, and died in 1882. He was quartermaster during the Civil war and left Virginia in 1869, being a pioneer in Phelps county, Missouri. Besides the subject of this article, they had the following named children: Emma E., Elonzar P., Emma J., Rosa, James H. Our subject was educated in the common schools and remained with his parents until twenty. He went to Nebraska in 1886, commuted on a homestead and sold and came to Coos county, Oregon, in 1888. He bought land there and farmed three years and then came to Cowlitz county, Washington. One year was spent in railroading there and he made his way then to southern Idaho and two years later we see him in Whitman county. Later he was in the big bend country handling a band of cattle but returned again to Whitman county, whence he came to Nez Perces county and took his present place, about six miles west from Forest. He has a meadow of fifty acres and has improved the place with buildings necessary and other accessories. Mr. Crews has thirty head of cattle and is doing excellent work in handling his stock.

Mr. Crews married Miss Delilah, daughter of Jesse and Eliza Shepard. Mrs. Crews was born January 16, 1859, in Wells county, Indiana. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crews, Wallia, A. MacIntyre, Leroy, Ethel, Dollie Ann, Thomas A., Myrtle L., and Alberta. Mr. Crews is a member of the M. W. A. and in political alliances he is associated with the Democrats. He is highly esteemed among those who know him and is a substantial and good man.

JOSEPH ZIVER. A patriotic and loyal citizen, an upright and capable man, a true disciple of business and respected by all, such is the esteemed gentleman whose name is at the head of this article and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to incorporate an epitome of his career.

Joseph Ziver was born in Bohemia, on November 13, 1858, being the son of John and Francisca (Marlick) Ziver, natives of Bohemia, where they now live, prominent and wealthy people. Our subject attended school from five to eleven in Bohemia and one year in Germany. When twenty, he went to Saxony and when twenty-eight he left the old country and journeyed to America. Soon he was in Philadelphia, thence he went to Chicago and six months later was in North Dakota. It was 1888, when he came to Helena, Montana, and afterward spent some time in Wallace, Idaho. The next we see of Mr. Ziver was in Tacoma, where he spent three years. From this place he repaired to the Palouse country and also later settled in Lewiston, taking up the butcher business. Dissolving with his partner there he came to Spalding and soon secured the contract of supplying the Indian school with beef, which he has handled since. Mr. Ziver supplies fifty thousand pounds of beef annually to this institution and also has an extensive trade besides this. He handles a shop in Culdesac and is a thorough business man.

Mr. Ziver is the only one of his family who has come to the United States, but he is an enthusiastic supporter of our free institutions and is a true American citizen. In politics, he is a Democrat but still he reserves for himself the liberty to choose the man whose principles he will uphold. Mr. Ziver has one brother, Frank, in the old country. Our subject is a member of the Maccabees and of the M. W. A., both in Culdesac. He was raised in the Catholic faith. He has a fine ranch in addition to his business and raises stock and hay. Mr. Ziver is a warm supporter of the dignity and greatness of this country and is firm in the belief that is dear to every true American, that the United States is the greatest country on the earth today.

CHARLES E. FERRY. The enterprising young business man, of whom we now speak, is not only doing a good business in the drug store that he owns in Peck but also derives a welcome income from the farm that he took as a homestead from the wilds of the reservation. Mr. Ferry is a self-made man, largely, and has passed that school of experience in the things of this world that fits him for a successful career, which is his lot at this time.

Charles E. Ferry was born in Missouri, on August 28, 1878, being the son of Charles and Ellen D. (Stiles) Ferry. Our subject never saw his father after he was one and one-half years of age. The mother was born in Wisconsin and died in 1880, Charles being an infant. He was then taken by his grandparents Stiles, who lived in Kansas. Thence they went to New Mexico, then to Denver, next to Boise, from there to Weiser, and finally to Moscow, where they settled, the grandfather taking up farming. When Charles was thirteen the grandfather went to Milton, Oregon, but our subject remained with an uncle, Mr. Stiles, and when he arrived at the age of fifteen went to do for himself. He had gained his education from the common schools, in the various places where he had resided, and worked faithfully until the reservation opened, then he took a farm, upon which he made final proof in April, 1902. Then Mr. Ferry, having learned the druggist's art, bought a stock of drugs and opened a store in Peck, where he is operating at the present time.

In December, 1896, Mr. Ferry married Miss Ona, daughter of Alexander A. and Cordelia (Williams) Anderson, the father a native of Kentucky and now a large farmer in Latah county. Mrs. Ferry was born in Latah county, in 1879, and has two brothers, Franklin J. and Martin A. Mr. Ferry has two sisters, Lillian Humstock and Anna B. Riggs. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ferry, Milo G., Lottie M., and Velva. Mr. Ferry affiliates with the W. W. at Melrose, while in political matters, he is a Republican, being active in the caucuses and conventions. His father was a soldier in the Civil war. Mr. Ferry has conducted his business enterprise in a commendable manner, and has manifested true wisdom and thrift. His farm is well provided with buildings, consists of eighty acres, and among other good improvements has a fine orchard.

JOSEPH RAWNSLEY. A prosperous and progressive farmer and a man of integrity and uprightness and one of the real builders of the reservation country, it is fitting that he be accorded representation in this volume which recounts the history of this interesting region.

Joseph Rawnsley was born in Morgan county, Indiana, on September 5, 1844, being the son of James and Margaret (McPherson) Rawnsley, natives of North Carolina. At the age of four he came with his parents to Keokuk county, Iowa, and thence they removed to Hardin county, the same state. There the father died in 1859. Our subject grew to manhood there and received his education, remaining with his mother until the date of his marriage. This important event occurred on February 6, 1870, and Laura T., born April 18, 1854, daughter of Carver and Lucinda (Rubottom) Benbonw, natives of North Carolina, was the excellent lady that became his bride. The following children have been the fruit of this union: Florence M., wife of Henry Krounse, of Pomeroy, Washington; Nora, wife of George Montgomery, of Pomeroy; Wilbur J., married to Nellie Miller of Nezperce; Margaret, Ada C., and Iris L., who is deceased. Mrs. Rawnsley's parents removed from their native state to Indianapolis and in 1854 they landed in Hardin county, Iowa. In 1875 our subject and his family came to San Francisco, thence by ship to Portland and in the vicinity of Vancouver he bought land and there followed farming for five years. Then came a move to the vicinity of Pomeroy, Washington, where he entered a pre-emption which was the family home until the opening of the reservation. He was here on the eighteenth day of November, 1895, the date of opening, and he selected his present fine place, about six miles southwest from Nezperce. His family was brought the following spring and were among the very first ones here. He now has a house, barn, orchard, plenty of berries, all varieties of fruits, and many other improvements, which, added to the real value of his land, make his estate one of the most valuable of this vicinity. All this has been wrought out by the wise labor of Mr. Rawnsley and speaks well of his energy and wisdom.

JOHN B. SIMMONS. The old proverb, "He that becometh surety for a stranger shall smart for it," was exemplified to the sad experience of our subject, for from a comfortable and good place he was reduced to almost penury by having to pay a debt for which he had become surety. Mr. Simmons was thus forced to begin life on the reservation, with a family to support and nothing but the wild sod to gain a living from, and handicapped because of lack of capital to improve the farm. He has done well and the land which he filed on in the fall of 1895 and upon which he removed his family in 1896, is now one of the fertile and well developed farms of the vicinity of Ilo, being one mile south and one east.

Mr. Simmons was born in Warren county, Iowa, on November 18, 1857, being the son of William C. and Mary B. (Allen) Simmons, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa and gained his education there. When twenty-one he went to farming for himself and soon bought a farm, which he tilled until 1884, when he came west to the vicinity of Genesee, where he settled and bought a farm. This continued to be the family home until he removed onto the reservation as stated above. He is now a prosperous farmer, has two acres of orchard and handles considerable stock.

On October 16, 1878, in Harrison county, Iowa, Mr. Simmons married Miss Matilda J., daughter of Jeremiah and Melinda (McGuire) Whitt, who are mentioned in this volume elsewhere. Mrs. Simmons' brothers and sisters are also mentioned in the volume as are the brothers and sisters of Mr. Simmons. Five children have been born to bless this marriage: Jettie M. Trueblood, Myrtle A. Nichols, both in this county; Bird, Murt Merl and Pearl, twins, all at home. Mr. Simmons is a member of the M. W. A. at Ilo and has been a school director for some time, but has preferred of late that another should take the office. He has labored and does continuously strive for the advancement and upbuilding of the country and especially for the betterment of educational facilities. Mr. Simmons is a staunch Democrat and has the courage and intelligence to expound the principles of his party.

He and his son-in-law, John Nichols, have built a livery and feed barn in Ilo, where Mr. Simmons has recently moved.

HON. CLAY M. STEARNS. The prosperous, genial, pleasant and popular business man, named above, is a member of the law firm of Stearns & Thomas, of Nezperce, which does not only a good law business but also handles a great deal of insurance and does a loaning business.

Clay M. Stearns was born in Pennsylvania, on July 29, 1858, being the son of Josiah H. and Sarah (Russell) Stearns. The father was born in Maine, in 1832, and now lives in Lovell, Maine, and is a farmer. His first ancestor that came to this country came with the Puritans and settled in Watertown, Massachusetts, in 1680, and the family has been a prominent New England house since that time. Our subject's father was a captain in the Twenty-third Maine, Company H, and served in the battles of the Army of the Potomac for fifteen months. The paternal grandfather was a lieutenant in a Massachusetts regiment in the war of 1812 and later was commissioned general; the great-grandfather was prominent in the Revolution. The mother of our subject was a native of Maine and a great-granddaughter of Benjamin Russell, the founder of the Columbia Sentinel, a noted Whig organ of influence. Louis Phillip, the exile from France, was a guest of Mr. Russell for a long time and at the time of the restoration, he was offered a patent of nobility but refused it. Our subject was educated in the Fryburg and Bridgeton Academies and the Bowdoin College. Daniel Webster taught at the Fryburg institution in 1800. Following his college course, Mr. Stearns taught school, was county superintendent in Oxford county, and a member of the state legislature in 1884, being the youngest member in the house, aged twenty-six. In 1885 he came to Walla Walla and from May of that year until January of 1887, he was in the law office of Allen, Thompson & Crowley, then he practiced in Farmington, Washington, and three years later he returned to Walla Walla. After some time there he went to Pullman and practiced until 1897, when he stationed his family in Spokane and followed mining in various places in the northwest. It was 1901 that Mr. Stearns came to Nezperce and established himself in his present business, taking as partner Charles D. Thomas. Mr. Stearns has considerable city property and is doing a good business. He has the following brothers and sisters: Henry, a physician in Dunbarton, New Hampshire; Leslie L., at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, handling a boot and shoe business; Adelbert, on the old homestead in Maine with parents; Sargeant S., in the government service in Washington, D. C.; Mariam, wife of Willis Walker, in Lovell, Maine, a heavy property owner there. Mr. Stearns is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Walla Walla Lodge, No. 7; of the I. O. O. F., Pullman Lodge, No. 29; K. of P., Washington Lodge, No. 32, at Lovell, Maine; M. W. A., Nezperce Camp, No. 7498; Yeoman of America, at Nezperce, being foreman of this last order; and is also a Knight of the Palm and Shell.

On September 17, 1887, Mr. Stearns married Miss Etta E., daughter of Leonard and Hannah (Preston) Ladd, and a native of Minnesota, born on July 7, 1862, at Elgin. The father died when this daughter was young and her mother lives at Walla Walla. Mrs. Stearns has two brothers and three sisters: George, a farmer in Umatilla county, Oregon; Edward, in The Dalles machine shops; Florence, single, living in Walla Walla; Jennie, widow of Millard Roff, in Walla Walla; Nellie, widow of John Delaney at Spokane. Her husband was killed in the Philippine war. Mr. and Mrs. Stearns have one child, Gladys, born March 20, 1889.

GEORGE W. S. WHITE, a prosperous and substantial farmer residing about three miles southeast from Ilo, where he has a fine farm, well improved, was born in Greene county, Tennessee, on January 24, 1857, being the son of Enoch and Frances (Nixon) White. The father was born in Tennessee in 1819, and died in 1862, being killed at Chattanooga. His father was a pioneer in Tennessee and was known as Uncle Robert White, the pioneer. The mother of our subject was born in Georgia, in 1821, and died in September, 1900, aged seventy-nine. When George was five he went with his mother to Jasper county, Iowa, where her parents lived. Four years later she moved to Cherokee, Kansas, and thence in three years to Benton county, Arkansas. In 1874 she crossed the plains with teams and settled in Union county, Oregon. She had married Myrock Huntley in Kansas. Our subject remained with his step-father until fourteen and then started for himself. He worked out in the Grande Ronde valley for seven years and then came to Boise, in 1881. Two years in the mines and then two and a half on a farm, and then again to the Grande Ronde valley, whence he came to Sprague, Washington. He went thence to North Yakima and railroaded for a time and then operated a saw mill which was destroyed by fire, when he returned to Davenport and Sprague. Next he went to Pullman for four years and then did contract work in Spokane, after which he moved to Uniontown and resided for three years. After this, Mr. White went to Camas prairie and when the reservation opened up he took his present place, upon which he moved his family in the spring of 1896. This has been his home since and is a good farm, well handled and supports considerable stock.

On June 18, 1890, in Spokane, Mr. White married Miss Hannah, daughter of Jeremiah and Melinda (McGuire) Whitt. The father, a farmer and stockman, was born in Virginia and died from measles in the Civil war in 1864. He had been a pioneer in Harrison county, Missouri. The mother of Mrs. White was born in Tazewell county, Virginia, and died in 1866. Mrs. White was born in Harrison county, Missouri, in 1863, and has the following brothers and sisters: Frank, Narsissis Hensley, Napoleon, Mattie Woods, Ellen Crow and Jennie Simmons. Mr. White has the following brothers and sisters, Robert and John R., in Spokane; Rebecca J. McNall, in Sprague. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. White, Archie L. and Hazel V., at home. Mr. White and his wife are members of the Church of Christ in Ilo and he holds the office of deacon. He is a man of integrity and reliability and is secure in the esteem and confidence of the people.

JOHN H. POWELL, M. D. This well known professional gentleman is one of the practicing physicians who have won a fine success in the reservation portion of Nez Perces county and is a man of good standing and has made a commendable record in his profession. In addition to this, Dr. Powell has the distinction of being one of the brave boys who wore the blue and fought until treason and her minions were forced to retire, beaten from the field. A detailed account of his career is justly entitled to place in history.

John H. Powell was born in Logan county, Ohio, on July 12, 1840, being the son of James R. and Anna (Wise) Powell. The father was a native of Delaware and his father was owner and captain of a coasting schooner on the Atlantic. The mother of our subject was a native of Switzerland, was married in Ohio, and died in 1852. The family came to Union county, Illinois, in an early day and there our subject was reared and educated. When twenty-one, he enlisted in the Thirty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Batson and General Logan. He served three years and two months and saw much hard fighting. His first battle was at Belmont, then he fought at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth and Shiloh, then through all the struggle at Vicksburg, at Point Gibson, Raming, Champion Hill, then at Atlanta, when McPherson was killed. This last day was one never to be forgotten. Part of his company was captured. He was ordered to stop, but ran and amid a perfect hail of bullets he succeeded in getting to an Iowa regiment, where he was safe. The Doctor says the first bayonet charge he was in was the most awful experience of the entire war. It is beyond description of words to picture the horror and carnage. Following the war, our subject returned to the Illinois home, soon married and went to Kansas, where he engaged in transportation business. Thence he went to Newton county, Missouri, and engaged in the mercantile business. About this time the Doctor commenced the study of medicine, which continued constantly until he received his diploma in the Physio-Medical College of Indianapolis. There also he took an extended course in obstetrics and he has become very skillful in this practice. The Doctor also did mercantile business in Medical Lake, Washington, while he was pursuing the study of medicine and he owns property there now. He practiced one year in Lincoln county, in that state, then four years in Juliaetta, and in 1897, he located at Nezperce and since that time he has enjoyed a good practice. The Doctor has caused to be erected a fifteen room sanitarium which will be a great and needed addition to the town and it is fitted with every convenience for the care of the sick and will be entirely open to any physician. In addition to his practice, the Doctor has taken up a homestead and has improved it with good house and orchard and so forth.

In 1865 occurred the marriage of J. H. Powell and Martha A. Jolley. Her parents, John and Lucinda Jolly, were natives of the state of Tennessee; the father was a blacksmith and a Methodist preacher. Doctor Powell has one brother, a farmer in Illinois, while Mrs. Powell has two sisters, Jennie, wife of Walter H. Wiscomb, city treasurer of Spokane a number of terms; Mary, wife of W. C. Johnson, a carpenter in Seattle. To Dr. Powell and his faithful wife there have been born six children, Elizabeth J., wife of G. G. Muller, proprietor of the leading hotel at Sunnyside, Washington; Ella, single with parents; James Wesley, in Portland, Oregon, three deceased. Dr. Powell is a member of the German Baptist church while his wife and two daughters belong to the Methodist. Politically, he is affiliated with the Republicans.

ROBERT SMITH. At the present time, Mr. Smith is a prosperous dairyman, located three miles east from Lewiston, and he is well known for his thrift, energy and integrity and stands well among the people of the community. He was born in Pike county, Illinois, on October 8, 1866, being the son of Hiram and Sarah J. (Simons) Smith. The father was a farmer, born in Pennsylvania in 1820, and died in 1875. The mother was born in Adams county, Illinois, on November 11, 1836, and died August 15, 1893. Robert was educated in the schools of his neighborhood and was a diligent lad on the farm. In 1884, aged eighteen, he came to the west. He landed in Waashington, then went to Lewiston, where he worked for a couple of years, and then returned to Illinois. There he went to farming and raising hogs, at which he did well, and then suffered the misfortune to see his all swept away by the hog cholera. Being discouraged with that labor he came again to the west, this time settling near Pullman and taking charge of a large farm for Dr. Webb. Two years were spent here and Mr. Smith returned to Illinois. Four years were spent there and then he came west for good, setling at his present place. He paid attention to dairying, gardening, and fruit raising, and did well, but now he is confining himself to dairying alone and is making a good success.

On January 8, 1889, in Illinois, Mr. Smith married Miss Carrie, daughter of William and Susan Uppinghouse. The father served in the Civil war and is now a farmer. Mrs. Smith was born in New Canton, Illinois, in 1869 and has brothers and sisters as follows: Charles, James, Nellie, Logan, Eva, Arthur and Nina. Mr. Smith has brothers and sisters named below: Seldon, Hiram R., Hilbert, and Ella Eakins, and his half brothers are named also George A., Wesley Akers. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith there have been born three children, Opal, Paul, Grace. Mr. Smith affiliates with the W. of W. and M. W. A. He is a Republican but is not bound by party lines so that he uses his judgment for men and principles.

JOSEPH E. SHAFFER. About three miles east from Melrose is situated the estate of our subject, which is cultured and cared for in a manner becoming a first-class farmer, while it is improved with excellent barns, outbuildings, and residence, with orchard. Mr. Shaffer is a man of industry and thrift and is well esteemed by all in the community.

Joseph E. Shaffer was born near Ragersville, Ohio, on April 2, 1858, being the son of Joseph and Susan (Cullar) Shaffer. The father was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, on June 10, 1806, was a pioneer to Ohio in 1831 and died in 1889. He was a farmer and boat builder. The mother of our subject was born in the same county and state, in 1816 and died in 1880. Joseph grew to manhood in Ohio and was educated there. In 1872, the family went to Portage county and when this son was of age, he spent some time in traveling to various portions of the country. Then he rented the old homestead and worked it for a time, after which he sold and same to Portland, Oregon. Later he was in Jacksonville, the same state, and then returned to Portage county, Ohio. In the fall of 1891, he came to Latah county and farmed in the Cove until 1896, when he repaired to the reservation and took up his present place.

On July 24, 1881, in Sharon, Pennsylvania, Mr. Shaffer married Miss Love, daughter of Joseph and Catherine (Jones) McFee. The father was a farmer, born in Ohio as was also his wife, and he served in the Civil war under General Marshall. Mrs. Shaffer was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, in 1863, and has five brothers, John, William, Oscar, Frank, and Marshall. Mr. Shaffer has the following brothers and sisters, Selinda Shannon, Jane Durkee, Lydia Thompson, Melissa Norris, Mary Scott. To Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer there have been born three children, Clyde M., born in Ohio on April 16, 1882; William J., born in Portland, Oregon, on December 18, 1883; Guy O., born in Nez Perces county on May 1, 1897. Mr. Shaffer is a Republican and a first-class citizen.

WILLIAM F. SHAWLEY, M. D. Well known in Nez Perces and Idaho counties as a man of honor, uprightness and ability, as well as a man of extensive experience in the medical world and excellent skill, the subject of this article is justly ranked with the leading men of the section. On account of a serious accident that crippled the Doctor for life, we now find him taking up other business lines that demand less activity and are not so trying as extended practice of medicine.

William F. Shawley was born in Montgomery county, Kentucky, on December 10, 1851, being the son of John B. and Catherine A. E. (Gray) Shawley. The father was born on the same farm as our subject, while the grandfather of William F. was a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and the great-grandfather was an immigrant from Saxony. The mother of our subject was a native of Montgomery county also and her father was born in Ireland, while her mother was of German descent. William F. was taken to Missouri in 1853 with the family and reared and educated there. Later he completed his education in the Normal at Troy, Iowa. In the Keokuk College of Physicians and Surgeons, Mr. Shawley entered with a determination to delve thoroughly into medical lore. In 1882 he graduated with honors from that institution and then practiced six years in Aetna, Missouri, two years in Milton, Iowa, six years in Taylor, Nebraska, eight years in Idaho and then in October, 1898, he met with the sad accident above mentioned. The following year Dr. Shawley came to Nezperce, bought business and residence property, erected a hotel which he rents and is now retired from the activities of business. He has three living brothers: Hezekiah, a farmer in Oklahoma; John D., in Missouri; George W., land owner and dentist in Kansas City; he also has three sisters, Lucy G., wife of Richard Morton, in Missouri, who served in the Confederate army as lieutenant under Morgan; Henrietta, wife of N. D. Hoover, a farmer in Oklahoma, who served as a private under Stonewall Jackson; Sophronia J., wife of John Marlow, a man standing six feet, ten inches in his stocking feet, and as prominent in politics, business and social circles in Scotland county, Missouri, as he is large physically. Dr. Shawley is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Mount Idaho Lodge, No. 9, at Grangeville.

In Memphis, Missouri, Dr. Shawley married Miss Mary A., daughter of James A. and Angeline (Roole) Sayers. She was born in Illinois in 1853 and died December 7, 1887, leaving two children, Inez L., wife of Charles Pomeroy, in Nezperce; John G., with his father. Dr. Shawley contracted a second marriage, the date was January 9, 1889, and the lady Hulda A. Langrish, and a native of Saxony. Her parents, Christian and Minnie C. (Carter) Langrish, brought her to this county when she was fourteen and they lived in Nebraska and Kansas. Four children have been born to this union: Cora D., aged twelve; Mary D., aged ten; William G., aged seven; Charles F., aged three. Mrs. Shawley has two sisters, Minnie C., widow of Bartholomew O'Rourke, in Oklahoma; Ida, wife of Frank C. Smith, also in Oklahoma.

LEWIS A. SIMMONS was born in Warren county, Iowa, on October 16, 1849, being the son of William C. and Mary B. (Allen) Simmons, natives of Indiana and Kentucky, respectively. They are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa and there received his education. He labored with his father until he was twenty-eight and then began to do for himself. He bought a farm in his native place and wrought there until 1884, when he journeyed westward to Oregon, whence he moved to Washington, and then to Latah county, near Genesee, where he rented land. Later Mr. Simmons bought a farm and in the fall of 1895 he came to the reservation and took land for himself. His place is situated about three miles southeast from Ilo, and the winter following his filing, he removed the family there. This has been the family home since and Mr. Simmons has displayed both wisdom and industry in handling his estate. He has a large number of improvements and raises grain for the market. November 18, 1895, was the date of taking this claim.

On February 24, 1876, Mr. Simmons married Miss Charity, daughter of James E. and Rebecca (Nice) Smith, natives of Ohio and Indiana and were born in July, 1814, and November, 1814, and died in 1893 and 1865, respectively. Mr. Smith was a pioneer of Indiana and his parents were of Kentucky. Mrs. Smith's parents were pioneers of Indiana and her grandfather, William Nice, was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mrs. Simmons was born in Carroll county, Indiana, on November 9, 1852, and has three brothers, John W., Erastus J., and Isaac N. Mr. Simmons has the following named brothers and sisters: Elizabeth, James C., and Deborah, all deceased; Mehalia, John B., Samuel J., Lucinda R., and William T. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Simmons: Etha, Megenity, William O., Alta M., Samuel J., deceased, Lottie E., Gustave, Isaac A. Mrs. Simmons is a member of the Primitive Baptist church. Mr. Simmons is a member of the school board and has always been active in labors for good schools. Mr. Simmons is a man of exceptional qualifications for getting along peaceably in this world, having never been sued and never has he resorted to the law in any case. He is respected by all who know him and is a good, substantial citizen.

CHARLES E. WILLIAMS. This noted frontiersman is now a resident of Spalding, and to give a full account of the thrilling adventures, the weary and trying journeys, the terrible hardships, the difficult explorations of many years on the very outposts of the frontiers and in the almost impenetrable wilds would take an entire volume and therefore we will be obliged to touch on only the salient points in this review. Mr. Williams is a man of staunch character and uprightness and all those qualities that make the hardy pioneer.

Charles E. Williams was born in Springfield, Illinois, on April 22, 1847, being the son of Cornelius and Mary J. (Harvey) Williams. The father was a native of Pennsylvania, of Welsh extraction, and died in Illinois, having been a miner in the coal regions. The mother of Charles E. was also a native of Pennsylvania as were her ancestors, and she died at Cascade Locks, Oregon, in 1901. Our subject was brought by his mother across the plains to Cascade Locks, in 1852. She took a donation claim and he remained with her for fifteen years. She married R. G. Atwell in 1853, an attorney of an old Virginia family. Mrs. Williams' grandfather fought in the Revolution. Charles E. was educated in Portland at the academy and when that part of his life was done, he commenced the operation of a pack train. He packed from Walla Walla to Helena and Fort Boise, which latter he helped to build in 1864. In 1871, Mr. Williams did the herculean task of taking a pack train of flour from Helena to Cassier bar in the Fraser river country. He had six men and seventy-seven mules. The start was made on March 18, 1871, and they arrived at the destination on July 18, 1871, the goods being for Perry Kent, an old Californian. In this trip, Mr. Williams built two hundred miles of road and came over the land where Spokane now stands. Following this, he took charge of a train for the Canadian government and for several years did excellent service in this capacity, much of the time handling the supplies for the engineers of the Canadian Pacific. In this work he packed across glaciers where they had to cut steps for the animals in the ice and thus get them down the precipitous sides. Following this service Mr. Williams settled down to ranching and a commercial life in British Columbia and seven years were spent in that labor. Selling this business for eighteen thousand dollars to James Sullivan he came to the Flathead reservation in Montana and embarked in the stock business. A hard winter killed all his stock and then he went to Spalding, where land was allotted his wife and children. Mrs. Williams has two granddaughters, Maggie B. and Ida K. Elliot, who are good musicians and own eighty acres of land each.

Mr. Williams started to dam the Clearwater for the purpose of mining the Webfoot bar, but after spending three thousand dollars he failed, although he found considerable gold. Since that time he has been prospecting all over the country and now he has located the Lost creek, known as the Bill Rhodes property, which he has been searching for for twenty years. It is doubtless a bonanza for Mr. Williams and his associates.

At Kamloops, on December 25, 1877, Mr. Williams married Mrs. Christina, widow of James McKenzie and daughter of Angus and Kathrina McDonald. Mr. McDonald was chief factor in the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Colville. In a time of great trouble between the Indians and the whites, Kathrina stood nobly with the whites and not only did many things for their advantage but in the fight she loaded the arms of the white man and never flinched from the trying dangers. This brave and noble action so touched the heart of McDonald that he later married the maiden, she being a beautiful woman. Mrs. Williams was highly educated and given every advantage that her wealthy father could supply and she is a gracious and accomplished lady of refinement and culture. She has five brothers and one sister, Duncan, Angus, Joseph, Thomas, Donald, and Margaret, a noted business woman on the Bitter Root river in Montana, who has an immense stock ranch and who is styled the "Cattle Queen." To Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been born children: Charles, married and farming his allotment; Mary, wife of George Campbell, owner of a hotel in Spalding and a portion of the townsite. Mr. Williams has one brother and two half-brothers, Cassius M., James and John Atwell, the former a marine engineer and captain on the Columbia boats and the latter a contractor and builder at Cascade Locks. Mr. Williams is a member of the Methodist church while his wife and children are members of the Presbyterian, except Kate, who is an adherent of the Catholic faith. By her former marriage Mrs. Williams has two children, Alexander D. McKenzie, farming on the allotment; Kate, widow of W. Elliot, and now wife of Louis Forrest, a mechanic at Lapwai.

Recently Mr. Williams cut thirty-five miles of trail in the Eldorado country and is interested in mining.

JOHN C. JACKSON. Among the successful and well-to-do men of the vicinity of Dublin, we must mention the subject of this article, whose estate of three hundred and twenty acres of fine land lies about one mile southwest and has been made by his wise and industrious labors one of the most valuable of this section. Mr. Jackson has a fine residence, good barn and outbuildings and a general air of thrift pervades the premises. He pays attention to diversified farming and raising fine Berkshire and Poland China hogs.

John C. Jackson was born in Carroll county, Ohio, on March 18, 1855, being the son of Hugh and Margaret (Crawford) Jackson. The father was born in Pennsylvania on February 22, 1815, and died in August, 1885. He was a pioneer in Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa, dying in the last state. His grandparents were all natives of Ireland and were among the earliest settlers in Ohio. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, on March 7, 1815, and died in December, 1898. John C. was taken by his parents to Illinois when four years old, and the family settled in Monmouth, where he received his education. In 1871 they all went to Warren county, Iowa, and there our subject labored with his father until he had reached the age of twenty-one, when he started the battle of life for himself. He visited the old home in Ohio, then returned to Iowa and took up farming and handling stock. In 1890 Mr. Jackson moved to Genesee, where he farmed until 1895, at which time he took up his present place. This has been the family home since that time and the scene of the wise labors of Mr. Jackson.

On January 1, 1880, Mr. Jackson married Miss Lucinda R., daughter of William and Mary (Allen) Simmons. The wedding occurred in Warren county, Iowa. Mr. Simmons was born in Kentucky in 1819 and died in 1876. He was one of the very first settlers in Iowa. His wife was born in Spencer county, Indiana, in 1821. Her grandparents settled in Kentucky with Daniel Boone and her great-grandmother was a niece of that noted frontiersman. Mrs. Jackson was born in Iowa, on October 30, 1861, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Louis, John, Joseph, William, Elizabeth, Mary and Mahala. Mr. Jackson has the following named brothers and sisters: Elizabeth, Nancy J., James M. Mrs. Jackson is a member of the Presbyterian church; Mr. Jackson affiliates with the Masons and the M. W. A. He is a Republican and takes the part of an intelligent citizen. He is a member of the school board and has always evinced a great interest in these matters, laboring for advancement and progress.

CHRISTOPHER C. MILLER. The home of our subject is about six miles west from Nezperce and is one of the promising farms of the section, having been taken from the raw by homestead right and brought to its present state of cultivation and improvement by the arduous and careful labor of Mr. Miller, whose industry, thrift, integrity and uprightness have been patent to all.

Christopher C. Miller was born in Mercer county, Illinois, on June 30, 1842, being the son of George and Elizabeth (Hyatt) Miller, natives of Indiana. In 1847 the family came across the plains with ox teams in a large train captained by Jonathan Mulkey. Some trouble was experienced with the Indians and when they came to The Dalles, Mr. Miller floated his family and their goods down the Columbia and up the Willamette to Oregon City in Indian canoes. Arriving in Oregon City without means, he was confronted with the proposition of caring for a family of ten children, of which our subject was the eighth; the first venture was to cut the tents up and make clothes for the little ones. He soon went to California in the mining excitement and in 1851 moved to Lane county, where he died in 1853. Our subject remained with his mother until her death, and on December 27, 1872, he was married to Sarah, daughter of James and Elizabeth Lee, who came across the plains in 1863 from Missouri, in which state Mrs. Miller was born. Settlement was made in Lane county, where the father died, the mother having passed away in Missouri. Our subject remained on the old donation claim until 1878 and then came to the vicinity of Dayton, Washington, whence he removed to Pomeroy in 1880. He followed farming and raising stock until 1898 and then located his place and the result of his labors since that time is apparent in the excellent holding that he has wrought out, as he came here with very little capital and all he now possesses is the result of his wise labors. A good windmill with a well one hundred and twelve feet deep, orchard, shrubbery, garden and buildings are among the improvements in evidence.

The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Dora, wife of Buel Ables, near Mohier; Elizabeth, wife of F. Morgan, in Garfield county; Clara J., wife of Lewis Harris, in the vicinity of Nezperce; Nellie, wife of Wilber Rawnsley, near Nezperce; Annie, deceased; Nettie; Bessie, deceased; John and George.

ALEXANDER McCUTCHEN. This genial and pleasant gentleman is one of the successful farmers in the vicinity of Melrose, his ranch joining the town on the east. Mr. McCutchen is a man of excellent qualities of intrinsic worth, as integrity, industry and uprightness, and is secure in the esteem and confidence of his associates.

Alexander McCutchen was born in Floyd county, Indiana, on October 12, 1852, being the son of Alexander and Mary (Johnston) McCutchen. The father was also born in Indiana and his father, Samuel J. McCutchen, was a pioneer of Indiana, from his native state, Kentucky, and was one of the stanch members of the Christian church in early days. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana, in 1821, and died in 1880. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania and were pioneers to Indiana. Alexander grew up on the farm, attended school in the winter and assisted his father in the work until he was twenty-two, when he came to Macoupin county, Illinois, where he remained for six years, being employed by J. F. Roach, one of the largest shippers and feeders in Illinois. Mr. McCutchen became expert in this art and is considered one of the first men in this line in the county. From Illinois he came to Portland and then made his way to the vicinity of Walla Walla, where he farmed for sixteen years, having arrived there in 1882. During this time Mr. McCutchen prospered, owing to his industry and wise management. He states that in many cases he has headed field after field of wheat that averaged fifty bushels to the acre. He became one of the best header drivers in the country and doubtless takes the lead in this important industry in Nez Perces county. In 1898 Mr. McCutchen purchased his present ranch and has devoted himself to its improvement since. He raises many hogs and has his farm fenced hog-tight so that he can feed them from the field. Mr. McCutchen is now planning to erect a commodious barn and fine residence and is one of the leading and progressive men of the county. September 30, of the year mentioned, was the date of his settlement and much has been done since by his thrift and labor. Mr. McCutchen has the following brothers and sisters: Jacob M., William M., George W. and John B., deceased. Mr. McCutchen is a Bryan man and always interested in political matters. As yet, our subject has not elected to desert the ranks of bachelordom, but is enjoying the choice pleasures of a life of celibacy.

ALANSON FARMER. The subject of this article has exemplified in a striking manner both his ability and the possibilities of this country. For, coming here with no money, having only two horses and two cows, he is now possessed of a fine farm, one of the choicest of the vicinity, comfortable improvements, a good holding in stock and good orchards, shrubbery gardens, and all that goes to make a farm both a valuable and pleasant abode. These things speak in emphatic terms of the industry and wisdom of Mr. Farmer and because of these qualities, together with real moral worth and integrity, he is of excellent standing in the community and is the recipient of the respect of all.

Alanson Farmer was born in Tazewell county, Virginia, on January 2, 1856, being the son of Alanson and Charlotte (Graham) Farmer, natives of Virginia. Near the close of the war the father enlisted in the Confederate army and a few weeks later he was killed in the battle of King's Salt Works. The mother is now living in Palouse, aged eighty-three. Our subject was the seventh of a family of nine children and was educated in his native place. There, also, on January 2, 1878, he married Miss Georgia Ann, daughter of Nathaniel and Susan (Webb) Puckett. The father died when she was a child, while the mother is now living in Wayne county, West Virginia. Thither our subject removed in 1880 and in 1887 came to Moscow, Idaho. The following year found him in Palouse, whence he went again to Moscow and at the time of the opening of the reservation he was on hand to take a claim and his push and energy secured for him one of the very choicest claims on the reservation. He filed on November 22, 1895, and in May, 1896, he brought the family. He had erected a house and seeded eighteen acres of grain before he brought them and when they were well settled he went to the harvest fields of the Walla Walla country to gain bread for their sustenance. He has wrought with a faithful and winning hand since that time and the result is the goodly holding that is his now to enjoy. Mr. Farmer has two wells, one sixty-five feet deep and one seventy feet deep, and in neither did he encounter any rock. He has plenty of good water and his place is fine in every respect.

Mr. Farmer is a member of the M. W. A., and his wife is a member of the Baptist church, both being devout in the support of their faith. Nine children have been born to this happy family, Vicey, deceased; Reba E. Bailey, Albert S., Nevada S., Emery, deceased, Lena C., Edith H., Aressa I. and Evert W.

PERRY E. MILLER. This successful young business man of Nezperce is associated with Thomas Mockler in a large furniture business which is both successful and well managed.

Referring to his personal career, we note that Perry E. Miller was born in Scio, Linn county, Oregon, on May 23, 1868, being the son of John and Amanda (Redman) Miller. The father was born in Illinois, in 1841, and came to Oregon with his parents in 1849, who took a donation claim of one section, where he was reared and lived until his death in 1878. Perry's mother was a native of Iowa, born in 1846, and now lives at Freeman, Washington, being the wife of P. J. Wycoff. Shortly after his birth our subject's parents came to the old donation claim near Albany and he was educated in the district school there until he was twelve. Then a move was made to Sprague, Washington, and for two years Perry E. attended graded school. Following this, he went to Adams, Oregon, and lived with an uncle, J. T. Redman, a prominent merchant and stockman. Two more years in the graded schools and then four years were occupied in the foremanship of the I. R. horse ranch. Mr. Miller then accepted a position with Reese, Crandall & Redman, wholesale grocers in Tacoma. Two years later he came to Freeman, Spokane county, Washington, and bought a farm, which he handled for years and then, on account of the panic, he was unsuccessful and after much hard work succeeded in settling all indebtedness and had a four-horse team and one dollar and twenty-five cents left. Then Nez Perces reservation was the mecca of those who had energy to start again, and our subject is blessed with plenty of pluck. He came straightway, took a ranch, one of the best in the county, thanks to his good judgment in selecting it, and in a short time Mr. Miller had a crop of wheat growing. He freighted between times and in a few years had the entire quarter growing fine crops of the cereals. The fourth year he bought a threshing outfit with his brother, Norton B., and they operated it for two years, being successful. On February 16, 1901, Mr. Miller bought the interest of E. L. Parkers in the small furniture business in Nezperce and immediately he and his partner built a large twenty-four by one hundred and twenty structure and filled it with a well selected stock. Since then Mr. Miller has devoted himself to this business and is doing well. He personally manages the establishment and is a man of energy and successful business capabilities. This house is the largest in this entire section of country and is favored with a rapidly increasing patronage.

On December 23, 1889, Mr. Miller married Miss Annie E., daughter of Lewis M. and Emma Simpson. Mr. Simpson was a merchant in Adams, where this wedding occurred, but now he is a farmer near Cottonwood. Mrs. Miller was born on November 15, 1872, and on September 6, 1901, she was called by death to the world beyond. She left three sons, Vonley J., Verona LeRoy, Darl V., and one daughter, Madge Leona. Mr. Miller is a member of the W. W., Nezperce Camp No. 445, also of the auxiliary, being manager of the latter. In politics Mr. Miller is a Democrat and in 1899 he was elected county commissioner by a good majority, although the county was Republican. His own district gave him one hundred and forty-two majority, notwithstanding that it was a Republican precinct. Business matters pressed so closely that Mr. Miller could not devote the time to the office that he deemed it deserved and consequently he resigned. He was a delegate to the state convention this year.

On February 19, 1903, Mr. Miller entered a corporation composed of T. M. Mockler, J. H. Mockler and P. E. Miller, doing business under the name of Mockler, Miller & Mockler, of which Mr. Miller is secretary and treasurer. This firm is the largest on the Nez Perce prairie, handling a complete hardware business, farm machinery, furniture and being the only undertaking establishment outside of Lewiston, in the Nez Perces county.

JOHN LEROY SANFORD. A prosperous farmer, an upright man, a scion of a substantial and old family, and a man who is doing a commendable work in developing this country, it is fitting to give an epitome of the subject of this article.

John L. Sanford was born in Lincoln county, South Dakota, on September 24, 1878, being the son of John and Mary (Nelson) Sanford. The father was born December 16, 1837, in Clark county, Illinois. He lived a time in Putnam county, Indiana, then removed to Boone county, Iowa. In the summer of 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Tenth Iowa Infantry, in the Fifteenth Army Corps. He was in both battles of Corinth, at Iuka, Chattanooga, and the siege of Vicksburg, at Atlanta and several other battles and many skirmishes. Mr. Sanford was in the hottest of many of these awful conflicts when bullets were like hail, while hundreds of men were falling all around. He fought with a display of great courage and bravery and endured unflinchingly the terrible ordeals of hardship and trials of the soldier's life. In August, 1865, he was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, and received his discharge at Davenport. He returned to Boone county and on March 6, 1866, was married. In 1872 he went to Lincoln county, South Dakota, and in 1889 came to Moscow. Mrs. Sanford was born in Van Buren county, Michigan, on November 9, 1848. Seven children were born to Mr. Sanford and are named as follows: Violet S. Carley, Charles M., Ella Olson, John Leroy, Mary A. Millage, William S. and Jesse H. Our subject came to the reservation in 1898 and as soon as he was of age secured his present homestead of forty acres. He has a good house, first-class improvements, besides handling three hundred acres of rented land. He raises flax and the cereals and is prosperous and well respected.

The Sanford family is one of the oldest in America. They descended from John Sanford, a wealthy Englishman, who came to the colonies in 1631. His son was William, and from him to the present, the genealogy is unbroken and they have many men of note among them and are a strong, vigorous and prominent family. Some of them have lived to be one hundred years of age and some even older than that. Abraham Sanford, a great-uncle of our subject, died in 1897 aged one hundred and one. Mr. Sanford's parents are now living on the place with him and they are highly respected people.

WILLIAM DESCHAMPS. A man full of energy, snap, and those qualities of aggressiveness that make successful business men, also possessed of an agreeable way and genial manner that win many friends, and guided with wisdom and keen perception, the subject of this sketch is rightly classed with the leading men of business ability in the county of Nez Perces. At present Mr. Deschamps is owner of a first-class livery stable in Nezperce, which he has leased.

William Deschamps was born in Stevens Point, Portage county, Wisconsin, on May 7, 1872, being the son of Peter and Margaret (Tardiff) Deschamps. The father, a native of the province of Quebec, came to New York state when twenty-one and thence through various regions to Lewiston, where he now lives, aged sixty-seven. His brother lives on the old homestead in Canada, which has been in the family for three hundred years. The mother of William was of French desent and born in Upper Canada. Her brothers are well known railroad men in Wisconsin, John J. being superintendent of the Wisconsin Central shops for twenty years; and George is a conductor on that line. William was educated in Wisconsin and North Dakota, whither the family went in 1882. The father took a half section of land and farmed there for ten years. The farm was an unsuccessful venture and although the father did well in contracting on the construction of the Great Northern, the losses on the estate ate up all profits and when they sold and came to Lewiston their finances were not of the best. This was in 1894, and when the reservation opened they were among the first to select land and secured a good tract for each one. Our subject sold his quarter for thirty-five hundred dollars and the father and sister sold a quarter for four thousand dollars. Mr. Deschamps has bought and sold some land since, among which is a stock farm in Whitman county, Washington. In 1901 Mr. Deschamps came to Nezperce and built a fine livery barn, it being a substantial structure, and since that time he has been conducting a first-class business there until January 1, 1903.

Mr. Deschamps has one brother, Charles E., on the reservation, and three sisters, Mary, wife of John Reagan, on the Colville reservation, Washington; Lizzie, wife of Orrin Pixley, a stockman at Waha; Meda, living with parents in Lewiston. He and his family are members of the Catholic church and stanch supporters of the faith. Mr. Deschamps is a charter member of the M. W. A., Nezperce Camp, No. 7498, being also manager. He is a Republican and a rustler in this realm, being a magnetic orator on the campaign and a zealous worker in the field.

On November 2, 1901, Mr. Deschamps married Miss Josephine M., daughter of Charles and Margaret (Bulldell) Langer. The father was born in France and was one of the prominent architects in North Dakota, Minnesota and Puget Sound, but was caused to retire from the work by a serious injury in North Yakima resulting from a fall. He is now residing on the reservation. He constructed the plans for a large residence of Z. A. Johnson, in Nezperce. Mrs. Deschamps' maternal grandparents reside on a ranch near Cold Springs, aged ninety. Mrs. Deschamps has five brothers: Fred, in Spokane; Louis, a farmer on the reservation; Eugene, with his father; Edward, in California; Phillip, a school boy with his parents. William Deschamps has just bought one hundred and sixty acres, two miles northwest of Nezperce, and intends moving on it.

ELI A. LEACH. A man of integrity and sound principles and whose life has demonstrated his worth and ability as a stanch citizen, it is becoming that we accord him space in the history of his county.

Eli A. Leach was born in Greenview, Menard county, Illinois, being the son of Salathiel G. and Mary (Varner) Leach, natives of Indiana. The father was born in 1826 and died in 1862 from yellow fever, while in service in the Civil war in Tennessee. He was one of the earliest pioneers in Illinois and a capable and enterprising man. The mother was born in 1824 and her parents were among the earliest settlers in that state. They had to fight both wild animals and hostile Indians. Her father was also a forty-niner in California. Our subject remained in Illinois until fourteen and then went with his mother to northwest Missouri, where he and his brother farmed for her, their home being in Harrison county, where he was educated and grew to manhood. Later he studied and practiced medicine, and gained good laurels in this line. When twenty-seven he settled in Elk county, Kansas, and later in Pratt county, where he farmed and practiced medicine. Later he returned to Harrison county on a visit and in 1888 Mr. Leach came to Farmington, Washington. Here he leased land extensively and farmed. In the awful year of panic, 1893, Mr. Leach had one thousand acres of first class wheat which was entirely lost on account of wet weather. This broke him up financially and in 1895 he came to his present place, about two miles southeast from Ilo, made a filing and settled down. He now has a fine house of fourteen rooms, which he is completing, and has followed diversified farming with success since.

On August 16, 1874, Mr. Leach married Miss Lucinda, daughter of William R. and Sarelda (Croff)

Smith, born in Kentucky in 1827 and 1829, respectively. The father still lives in Missouri but the mother died in 1884. The nuptials of our subject were celebrated in Harrison county, Missouri. Mrs. Leach was born in Missouri on November 14, 1855, and has the following brothers and sisters: Sarah, Jeremiah, Mary, Richard, Susan, Jasper, Rena, Ison, and William. Mr. Leach has the following named brothers and sisters: Eugene, a soldier in the Civil war; Edith, Robert, deceased; Salathiel. Eleven children have been born to our worthy couple: Theophilus, Floyd, Cloyd, Theodore, Rosa, deceased, Mary E., Eugene, Mattie, Edith, Dollie, Ida. Mr. Leach is an elder in the Christian church and has been an active member of that church since he was seventeen. Mrs. Leach has been a member of it since 1889. Mr. Leach is a Republican and has always been active. He is a strong supporter of good schools and labors intelligently for their betterment constantly. He was forced to undergo much hardship when he came here, but has been prospered and now has a fine bunch of stock and is well-to-do.

ALAXANDER POLLOCK. It is a pleasure to grant to Mr. Pollock consideration in the history of Nez Perces county, since he is one of the most enterprising and capable farmers of the entire reservation county. His ranch is about one mile southeast from Dublin and is known as the Idaho Model Farm, No. 1. And surely it bears this name out in reality, for it is one of the best places in the country and bears the marks of the skill, wisdom, industry and careful planning of the owner. Mr. Pollock took the land in 1895, being one of the first here, thus securing a choice farm. It is well watered and fenced hog tight with twenty-six inch wire netting. Mr. Pollock is devoting himself largely to raising hogs, finding them very profitable. He also raises flax for the market in addition to the large amounts of grain which is consumed by his stock. He has good, tasty buildings and an orchard, with many other improvements of value.

Alaxander Pollock was born in Gray county, Ontario, on November 18, 1869, being the son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Cook) Pollock, natives of northern Ireland and Canada, respectively. The father was married in Ontario and still lives in Gray county. He and his wife are devout members of the Methodist church. Our subject had scanty opportunity to gain an education, but improved it well and by personal research is a well informed man. In 1888-9 he was on the Indian Peninsula in Canada, lumbering. In 1890 he came to Chippewa county, Michigan, then went to Duluth, thence to Cumberland, Wisconsin, and other portions of the country. Later he was in Kaslo, British Columbia, and there mined for a time. In 1895 Mr. Pollock came to Spokane, thence to Lewiston and then to the reservation, selecting a choice spot. He then returned to Spokane and later, when the reservation opened, he was on hand to take his place. He raises stock in addition to the hogs mentioned and also has some fine poultry. His house, barn, out buildings, as granary, chicken house, hog barn and so forth are all made and kept in a model manner and it is the purpose of Mr. Pollock to make one of the finest farms in the state.

On March 26, 1899, Mr. Pollock married Miss Minnie A., daughter of Willard and Julina Birchard, natives of Vermont. They came to Mandan, North Dakota. In 1890 they came to Marion county, Oregon, where they now reside, engaged in fruit raising and general farming. Mrs. Pollock was born in Iowa in August, 1879. Two children, Howard M., born May 28, 1901, and Earl A., born December 5, 1902, have come to gladden this home.

JERVIS R. CRAWFORD. Judge Crawford is one of the prominent and popular residents of Nezperce and is entitled to especial representation in the volume of his county history, being a man of excellent business qualifications and possessed of a goodly holding of property and withal a man of sound principles and first-class standing among the people.

Jervis R. Crawford was born in Wisconsin on October 1, 1854, being the son of Leonard and Lydia (Sweet) Crawford, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father came to the vicinity of Pullman, Washington, took land, and remains there still, being aged seventy. The mother of our subject came to Wisconsin with her parents, who are now dead, and the family resided there for fifty years. She died in 1874, aged forty. Jervis was raised in Missouri, and educated in the common schools and the College of Pharmacy in St. Louis. After he graduated he accepted a position in Oronego, Missouri, and clerked in a drug store for two years and then bought the store and remained six years longer. A move brought him to Kansas and two years more were spent in a drug store. It was 1881 that he came to Whitman county, took a half section of land and farmed for twelve years. The rust ruined him, and when the reservation opened he came to its fertile regions and at once entered the building and contracting business in Nezperce. He has erected one-third of the buildings in the town and is a skilled hand in the business. Mr. Crawford has been elected justice of the peace and he is especially fitted for this position, being a man of logical turn of mind and given to careful weighing of evidence and condition. He is popular in this line and is a man of sound judgment. Mr. Crawford is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Hiram Lodge, Number 36; of the I. O. O. F., Morning Star Lodge, No. 56; of the W. of W.; and the M. W. A. He has one brother, Clyde L., a farmer at Vollmer. Politically the Judge is a strong Democrat and can give a good reason for the hope within him.

On January 1, 1879, Mr. Crawford married Miss Sarah E., daughter of Edward E. and Melinda J. Richardson. She was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, on April 1, 1861, and received a high school education. Her father was a physician from Louisville, Kentucky, and her mother was a native of Indiana. One son and three daughters were in the family besides Mrs. Crawford, namely: Harry J., in Nezperce; Allie, wife of Edward Barber, in this county; Edna, wife of Joseph Donaldson, also on the reservation. Two children have been born to Judge Crawford and his wife, Cora M., wife of Harvey J. Harris, a farmer at Mohler; Gracie D., wife of Roy W. Adams, on the reservation. Mrs. Crawford is a member of the Rebekahs and also of the Methodist church.

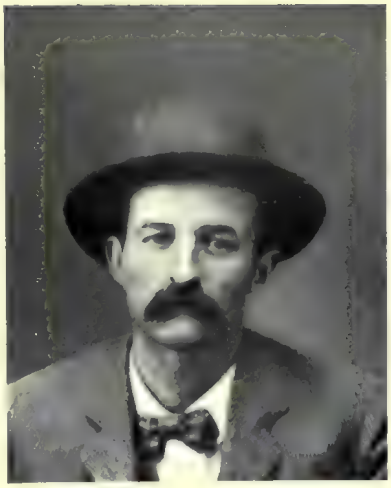
Judge Crawford and his wife are prominent in the best social circles; he is a progressive and substantial citizen, ever in the lead in lines of improvement and advancement of the town and county.

ERICK ERICKSON. At Kippen, in Nez Perces county, is located the complete saw mill and plant, for the manufacture of all kinds of building material, that belongs to the subject of this sketch. It is one of the most complete plants in the country and Mr. Erickson carries full lines of material and a large stock. He is an old saw-mill man and understands the business thoroughly in all its departments and the county is to be congratulated in securing his presence in this important industry.

Mr. Erickson was born in Sweden on August 21, 1848, being the son of Erick and Breten Pearson. The father was born in that country in 1822, and has spent his life in farming and still lives there. The mother was born in 1822, and died in 1891. Erick was educated in his native land and remained there until 1868, when he bade farewell to all early environments and associates and came to the United States. He stopped six months in Galesburg, Illinois, and then went to Clay county, Dakota, and took a homestead. He worked as engineer in a saw mill for one and one-half years and did the same business in a grist mill for three years. Then he made the trip to Portland, Oregon, and thence came to Moscow, Idaho. He operated a saw mill for a time and soon erected one of his own. This was in the vicinity of Vollmer and for twenty years he continued in this line of business there. He also operated a general merchandise establishment at the same time, and did a good business. When the reservation opened up he came to his present location, and has also done a good business here, having a fine patronage. He is assistant postmaster at Kippen.

In 1874, at Vermillion, South Dakota, Mr. Erickson married Miss Minnie Anderson, who was born in Norway in 1853 and came to the United States in 1869. Mr. Erickson has the following named brother and sister, Andrew, Annie, both in Sweden. To Mr. and Mrs. Erickson there have been born the following children, Carl, deceased; Ella, wife of Ernest Parkin, in this county; Frank E., in Nez Perces county; Minnie, Annie, Enos, Lewis, all at home. Mr. Erickson is a member of the I. O. O. F., and of the M. W. A., and he and his wife belong to the Lutheran church. Mr. Erickson is a Republican and is a familar figure in both the county and state conventions. He always labors for good educational facilities. Mr. Erickson is a member of the Pioneer Association of Moscow. His grandfathers were both soldiers and officers in the army in Sweden.



ANDREW J. ERICKSON. Many hands have labored in many different lines to bring about the prosperity and high state of development in Nez Perces county and a faithful one who has done well in this line of advancement is named at the head of this article. Mr. Erickson is postmaster at Kippen and does a general merchandise business.

Andrew J. Erickson was born in Sweden, on October 7, 1866, being the son of Erick and Martha (Johnson) Erickson. The father was a farmer, born in Sweden in 1838 and was a tax collector for the government. His father, Andrew Erickson, was a sheriff. The mother of our subject was born in Sweden in 1839 and died in 1886. Andrew J. was educated in his native land; after graduating from the high school, he took a thorough business course. He worked with his father until 1889, and then determined to start for himself in the world of business. He was also imbued with the idea of the opportunities in the new world and accordingly he came hither and settled at Troy, Idaho. He went to work in the saw mill there and soon had charge of the yards. At this he continued until 1895 when he went to Portland and worked for a couple of years. In 1897, he came to his present location, taking charge of Mr. Erickson's saw mill. He took a claim in 1888, which he still owns. In 1899 Mr. Erickson started in the merchandise business and in 1901 he was appointed postmaster. He has done well in the merchandise business and has a fine residence besides other property. Mr. Erickson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the M. W. A. In political matters, he is a strong Republican and his influence is felt in upholding the principles of his party in no uncertain manner. Mr. Erickson is a warm advocate of good schools and is ready to pay the tax necessary to sustain them. He has five sisters and four brothers. Mr. Erickson has never seen fit to embark on the matrimonial sea and is now enjoying the contentment and happiness of bacholor life.

ORIE W. CLICK. One of the men who has recently come to Nez Perces county and who is now doing a commendable work in bringing the county to a still higher state of development, is named at the head of this article, and he is worthy of representation in the history of this county as he is a man of industry and energy, capable and upright and has manifested himself as a successful operator in the industrial world, having now a fine saw mill plant two miles southeast from Winchester. Mr. Click was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, on June 1, 1871, being the son of Jonathan M. and Lucinda (Cox) Click. The father is a saw mill man, born in Virginia, in 1841, now living in Missouri. His parents were pioneers in Indiana. The mother of our subject was born in Kentucky, in 1846, and now resides in Missouri. The family came to Vernon county, Missouri, when Orie was eleven years of age. He was educated there, completing his training by a good business training in a commercial college. He wrought with his father and gained a thorough knowledge of the lumber business in all its departments, as well as becoming a thorough machinist and engineer, thus being admirably fitted for the labors he is now prosecuting. At the time of his majority, he came to the west, landing near Moscow, where he operated an engine for a year. He returned then to Missouri and engaged in the saw mill and lumber business, continuing there until 1900. In that year, he came to Nez Perces county and located where we find him at the present time. He had as partners, Palmer and Hunter, but he bought these men out later and took as partner, Mr. Cope, with whom he is laboring now. They have a fine mill, do first class work, and are building up a good trade.

On October 25, 1894, in Vernon county, Missouri, Mr. Click married Miss Betsey A., daughter of J. M. and Elizabeth M. (Ellis) Seybold. Mr. Seybold was a native of Missouri, but is now dead. Hon. J. D. Ellis, representative to the state legislature, is an uncle of Mrs. Click. Mrs. Click has one brother, William, in Winchester. Mr. Click has one brother and one sister, Quincy R. and Icy L. Mr. and Mrs. Click have been blessed by the advent of three children, Wellington B., Marion C., and Wardin C. Mr. Click is a warm advocate of good educational facilities and thus believes that the morals of all will be brought to a higher plain. He is a Democrat and active in political matters. Mrs. Click's father was a soldier in the Civil war, serving the entire time of the conflict. Mr. Click and his wife are both members of the German Baptist church and are substantial people, highly esteemed and of good standing.

GEORGE G. STEVENS. A promoter of the industrial development of Nez Perces county and a man of enterprise and intelligence, the subject of this article is worthy of representation in the history of his county, being also a man of integrity and excellent standing among his fellows.

George G. Stevens was born in Illinois, on October 11, 1869, being the son of George W. and Lydia E. (Dillingham) Stevens, natives respectively of Washington county, Tennessee, and North Carolina. He came to the coast with the family and settled on his father's ranch near Moscow. At the acquisition of his majority he went to Palouse City and engaged in a flour mill for two years. Then he returned to the farm for a year and after that operated a binder until 1898, which was the date of his advent to this section. He purchased the relinquishment of a settler and filed on his present place at the Star mills, which he erected and has been operating since. The mill has an output capacity of twenty-five thousand feet per day. He has it equipped with fine Russell saws and Goodell & Waters planer, with all modern machinery for the manufacture of timber products, and the supply on his farm with that of forty acres owned by his father will keep the mill in operation for ten years.

On October 10, 1896, Mr. Stevens married Miss Marie, daughter of John and Francis Waldher, natives of Germany. Mrs. Stevens' mother died when she was two years old and the father married a sister of his former wife. Mr. Stevens is a member of the W. of W. Lookout Camp, No. 607. Mr. Stevens has erected a story and one half residence with modern improvements, which is the family home, and his place manifests much labor and excellent skill in all its improvements. He is a Republican and takes the part of a good citizen in these matters. Mr. Stevens is deserving of much credit for the manner in which he has labored for the upbuilding of this country and he is one of the potent factors in its advancement and is a progressive man.

DEWITT STEVENS is assistant manager and engineer in the Star mills, two miles southeast from Lookout. He has demonstrated himself a man of ability and integrity and is one of the foremost men in the development of the country and labors for its progress.

DeWitt Stevens was born in Tennessee on December 30, 1859, being the son of George W. and Lydia E. (Dillingham) Stevens, mention of whom is made in this work. He grew up with his parents, receiving a common schooling, which was completed in the State Normal at Fort Scott, Kansas. Soon after the family came from Kansas to this country. DeWitt followed and he has been associated with his parents and brothers in business more or less since that time. He operated in sawmills with his brother George, and then, in 1893-4 opened in the furniture and undertaking business in Moscow. A fire destroyed their property and but slight insurance recompensed them, so it was almost a total loss. Then we find Mr. Stevens associated with Mr. McCarty in the flour and feed business under the firm name of Stevens & McCarty. Later he sold his business and came to take part in the sawmill business with his brothers, George.
